He condemned the Zionist and imperialist circles' attempts to block the way before the Arab countries who seek technology particularly in the field of atomic energy for peaceful purposes.

He also called on south European countries to further cooperate with the Arab countries in the field of trade and to remove all obstacles put before Arab oil and non-oil products to enter the south European countries' markets.

Mr Tayih 'Abd al-Karim stressed the fact that Iraq will stand firm against all attempts of confrontation or expercising pressures on the Arab countries and other oil producing countries by different means including the storage of huge quantities of oil beyond the legitimate and justified aims other than threatening the interests of oil producing countries.

On the other hand, the minister expressed Iraq's readiness to cooperate with the United Nations special agencies to solve world economic problems, provided that the energy problem must not be isolated from other vital issues.

KUWAITI OIL MINISTER IN ROME SEES OIL PRICE ACCORD

NC091221 Paris AFP in English 1212 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 9 Apr (AFP)--Kuwait has reached agreement on prices with some of the oil companies it has been negotiating with since new year, Kuwaiti Oil Minister 'Ali al-Khalifa as-Sabah said here today.

He thought agreement could be reached with all the companies within two or three weeks. Negotiations concern Gulf, Shell, B.P., Petrobras and some Japanese companies for a total of 650,000 barrels a day.

The minister said reports that Kuwait had suspended shipments after failing to obtain agreement on a four or five dollar premium above the fixed 35.3 dollar a barrel rate were "exaggerated". But he gave no other price details.

The Kuwaiti minister, here for a gathering on Euro-Arab relations, said Kuwait's output for the year starting April 1, 1981 would exceed one million barrels a day. This compared with 1.5 million barrels a day last year.

The current surplus of oil internationally was "normal for the time of the year", he said.

AVANTE!: WEST USES POLAND TO JUSTIFY ARMS RACE

LD080753 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 2 Apr 81 p 11

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] The planned general strike in Poland has been suspended following the agreement reached between the Council of Ministers Committee for Trade Union Affairs and a Solidarity delegation. But the problems persist. The calling of this strike, which thus is not taking place, could perhaps be presented as one of the clearest proofs that what is at issue today in Poland is not in any way confined to the discontent which has arisen with respect to mistakes and distortions of methods within the government and the Polish United Workers Party [PZPR].

Over and above this and the collapse of confidence of broad sectors of the population and the weakening of the PZPR itself, the role of internal provocation by antisocialist elements--who use, of course, to their advantage objective facts and certain justified aspirations--and the role of brazen and open interference by imperialism stand out only too clearly.

What are the outstanding facts of the Polish crisis?

1. An Extremely Grave Economic Crisis

The extremely grave threat of an unlimited general strike comes at a time when the economic situation, gravely exacerbated by social instability in a process of successive strikes, appears catastrophic.

This very fact is underlined in the final resolution of the Ninth PZPR Central Committee Plenum, which asserts that "groups opposed to socialism, which exercise influence on Solidarity, are conducting a broad propaganda campaign aimed at spreading distrust toward the party and the state authorities, increasing tension, organizing strikes and spreading anarchy in economic life, thus confronting Poland with economic catastrophe."

The country's economic situation is rapidly deteriorating.

Since last September, industrial output has been constantly lower than during the same period in previous years. Such a point has been reached that it is necessary to stop the production of some products. The fall in output, accompanied by a systematic increase in wages, has led to a grave disruption of the domestic market.

It could even be asserted that the economic situation at the end of the first quarter represents a threat of a breakdown of the national economy.

2. The Role of Organized Provocation

The disparity between the methods of struggle promoted by Solidarity and the demands at issue or the pretexts invoked is becoming increasingly clear, all the more so since the Polish Government and the PZPR leadership cannot be accused of rejecting dialogue and the resolution of the problems through peaceful discussion of the issues and conciliation.

The events which led to the unleashing of the crisis in Poland date back a long way and have been almost forgotten. Last June, demonstrations of discontent against announced increases in meat prices occurred in several places in the country (price increases being a rare occurrence under socialism). This was followed by a veritable escalation of demands, which could not fail to reflect popular discontent, which was only possible because of the collapse of confidence in the PZPR, connected with mistakes in socioeconomic policy involving the violation of internal democracy and of the Leninist rules of work within the PZPR.

However, it is an escalation which is also connected with activity skillfully exploited in a systematic and organized manner by internal provocation, with extensive and open support from imperialism, which knew how to use the just discontent of broad sectors of the people unleashed in the summer of 1980.

What has now happened in Bydgoszcz? The occupation of public buildings has recently constituted one of the forms of pressure used by Solidarity. When the 19 March session of the People's Council in Bydgoszcz was closed against the wishes of the Solidarity members present, the latter refused to leave the hall. Intervention by the police forces led to three people being injured.

The desire for dialogue, impaired by the Bydgoszcz incidents,is becoming a feature only of the policy of the Polish Government and of the PZPR; not of Solidarity, not of the forces which are seeking to exploit the discontent and the lack of confidence of these sections of the people with openly antisocialist ends. These are unequivocally using blackmail and the most diverse and aggressive forms of pressure.

Deputy Premier Rakowski stated in connection with the events in Bydgoszcz: "The events demonstrate that there are forces in Solidarity which are seeking to launch a crusade against people's power.... In the incredible agitation which Solidarity had been conducting for several days against the authorities it is not difficult to discern the desire to set General Jaruzelski's government against the party to which he belongs.... In your opinion, gentlemen, the cause of all this is the Bydgoszcz incident. To what extent is that the real cause?.... First, because there is a disparity between the cause and the effect and, second, because for two weeks we have been witnessing increasing anxiety and the multiplication of conflicts. This, gentlemen, began before the Bydgoszcz events.

That this is a far-reaching maneuver--which has nothing to do with the origins of the discontent which has arisen and the extremely acute problems currently experienced by socialist Poland. Rather, it is using them against socialism and against the Polish people--is a fact demonstrated by the leaders of Polish "dissidence" themselves. We cite in particular Jacek Kuron, leader of the counterrevolutionary organization, the Social Self-Defense Committee. In statements to LE MONDE of 28 August 1980, Kuron asserts: "The opposition has a certain influence among worker circles, and we can increase it since they need help (!!!), information and suggestions. It is our duty to help the workers to organize themselves in independent institutional groups, workers' committees or trade unions...." And he also adds: "The USSR will not risk an armed intervention in Poland as long as the Poles refrain from overthrowing a government which is docile toward the USSR. Therefore we refrain from this for the present.

It is difficult to be clearer.

The Ninth PZPR Central Committee Plenum, which has now been held, reflected the gravity of the problems experienced in Poland--problems which are connected with and are also reflected in the party's internal life. It was stated in particular that power is already a reality in the country, that the unmasking of the intentions of the counterrevolutionary forces, which are no longer concealing themselves, and that a grave threat is looming over Poland and over socialism. [sentence as published]

In his final speech, Stanislaw Kania emphasized: "It cannot be denied that our country exceeded the bounds of economic good sense long ago. There are also bounds in the political field. These bounds are defined by the interest of socialism, the maintenance of the party's leading role and concern about our state's security and its credibility as a member of the socialist community. We must also be a militant party, a party which advocates socialist regeneration--and not just against the various forms of inertia. There are more and more facts which confirm the grave dangers to which those who are struggling against socialism and are working not only against people's power but also in order to seize power are subjecting socialist regeneration.

3. Interference By Imperialism

The Polish state will certainly know how to adopt the measures appropriate for defending socialism. The concern about the present situation is justified. On the eve of the declaration of a general strike which did not take place, resolutions warning of the dangers looming over socialist Poland's future were adopted in many enterprises. The present situation could necessitate other measures which would curb a greater and catastrophic deterioration.

In the meantime, imperialism is brazenly interfering in Poland's internal problems, supporting in every way movements or organizations which are working against socialism or are capable of being used to this end, subjecting the country to a systematic campaign of radio broadcasts of provocative and misleading propaganda and also using the same weapon which is being brandished by the antisocialist elements inside the country--blackmail.

The United States and the FRG have stated that any "internal or external repressive action" in Poland would cause the immediate cessation of economic aid.

In the meantime, the Salvadoran junta's genocidal activity against its own people is unleashing the contrary process--the acceleration of financial and military aid for the fascists of the junta. Another highly topical instance: In Turkey, where over 97 death sentences are currently being sought against members of a leftwing organization, the government is explicitly supported by NATO. The present Turkish head of government even permits himself the luxury of stating that no date can as yet be set for the restoration of democracy.

For imperialism, the Polish people count for nothing. What is important is hitting socialism. It is currently important to brandish the "argument" of Poland to attempt to convince the world and NATO's European allies themselves of the "need" for the arms race and of the "need" for the policy of brinkmanship.

Once more the deployment of new missiles in Europe and the renewed proposal of the deployment of the neutron bomb will be advocated--at a NATO Nuclear Planning Group meeting to be held 6-9 April in Bonn. In view of the reservations of several European capitalist governments--reservations further highlighted by the Western governments' reaction to Moscow's proposals (which are universally regarded as a peace offensive), Poland will be put forward there as an "argument" in support of the arms race. This is imperialism's policy in the great international class struggle, in which Poland currently constitutes one of its most acute and dramatic manifestations.

LEADERS DISCUSS NATO, FRIENDSHIP TREATY WITH HAIG

Meeting With Perez-Llorca

LD090836 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0800 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Angel Gomez Fuentes dispatch]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig has just had a meeting with Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. It was a joint meeting with the delegations of both countries, and lasted 50 minutes. During the talks, the main subjects discussed were the conflictive international situation, the eventual entry of Spain into NATO and the renewal or extension of the U.S. Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation. This was the key question in the talks between the delegations led by Haig and Perez-Llorca, according to a report we received from a high-ranking Foreign Ministry official, and will surely be the central subject of the meeting which Alexander Haig will shortly have with Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo at the Moncloa Palace. Haig wanted to learn of the Spanish timetable for entry into NATO which, according to Perez-Llorca, will be carried out during the present legislature. The U.S. secretary of state showed special interest in the subject of NATO, it being interrelated to the new Spanish-U.S. treaty. It is expected that during Alexander Haig's brief visit to Spain, the new agreements will be outlined as the present agreements expire next September.

King Receives Haig

LD091048 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Correspondent's dispatch from the Zarzuela Palace]

[Excerpt] His Majesty the King is receiving the U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig. On the U.S. side, this has been an obligatory visit. We should recall the date of the failed coup d'etat in Spain--at that time the kind was scheduled to visit America but the visit was postponed. We should also recall the Mr Alexander Haig somewhat prematurely said that the failed coup d'etat was very much a matter of the country's internal affairs. These somewhat nervous opinions had too much of a bad effect on the Spanish press and high-ranking circles.

Unfortunately, we are not able to ascertain what he will say to His Majesty the King, but we anticipate that he will express some sympathy for the anxiety of the moment. We should take into account the fact that the failed assassination attempt on President Reagan has also affected the nervousness of Mr Haig. At that time and in the presence of Congress he wanted to define himself as the first authority of state, unconstitutionally going beyond the authority of Vice-President Bush.

CULTURAL COOPERATION AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH PRC

LD080836 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] In Madrid today, PRC Vice Premier Gu Mu and Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca signed the first agreement of cultural cooperation between the two countries. By virtue of this agreement, Spain and China are committed to stimulating the development of cooperation between their scientific and research institutions. Among other things, it also provides for contact between teachers, specialists and universities in the two countries and the promotion of the Spanish language and literature in China and vice versa, with the aim of reflecting with the utmost exactitude the culture and history of each country. Prior to the signing of this agreement, the Chinese vice premier, who arrived in Madrid yesterday, was received by King Juan Carlos and had a meeting with Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo.

FINLAND

KEKKONEN INTERVIEWED ON RELATIONS WITH USSR

LD091055 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 4 Apr 81 p 9

[FINNISH NEWS AGENCY interview with Finnish President Urho Kekkonen: "The Goal is Concrete East-West Dialogue"--date and place not given]

[Text] The objective of the letters sent by President Leonid Brezhnev to several Western heads of state in March was to bring about some form of dialogue between the leaders of the Soviet Union and the West. This is President Urho Kekkonen's view of the intention behind Brezhnev's letters, one of which was sent to the president himself.

In an interview with the FINNISH NEWS AGENCY, Kekkonen explained that he took the view that Brezhnev wants to start a concrete debate with the aim of improving the international atmosphere on the basis of the Soviet proposals.

Kekkonen also noted the positive assessment of relations between Finland and the Soviet Union voiced at the recent 28th CPSU Congress. According to the president, this shows that relations between Finland and the Soviet Union have been maintained at the same level despite today's tough international atmosphere.

The entire interview is as follows in an unofficial translation [from Finnish int [Question] Reports published in recent weeks indicate that the second CSCE followup meeting, which began last fall, has gotten into serious difficulties. How do you assess the present situation, Mr President?

[Answer] I have followed the reports from Madrid with growing concern. Only insignificant progress has been made. The reason for this seems to have been that the work at the conference thus far has been more characterized by a desire to make accusations than by an interest in real cooperation. It is high time to pause and consider whether everything which we could envisage doing to achieve a compromise solution really has been done. It is now more important than every for the participating countries to muster their spiritual resources so that the meeting can be brought to a satisfactory conclusion and the continuation of the CSCE process be assured.

[Question] At the beginning of March, President L.I. Brezhnev sent a letter to a number of leading persons in the West. You were also one of those who received these letters, Mr President. How would you describe the contents of the letter you received?

[Answer] At the CPSU's 26th Congress, General Secretary L.I. Brezhnev put forward a number of proposals intended to bring about an improvement in the present tough international climate through an increase in mutual confidence and understanding between East and West. The way I see it is that General Secretary Brezhnev has sent these letters containing these proposals to leading figures in the West with the main objective of making the proposals the subject of concrete discussion and negotiation. Thus the point of the letters seems to be to bring about some form of dialogue between the leaders in the Soviet Union and in the West. The goal of this dialogue would be an improvement in the international atmosphere on the basis of the Soviet Union's proposals.

[Question] President Brezhnev's letter seems mainly to have been a comprehensive communication on international politics. Does the letter contain anything about bilateral relations between Finland and the Soviet Union?

[Answer] In his letter, President Brezhnev directed my attention to the fact that the reciprocal relations between Finland and the Soviet Union were given a very positive assessment in as authoritative a way as possible at the above-mentioned CPSU congress. Of course, we in Finland noted this assessment with the greatest satisfaction. It is a new sign that the relations between Finland and the Soviet Union in the present tough international atmosphere have been kept at a very steady level and that this was guaranteed stable and positive development trends.

[Question] At the party congress President Brezhnev was not only complimentary about Finland but also about you personally for your contribution to the promotion of detente in Europe. How do you take this remark?

[Answer] I take it more or less as a recognition of Finland's past foreign policy course. One of the most important endeavors has been to promote detente and peaceful cooperation on a realistic basis and within the framework of the possibilities at hand.

[Question] In a few days we will once again be celebrating the signing of the Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance Treaty. What significaance does the pact have today in the Nordic context and in Europe?

[Answer] When the friendship and mutual assistance pact was signed in 1948 its contents were intentionally shaped so that it does not depend on prevailing conditions. The significance of the pact is thus not dependent on the conditions which prevailed at the time of its signing. The friendship and mutual assistance treaty prevented then and prevents today all speculations about our security policy course. Because of this it has made a contribution to stabilizing our situation and has thus promoted the development of our international relations on a broad front. Its effects have also been reflected outside Finland's borders in a way which has promoted peace and peaceful cooperation. The friendship and mutual assistance treaty will also play an important role in the future as far as ensuring security in the Nordic countries is concerned. It will also continue to be an indisputable part of a pan-European system for balance and security, both in times of detente and also when colder winds are blowing.

[Question] The friendship and mutual assistance treaty has often been discussed in Finland. In this discussion, especially in times of detente, its elements of friendship and cooperation have been in the foreground for understandable reasons. What role does this treaty play in the situation you refer to in the introduction to your book "Tamminiemi," when the world--as Mika Waltari [well-known Finnish novelist] put it--spews ash and fire?

[Answer] The treaty's prime objective is to promote peace. As a result of this, Finnish and Soviet interests have moved in the same direction in the question of building a peaceful system of security and cooperation in Europe. The friendship and mutual assistance treaty is intended--with the object of preserving peace--to keep Finland and its immediate geopolitical area out of great power strategy calculations and international conflicts. It is easy to see that is in agreement with both the signatories'--both Finland's and the Soviet Union's--security interests. Since both the parties are deriving benefits from the pact it follows that both must bear their share of the responsibility and answer for their share of security as well as adopting the necessary actual measures in this respect in accordance with the treaty's stipulations and its objective.

THATCHER WARNS USSR AGAINST USING FORCE IN POLAND

LD081904 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1808 GMT 8 Apr 81

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Russian intervention in Poland would be a disaster for the Soviet Union, Mrs Thatcher warned tonight. The world looked to the Soviet Union to respect the will of the Polish people and their right to express it, she told a diplomatic and writers' association dinner in London.

The prime minister described as "absurd and dangerous" suggestions that Britain had interfered in Poland in any way. But she added: "If we are called upon to react we will do so, I believe, far more quickly, effectively and appropriately than after Afghanistan."

Mrs Thatcher's comments represented the government's first reaction to the apparent easing of the threat of Soviet intervention in Poland.

The prime minister said the world had learned with deep anxiety of the greater Soviet military activity around Poland. What was said at the communist congress in Prague had also been studied with concern.

"The British Government, with our partners in the European Community and our allies in NATO, have made clear from the start that we regard the events in Poland as a purely Polish concern. We have said we would not interfere in any way. We have not done so. Suggestions that we have are absurd and dangerous."

Mrs Thatcher said Britain and other Western powers had helped Poland and were continuing to do so with supplies of dood, the rescheduling of debts and other economic aids. All this had been done in response to requests from the Polish Government.

"We continue to hope that the brave people of Poland will be given the chance to find the path which they seek to a future of their own choosing. For them these are difficult days in which they will need to exercise wisdom, steadiness and realism. But let us be clear--there must be no use of force from any quarter."

The prime minister said an external intervention in Poland would be a disaster "for Poland, for Europe, for East-West relations and for all peoples. I hope that the Soviet leaders realise that intervention would be a disaster for the Soviet Union too. They know what the occupation of Afghanistan has done for the international reputation of their country. They know that what the effects of a new arms race would be for them and their people. The world looks to the Soviet Union to respect the will of the Polish people and their right to express it."

The prime minister delivered a firm reply to recent comments by President Valery Giscard d'Estaing which appeared to question Britain's commitment to membership of the Common Market--although she did not mention the French president by name.

Mrs Thatcher stressed that because of developments in Eastern Europe the members of Atlantic alliance had been consulting for many months. "If we are called upon to react we will do so, I believe far more quickly effectively and appropriately than after Afghanistan," she said. But she did not indicate what the nature of this reaction would be.

The Polish crisis demanded that EEC foreign policy should be co-ordinated in deed and in words, the prime minister said.

"If the Community is to be a viable and worthwhile organisation its policies must be applied in a balanced way and its members must be prepared to take a balanced view of each others problems.

"I am not sure that this has always been so of late. There has been too much depression, too little help, too much questioning of each other's motives and good faith."

"The fact is that people in other member countries are no more entitled to query our commitment to the Community than we are to query theirs.

"The same rules and principles apply to them as apply to us. "Our commitment is just as firm as theirs. We are not less determined than they to insure that, when Community policies are negotiated, our interests like theirs are properly served."

Turning to the Gulf area, Mrs Thatcher said: "Britain does not seek to re-introduce troops into the Gulf. "But we warmly welcome the steps which the Gulf states are now taking to consolidate their own policies.

"It is for them, not us, to assess their security needs. Where they decide they need help with equipment, with technical advise, with training or the sharing of information then we are glad to offer that help. Our technology is second to none and they know we are reliable suppliers."

PRIME MINISTER MEETS WITH JORDAN'S KING HUSAYN

JN081239 Amman Domestic Service in Arabic 1200 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] His Majesty King Husayn met today with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher at the prime minister's office in London. Talks dealt with bilateral and international issues. His majesty told the British prime minister of the importance of the Palestinian cause and the necessity of giving the Palestinian people a chance to practice their right to self-determination and to establish an independent state on their land.

His Majesty called for intensifying European efforts to hold a dialogue with the PLO, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

SEVERAL BOMB EXPLOSIONS REPORTED IN NICOSIA

NC082034 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 2020 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] About five or six bomb explosions were heard in Nicosia area this evening. The police have announced that one of the explosions went off in the yard of the Hilton hotel. There were no casualties or damage. The police are continuing investigations to locate the other explosions.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON UN INITIATIVE

NC071618 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] The government spokesman has stated that after Foreign Minister Rolandhis' talks with UN Secretary General Waldheim in New York in May, the Cypriot Government will be in a position to know whether there will be a UN initiative on the Cypriot issue. In answer to a pertinent question, the spokesman said that, as is natural, the UN Secretariat General, and particularly Waldheim, are greatly interested in achieving progress in the Cypriot problem.

In answer to another question, the government spokesman replied that there is no indication whatsoever of a Swiss effort to play a mediation role in the Cypriot problem. The Swiss Government, the spokesman said, asked that substantive talks on the Cypriot issue be held during Rolandhis' coming visit to Switzerland. On the other hand, the government spokesman said that a draft of the text of the missing persons agreement is being made jointly with the United Nations. The spokesman added that the signing of the agreement will be held soon and that the Cypriot Government will acknowledge this agreement.

SFRY OFFICIALS MEETS WITH ROLANDHIS DURING STOPOVER

NC072025 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] Zvone Dragan, vice president of the SFRY Federal Executive Council left tonight for his country after a few hours' stopover in Cyprus on his return from his visit to Kuwait. During his brief stay on the island, Dragan met Foreign Minister Rolandhis who, during a working luncheon given in honor of the Yugoslav official, exchanged with him views on issues of mutual interest, including the Cypriot issue and bilateral Cyprus-Yugoslav relations. On his departure from Larnaca airport, the vice president was seen off by Rolandhis, Yugoslav Ambassador Job and other officials.

DENKTAS EXPRESSES WISH TO SEEK PEACEFUL SOLUTION

TA081202 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Pointing out that the Greek Cypriots frequently stress that they have registered significant progress in their defense situation, President Rauf Denktas has said: We do not see any difference between defense and offense. We hope the Greek Cypriots will not again view themselves above the clouds and start something foolish.

Denktas replied to journalists' questions this morning on Kiprianou's speech at the Greek Cypriot young scientists association. Denktas said that if Kiprianou realizes the true nature of the Government of Cyprus position--which he seized through the use of force and robbery--and understands that he represents the Greek Cypriot administration in the south, then the solution of the Cyprus problem would be much easier. Noting that the solution would be easier because the most important problem and the most important fait accompli which created the Cyprus problem would thus have been eliminated, Denktas continued: It is true that there are other ways to solve the issue. An intelligent person does not seek other methods. He tries to solve the problem through talks and peaceful methods.

KENAN ATAKOL REACTS TO ROLANDHIS STATEMENT

TA081729 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Minister Kenan Atakol has said that every negative step to be taken by the Greek Cypriot side and every new propaganda move against us will further reduce the hopes for a solution and force us to take countermeasures to protect our rights.

Atakol replied to a speech made by so-called Greek Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis to a group of British House of Commons members in Britain. In his speech, Rolandhis claimed that the Greek Cypriot side will under no circumstances accept the equal cofounder rights of the Turkish Cypriot community, that the Greek Cypriot side will not make any concessions regarding the return of all Greek Cypriot refugees to their homes, that the talks have not yielded any results and that the responsibility for this lies with the Turkish Cypriot side.

Replying to Rolandhis' statement, Atakol said that Greek Cypriot intransigence has reached its (?maximum). He said: Not only are the Greek Cypriots failing to change their attitude--which is needed for the success of the current peace efforts--but they are also [word indistinct] on the principles that have previously been agreed upon. They are not even ready to accept the cofounder rights accorded to the Turkish Cypriots by the 1960 constitution and do not hesitate to state that they will not accord us any rights except the status of minority.

Atakol recalled that the refugee problem was solved through the population exchange agreement between the two communities in Vienna in 1975 and called on the Greek Cypriots to review UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim's reports of that time if they have forgotten this fact.

The foreign minister noted that the Greek Cypriot attempt to represent the Turkish Cypriot side as a minority despite existing agreements further increases the atmosphere of distrust between the two communities and proves that the Greek Cypriots are not worthy of cooperating again with the Turkish Cypriots within a partnership framework.

Stressing that it is not the Turkish Cypriot side which is (?undermining) the intercommunal talks, Atakol recalled that the sides involved in the Cyprus problem consist of the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities and indirectly of Turkey and Greece. He said that Britain's situation is determined through agreements. Atakol noted that he does not view any other country or organization as [word indistinct] or authorized to act as a side in the Cyprus issue.

BRIEFS

AGREEMENT WITH ROMANIA--An agreement was signed today between Cyprus and Romania covering international road transport between the two countries. The agreement was signed by the director general of the Foreign Ministry, Mr Pelayias, and the Romanian attache in Cyprus, Mr Alexis. [Text] [Nicosia Domestic Television Service in English 1510 GMT 4 Apr 81 NC]

AMBASSADOR ACCREDITED--Cyprus Ambassador in Paris Mikhailidhis has been appointed ambassador to Spain and Portugal with the French capital as his seat. The governments of Spain and Portugal have given their consent to Mikhailidhis' accreditation. [Text] [Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 3 Apr 81 NC]

ITALIAN AMBASSADOR DEPARTS--President Kiprianou received today Italian Ambassador Giorgio Stea-Antonini who bid him farewell on the occasion of his departure from Cyprus. [Text] [Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 7 Apr 81 NC]

GENERAL EVREN OBSERVES MILITARY EXERCISES IN KONYA

TA091138 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0800 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren went to Konya today to observe the "Chief Commander Ataturk" exercises organized by the 2d Army Command. He is accompanied by the National Security Council members, Ground Force Commander Gen Nurettin Ersin, Air Force, Commander Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya, Navy Commander Adm Nejat Tumer, and Gendarme Commander Gen Sedat Celasun. The NATO Southeastern Allied Ground Forces commander, Gen Sedat Guneral, left the NATO headquarters in Izmir for Konya to observe the exercises.

General Evren and the commanders were received at Konya airport by 2d Army Commander Gen Bedrettin Demirel with a military ceremony. The Konya governor and mayor, Lutfi Tuncel, and the 3d Main Jet Base commander, Brig Gen Necdet Gencaslan, were among the reception party. Mehmet Bican and Tevfik Fikret Dincer from the Turkish Radio and Television News Center report that Gen Kenan Evren and the commanders were received by cheering citizens at the entrance to the city. Konya athletes gave General Evren a Turkish flag as a gift. Representatives from certain establishments gave him flowers.

General Evren and the commanders then visited 2d Army Commander General Demirel and conferred with him for some time. They then observed the "Chief Commander Ataturk" exercises. The exercises will last 2 days.

General Evren and the National Security Council members will go to Seydisehir tomorrow afternoon to tour the Seydisehir aluminium installations. They will return to Ankara tomorrow evening.

AIR DEFENSE EXERCISE HELD IN AEGEAN, MEDITERRANEAN

TA081733 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] The national unity and solidarity airborne air defense-81 exercise planned by the 1st Tactical Air Force Command was held today. The exercise was held in Aegean international airspace, the western Black Sea, Marmara and western Mediterranean regions. Interception planes, radars, rockets and antiaircraft weapons belonging to the 1st Tactical Air Force Command participated in the exercise. It has been announced that the exercise, in which the cooperation and coordination among and reactions of air defense weapon systems were tried, ended successfully.

PRIME MINISTER ULUSU RECEIVES ICFTU DELEGATION

TA081725 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has received the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions [ICFTU] delegation in Ankara. According to a statement issued by the prime ministry press office, Minister of State and Acting Foreign Minister Ilhan Oztrak and Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is] leader Ibrahim Denizcier were present at the meeting held between Ulusu and the visiting delegation headed by ICFTU Secretary General Otto Kersten. The delegation is being briefed on trade unions and labor life during its contacts in Ankara.

FOREIGN MINISTER HOLDS NEW MEETING WITH WALDHEIM

TA081101 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is on an official visit to the United States, has met with UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim for the second time.

According to the Foreign Ministry, international developments and the Cyprus problem were discussed during the Turkmen-Waldheim meetings. Turkmen and Waldheim agreed that a political solution to the Cyprus problem be sought through the intercommunal talks. The Turkish foreign minister and Waldheim also exchanged views regarding the program for UN celebrations marking the Ataturk centennary.

Turkmen later delivered a speech on Turkish foreign policy at a meeting with representatives from press, education and business circles in New York. After this meeting, Turkmen departed for Philadelphia.

CENTRAL BANK DIRECTOR DEPARTS FOR BULGARIA, ITALY

TA081133 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Turkish Central Bank Director Osman Siklar left for Bulgaria this morning. Siklar will hold talks on the renewal of the bankers agreement between the two countries.

After his 4-day visit in Bulgaria, Siklar will go to Italy where he will sign an agreement making operational a section of the loan extended to Turkey by Italy within the framework of OECD. Siklar will also hold talks with the representatives of certain Italian banks.

ARAYIS PUBLISHERS APPEAL CONFISCATION OF ISSUE

TA081500 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1440 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 8 Apr (AA)--Ex-RPP leader and ex-Premier Bulent Ecevit appeared before the public prosecutor for the press in Ankara Wednesday in connection with his editorial in the latest issue of the weekly ARAYIS [QUEST]. He was accompanied by Editor Nahit Duru.

Publishers of ARAYIS have appealed to a higher court against Tuesday's court order for confiscation of No 7 of the weekly because of Ecevit's editorial on "torture."

ARMENIAN PATRIARCH CONDEMNS ATTACKS ON OFFICIALS

TA081734 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1525 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Istanbul, 8 Apr (AA)--Patriarch of the Armenian community in Turkey Shnork Kaloustian condemned the recent attempt on the life of Labor Counselor Cavit Demir of the Turkish Embassy in Copenhagen and called for "an end to such inhuman acts."

Archbishop Kaloustian called on Governor Nevzat Ayaz of Istanbul to express his condolences Wednesday when he said the assault on Demir had come when the grief over the murder of two other Turkish officials, labor attache Resat Morali and religious counselor Tecelli Ari, was still fresh. The Armenian community strongly condemned such attacks, the archbishop said.

VOTCP BLAMES IMPERIALISM FOR ARMENIAN TERRORISM

TA091126 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Station comentary: "The Double-Edged Sword of Imperialism or the Truth Behind Armenian Terrorism"]

[Summary] Turkish labor counselor in Copenhagen Cavit Demir was wounded in an armed attack only 3 weeks after the assassination of the Turkish labor attache and the religious official in Paris.

"Who are these armed assailants? For what purpose are these atrocious murders being perpetrated one after the other? Some of the writers in the press are replying to these questions by pointing out some of the facts, and other writers are acting in compliance with their own distorted goals and attempting to reply to the questions with false words by ignoring the facts."

As long as the perpetrators of these assassinations and their aims are not correctly determined and the attempts to mislead the public do not cease, the terrorists will continue to commit their murders and claim new victims.

"The murders of Turkish diplomats are generally connected with the Armenian cause and it is said that certain Armenian terrorist groups are behind these murders. This is correct. Another correct fact is that an overwhelming majority of the Armenians in our country and in other countries are firmly opposed to these murders. This majority does not wish anything except the condemnation of the massacres perpetrated in the past against its people. Adopting such a stand would place a clear division between the terrorists, who are being incited for specific purposes, and the vast majority of the Armenians who are opposed to terrorism and murders, and would to a great extent prevent the terrorists from appearing as if they are carrying out the Armenians' cause. It will then be revealed more clearly who is nurturing and directing these terrorists. We say it will be revealed more clearly because there are clear indications and bloody tracks showing who is nurturing and directing these terrorists. The intelligence organizations of countries like the United States, France, Switzerland and Denmark where the terrorists are committing their murders [words indistinct]." "No one can deny that a significant section of the Armenian terrorist groups live in the United States." The British intelligence service has been inciting the Armenians for their own imperialist aims.

Newspapers like SON HAVADIS and TERCUMAN are brushing these facts aside and trying to cover up the bloody tracks of Armenian terrorists--which extend all the way to the imperialist intelligence organizations--through anti-Sovietism. "Let us point out once again that this anti-Soviet hysteria only serves to allow the Armenian terrorists, whose centers are in imperialist countries, and the CIA, which is using them, to conduct their bloody game with ease. The sword of imperialism is double-edged. There were important indications of this during Turkmen's visit to France. Through this terrorist movement which it is directing, the United States--which is mounting and continuing its pressures on our country--is attempting to bind our country tightly and trying to become the most effective sovereign force in Ankara as stated by numerous sensible writers."

VOTCP CRITICIZES NATO'S ARMAMENTS POLICIES

TA091145 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Station commentary]

[Excerpts] Dear listeners: As is known, the NATO Nuclear Planning Group meeting in Bonn has ended. The nuclear strategy plan of the Reagan administration, the deployment of new nuclear weapons in NATO countries, and the modernization of nuclear systems were discussed during the meeting, in which Turkey participated with a delegation headed by permanent representative Osman Olgay.

As is known, the United States uses every NATO meeting as a means of pressure to make its allies approve the Pentagon's armament decisions. Turkey is one of the countries where the tactic of (?reward and threats) is intensely applied. This attitude was once more observed during the Bonn meeting of the Nuclear Planning Group. This time, also, the United States applied intense pressures on countries--namely Belgium and The Netherlands--which are not willing to deploy medium-range missiles on their soil in accord with the 1979 U.S. decision. The United States attempted to accuse these countries of failing to fulfill their duties within NATO.

Washington's policy to impose its demands on its allies is provoking reactions in Western Europe. It is increasing the conflicts between the United States and its European allies. The entire FRG press is likening this meeting of Reagan to a child's game and is continuously increasing its criticism of Washington's policy of oppression. The Bonn meeting, dear listeners, has clearly demonstrated that NATO's strategic plan is based on armament only. U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger reiterated his view on curbing expenditures alloted to social projects and increasing armament expenditures. The Washington administration cannot openly oppose the Soviet peace proposals because it is aware that such a stand would again label it as the archenemy of detente in world public opinion. Therefore, it is resorting to the deceit of bilateral decision.

Dear listeners, [words indistinct] there are nuclear weapons in U.S. and NATO bases. Washington is trying to create the impression that the nuclear weapons cannot be used without Turkey's consent by claiming that the double-key system is in effect. It is thus attempting to (?appease) the increasingly mounting reactions among our people against U.S. imperialism and its bases of aggression on our soil. As reported in the 23-29 March issue of YANKI magazine, the 14 protocols that were made effective (?one after the other) as appendices to the bilateral slavery agreement completely eliminate the double-key system. These secret agreements grant the United States the possibility of using nuclear weapons on our soil whenever it wants. This can turn our country into ashes in a possible war.

Dear listeners, all these problems clearly show the real threat to our country originates from dependence on the United States and membership in NATO. This [word indistinct] makes it necessary to support the constructive peace proposals by the Soviet Union. Like the people of other countries, our people want to live in peace and in an atmosphere of friendship and cooperation with their neighbors. If Turkey does not want to be singled out in the international arena as the enemy of peace and detente, then it should heed the voice and wishes of our people and not the voice of Washington and NATO headquarters.

COMMUNIST PARTY BROADCASTS MAY DAY SLOGANS

TA081449 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 8 Apr 81

["The Turkish Communist Party's May Day Slogans for 1981"]

[Text] The proletariat of all countries unite. Long live May Day, the international struggle, unity and solidary day of the working class. May Day, the workers' holiday, must be an official holiday once again.

Everybody who does not want to be annihilated in nuclear war: Let us support the Soviet Union's peace proposals against the NATO sovereign circles' policy of moving away from detente, of inciting the arms race and anti-Sovietism. Let us oppose the deployment of nuclear missiles in Western Europe and Turkey, let us oppose the neutron bomb.

Let relations with the Soviet Union, with all the socialist countries, with all our neighbors, with the Nonaligned Movement, with anti-imperialist countries and activities be strengthened. All forces that are in favor of independence: Let us unite against imperialism's and especially U.S. imperialism's blackmail, impositions and attempts to interfere in our domestic affairs.

No to the U.S. mobile forces. Struggle against U.S.-labelled or NATO-labelled bases or other opportunities in Turkey. Struggle against the plans to involve Turkey in the imperialist efforts to establish new aggressive pacts in the Middle East. Turkey must withdraw from NATO. The U.S. bases and nuclear weapons on our soil must be eliminated. The bilateral slavery agreements must be torn up.

The imperialist and collaborationist monopolies, the big landlords, the banks and the big tradesmen must be made to pay the bill of the economic crisis.

The monopolies must stop looting the budget and the public economic enterprises. The tax load must be met by the monopolies and the big landlords. The NATO-imposed military expenditures which deepen the economic crisis must be reduced. Economic relations based on equal rights and on mutual interest must be developed with all countries, including the socialist countries, instead of the unequal relations with the imperialists.

Struggle against the attacks being made on salaries, wages and the pensioners' social rights. Struggle against unemployment and the high cost of living in order to raise the people's purchasing power.

Prodemocracy forces: Unite against the reactionism and the profascists inside and outside the army in order to put an end to the junta's antidemocratic pressures.

A united struggle against the anticommunist provocations, all pressure and attacks against the democratic forces, the communists, the working class' organizations, the Kurdish patriots, peace fighters, patriotic intellectuals, artists and scientists.

Greetings to the patriots, workers, unionists and communists who have been forced to spend May Day in prisons and torture chambers. Freedom to all the political prisoners except the fascist and Maoist terrorists. Stop the pressures, brute force and tortures. All tortures must be exposed. The torturers must be made to account for their deeds. The ruling that raised the period of detention to 90 days must be lifted.

Struggle against articles 141 and 142 of the penal code and against all antidemocratic laws, against the stripping of patriots of their citizenship and struggle for democratic rights and freedoms, for the freedom of thought and organization.

The bans against the Turkish Communist Party [TCP], the Turkish Labor Party [TLP], the Turkish Socialist Workers Party [TSWP], against all antifascist parties, unions and democratic mass organizations must be lifted. The oppression must end.

Stop the national oppression of the Kurdish people. Autonomy to Turkish Kurdistan. The Kurdish people must have the right of free self-determination.

Turkes and the fascist NAP's high-ranking officials as well as the Justice Party officials who collaborated with them must receive the punishment they deserve. Uncover the fascists' extensions in the army and the state mechanism. The counterguerrilla organization must be disbanded. The culprits of the 1 May 1977 massacre must be punished. The people cannot have real democracy unless the junta regime is toppled.

Progressive and democratic revolution in order to categorically end the imperialist pressures, to save Turkey from backwardness and the economic crisis, to improve the living conditions of the people and to categorically end reactionism, the fascist danger and terrorism.

The unity of all the national democratic forces for jobs, land and freedom and against Turkey's dependence on imperialism, against the monopolies' exploitation and against domestic reactionism. Struggle for the unity of the working class. The unity of the TCP, the TLP, the TSWP.

Struggle for the voluntary syndical unity of all workers affiliated with the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK] and the Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is] based on the interests of the working class. Workers affiliated with Turk-Is; foil the plans to deprive the workers of unions, to close the doors of Turk-Is to workers and unionists affiliated with DISK and to implement unequal measures. Workers affiliated with DISK; keep alive the fighting tradition and organizational ties of class and mass unionism in the struggle for free and united nations.

The bans imposed on DISK and all the unions except the fascist unions and the restrictions on labor union work should be lifted and the arrested DISK leader Abdullah Basturk, DISK administrators, other union administrators and union representatives should be released. Struggle to protect economic and social gains, to prevent dismissals from work, against the elimination of labors rights and freedom and for unlimited rights to strike, conduct collective wage contracts and form unions.

No to the high arbitration council which is functioning for the interests of the monopolies. Turk-Is representatives should immediately withdraw from this council and that is in favor of the bosses. The minimum wage should be raised urgently to a level compatible with humane living. Let us increase the struggle power of Turk-Is against the attacks by the monopolies and the antiworker measures implemented by the government. The Turk-Is representative in the government should not become a tool for antiworker laws and measures.

Struggle against the discriminatory policy applied to our workers abroad. Unity of action among local and foreign workers against the monopolies and against transferring the burden of the crisis on the toilers' shoulders. Struggle against the ruthless exploitation by the merchants, the monopolies and big landowners to prevent the underpayment of the peasants for their products and the limiting of crop areas without according the necessary support to the small producer. Let the peasants be paid their outstanding debts. Let the debts of the toiling peasants be cancelled. End the pressures and attacks directed against the democratic cooperative movement. Freedom to the administrators of the Union of Cooperatives for Village Development and Other Agricultural Goals [KOY-KOOP].

Struggle against the tax law which ruined the small shopkeepers and artisans and the high rates of interests on loans. Struggle against the attack directed against retirement rights. Struggle against the dismissal of all progressive and patriotic civil servants and teachers and their exile [to appointments in distant locations].

Struggle for the anti-imperialist and antifascist unity of all the progressive, democratic and patriotic youth and the Turkish and Kurdish youth. Employment and democratic and free education for the youth. Struggle for the protection of university autonomy. Real equality of rights to women. Freedom to the democratic women's organizations. Struggle for a strong and united women's movement.

Patriotic soldiers, noncommissioned officers and officers; oppose the plans to drag the army into imperialist adventures. The army should be taken out of the command of NATO. National army and democracy in the barracks. Do not let the soldiers be used anymore as a tool for the tyranny directed at the democratic forces and the toilers. Let the Army Mutual Aid Association [OYAK] deducations be cancelled.

Solidarity with the people of Afghanistan against the provocations of the United States and anti-Sovietism campaigns.

Solidarity with the people of El Salvador and the people of Central and Latin America against the military moves and threats of the United States.

Solidarity with the people in the Far East and with the people of Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos against the pressures and threats of the Beijing administration--the collaborator of imperialism.

Solidarity with the struggle of the Palestinian and all Arab people against imperialism, Zionism and reactionism.

Greetings to the Soviet Union--the basic source of strength of the world revolutionary process and the stronghold of the world peace and socialism--and to the CPSU--the lofty party of Lenin.

Long live proletarian internationalism. [Signed] Turkish Communist Party Central Committee. 1 April 1981.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 069 10 April 1981

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

ACP Ministerial Council Meets in Brussels A 1
Dialogue With EEC Urged A 1
Resolution Condemns Apartheid A 1

AUSTRIA

Tikhonov-led Soviet Delegation Continues Visit E 1
Contract For Pipes E 1
Interview on Bilateral Ties E 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Chancellor Delivers State of Nation Address J 1
Defense Minister Apel Interviewed on NATO Meeting J 10
DIE WELT Warns of Differences Within NATO [9 Apr] J 11
SPD's Ehmke Interviewed on Party Problems [DIE ZEIT 10 Apr] J 11
Salvadoran Expresses Willingness To Negotiate J 14
Envoy Urges Settlement of Japan-EC Trade Dispute J 15

FRANCE

Giscard Calls for End to Violence in Lebanon [LE MONDE 5-6 Apr] K 1
Contacts for Cease-Fire K 1
LE MONDE Reports Giscard Comments on UK, EEC [4 Apr] K 1
Giscard Delivers 1 April Campaign Speech in Meudon [LE MONDE 3 Apr] K 2
RPR Candidate Chirac Discusses Election Issues [LE MONDE 4 Apr] K 3
Marchais Considers Tasks in Event of Left Victory [L'HUMANITE 6 Apr] K 4
Marchais Grants Monte Carlo Radio Interview [L'HUMANITE 3 Apr] K 5
PCF Voters Polled on Marchais Election Approach [LE MONDE 5-6 Apr] K 7

SPAIN

Meetings Continue Between Haig, Leaders N 1
Talks With PSOE Leader N 1
Minister's Luncheon N 1
Departure for London N 1
King Juan Carlos, Queen To Visit Italy 28-30 April N 1

NORDIC AFFAIRS

NORWAY

Frydenlund Optimistic About U.S.-USSR Talks [ARBEIDERBLADET 6 Apr] P 1

SWEDEN

Minister on Status of Disarmament Negotiations P 1

UNITED KINGDOM

Thatcher Discusses Middle East With Arab Press Q 1

GREECE

Defense Minister Denies Missiles Installed in Crete [AKROPOLIS 9 Apr] S 1
PLO Approves Greek Nonrecognition of Israel [TO VIMA 8 Apr] S 1
Somali Foreign Minister Barre Ends Official Visit S 1
Briefs: Soviet Aluminum Plant Agreement S 1

TURKEY

TERCUMAN Criticizes Soviet Comment on U.S. Intent [7 Apr] T 1
Armenian Terrorists Linked to Narcotics Smuggling [GUNAYDIN 7 Apr] T 1
Court Rejects Appeal Against 'ARAYIS' Confiscation T 2
ICFTU Official Clarifies Statement on Unions T 2
Visits Demirel, Ecevit T 2
Ecevit, Demirel Meet With Martial Law Commander T 2

ACP MINISTERIAL COUNCIL MEETS IN BRUSSELS

Dialogue With EEC Urged

FL071900 Bridgetown CANA in English 1830 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] Kingston, Jamaica, 7 Apr (CANA)--The African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) group of countries see their concern with "bread and butter issues" as an important feature of the Lome convention that links them to the European Economic Community (EEC), Jamaica's Foreign Minister Hugh Shearer, has said. Mr Shearer was speaking in Brussels at the opening yesterday of the 27th ACP Ministerial Council Meeting, with a section of his text issued here by the Foreign Minister.

The meeting is the first for ACP ministers since the second Lome agreement came into effect in January. It is a preparatory session for an 9-10 April ACP-EEC conference in Luxembourg.

Mr Shearer said it gave the group an opportunity to make an "accurate and realistic" assessment of the first Lome convention so that the grouping might make best use of the agreements contained in the second treaty. He believed that the ACP group of developing countries, through Lome, had to develop real dialogue with the important group of industrialized states (the EEC 10) with which they were bound. That dialogue, he said, had "to do with bread and butter issues of vital concern to our development, and even sometimes to our survival."

The commitment ofthe ACP group was to achieving a better quality of life for the peoples of the member countries, and it was that commitment which guided "our partnership with the EEC," Mr Shearer added. "The challenge we face is to translate this commitment and this inspiration into practical terms both at the negotiating table and in the arduous task of implementing our treaty relationships."

Apart from reviewing the Lome conventions and preparing for the joint session in Luxembourg, the ministers are also discussing intra-ACP cooperation.

Resolution Condemns Apartheid

FL091345 Bridgetown CANA in English 1334 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] Kingston, Jamaica, 9 Apr (CANA)--The African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) group of countries has passed a resolution condemning South Africa's policy of apartheid and calling for the total isolation of Pretoria's white minority regime. According to a Foreign Ministry statement here, the ACP ministers, at their meeting in Brussels, also called on member states who had not yet done so, to break all diplomatic, military, nuclear, economic, cultural and sporting relations with South Africa. They also called for an imposition of an oil embargo against South Africa and for an immediate halt to any government action aimed at promoting trade or investment in the white-ruled country, the Foreign Ministry said.

The Brussels meeting was in preparation for a joint ACP/European Economic Community (EEC) conference in Luxembourg today and tomorrow.

The Foreign Ministry said that the ministers also passed a resolution calling on the Community to ensure protection of the ACP sugar quota in the face of increasing European beet production and declining sugar refining capacity in Europe. The ministers urged the EEC to refrain from adopting policies which would run counter to the interests of ACP sugar-producing states, as well as to formulate measures which would counter the negative effects of ocean freight rates in the ACP take-home price for their sugar. Nothing must be done to hamper ACP guaranteed access to the EEC sugar market, the ministers said.

The ministers also mandated their ambassadors in Brussels to insure the urgent implementation of the ACP's plan for intra-ACP cooperation worked out in Jamaica last year.

TIKHONOV-LED SOVIET DELEGATION CONTINUES VISIT

Contract for Pipes

AU091114 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1059 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] The Soviet delegation headed by USSR Premier Tikhonov, which today inspected the Linz plant of the Voest-Alpine Steel Corporation, has concluded a contract with the Austrian company providing for the delivery to the USSR of 14 billion schillings worth of pipes. The agreement will cover a 4-year period beginning in 1983. The pipes will be produced at the Voest-Alpine plant in Kindberg, Austria.

Interview on Bilateral Ties

AU101247 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1012 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Harry Sichrowsky report on an interview granted to the Austrian Radio and Television Service by USSR Council of Ministers Chairman Nikolay Tikhonov at the Vienna Imperial Hotel on 10 April—recorded in Russian with summarized German translation superimposed.]

[Text] Initially, the Soviet Government chief described his visit to Austria as useful and interesting. He added that the visit would be of importance for future relations between the two sides. Regarding the question of Soviet-Austrian relations, Tikhonov declared that they were marked in all fields by good cooperation, and were not subjected to any fluctuations. That is the result of consistent work and constant contacts at the highest level, he said. The basis of that is the state treaty and Austria's permanent neutrality. In that respect, Vienna-Moscow relations constitute an example of cooperation, based on equal rights, between states with different social systems, he said.

Premier Tikhonov stressed that trade between Austria and the USSR had doubled within a period of 5 years. Negotiations are underway on the construction of a metallurgical plant in the USSR with a capacity of 500,000 tons of rolled products. The Voest contract on the supply of 800,000 tons of pipes for pipelines is already known, he said, adding that the USSR, moreover, placed orders in Austria for river boats and floating cranes. Finally, an agreement on cooperation in the public health sector has been concluded, and it was agreed to intensify the exchange in the fields of culture and sports.

Premier Tikhonov then turned to the international situation and stressed that Austria and the USSR are agreed in their concern over the solution of the complicated problems. For both sides, the question of preserving and consolidating peace is in the foreground. The central problem is to halt the arms race. Here the USSR advocates further SALT talks taking into consideration the results achieved in the past. Regarding the missile armament in Europe, a moratorium has been proposed that should apply to medium-range missiles of the United States, NATO and the Warsaw Pact countries, until the successful conclusion of a treaty on the limitation or even reduction of such weapons.

Moreover, the USSR upholds its proposal to convene a conference on military detente, and it is ready to expand the zone of confidence-building measures in the military field as far as to the Ural Mountains--that is, including the European territory of the USSR.

Regarding the questions of the arms race, the maintenance of peace and the promotion of detente, agreement has been reached in Vienna, at any rate, Premier Tikhonov declared. In conclusion, he thanked the Austrian people for the friendly welcome extended to him, and conveyed to our people his best wishes for peace, neutrality and well-being.

CHANCELLOR DELIVERS STATE OF NATION ADDRESS

DW091021 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0701 GMT 9 Apr 81

[State of the nation address delivered by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to the Bundestag in Bonn--live]

[Text] Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, prior to giving the report on the state of the nation, I will quote a phrase from the poet Christa Wolf. Many of you will know her as the author of the book "Childhood Pattern" ["Kindheitsmuster"] which was published in our country last winter. When she received the Georg Buechner award this fall in Darmstadt, she spoke of the German's walk through history, terming it a toilsome, sometimes dragging and sometimes wild walk. It was, indeed, a walk of many generations through a very difficult terrain: The path of a nation whose country has little natural borders and unusually many neighbors, a walk full of concern and errors, but also full of achievements, justifying hope and courage.

Second, I will quote a worker who is 32-years-old and a machine operator in a peoples-owned plant, who told a television reporter about his work, his everyday life; his family, his pride about the building of socialism and the state there in 31 years. He added: What is 31 years of history? It is not even one-hundredth or one-thousandth of a second.

This sense of history and our long, toilsome and common walk through history is important. The sense for historical dimensions and the shortness of the time we live in is important when we think about the nation. The interest in history was increased. One reads biographies, one goes to museums, millions of people have seen Tutankhamen, the Wittelsbachers, the Staufers and, in a few months, the Prussian exhibit will be opened in Berlin with the modest subtitle: Attempt At a Balance.

This indicates a searching and a feeling for the roots of our existence, our history and our culture. We Germans cannot and do not want to deny the historical commonness of our people and of our nation. Nobody can ignore history. I welcome the official party demand which is being raised to view the entire historical inheritance and to make a differentiated assessment of our history. The people over there note where the wind is blowing.

I will give an example. After the war, an innkeeper in Lausitz had to rename his inn at the request of the SED. It had been called "Zum Alten Fritz." He simply nailed some planks over the word "alten." The people called the inn "Plank Fritz." We have heard that the innkeeper has removed the planks without causing criticism, so that people can now go "Zum Alten Fritz" again.

Ladies and gentlemen, many people will probably deal a bit more with Prussia in the near future, hopefully not in order to simply glorify it. I equally hope that one will not turn one's back on Prussia either, but come to a more differentiated view of Prussia which will go beyond just a picture made up of black and white tones. One cannot nail planks over history.

Simultaneously, we are making preparations for the Luther Year in 1983. I welcome the fact that the churches in both German states cooperate in this matter, and that the churches in both parts contribute to the idea of peace. Our policy for Germany is and remains--it must remain--a part of our efforts for safeguarding peace in Europe and in the world. This policy must stand its test at present in an extremely difficult international environment.

The world political horizon grew darker in the late seventies, particularly because the Soviet Union ignored important principles of coexistence. Its continuous increased armament in the field of Eurostrategic arms violates the principle of military balance. The invasion and war in Afghanistan violate international law. The creation of new military and political dependencies in Africa and elsewhere violate the principle of independence and the nonaligned status of Third World countries.

Everybody knows that a possible attempt to interfere by force in the conflict over the internal renovation in Poland could change the world, thus making invalid some descriptions of positions we are making today.

A peaceful success in Poland lies in the interest of all nations in Europe. [applause] Every fanning of the situation from without, be it from the East or the West, is dangerous. [applause] Achieving social reforms without dangerous international evolutions--this, too, belongs to safeguarding peace. Only if a climate of cooperation is preserved in Europe can we in the West continue to give the Poles the help they need to overcome their very great economic difficulties.

Ladies and gentlemen, in the current situation, we must first preserve what has been achieved through our policy, namely, the confidence of our partners in the West, but also the confidence of the Soviet Union, of our neighbors in East Europe with regard to the fact that in any case no additional tension will emanate from developments in Germany. The confidence we enjoy today is the result of a continuous and predictable policy, a straightforward policy. In this way, we have achieved understanding of our policy among our friends and allies.

On this basis, we have achieved limited but reliable cooperation with the Soviet Union and the countries of East Europe, cooperation which is possible among states which will remain competitors with regard to their social structure and their political aims. This pertains also to the GDR.

Continuity and reliability of our foreign policy also in the West and vis-a-vis the East are and remain the basis of our policy. In the current situation, this means first that the Federal Republic belongs to the West. Only our belonging to the Western alliance can guarantee or security, our freedom and our ability to act; it alone can preserve the balance.

Second, without the United States, there will be no security in Europe. President Reagan and his administration know that they can rely on the Federal Republic with regard to far-reaching and continuous cooperation as much as we rely on them.

An intense and promising consultation porcess has come into being. The results of the talks Ministers Genscher and Apel had in Washington indicate the high degree of agreement on all significant problems that has already been achieved. I look forward optimistically to the continuation of this close coordination when I visit the United States in May.

Third, aside from the Atlantic alliance, the European Community remains a basic pillar of our policy. In the European Community, we have a difficult period ahead of us if we wish to cope jointly with the challenges of the changed economic and political environment.

And fourth, jointly with our alliance partners, we are facing the task of guaranteeing the military balance between East and West and, wherever necessary, to restore it. The German-French statement of February says that in doing so, we rule out the acceptance of a position of weakness just as we rule out the aspiration to military superiority. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, I am saying this and the following today primarily and directly for the benefit of the GDR and the citizens of the GDR who are listening to us today with special interest because in view of much propaganda, it is hard for them to obtain a correct picture.

Fifth, in the case of medium-range weapons, the balance has been essentially impaired by the Soviet armament. Particularly impressive, for instance, are the figures in the field of the nuclear medium-range, or Eurostrategic, missiles which are ground-based. In 1960, 50 U.S. weapons of this nature were facing 290 Soviet weapons of this kind. Ten years later, the U.S. missiles had been withdrawn--this having started as early as in 1963--while the number of Soviet missiles in 1970 increased to 610 weapons of this nature. Today, another 10 years later, the Soviet Union has more than 600 Eurostrategic missiles, including as many as 200 SS-20s, having three warheads each, adding up to a total of more than 1,000 nuclear warheads. On the Western side, apart from 18 French missiles, nothing comparable exists in Europe.

This imbalance cannot remain, and it is not at all balanced by airplanes or sea-based weapons. This considerable military superiority represents a considerable political impairment. [applause]

A year and a half ago the alliance introduced a new component in security policy with its so-called dual decision. We do not want U.S. counterarming first only to negotiate on arms limitation afterwards. Rather, what we seek, on the basis of a German proposal, even before the first new U.S. weapon is deployed, is negotiations aimed at achieving military balance on as low a level as possible. [applause]

This synchronization of the two efforts is in keeping with the basic principle of the Karmel report of 1967, namely, preserving peace through military security and, simultaneously, promoting arms control and cooperation.

On the basis of the latest consultations within the alliance and on the basis of the impressions which Mr Genscher gained in Moscow, I can proceed from the premise that the talks between the two great powers initiated in October last year for the mutual limitation of Eurostrategic missiles will be resumed in the relatively near future. In order for these negotiations to lead to an acceptable and early result, it is indispensable to energetically promote the implementation of both parts of this dual decision.

When somebody now says that detente policy is to blame for all this, that it was detente policy which promoted stepped-up Soviet armament, then he must tolerate being asked what Soviet armament would have been like under the conditions of the Cold War. [applause] I will add that anyone neglecting efforts toward preserving military balance in periods of detente--which the Federal Government has never done by the way, nor has the social-liberal coalition--has failed to comprehend the inevitable reciprocal effect of balance and East-West cooperation. And if anybody believes, conversely, that detente and cooperation could be preserved if one were only prepared to accept a great Eastern predominance, then he may well some day be cruelly awakened from his illusion. [applause]

Sixth, following the invasion of Afghanistan, the social-liberal Federal Government made it absolutely clear that it is our conviction that the dialogue with the Soviet Union must not be cut off, particularly in times of crisis. In this respect, I was in agreement again with President Reagan a few days ago, on 30 March this year, and with President Giscard d'Estaing. The talks held by Mr Genscher in Moscow last week fit into this concept of not allowing, for heaven's sake, the dialogue to be severed. Genscher's talks produced important clarifications of Soviet positions in the sphere of arms control and concerning the continuation of the CSCE process, including the conference on disarmament in Europe envisaged by all sides. The Soviet Government has stated its receptiveness to negotiations of medium-range weapons without any preconditions.

You are aware, ladies and gentlemen, that on the occasion of our Moscow visit last summer, I invited General Secretary Brezhnev to pay us a return visit in Bonn. The general secretary and I are now talking about the timing of this working visit this year. We welcome the fact that the Soviet leadership, too, has once again stated its interest in the continuation of the exchange of ideas. Both of us know that talks between the Soviet general secretary and myself cannot replace the contacts between the Soviet and the U.S. leaderships, nor are they intended to do so. Yet knowing the positions of our partners, and in coordination with them, we can make good contributions toward the East-West dialogue, just as our friends expect us to do.

And seventh, the last point: The Federal Government is convinced that we not only can but even must make our contribution toward the continuation of the dialogue, last but not least in the interest of our whole people, last but not least in the interest of the German people. [applause] The more intensive the relations are between East and West, the better the relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, the better for us Germans. [applause]

The structural crisis of the world economy, the consequences of the second oil price explosion are now hitting West Europe, East Europe, as well as our own country hard. We in the Federal Republic are having a hard time coping with the doubling of our annual oil bill to DM60 billion, a doubling that started in 1978. In our country, too, the gross national product and the people's income this year will show a slight real decrease under pressure from the outside.

This holds true for industrial enterprises, banks, agriculture, and it also affects employees. Concern about jobs has increased. But still, there is hardly a country in Europe where prices are as stable as here; there is hardly a country in Europe where there is less unemployment than here. Outside Europe, the developing countries naturally are faced with even more serious problems, and the Communist CEMA countries are also affected by this structural crisis. This has become very obvious to the outside world only in Poland, but it also holds true for the GDR and for other East European states.

Under pressure of unemployment, which is increasing worldwide, the danger is growing worldwide of relapses into illegal trade policy struggles and protectionism. The European Community or its member states are tempted in this respect, too. We will resist this. All of us in Europe benefit greatly from the European Community and the Monetary System, and in critical times above all we want to preserve all this very carefully for economic and world policy reasons.

General economic programs aimed at boosting demand are not a useful recipe at present. By the way, this holds true for Eastern Europe as well as for the European Community and thus also for us. What matters for us above all is reducing our balance of payments deficit; in other words, in the long run we cannot pay higher bills to other countries than we ourselves are paid by other countries. This means in particular that we must continue to curb our oil imports. It also means that we must save energy, and it means that we must further improve the competitiveness of our products on the world market to be able to sell more.

This course will require great effort by all, but it will save and create jobs and it will make our country's economic future safe. I am confident that the German economy will stand this difficult time successfully, better than most other national economies. Let me explain why I am confident. First, the managements of our German enterprises have shown--the last time by the middle of the past decade following the first oil price explosion--how adaptable they can be in the light of new markets and changed market situations, as well as in the light of the terms of trade changed to the disadvantage of European industrial products.

This time, too, they will improve their competitiveness through energy conservation, new technologies, new production processes, new products, better service, through innovation in general and through punctuality. The program resolved upon in Paris and Bonn yesterday not only shows the direction but it will also help implement it, in particular regarding medium and small enterprises. [applause] The French and we face very similar and almost the same necessities, and that is why we do the same thing.

Second, our employees, their work councils and trade unions, have proved that they back such readjustment processes, because they recognize that they are necessary, because the work councils can make sure that they are implemented in a way that is socially acceptable, because they are aware that this helps save their jobs. The additional and requalification measures on the labor market announced by the Federal Government yesterday also serve this readjustment on the part of employees.

Third, I am optimistic also because our social system provides excellent security for such readjustment processes and because the trade unions and employers face each other as free and autonomous negotiating partners and partners of agreements. I would add that we must make sure that the social security system is not misused here and there, and I also add that wage negotiations where differences are about tenth parts of a percent only, although the public is made to believe that things are different, should not spread like an endless mildew over everything. I hope that the clarifying resolution on coal and steel pool codetermination effective 1 May, and the argumentation of the CDU/CSU on this issue which was carried even into the Bundestag will be of help. [applause]

There is no structural changes without risks, neither for employers nor for employees. Everybody must share both the work and the burden. Nor can there be a return to high employment without everybody cooperating, including labor and management. No group should try today to profit from this situation to the disadvantage of other groups. Given the mutual dependency of all countries, not even a state can afford to secure for itself lasting advantages over other countries.

In this world economic situation there is no reasonable alternative to international cooperation. This also holds true toward the GDR and Eastern Europe. Here and also in the GDR there are some who worry about their economic future. In addition, there is anxiety about peace, anxiety about security in general, and this by no means only among younger people. Certainly nobody can provide security against all hazards of life. There is no fully automatized or accident-free or preprogrammed life. Thank God, no, because that would be very terrible and very inhuman. Certainly also nobody should play down the problems and in particular the worries and anxieties of others. But it is also true that most people throughout the world would like to be in the place of the Germans. [applause]

Nobody should ignore the fact that employment in our country last year reached the absolutely highest level in the history of the FRG, with 25.8 million people employed. Everybody concerned about peace and security should be aware that our alliance and partnership with our allies and the United States give us security. Peace is not seriously threatened. Nobody needs to listen to panicmongers; neither to peace policy panicmongers nor to economic policy panicmongers. [applause]

But two things must be added here or understood: The beginning of the eighties faces society with demands which are greater and of a different significance and quality than those of the early seventies. The people must free themselves of the one-sided way of thinking in terms of demands engendered by growth in society. They must learn to really exploit vital chances which represent something considerably different and considerably more than just a chance to continuously increase one's standard of living. [applause]

I want to encourage abandoning the coercion for consumption some people have imposed upon themselves or have subjected themselves to. I also want to encourage people to cast off the force of television which can kill conversation. [applause]

We have great possibilities in our current society to implement the personal development ideals as they were and are understood by the workers movement and by social democracy, by the liberal bourgecisie and liberalism. He who purposefully exploits the chance to develop himself need not be afraid. [applause] However, in doing this he cannot stand his ground alone. The basic value of fraternity has been widely incorporated in our social legislature regarding solidarity among the working people and their work with the socially weak. But this alone does not safeguard it. There are aberrations which indicate a deterioration in social activity and responsibility. This is clearly demonstrated by relations in some places with foreigners living and working in our country. Some minorities are sometimes rather brutally excluded. There is certainly also sometimes a lack of solidarity vis-a-vis the youth and also vis-a-vis future people still to be born if we destroy the natural environment today.

There is also sometimes a lack of solidarity vis-a-vis GDR citizens when federal citizens sometimes pat them on the back in a condescending way because they are better off. Our compatriots over there are most certainly not more guilty of Hitler and World War II than the federal citizens, but they suffer much more from the consequences of these events. [applause]

In the GDR, there are more Germans than in our country whose economic standard is relatively limited, but who have achieved a great personal spiritual growth which remains private. Without solidarity with GDR citizens and others in the East, West and South, we would remain shallow contemporaries, and beyond this shallow surface fear could indeed spread.

But if we develop ourselves purposefully, if we act in a fraternal way, if we accept our duties, then there is indeed reason for hope and courage.

We Germans and particularly the young Germans cannot--like some other nations--gain much security from the attachment to the nation. Some even consider the German nation today as unwieldly and bulky. But this is no reason to put aside this term or even the matter itself. Those who would do that, would accept the danger of a later nationalist reaction. [applause]

I see no danger that we could be misunderstood as being nationalists if we here in the Bundestag speak of a nation. We have learned our lessons in this area. We would make ourselves insecure, void of history and faceless, if we wanted to abandon the concept of nation. We would be acting very selfishly and without solidarity toward our compatriots in the GDR, for whom self-identification with a nation is more of a vital necessity than it is here. [applause]

I quote what Willy Brandt as federal chancellor said in 1970 in his report on the state of the nation given to the Bundestag: Some 25 years after the unconditional capitulation of the Hitler reich, the term nation represents the band around divided Germany. The term nation unites historical facts and the political will. The term nation contains and means more than a common language and culture, a state and a social system. The nation is based on the continuing feeling of one people that they belong together. Nobody can deny that a German nation exists in this sense and will continue to exist as long as we can foresee.

That was in 1970. I myself said 3 years ago here, no it was at a meeting of historians: Unity of a nation means at any rate a common historical past with events giving reason to be proud and events giving reason for regret or for shame. The term nation is simultaneously a claim for the future, a claim we make, but a claim that commits us. The term nation is also a piece of reality in our present life.

I add that a nation depends solely on the will of those who want to be a nation. [applause] Insofar a nation is a continuous plebiscite. In other terms, the German nation will continue to exist as long as the people in both parts of Germany want this. [applause]

What I added at the meeting of the historians is equally valid: As regards the future of the German nation, we must soberly state that the current political constellations do not offer an opportunity to overcome the partition of Germany into two states. There is no other way of doing something reasonable for the unity of the German nation than to continue the policy of peace and detente, and to pursue the reestablishment of the spiritual, cultural and economic unity of all of Europe. It has been a manifold unity for centuries. [applause]

Since I am quoting now, I would like to go much further back. Walter Ulbricht said at an SED congress in 1954:

We advocate German unity because the Germans in the West of our homeland are our brothers, because we love our fatherland, because we are aware that the restoration of German unity is an unshakable historical inevitability and that anyone who dares oppose this law will perish. This is what Walter Ulbricht said in 1954.

In recent weeks the chairman of the GDR Council of State, Mr Erich Honecker, spoke of a unification of the two German states under socialist auspices. These two communist quotations show, despite their ideological wrapping, that the idea of German unity in the GDR too, is not as dead as the delimitation politicians would like us to believe. [applause] Because the citizens in the GDR cannot live without identification with the German nation, the SED leadership and the state leadership over there cannot ignore this necessity, no matter how often they have sought to do so in the many years in between. [applause]

Quite some time ago the idea of a rapprochement between East Berlin and Bonn, between the two German states, often elicited the suspicion of third parties. The German problem seemed to disquiet the status of Europe and seemed to jeopardize Europe's peace. Today it is rather the other way round. Unrest and anxiety in the world and in Europe jeopardize the measure of inter-German cooperation which has been attained.

The increase in and enlargement of the minimum currency exchange rates in tourist travel decreed by the GDR Government under these world conditions last fall exemplify this. This caused a considerable setback to relations between the two German states. Travel to the GDR which had developed normally until October, subsequently decreased drastically, especially in Berlin. The Federal Government expects the GDR leadership to correct this intervention in the substance of human contacts. [applause]

This is a setback again, it does not spell the end, the failure of our policy of relieving tensions, an end of our policy of a balance of interests. We did not allow ourselves to be thrown off the track by setbacks before, nor will we reply to delimitation with delimitation on our part in the future. [applause] What we offer for the future as well is the enhancement of cooperation and of relations with the GDR.

I read with attention what Mr Honecker wrote about GDR endeavors to normalize relations between the two German states and that options for the further development of these relations do exist. The further development of relations is indeed of decisive significance for the sake of good neighborly relations as we intended them to be in the basic treaty.

Just recently, Mr Honecker demanded in Germany that on some basic questions we accept the positions which the GDR has been advocating for quite some time. I need not discuss this in detail here and now, yet I do wish to outline our position once again on one point by way of digression, namely in the citizenship issue. It is generally known that this has not been affected by the basic treaty. The Federal Government adheres to German citizenship, clearly and without any changes.

All over the world, it is part of the rights of a state to determine the conditions of acquisition, possession and loss of citizenship. Correspondingly, we will not have our right contested to adhere to German citizenship as prescribed by our basic law. [applause]

By doing so, we do not impair any rights of other states, especially not any rights of the GDR. It will remain unchanged that all Germans, will be granted the basic rights guarantees of the basic law and the protection of the courts of law of the Federal Republic of Germany.

We are aware that the GDR issued a citizenship law of its own in 1967. The GDR must know, however, that its legislation on citizenship cannot affect either the German citizenship in the meaning of our basic law or our legislation. And, by this I intend to wind up my digression, our side will take both these aspects into account in its practical behavior.

In both the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic, the special duty of the Germans to preserve peace is being realized and also recognized. Both German states bear responsibility for preventing any additional burdens to the East-West relationship in Europe to emanate from their relations. This also includes the discontinuation of the shooting along the borders through Germany. [applause]

Just recently, during the opening of the CSCE meeting in Madrid, Mr Genscher justly said that it depresses us that the barrier installations along the border between the two German states continue to exist and are being further perfected. We cannot and will not put up with this. I personally saw last weekend at Luechow-Dannenberg in several places, the nearly unbelievable technical and military expenditure of the GDR along the border. A truly abhorrent experience [applause] Nevertheless, it cannot be helped that both German states in their political actions must be particularly moderate, and they must keep talking with each other in difficult times as well.

After a number of political meetings in the first half of 1980, and after a very useful, extensive dialogue between Mr Honecker and myself in Belgrade, it was necessary to postpone my meeting with the general secretary which had been prepared for August. This was attributable to developments outside Germany causing concern in Europe, developments which continue and which concern us in the same way today. It was all the harder for me to decide on the postponement of the visit since the meeting, which originally had been agreed on for the first few months of 1980, had to be postponed once before by wish of Mr Honecker because of the aggravation of tensions between West and East following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. It is my definite intention to conduct the dialogue on the overall complex of relations between our states and on topical international issues at a time better suited to both sides. The timing obviously depends on international developments.

During the past 10 years, we developed an extensive network of talks and contacts between the two German states through the Social-Liberal coalition's policy on Germany, the basic threat, and other agreements. A great deal has been achieved as a result of this policy, some of this even being taken for granted, without us being aware of the changes anymore.

Trade developed favorably last year as well. Both sides can be satisfied with the growth rate and the trade volume attained last year. It is a good thing that the bilateral trade flows were balanced. This opens favorable prospects for the future. The Federal Republic is willing to continue promoting the development and enhancement of inter-German trade.

Many pensioners from the GDR visited us in 1980, too. Millions of telephone calls were made. I also emphasize the nonstate contacts between sports associations, trade unions and in the ecclesiastical and cultural fields, for instance during film weeks. What we would like to achieve is to see all contacts enhanced and broadened. [applause]

Many years ago, it was in March 1968 during the first debate on the state of the nation held here in the Bundestag, it was my privilege to speak on behalf of the Social Democratic Bundestag faction, and I addressed myself to the GDR youth of that time. I stated then that the youth in the GDR has a rather critical attitude toward the Federal Republic of Germany, that it often lacked the understanding or the insight into the nature of our society, our social system, just as yardsticks and concepts valid in the GDR are often alien to us. I drew attention to the danger of such a development and said: Both parts must render themselves capable of understanding each other. This, too, is part of inter-German peace policy. It remains correct and important today as well to mutually understand each other. [applause]

I am aware that some people in our country travel little to the GDR for various reasons. But I would like to ask all those who have relatives or friends in the GDR--you need not necessarily have relatives and friends there--and all those who are interested, and I particularly ask our younger fellow citizens; do not be discouraged, go to the GDR also in the future, listen and also talk yourself. [applause]

Germany between the Riesengebirge and the Baltic Sea also has plenty of beautiful landscapes and towns. But above everything else, all of them, the people of Mecklenburg, Pomerania, Brandenburg, Saxony, Thuringia, Berlin, must feel our affection in these contacts. [applause]

It is Berlin and the people of Berlin to which the most direct political, economic and human engagement of the Bundestag and the Federal Government is devoted. [applause] The Berlin Wall was built 20 years ago. It continues to cast an evil shadow on our country. We will not put up with this wall. [applause] But 10 years ago, in the fall of 1971, the four-power agreement was signed to which we continue to adhere as before. It contributed essentially toward the stabilization of the situation in and around Berlin. Since then the number of transits has doubled. Visits to East Berlin and to the GDR are again part of everyday life in Berlin, and each day, each evening, the people of Berlin make thousands of telephone calls to relatives and friends in the eastern part of the city and elsewhere in the GDR.

What forms the yardstick for our policy on Berlin is the careful weighing of what is legally permissible and what is politically reasonable. In this respect we are acting in close harmony with the three powers which, on the basis of their rights and responsibilities, guarantee the security and the freedom of Berlin. The stability of Berlin is important even beyond Germany. Governing Mayor Dr Vogel in his government statement said that Berlin above all needs hope, optimism and self-awareness. He is right. And this holds true for the whole people. This holds true for Berlin and it holds true for us. [applause]

I think that the new governing mayor and deputy mayor Brunner, as well as the whole new Senat, can give the people of Berlin hope, optimism and self-awareness [commotion and applause] just as Luise Schroeder or Ernst Reuter or Willy Brandt did before. They, too, were not born in Berlin; but they did become Berliners as if they had been baptized with Spree River water. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen of the opposition, your unrest is understandable to me, and I am gratified to note it. [laughter, applause]

The Federal Government and the Bundestag will continue to help the people of Berlin. We have improved the instruments for the promotion of Berlin and the federal aid for Berlin. But what Berlin needs above everything else is the continued engagement of the private economy. What we need is economic, scientific and cultural contributions for Berlin, just as we need economic and scientific and cultural contributions from Berlin for us and for all of us. [applause]

The city and its people not only bear the burdens of the past, they not only bear problems of the present; they also bear our hopes for the future. This is why we stick by the Berliners. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, the overall situation and the state of the German nation on the whole, or particularly, today require fewer big words than ever. What we need is moderation on both sides. We Germans must deal carefully with each other, preserving and enhancing what has been achieved. We must be persistent and remain predictable for each other. This applies to the Federal Republic and the GDR alike. [applause]

Moderation, predictability, and persistence are not particularly traditional virtues of the Germans. We must develop them into German virtues if we wish to hold our own in our very special historical and very special geographic situation.

By special situation is meant following Hitler and Auschwitz, at the interface between West and East in the center of Europe. In this situation, we Germans can be of much more use to Europe as a whole than many others, but by the same token we Germans can also inflict much more harm on Europe than might many others. If all goes well in Europe, then we Germans can derive a great benefit from it. If all turns bad, the German nation will be the one to suffer most. [applause]

We recognize that the consequence of our geographic and historical situation is particularly a duty for peace; not an illusory pacifism, but a duty to have a concrete policy which does not take peace as a state of paradise or as the silence of a graveyard. Rather we see peace as a condition which needs to be reinstituted between the states over and over again, [applause], that is, through the preservation and restoration of balance on as low a military level as possible--through negotiations and treaties, through the creation of mutual confidence, add through cooperation, meaning through the joint organization of that peace.

Balance is an indispensable precondition. After all, no arms limitation agreement would be conceivable without the principles of balance and equality. Yet balance alone will not suffice for peace at all. What is required is talking with each other if one wants peace. It is necessary to listen to each other, to bring interests into balance and into compromise. It is necessary to seek headway in the direction of lasting solutions.

This was the content of the Hermal report which the North Atlantic alliance adopted in 1967. This continues to be correct today as well, and it is also correct today for the two German states and for the one German nation. [applause]

DEFENSE MINISTER APEL INTERVIEWED ON NATO MEETING

DW091220 Munich Bayerischer Rundfunk Network in German 1600 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Reporter Faessler interview with Defense Minister Hans Apel; on 8 April; place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] It was expected in many quarters that the Nuclear Planning Group meeting would result in a quarrel between the Europeans and the Americans. U.S. Government officials spread the news yesterday that Secretary of Defense Weinberger would act in a very tough manner here. What happened?

[Answer] U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger did not act in a tough way. He pointed out in a few sentences that the Europeans must also make their contribution to common defense. We already had discussed that with each other in Washington, and it became clear on this occasion that the FRG made its contribution last year through the Bundeswehr. The Americans recognize that. We will also make our contribution in this decade. The debate on this issue will certainly take place in May, it does not belong in this meeting.

[Question] It was pointed out at this Nuclear Planning Group meeting that both parts of NATO 's counterarmament decision must be handled equally. It was heard in delegation circles that disarmament negotiations with the Soviet Union on Eurostrategic arms should take place within the framework of SALT. Nothing like that can be found in the official communique. But one thing is clear for everybody: We all want these negotiations; and naturally, they can take place only in the framework of NATO, because it would be a strategic and political mistake to have arms control negotiations on American and Soviet medium-range arms which are only limited to Europe. We agree on that. Was a date mentioned when the Americans will enter preparatory talks with the Russians on further disarmament negotiations?

[Answer] That was certainly impossible because the U.S. administration must still determine its own position. I believe that all Europeans made it clear here in Europe that we take both parts on the counterarmament decisions seriously, so that timing problems will be important.

[Question] It certainly was not considered a task of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group so far to comment on international developments. Yet, the NATO secretary general commented today on the Polish situation. Was that done under U.S. pressure?

[Answer] No, we informed ourselves about the Polish situation, about the military picture, and we made very reserved statements. First, because we are not the foreign ministers of the NATO countries. Second, because we do not want to and are not permitted to pour oil on the fire. Third, we ought to tell the Soviet Union what risks would come about for the detente process if a military intervention took place in Poland.

DIE WELT WARNS OF DIFFERENCES WITHIN NATO

DW091250 Bonn DIE WELT in German 9 Apr 81 p 1

[Ruediger Miniac article: "Threatened Harmony"]

[Text] The Atlantic alliance is in danger of splitting over basic issues of common interest. Under this impression of common uneasiness, the defense ministers closed their secret files in Bonn and left for their capitals to do national business again. True, they are fully agreed on what their dossiers say about the Soviet Union. It rearms more than any other world power has ever done. But at this point, the perfect Atlantic harmony ends.

The question as to how the alliance is to respond to the Soviet threat in Atlantic solidarity at present is answered differently by the individual partners. Putting it briefly, the United States insists on higher defense efforts, not only by the Americans. The Europeans, if they agree at all, react cautiously. They hope for results from negotiations they intensely want to have on the curbing of military power. The United States, on the other hand, is sceptic about this.

Where is a way for all? America's appeal to its European friends not to let their muscles relax is justified. But the United States should not throw its wishes on the alliance tables in a provocative and arrogant way. On the other hand, the Europeans must realize how serious the American intention is to counter Moscow's hitherto unchecked buildup of forces by the same means and in close partnership with its allies.

Both require the willingness and ability of the Europeans and the Americans to place themselves in each other's position. It seems the first encounter of the Europeans and the "new" Americans within the scope of NATO after harsh statements also initiated a process of frankness and mutual understanding.

All in the alliance must be and remain aware that, as before, NATO as a club of fifteen is more than everyone alone. America needs Europe just as Europe needs America. Quarrels are allowed sometimes, but they must be aimed at agreement.

SPD'S EHMKE INTERVIEWED ON PARTY PROBLEMS

DW091306 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 10 Apr 81 p 5

[Editor Rolf Zundel interview with Deputy SPD Faction Chairman Horst Ehmke; date and place not given]

[Text] ZEIT: Discussions on strategy and armament are particularly difficult in this country because it always involves the approach of the Federal Republic, its position in East-West relations and its international role. The SPD has been heavily shaken in this connection, first in the rearmament debate in the early fifties, then in the quarrel about nuclear arms in the late fifties and now in the dispute about counterarmament in the field of missiles. Is the current debate a new issue or a continuation of earlier debates?

Ehmke: Yes and no. It is a continuation insofar as it involves the attitude of the Federal Republic. One must not forget the historical experience of our people. One must not forget what our former adversaries and current Western allies have said about Germany's role in Europe and in history. Nobody could imagine at that time the Federal Republic would become a part of the Western alliance in such a short time, with a considerable economic and military significance. One must not pretend that history does not exist. Although the political weight carried by the Federal Republic has grown, it does not change anything about the fact that we are a defeated and divided country with the special Berlin problem. I believe that it is in this respect a continuation of the old debate...

ZEIT: ...and how is it new?

Ehmke: ...insofar as one must see the current debate in the background of 10 years of detente policy. The question pertaining to the task and the attitude of the Federal Republic has taken a new dimension: aren't we committed due to German interests to do everything so that detente policy can be continued?

ZEIT: At that time as well as today, the SPD was criticized for being neutralist. Where is the limit between a legitimate representation of German interests--at that time directed at reunification and nuclear-free zones, today at the preservation of detente policy results--and neutralism trying to evade political responsibilities and duties?

Ehmke: The issue of neutralism has been more or less sufficiently discussed. It continues to be clear that detente policy, particularly in the field of arms control, can be successful only if negotiations take place between the blocs. Abandoning the alliance would mean drastically curtailing the chances of success. The discussion has premises other than at the time when rearmament and German reunification were discussed. Much time has elapsed in the meantime. One accepts that no reunification will take place in the near future, and one sees the successes of detente policy which made millions of Germans in both parts of Germany reestablish their contacts.

ZEIT: And yet, the reproach of neutrality is being voiced, also in the United States.

EHmke: I know about American statements indicating that the Germans want to attend to their business, while the Americans have to take care of defense. But what is erroneously termed neutralism today actually is directed more at the question of whether the Federal Republic should play a more active world political role. I don't consider it correct to term our restraint and reluctance to play a quasi big power role as "neutralism." In my opinion and in view of the possibilities and the special situation of the Federal Republic, it would be wrong to be misled and pursue a policy which would not befit us and which would overstrain us.

ZEIT: The federal chancellor also says that he is worried by the rapid increase of the Federal Republic's political weight. Others formulate it with less restraint, saying that the Federal Republic must eventually become politically mature and bear world political responsibility. But resistance is coming about particularly with regard to this factual pressure and this "realpolitik." Actually, one did not imagine that the Federal Republic would become mature in such a way--with an increasing military engagement and increasing arms exports.

Ehmke: Naturally, the Federal Republic must play its role in the world. Being discussed is not whether it should do this, but how it should do it. I recall that CDU politicians suggested in the beginning of the counterarmament debate the immediate deployment of the missiles without losing much time with arms control negotiations. I recall that in the beginning of the Gulf region crisis, a suggestion was made by conservative circles to send German soldiers there. That would be just the wrong thing to do.

One cannot use the weight of the Federal Republic that carelessly. Because the weight has grown, our responsibility has also grown. That pertains also to arms exports. There can be situations when such arms exports to countries outside the NATO sphere would serve the interests of the Federal Republic and of the alliance. But that must be most carefully examined as the circumstances require. I believe that many people who discuss the arms deal with the Saudis have not really considered the long-term foreign political implications.

ZEIT: Into the protest movement against counterarmament flows not only concern about detente and visions of a special historically based foreign political role of the Federal Republic; pacifism finds a field of action here too. Some critical groups use most radical formulations: May one at all make preparations for a war, particularly nuclear war?

Ehmke: A discussion goes on today in the church whether a "just" war and "reasonable" defense will be possible at all in view of the destructive strength of modern arms. Speaking to me recently, a person formulated the following: Shouldn't a Christian rather take the martyrdom of defenselessness upon oneself? I do not share this opinion, but I understand the question, and I understand that some people are more afraid of the masses of arms already stored here, than of the fact that the Soviet Union has more arms in the European sphere than the West. I suggest taking these fears seriously, but I consider it wrong to make them the guideline of a policy. No direct route exists toward disarmament. There is only the long and toilsome effort to achieve progress through a policy aimed at a military balance and through negotiations.

ZEIT: A novelty in the protest movement is this: In the earlier strategy debates, the leadership role of the United States, its political model, had never been contested, really. This has changed now. Doesn't this additionally aggravate the discussion?

Ehmke: I do believe that this plays a role. I always try to explain to our American friends that much of what they consider an anti-American trend actually is a disappointed affection for the United States. After the war, Hitler and the concentration camps, the United States had been the great hope. And since the Americans in the so-called "re-education" conveyed a very idealistic picture of democracy in which power policy did not appear, the disappointment--the catchword being Vietnam--was particularly serious. This disappointment now may well show repercussions also in the discussions on the missile armament. Only, people tend to forget that it was not Washington which invented the gap in medium-range missiles.

ZEIT: And yet, segments of the SPD interpret counterarming as an imposition by the United States.

Ehmke: Yes, but this is simply wrong. Since the Europeans were most directly affected, they also were the first to bring up the issue and to demonstrate its urgency to the Americans.

ZEIT: What matters in German-American relations, after all, is not missiles alone. Many Social Democrats feel that the policy of CSU candidate for chancellor Strauss, which was rejected by the German voter in the Bundestag elections of October 1980, is now being re-imported as an American requirement on the German alliance partner.

Ehmke: This assessment of U.S. policy is dangerous because, if advocated persistently and self-righteously, it may turn into a self-fulfilling prophecy. For the time being, the policy of the new U.S. administration has not yet been made definite, and wherever it has been formulated the Europeans have succeeded in exerting a strong influence along the lines of their own concepts. This is why I think it is wrong to spread alarming slogans in that respect.

By the way, notwithstanding all skepticism harbored by many people toward the new U.S. administration, we must take care lest the impression arise that we regard the United States more critically than does the Soviet Union. Even liberal Americans would fail to muster any understanding for that sort of thing. It is a fact that detente has been essentially jeopardized by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. And the NATO decision would not even be on our agenda had the Soviet Union not continued to arm despite warnings of the West over many years.

ZEIT: Many arguments of the critics of the NATO decision within the SPD sound similar to the charges used by the critics outside the SPD. Is a mass movement developing here which will cause the SPD a lot of grief?

Ehmke: I believe that this protest movement--and I have been saying this for a year now--will grow to be bigger than the Green movement.

ZEIT: And how will the SPD be dealing with such a movement?

Ehmke: This is a question concerning the relationship of the extraparliamentary opposition with the SPD--and not to forget with the FDP as well--even though the junior coalition partner manages time and again to divert attention from their difficulties by pointing at us. Both parties have similar problems there, and it honors them. These are two parties which are open toward the discussion in society, quite unlike the union parties. But this also spells special responsibility--just as at the time when the SPD had to take issue with the extraparliamentary opposition. If the SPD fails to weather this debate with argument, then the conservatives never will.

ZEIT: But how--by means of collusion?

Ehmke: Surely, you cannot engage in anything like collusion with the protest movement which is highly heterogenous, if only because this basically involves mere protest. Protest also has a political effect, yet it is not any policy in the sense of shaping anything. But neither must we diabolize the protest movement; we must rather debate it with arguments.

ZEIT: Peace policy is the principal legitimation of the social-liberal coalition. If all that is left of the dual decision in the end is the counterarming part, won't this also spell the end of the coalition?

Ehmke: I don't think so. After all, the counterarming decision is a reply to Soviet armament. In any case, we will continue to endeavor to achieve military balance on as low a level as possible. Whether this will be possible also depends essentially on the deportment of the Soviet Union.

ZEIT: The assessment of a policy does not depend solely on its objectives but also on its results. And if the result is counterarming, this is bound to hit the SPD hard. Unlike earlier times when rearmament and nuclear armament were at stake and when the SPD, from its position in the opposition, was able to correct the when and how of the decisions, policies today have been conceived by a chancellor of the SPD. Can the SPD digest a failure of this policy?

Ehmke: It very much depends on the circumstances under which this might happen. At the moment, however, there is no call for anticipating a failure. What we must do now is concentrate all our strength of achieving success. For if this policy were unsuccessful, it would spell defeat not just for the SPD but for all people wanting to live in peace.

SALVADORAN EXPRESSES WILLINGNESS TO NEGOTIATE

PA091528 Paris AFP in Spanish 1043 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] Cologne, 9 Apr (AFP)--Joaquin Samayoa, press and information director of the joint commission of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front (FMLN) and the Revolutionary Democratic Front (FDR), said that the Salvadoran opposition is willing to seek a negotiated solution to the conflict in El Salvador.

In an interview broadcast today by Deutsche Welle, a Cologne radio station, Joaquin Samayoa said, however, that the FDR does not consider the government junta to be the "legitimate" representative of the people. At best, it would be possible to talk with the civilian members of the junta, Napoleon Duarte and his comrades, but not with the military officers in the government.

Samayoa said the FDR would basically prefer to negotiate directly with Washington, without the participation of the junta.

Referring to the role of the North Americans, who support the government junta, Samayoa said that the United States could be faced with a "new Vietnam" because, he said, despite the advance of the government troops, the strength of the guerrillas has not been undermined.

In answer to a question about the aid received by the FDR from abroad, particularly from Cuba and Nicaragua, Samayoa said: "There has been a great movement of solidarity throughout the world and Salvadorans will not accept U.S. dictates as to the countries with which they must or must not maintain friendly relations."

A socialist state, Samayoa said, is much closer to the guerrillas' ideals of a capitalist regime.

ENVOY URGES SETTLEMENT OF JAPAN-EC TRADE DISPUTE

OW091225 Tokyo, KYODO in English 1137 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 9 Apr (KYODO)--Dr Klaus Blech, newly appointed West German ambassador to Japan, has called for a "reasonable settlement" of the current trade dispute between Japan and European Community (EC) countries.

"We stand against protectionist trade because West Germany is a trading country, like Japan," Dr Blech said in a recent interview with KYODO news service in Bonn. Referring to the "reasonable settlement," the incoming ambassador called on the EC countries, including his own country, to expand their exports to Japan and modify their economic structure to meet this purpose.

"On the other hand," he said, "Japan should open its markets more for foreign countries and moderate its concentrated exports of (products of) some certain industrial sectors such as autos, television sets and electronics. The corresponding sectors in our country are confused by such concentrated sales."

The new envoy, who is to arrive in Tokyo next Monday, pointed out that EC suffered a dollar 10 billion deficit in trade with Japan last year and one third of it came from West Germany. "Japan's exports to our country increased by 32 percent last year while West Germany exported 4 percent less in 1980 than in 1979," he said.

In the hour-long interview at his office in the Foreign Ministry, Dr Blech said he believed current Japanese-West German relations are at "the best in general."

"There are active personnel exchanges in many fields between both countries," he said. "Some 2,700 West German citizens are in Japan, while 11,000 Japanese are in West Germany. Gott sei dank (thank God)."

The new envoy stressed the need for close cooperative ties in the field of science and technology. Both countries exchange about 100 scholars annually.

Dr Blech further said that Japan and West Germany are maintaining a common free and democratic political system, "even though we are not in the same security treaty structure."

GISCARD CALLS FOR END TO VIOLENCE IN LEBANON

LD090841 Paris LE MONDE in French 5-6 Apr 81 p 2

[Text] The Elysee on 3 April published the following communique expressing Mr Giscard d'Estaing's reaction to the situation in Lebanon: "France solemnly expresses its keen concern and anxiety over the serious clashes which have occurred in several parts of Lebanon and, in particular, the shelling which has taken place in Beirut. These actions are inflicting new suffering on a population which has undergone severe trials and toward which the French people feel friendship and sympathy. They are a resumption of the process of violence from which Lebanon has suffered cruelly.

"France issues an urgent appeal to all parties concerned to respect the cease-fire ordered by President Sarkis and to end the attacks and shelling. All parties must unite in the will to cooperate with the Lebanese Government, to respect human life and to reestablish order and security."

Contacts for Cease-Fire

LD101122 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] French Foreign Affairs Minister Francois-Poncet said this morning: France will contact all countries in the region concerned with the situation in Lebanon, that is, the Arab countries and Israel alike, through the United Nations, with a view to trying to restore a cease-fire situation.

LE MONDE REPORTS GISCARD COMMENTS ON UK, EEC

LD091405 Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Apr 81 p 4

["M.D. report: "Threats Against the European Community"]

[Excerpt] Giscard d'Estaing does not rule out a Europe without British presence and Chancellor Schmidt is threatening to limit the FRG contribution to the Community budget.

In an interview published on 3 April in LES DERNIERES NOUVELLES D'ALSACE, the head of state recalls that "it was under President Pompidou that the decision was taken" to allow Britain into the EEC. He adds:

"It is not for me to judge Georges Pompidou's actions. But it is worth recalling that the decision was taken and the negotiations concluded before the beginning of my term. At the time, all our partners were in favor of Britain's entry. The choice unfortunately was not to keep the six-country Europe as it was--which would no doubt have been the most effective solution provided that Europe developed--but the choice was to see the six blocked or to see Britain enter with all the problems it brought with it... It is now obvious that certain matters were not made clear in the negotiations."

To the question: "Tabarly lost a race because the British changed the rules midway. Aren't the British doing likewise with the EEC," the president of the republic replies: "We will not accept this. For me, the problem is clear, The year 1981 will be a year of truth. The debate is about acceptance of the Community rules. The test is not discussing a particular subject in great detail. It is: Does Britain really accept the Community rules?"

"What if the answer is no?"

"We shall see."

"Would you be prepared to break up the ten-member Europe?"

"We shall see."

GISCARD DELIVERS 1 APRIL CAMPAIGN SPEECH IN MEUDON

LD091443 Paris LE MONDE in French 3 Apr 81 p 11

[Excerpts] In Meudon (Seine-et-Oise), an audience of 3,000-4,000 people awaited Giscard d'Estaing. After a "picture show" reviewing his 7-year term, Meudon Mayor Gauer, Madame Pelletier, chairman of the Giscard d'Estaing support committee, and Paris Deputy Chinaud spoke in turn. The president of the UDF group in the National Assembly referred to the statements made the previous day by Mitterrand on the "great debate" program on television channel 1, saying that it is time to wage "battle against vagueness, overconfidence and ignorance."

After stating that the arguments put to the French people must be "clear, unambiguous and straightforward and must not withold the full details and commitments which must be given," the candidate touched on the problems of freedom, addressing the audience in these terms: "Read the programs with care. Read them section by section and you will see what restrictions are proposed to apply to the exercise of economic freedoms or to the activity of the liberal professions." Giscard d'Estaing then asked his audience to show its "sympathy" for President Reagan. After indicating that he "could be reached in a few minutes if there were any decisions to take essential to France's security," Giscard d'Estaing continued: "Concerning the defense effort, only those who have decided it or supported it can talk about it, and there are many things to say...." Mr Chinaud, the president of the republic added, knows "who took the essential decisions to provide us with modern defenses and who supported this effort on the parliamentary level; and let nobody tell us it is possible to suddenly refer to innovations or the needs of the moment. Not at all! The defense effort is the one which takes the longest advance preparation. Nobody has the right to start talking about France's security today unless he thought about it 5, 10 or 15 years ago."

Giscard d'Estaing gave assurances that the armaments which will come into use as from 1984 will make France the third military power in the world, "equal technologically, and on the basis of completely French technology, with the United States and the Soviet Union." He added: "We will have the same level of armament in terms of the most advanced arms."

"Solitude of Kolwezi"

Giscard d'Estaing stressed the ability of the "French leaders to represent France in the world" and referred to the military operation at Kolwezi. "There was such a thing as the solitude of Kolwezi," he confided, "for when I made this decision, and during the whole critical period of its execution, that is for the whole of one Friday from when our planes took off at seven in the morning and our men could not begin to jump until three in the afternoon, I listened to and read all the declarations which were made and I had no support. I repeat--read the papers again--no clear and unequivocal support. I do not know if there is such a thing as the solitude of power, but I can tell you that there was such a thing as the solitude of Kolwezi."

Concerning Poland, the candidate asserted: "Since my election, not a year has passed without my going to Poland to form close relations with that country." Recalling that France heads "the group of countries seeking a solution to Poland's financial difficulties," Giscard d'Estaing observed that our country is going to deliver a new shipment of 4 million quintals of grain "in the next few weeks" to feed the Poles. "Four million quintals," he explained, "that is 330 trainloads of grain going from France to Poland, or the equivalent of 20 shiploads of 20,000 tons."

RPR CANDIDATE CHIRAC DISCUSSES ELECTION ISSUES

LD091403 Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Apr 81 p 9

[Report on 2 April Paris press conference given by RPR presidential candidate Jacques Chirac]

[Excerpts] In a long preliminary statement, Mr Chirac declared in particular:

"I believe my campaign is increasingly well understood by the French people. The fact is that I am the only candidate to lend a new tone to the political debate. I am the only one to make proposals which are neither a pure and simple continuation of what we have experienced for the last 7 years, nor a repetition of the unfortunate joint experiments attempted several times by the Socialists and Communists. I am offering renewal with safety."

He listed the "four challenges" confronting France: economic weakening; the risk that our society will crumble because of the challenging of moral values and the aggravation of social inequalities; a disintegrating Europe; and a world that is becoming more perilous.

To meet these challenges he offered "economic renewal" and recalled the measures he has described during his campaign, adding:

"As a result of the increase in interest rates, the French banks in 1980 achieved quite exceptional results, far better than industry's. It is legitimate to ask the banks to take part in the effort for national recovery. So I will consult with them to establish terms whereby a proportion of the exceptional profits made by them in 1980 can be used to supply loans amounting to a total of Fr10 billion. This sum will be used on the one hand to equip small and medium enterprises and on the other to fund home ownership for people with modest or average incomes. Both the former and the latter will thus be able to obtain loans at 3-4 percent below current interest rates."

After proposing renegotiations of the Treaty of Rome and asking for a "thorough reform of the international monetary system by stabilizing circulating capital, reducing interest rates and restoring the role of gold," Chirac mentioned security, which is primarily "political stability." He indicated: "I will rule nothing out with regard to either the makeup of the majority which will support in parliament the government I appoint, or the composition of the government.

"Everyone who today belongs to the majority, whatever their party faction and whatever the position they believed in all conscience they had to adopt for the presidential elections, must know that they will have a place in this majority without any prejudice or distinction, a full place, and that I will welcome them wholeheartedly. And those who do not belong to the majority today for reasons of their own but who would like after the elections to be involved in the effort for recovery--whatever their origins or convictions, always provided that they support the broad outline of the recovery program which I am proposing--must have the same place in the majority or in the composition of the government."

Concerning Mitterrand's concept of "transitional government," the candidate declared:

"The Socialist candidate has indicated that he would dissolve the National Assembly, which is natural; he has added that he would appoint an interim government composed of eminent personalities--I do not doubt it--but with Socialist sympathies.

"I think that Mitterrand's plan, as it stands today, of appointing a government which would not have the Assembly's confidence and which would embark on policy--because he has not said that he would limit himself to dealing with current affairs, he said that he would embark on economic and social policy with important measures taken by decree--well, I say quite simply that in spirit I do not think that this is in keeping with the demands of parliamentary democracy laid down by the Constitution of the 5th Republic, to which I am committed.

"And this would be dangerous in view of the major risk of contradiction which there could be between the measures taken by this interim government and those taken by the following government, supported by a majority which could be different in nature or which, more precisely, could reaffirm the present majority--which is a hypothesis that naturally cannot be ruled out.

"In both cases I can see the 'chariot of state,' as they say, being driven jerkily and in conditions which would certainly be detrimental to the comfort of the passengers."

MARCHAIS CONSIDERS TASKS IN EVENT OF LEFT VICTORY

LD081557 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 6 Apr 81 p 4

[Report on PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais 4 April speech in Toulouse]

[Excerpt] "A debate has developed," Georges Marchais said, "on what would happen if Giscard d'Estaing is defeated.

"I have answered this question straightforwardly. The first days and weeks after Giscard d'Estaing's departure will be a difficult and crucial period. The French big bourgeoisie has long experience; it is skilled in maneuvering and utilizing all available means and people. You can be sure that it will not waste time.

"So, change will not be achieved and ensured unless the capitalists are immediately confronted by a strong force that grants them no respite, no rest and no quarter. A wait-and-see attitude would be the worst possible thing.

"There will inevitably be a provisional government pending new general elections. It would be disastrous if this government were weak and hesitant; if it gave a free hand to the capitalists. It will be necessary to form at the outset a union of the left government which satisfies the highest standards of efficiency and has clear support from the people. Such a government is inconceivable without Communist ministers. Otherwise, the capitalist forces would remain masters of the situation, despite the French people's vote.

"This government must take every measure that it can to satisfy the most important and pressing social needs, to protect and prepare for the implementation of the change in the months ahead. If only, for instance, by preventing the export of capital. In this first phase, it would be inconceivable for the new president of the republic and the government not to attempt to place their authority and powers at the service of the workers, as in 1936.

"Of course, we will dissolve the National Assembly and elect a new one. I trust in the logic of French men and women to establish a leftwing majority. But I state now--and I would confirm it if the occasion arises: If I am elected on 10 May and subsequently lose the support of the majority of French voters at the general elections, I would consider my task impossible and would return my mandate to the country. Because I will never govern with the right. If, as I believe, the French people do not reverse their decision, I will continue my fight with a Socialist-Communist government to carry out the change. And when the time comes, I will surrender this power to the French voters and leave them to take stock of the experience and to say whether it should continue.

"Even recently some people claimed, so as to excuse their own attitude, that we were afraid of shouldering government responsibilities. This was false, entirely false. And now here we are in the thick of the battle to secure these responsibilities: We are ready for them, we lay claim to them, we are a government party so that things will change at last in France.

No Social and National Leap Forward Without People's Involvement

"But I also tell you quite frankly--and I am the only candidate addressing you frankly--that at the same time, you must develop your struggles. Nowhere in French history is there an example of a time when a social and national leap forward has been accomplished without the people's impetus and involvement.

"Again you must recall experience. Without the struggles in 1936, the popular front could not have achieved the major social gains from which the workers benefited. Without the struggles in 1945, the liberation could not have enabled the Communist ministers and deputies to help the workers and the country to obtain considerable advantages, and major nationalizations. Without the struggles in 1968, the interoccupational minimum growth wage could not have increased by 35 percent, the factory trade union sections wuld not have been created and many rights would not have seen the light of day.

"Jaures espoused this basic idea when he wrote: 'The bourgoisie has been a great and strict educator for the French working class. Through the class egoism that it has demonstrated.... through the subordination that it has imposed on millions of poor people and proletarians.... through its interpretation of human and civic rights demanded by all but invalidated for the majority, it has warned all working and impoverished people that they must rely on themselves first. Well, I do not believe in 'supreme saviors' or 'men of destiny' either. This is why in my book 'Hope in the Present', I cited Jaures' warning to working men and women: Rely on yourselves, 'do not expect anyone else to do your work for you.'

"This is why I want, together with my comrades, to rally the people's forces. I urge you to join us in this task."

MARCHAIS GRANTS MONTE CARLOS RADIO INTERVIEW

LD091023 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 3 Apr 81 p 3

[Excerpts] Yesterday evening Georges Machais was the guest of Radio Monte Carlo's "Forum," a program produced jointly by that radio station and by the regional daily press. For more than an hour, the Communist candidate answered questions from about 15 journalists on the premises of the Communist daily LA MARSEILLAISE. The domestic political situation less than a month away from the first round of the presidential elections, economic and social problems, international questions--Georges Marchais dealt with all these in turn, taking great care to be specific in his replies.

Naturally, the first group of questions concerned the problems being debated in the election campaign, and Georges Marchais was led to give his opinion on the recent television appearances by Mr Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand.

Unlike the latter, the Communist candidate does not envisage any form of collaboration with the right. He was specific on this point: "If elected to the presidency of the republic, if I had to govern with a majority of the right in the National Assembly, I would not do it, I would offer my resignation." This hypothesis would apply if legislative elections following Georges Marchais' election to the Elysee returned a reactionary majority to the Palais-Bourbon.

Having said that, the Communist candidate expressed the view that if the French elect him "on the basis of an extremely clear program," on his 131 proposals, they "will not change their minds and will confirm their presidential vote."

Once elected, Georges Marchais would immediately form a government, which would adopt by decree, before the dissolution of the Assembly, the first urgent measures, in accordance with the opportunities granted by the constitution. And he added: "Any president of the republic who wants to implement a policy and measures which are specific and effective can do so."

The Communist candidate justified his stance by noting "that there is no example of anyone having been able to implement a leftwing policy, a policy serving the workers, with a rightwing majority. Those who claim to be able to do so are concealing from the French the fact that they will govern with the right, on the basis of compromises made at the workers' expense."

Francois Mitterrand Was Embarrassed...

Asked for his opinion on Tuesday evening's television program devoted to the Socialist candidate, Georges Marchais asserted: "Francois Mitterrand was visibly embarrassed by the statements I made a week earlier in the program 'Cards on the Table'." In the Communist candidate's view--and he has provided a great deal of evidence of this--the path opened up in "Cards on the Table" had a great impact in the country and "that had an effect" on the attitude of Francois Mitterrand, who "spoke in terms which had a leftwing coloring compared to earlier broadcasts."

All the same, Georges Marchais noted that fundamentally "there is no change." And he gave illustrations: No specific commitment on the workers' major claims, no concrete definition of the means needed to really carry out change, no reference to capitalist profits, a reassertion of Francois Mitterrand's opposition to Communist participation in the government....

"In other words, he displayed his desire to keep his hands free to govern with the right," Georges Marchais asserted, asking: "What policy? With whom...? Those are the two great questions which indisputably remain to be answered after Francois Mitterrand's appearance."

When asked what level he hoped to reach in the first round, he concluded: "The highest possible level, since after the overture I made in the 'Cards on the Table' program, F. Mitterrand persists in rejecting Communist ministers."

Indeed, for Georges Marchais, the only way to create the conditions for defeating Mr Giscard d'Estaing "is to gain the maximum possible number of votes for the Communist candidate in the first round."

Beating Giscard

Beating Giscard, that is his aim. "The entire Communist Party, all its activists without exception, and naturally its candidate are engaged in the battle against Giscard d'Estaing," he asserted, recalling that the outgoing candidate has already come out against him and in favor of F. Mitterrand should the choice arise, and that he had not taken up any of the Communist candidate's proposals, which "is not true of all the other candidates." This makes Georges Marchais say: "I am the anti-Giscard candidate."

Before embarking on international problems, the Communist candidate was asked to give his feelings once again on what F. Mitterrand called "the state of grace" to describe the period following the presidential election. From the viewpoint of Mr Giscard d'Estaing's defeat and with regard to trade union independence, "what stands out," according to Georges Marchais, "is the claim, the demand to see the satisfaction of what people have voted for...." "A new situation will be created among the people, and every sensible politician must admit it. That was the case in 1936, that was the case at the liberation."

Asked about the advisability of the meeting in Warsaw between Mr Giscard d'Estaing and Mr Brezhnev, the Communist candidate showed himself to be a resolute supporter of detente and peaceful coexistence, which by no means implies the political status quo, but the resolution of conflicts through negotiation.

I Will Not Neglect a Single Meeting

"If I am elected president of the republic," he specified, "I will go wherever it will be possible for me to go to discuss, to expound my country's positions, to contribute to resolving problems. I will not neglect a single trip, a single meeting....but I will always do this with the aim of serving my country's and my people's interests well." On the subject of the Warsaw meeting specifically, Georges Marchais asserted: "I cannot tell you whether Mr Giscard d'Estaing's trip was useful, since I do not know what was said.... But I am in favor of such a meeting in principle."

Georges Marchais then stressed the need to proceed along the path of disarmament and advocated for France, with regard to its alliances, a policy of nonalignment, promoting the simultaneous dissolution of military blocs. France, in his view, would take initiatives to promote disarmament: "It has the means,it has a deterrent which counts, it has the right of veto at the United Nations, it has some international standing. France has a voice which could be heard."

In this sphere, too, the Communist candidate is "in complete disagreement with the policy of Mr Giscard d'Estaing," who "adopts no initiative to promote peace and disarmament," but who, on the contrary," has come out in favor of the neutron bomb and the deployment of U.S. nuclear missiles in Europe and is aligning himself increasingly with the FRG and the United States."

For a New Economic Order

After recalling the Communists' positions on many other subjects, such as Poland, Afghanistan, energy policy and immigration, Georges Marchais expounded his ideas on the new international order.

The Communist candidate began with the dramatic statement that in the world "hundreds and hundreds of millions of human beings lack everything, and while 2 million workers are unemployed in our country, the peasantry is prevented from producing all it could produce.... Every year hundreds of thousands of tons of fruit and vegetables are destroyed, while hundreds of millions of people in the world go hungry."

Georges Marchais then made three proposals: The development of solidarity without delay, the establishment of a new international division of labor, the reform of all international bodies and in particular the IMF. Moreover, the Communist candidate considered that in the general aid effort, not all countries can be put on the same plane. Since underdevelopment results from colonialism, the former colonial powers, including France, have special responsibilities and must do more for those countries by way of financing their aid through a tax on wealth and on profits.

PCF VOTERS POLLED ON MARCHAIS ELECTION APPROACH

LD091455 Paris LE MONDE in French 5-6 Apr 81 p 5

[Text] On 4 April, L'EXPRESS published a BVA opinion poll carried out between 11-16 March from a sample of 1,876 French people aged 18 and over. According to this poll, 70 percent of Communist voters believe that Georges Marchais is "championing the PCF's presidential election chances well" and 22 percent believe that he is not. A majority (53 percent) believe that Marchais should stand down in favor of Mitterrand in the second round of voting in the event of a contest between the PS candidate and Valery Giscard d'Estaing. Among the people questioned, 22 percent would prefer that the PCF candidate would not stand down, 11 percent that he recommend abstention and 2 percent that he stand down for Giscard d'Estaing.

MEETINGS CONTINUE BETWEEN HAIG, LEADERS

Talks With PSOE Leader

LD091346 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Correspondent's dispatch]

[Excerpts] The meeting at the U.S. Embassy between U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and leader of the opposition Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general of the Spanish Socialists Workers Party [PSOE], lasted for 1 hour.

A fundamental subject in the talks between Alexander Haig and Felipe Gonzalez was that of the U.S. treaty of friendship and cooperation. Felipe Gonzalez expressed to Haig this position:

[Begin recording] Our opinion is that we should renegotiate the treaty and try to make an effort--taking into account the time limits for the renegotiation of the treaty--not to renegotiate it, if possible, for an extension of 1 year--which has been spoken of; but to renegotiate it seriously, free it from the (?verbiage) which previously concealed the true nature of the relationship. It should have a larger dose of technological exchange, of reciprocity, and we should deal separately with cultural and economic subjects. [end recording]

Luncheon With Minister

LD091442 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] A luncheon given by the Spanish foreign affairs minister, Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca, in honor of U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig at the Viana Palace ended 15 minutes ago.

During the toasts the Spanish minister said that Haig's Spanish friends are very happy to have him here. He added that this visit falls within a long historical tradition of American envoys to Spain. He also said that the new democratic Spanish society wants to improve its presence abroad. He said that Spain wishes to reaffirm its European and Atlantic vocation.

In his reply, Mr Haig repeatedly expressed his support for Spanish democracy. He added that last Friday night he had spoken to Mr Reagan on the telephone and that Reagan gave him his warmest greetings for the Spanish people, king and government. He said that he welcomed the Spanish desire to join the Atlantic Community.

Both described the visit as very positive.

Departure for London

LD091716 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] The U.S. secretary of state, Alexander Haig, left Madrid's Barajas airport en route for London at 1740 this evening, concluding a 24-hour official visit to Madrid. During his visit, agreement was reached on the renewing of the bilateral treaty signed in 1966 [words indistinct]. In his talks [words indistinct] the U.S. secretary of state expressed the Reagan government's support for the Spanish democratic process and its wish that Spain should join the EEC and NATO as soon as possible.

KING JUAN CARLOS, QUEEN TO VISIT ITALY 28-30 APRIL

LD091334 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] The king and queen of Spain, Don Juan Carlos and Dona Sofia, will pay an official visit to Italy on the last 3 days of this month at the invitation of President Pertini, according to a report from the Diplomatic Information Office.

NORWAY

FRYDENLUND OPTIMISTIC ABOUT U.S.-USSR TALKS

LD090849 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 6 Apr 81 special supplement p 8

[Text] "I understand very well that the manifesto section on nuclear-free zones will prompt objections in various quarters and that it will take a lot of work to implement it," Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund told ARBEIDERBLADET.

He also said that we can expect the Reagan administration to enter into real negotiations with the Soviet Union on nuclear arms in Europe, and that these could start relatively soon. The Americans are also bound by the section on negotiations in the 1979 deployment resolution.

Frydenlund said that there are good grounds for believing that the coming NATO meeting in May will provide the final signal that the United States is prepared to embark on real negotiations with the Soviet Union on nuclear arms in Europe, and it is not impossible that these negotiations could start in the fall.

[Question] Are you optimistic about the introduction of nuclear-free zones in the Nordic area?

[Answer] I believe that it will be possible to make progress by using the proposal for such a zone as an important tool for controlling the nuclear arms in our part of the world, because the rest of Europe and our allies realize that it is necessary to halt the arms race. There will have to be negotiations on the nuclear arms in Europe in some form or other, and a Nordic solution would be an important element in this context.

But we must not ignore the increase in international tension that has taken place in the last few months. There can be no doubt that West Germany and France have been increasingly concerned with the consequences the continued deployment of the Russian SS-20 missiles are having for Europe.

This does not change the foundation of Norwegian foreign policy, whose goals continue to be detente and real disarmament negotiations. But we must realize that the present situation has made this work more difficult, but also more necessary than ever.

SWEDEN

MINISTER ON STATUS OF DISARMAMENT NEGOTIATIONS

LD090952 Helsinki International Service in English 0830 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] The Swedish minister for disarmament, Inga Thorsson, is pessimistic about hopes for disarmament in the light of the strained international situation at the moment. The minister, who heads a special group on disarmament at the United Nations, expressed this opinion in Moscow on Wednesday, the last leg of a tour which included London, Paris and Washington as well. Quoted by the FINNISH NEWS AGENCY, Minister Thorsson said the talks conducted during the tour indicated nothing new. The present international situation strongly affects all attempts at negotiation and it is unfavorable from the standpoint of actual disarmament activities, she continued. The Swedish minister also told newsmen in Moscow that a Soviet representative had announced the Soviet Union's preparedness to begin again negotiations on the SALT II agreement, but that it was not revealed as to what in particular the Soviet Union was ready to talk about with the United States. The UN disarmament group, headed by Thorsson, is scheduled to present its report on disarmament this September.

THATCHER DISCUSSES MIDDLE EAST WITH ARAB PRESS

JN091018 Manama GULF NEWS AGENCY in Arabic 0830 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] London, 9 Apr (GNA)--British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has announced that the defense of the Gulf is the responsibility of the region's states, which are exerting strenuous efforts on the individual and group levels in order to maintain peace and security in this important region of the world.

In a meeting with several Arab press representatives at her official residence in London, Mrs Thatcher said that her private views on the rapid deployment force should not cause any kind of apprehension since talk about these forces is not related specifically to the Gulf region. She added that forming these forces is for the purpose of tackling the problems that can arise in any part of the world. She pointed out that the formation of the rapid deployment force is an idea which has not yet materialized. However, she added, if the United States decides to form these forces, Britain would then offer a modest contribution to them. She pointed out, however, that these forces would not be stationed in any part of the Gulf.

In her meeting with Arab reporters last night, Mrs Thatcher welcomed the establishment of the Gulf cooperation council, describing it as a positive step which would achieve cooperation among the region's states and would maintain the Gulf's stability, security and peace.

The British prime minister denied that, during her Gulf tour, her talks with the Gulf states' leaders would deal with the rapid deployment forces, saying: I will not broach the subject at all since the rapid deployment force has not yet materialized. How can I discuss mere ideas? She stated that her coming tour is to confirm the perspectives through which Britain views the Gulf region. She ruled out the possibility that the statements made on the rapid deployment force during her recent visit to Washington were a return to talk about a British presence east of the Suez. The British prime minister's tour, which is scheduled for 19 through 26 April, will include four Gulf states: Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar and the Sultanate of Oman.

The British prime minister expressed the belief that there is a link between what is going on in the Gulf region and the Arab-Israeli conflict, saying: It is not appropriate to say now which of the two issues is more important. On the extent of the European states' contribution toward solving the Middle East issue, she said that the EEC is trying to find the best means for solving this issue. She added, however, that it is difficult to expect the achievement of considerable progress where such a contribution is concerned. She pointed out that, through the continuous contacts being made with the region's states the EEC is trying to reach a general agreement on some of the points pertaining to the Middle East, particularly those points relating to the definition of some terms related to the issue.

She expressed the belief that U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig's current tour of the region's states would be a prologue to the adoption of future steps by the U.S. administration on the Middle East issue. Mrs Thatcher affirmed that the Middle East issue cannot be solved by the EEC without U.S. participation.

She also added that it would not be possible to reach a solution to the Middle East issue without Israel's recognition of the Palestinian people's legitimate rights and the recognition of what she called the presence of secure borders for Israel. The British prime minister repeated what Lord Carrington, British secretary of state for foreign and Commenwealth affairs, said last year when she ruled out the possibility of her government recognizing the PLO. She said: Recognition should be granted to states and not organizations. She said it is not unlikely that when he assumes his post of chairman of the EEC Foreign Ministers Council in The Netherlands next July, Carrington would meet with top PLO officials.

On the situation in Lebanon, she expressed the belief that Britain alone could not launch an initiative for the purpose of ending the problems in Lebanon. However, she expressed readiness to participate in any initiative that would solve these problems.

DEFENSE MINISTER DENIES MISSILES INSTALLED IN CRETE

NC091556 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 9 Apr 81 p 12

[Text] "The issue of installing Pershing II and cruise missiles in our country has never been brought up. The alliance's decision on this issue does not envisage the installation of these missiles on Greek territory." National Defense Minister Averof made this statement in writing to the Chamber of Deputies (in answer to a question by K. Bandouvas).

The defense minister adds that consequently the information, received by the questioning deputy, alleging that such missiles have been stored in Soudha, Crete, is completely unfounded.

Finally, Averof stresses that, for the sake of the Parliament's prestige, it is sad that Bandouvas describes official confirmations as a product of ignorance or, even worse, as an attempt "to consciously mislead the Chamber of Deputies." He does this because he prefers to give credibility to rumors spread by irresponsible persons. This can only damage our country's defense issue.

PLO APPROVES GREEK NONRECOGNITION OF ISRAEL

NC081522 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 8 Apr 81 p 12

[Text] Although the date of Palestinian leader Yasir 'Arafat's visit to Greece has not been confirmed (it is not yet clear whether the visit will take place before or after the election), yesterday Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis received a personal message from the PLO political representative, Qaddumi (Abu al-Lutf), in which he approves the Greek nonrecognition of Israel.

The PALESTINE NEWS AGENCY, WAFA, reported that Qaddumi met Greek charge d'affaires in Lebanon Sidheris and discussed bipartite Greek-PLO affairs with him. After the meeting, Qaddumi lauded Greece's nonrecognition of Israel, interpreting this position as a demonstration of support for the Palestinian cause and the national rights of Palestinians. At the same time, Qaddumi reviewed current bipartite relations as they stand after the opening of the PLO office in Athens.

SOMALI FOREIGN MINISTER BARRE ENDS OFFICIAL VISIT

NC081334 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Somali Foreign Minister Abdurahman Jama Barre left Athens this morning after an official visit to Greece during which he signed the framework of an economic, technical and trade agreement between Somalia and Greece.

BRIEFS

SOVIET ALUMINUM PLANT AGREEMENT--Today an agreement was signed in Moscow for the compilation of a study to build an aluminum plant in Greece. The agreement takes place in the framework of what was agreed upon in Moscow in 1979 by the then Soviet premier and the then Greek Prime Minister Karamanlis on bilateral economic cooperation. The agreement was signed, on the Greek side, by the director of ETVA (Hellenic Industrial Development Bank], Mr Spenthos, and the chairman of the pertinent Soviet organization, Mr (Kupiyeviyevich), in the presence of the Greek ambassador to the Soviet Union and the [deputy] chairman of the State Committee of Foreign Economic Relations, Mr Kulev. The Soviet organization undertakes the writing of a study to build an aluminum plant in Greece [Text] [Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 8 Apr 81 NC]

TERCUMAN CRITICIZES SOVIET COMMENT ON U.S. INTENT

NC101038 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 7 Apr 81 pp 1, 12

[Editorial by Nazli Ilicak: "The West and the Soviet Union"]

[Excerpts] Interest in foreign politics has increased in news reports and commentaries since the 12 September intervention. The reason may be the ever-increasing gravity of the international issues surrounding us or the scarcity of material in the absence of the daily arguments of the [former] leaders.

For instance, such questions as "can the United States intervene in the Persian Gulf? If it does, what attitude will Turkey adopt?" have been occupying newspaper columns over the past few months. Some writers approach the matter with good will and express sincere worries, while others are trying to distract attention from real threats and to cover up Soviet expansionism under the [alleged threat] of "U.S. imperialism."

We must first examine how the Persian Gulf issue has reached this stage and why the United States has had to form "a rapid deployment force". Had not the Soviet Union carried out a coup in Afghanistan and proclaimed Babrak Karmal as its leader, and had not the pro-Soviet Tudeh party in Iran come so near to assuming power in Iran as the only disciplined organization, no one would have thought of taking precautions for fear that the oil resources feeding Europe would be dried up.

The Soviet Union has been continually harping on reports that the United States would intervene in the Persian Gulf, and "The Voice of the Turkish Communist Party" and "Our Radio" broadcasts beamed to Turkey keep emphasizing this allegation. They say: "In order to involve Turkey in the adventures it has undertaken in the Persian Gulf, the United States is trying to drag NATO into the issue as well and to turn Turkish territory into an arena of operations for the Rapid Deployment Force."

Attention is turned from Afghanistan to the Persian Gulf. Under such loud slogans as "no to the Pershing and cruise missiles," the SS-20's are being developed and installed. Then, to cover up the ugliness of the Polish crisis, the U.S. policy in Salvador has been taken up for days on end as the main topic of the day.

Aren't those who once tried to distract attention by preaching that "fascism is escalating" the perpretrators of the same mentality? Let us not forget that the purpose here is not to get closer to the East but to get nearer to the Soviet Union.

ARMENIAN TERRORISTS LINKED TO NARCOTICS SMUGGLING

NC101004 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 7 Apr 81 p 4

[Text] Ankara (TH)--Arguments that the Armenians who are organizing attacks on Turkish diplomats in many countries are being supplied with funds and arms through the smuggling of narcotcs, particularly heroin, are gaining ground. According to a report prepared by the regional intelligence office, which cooperates with INTERPOL and which tries to uncover narcotics smugglers in the Middle East, some of the heroin and 8,240 kilos of the 11,874 kilos of hashish seized in Europe in the last 3 months of 1980 came from Lebanon. Drawing attention to the fact that Beirut is the base of Armenian terrorist operations, INTERPOL authorities argue that these terrorist organizations may also be connected with the smuggling of narcotics.

The regional intelligence office report further states that six persons who attempted to smuggle heroin into France during the last 3 months of 1980 were proved to be Armenians possessing Lebanese passports. The report also states that Lebanon is the main base for narcotics smuggling.

COURT REJECTS APPEAL AGAINST 'ARAYIS' CONFISCATION

TA091711 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1605 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 9 Apr (AA)--An Ankara court Wednesday rejected the appeal against the confiscation of the (?latest) issue No 7 of the weekly journal "ARAYIS." The court overruled the objection by the publishers of the journal on the grounds that a confiscation order by a lower court had been taken "through appropriate procedures."

ICFTU OFFICIAL CLARIFIES STATEMENT ON UNIONS

TA091551 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1520 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 9 Apr (AA)--Secretary General Otto Kersten of the Inter-national Confederation of Free Trade Unions [ICFTU] said he had not advocated reopening of the confederation of Revolutionary Labor Unions "DISK" as had been alleged.

(?Telling) reporters he had been misquoted, Kersten added he was aware several "DISK" members were opposed to the principles up-held by ICFTU, but he still believed they should be concerned with the state of those DISK officers currently under arrest entirely from a humanistic point of view.

He explained his team was only charged with reporting to the confederation's board of directors on what they saw or learned of facts in Turkey. The board meeting would be held on 1-2 July in Copenhagen.

Visits Demirel, Ecevit

TA091714 Ankara ANATOLIA in Egnlish 1545 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 9 Apr (AA)--Secretary General Otto Kersten of the Inter-national Confederation of Free Trade Unions [ICFTU], who is currently in Ankara, called on Justice Party leader and ex-Premier Suleyman Demirel on Wednesday afternoon.

Kersten had called on Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu and ex-RPP leader Bulent Ecevit earlier in the day.

The ICFTU secretary general told reporters he had (?observed in) talks with Demirel and Ecevit, the former political leaders' desire to aid the return to democracy "as personalities who have played an important role in the Turkish political scene in the past."

ECEVIT, DEMIREL MEET WITH MARTIAL LAW COMMANDER

TA091715 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1555 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 9 Apr (AA)--Justice Party leader Suleyman Demirel and former leader of the Republican People's Party Bulent Ecevit were called in for separate interviews with the martial law commander for Ankara, who is also the commander of the 4th Army Corps.

Ecevit had a brief interview with the commander at 2 p.m. Wednesday, while Demirel's appointment was at 5 p.m.

Martial law officials said the brief interviews had been "considered necessary."

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 070 13 April 1981

CONTENTS

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

USSR's Ilichev Assesses Work of Madrid Conference [TASS] A 1
MBFR Negotiations Round Ends Without Results [WIENER ZEITUNG 10 Apr] A 2
USSR Urges 'Constructive Reply' [VOLKSSTIMME 10 Apr] A 2

AUSTRIA

Tikhonov Meets With Communist Party Leaders [VOLKSSTIMME 10 Apr] E 1
Visits Austria-USSR Society [VOLKSSTIMME 10 Apr] E 1
Kreisky To Undergo Eye Surgery in Boston [DIE PRESSE 9 Apr] E 1

BENELUX

BELGIUM

Parliament Gives Approval to Eksyken Government F 1

THE NETHERLANDS

Communists Reject Husak Comments on Poland [DE VOLKSKRANT 7 Apr] F 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Schmidt Urges Reagan-Brezhnev Summit Meeting J 1
Schmidt, Haig Agree on Nuclear Modernization J 1
Becker: No Plans To Reallocate Funds to Defense J 2
Genscher Reaffirms FRG-U.S. View on NATO J 2
Hamburg SPD Members Oppose NATO's Dual Decision [FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE 10 Apr] J 2
CDU's Kohl Questions Motives of Brezhnev Visit J 3
Foreign Minister Briefs Turkish Counterpart J 3
Turkmen Comments J 3
Offergeld Meets With Mexican Finance Secretary J 4
Economic Officials Talks With Japanese Minister J 4
Soviet Conductor, Son Under FRG Protection J 4
U.S. Military Train Stopped by Protesters J 4
Press Discusses Schmidt's State of Nation Message J 5

FRANCE

Giscard, Francois-Poncet Discuss Lebanon With Haig K 1
Foreign Minister on Talks K 1
Ambassadors Confer on Situation in Lebanon K 1
Foreign Ministry Communique K 1
Communique on French-German Loan Agreement [LE MONDE 10 Apr] K 2
LE MONDE Editorial [10 Apr] K 3
Galley on Arms to Saudi Arabia, Gulf Security [Riyadh AR-RIYAD 6 Apr] K 4
LE MONDE Details Contradictory Opinion Poll Result [10 Apr] K 5

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Weinberger Meets With Forlani, Colombo, Lagorio L 1
Missile Site Talks Denied L 1
Libya's Jallud Arrives Unannounced for Talks L 1
Briefs: Angolan Oil Development L 1

SPAIN

Treaty Negotiations With U.S. Set For End of April N 1
Government, PSOE Consult Over Autonomies Issues [LA VANGUARDIA 8 Apr] N 1
PRC Vice Premier Gu Mu Concludes Official Visit N 2

UNITED KINGDOM

ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT: Thatcher on Middle East [9 Apr] Q 1
Carrington Talks With U.S. Secretary of State Q 3

CYPRUS

Government Opposes RDF Use of British Bases [O FILELEVTHEROS 10 Apr] R 1
Denktas Opposes UK Talks With Greek Cypriots [Bayrak Radio] R 1
Police Arrest Students for Recent Bomb Explosions [I ELEVTHEROTIPIA 11 Apr] R 2
Police Investigate Explosions in Nicosia, Limassol R 2
Foreign Minister Departs for Bahrain, Kuwait R 2
EDEK Leader Leaves for Palestinian Conference R 2

GREECE

Defense Minister Returns From Bonn, London S 1
Government Protests Turkish Airspace Violations [NEWS 12 Apr] S 1

TURKEY

Turkmen Returns From U.S. Europe Visits T 1
Council of Europe Official Arrives for Visit T 1
Received by Turkmen T 2
Delegation Travels to Greece for Talks on Airspace T 2
Attacks Against Diplomats Protested in Copenhagen T 2
PLO Envoy Disputed on Terrorist Training Remark [GUNAYDIN 8 Apr] T 2
Romanian Foreign Minister Begins Visit 13 April T 3
Welcomed by Turkmen T 3
Bulgarian Delegation Arrives for Border Talks T 3
Martial Law Restraints Imposed on Publications T 4
Editor Sentenced T 4
MILLI GAZETE Restricted T 4
Prosecutor Asks Death Sentence for 97 Separatists T 4
Minister Returns From Energy Meeting in Rome T 4
Council Ratifies International Energy Program T 4
Delegation Reaches Trade Agreement With Hungary T 5
Transportation Minister Returns Home From Bulgaria T 5
Officials Comment on Foreign Investments T 5
Import-Export Figures Announced for 1980 T 5
VOTCP Reports on ICFTU Official News Conference T 6

USSR'S ILICHEV ASSESSES WORK OF MADRID CONFERENCE

LD102309 Moscow TASS in English 2116 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] Madrid, 10 Apr (TASS)--Before the break in the work of the Madrid meeting, which is to last from April 10 to May 4, a regular plenary session was held here today by representatives of 35 countries participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Euruope.

As has become known within the circles of journalists covering the Madrid forum, head of the Soviet delegation, Deputy Foreign Minister of the USSR Leonid Ilichev spoke at the plenary session. Noting that it would not be correct to assert that harmony and mutual understanding have always had the upper hand in the forum in Madrid, that there have been no confrontations, sterile debates or even attempts to arrange a funeral repast on the all-European process, the Soviet representative said that despite all the obstacles and complications definite progress has been achieved in Madrid.

It is extremely important, he said, that not a single delegation in Madrid takes issue at present with the idea of the advisability of convening a conference on military detente and disarmament in Europe. although divergencies in the positions regarding the definition of the conditions for the holding of such a conference still persist.

It has been possible to achieve a harmonisation of important provisions on questions pertaining to the principles of relations between states: on the recognition of the validity of the Helsinki principles, on the struggle against international terrorism, on cooperation in the field of respect for human rights and others. Headway has been made in agreeing on the session on cooperation in the field of economy, science, engineering and environment. Certain results had been achieved on questions having to do with cooperation in the humanitarian fields as well as security and cooperation in the area of the Mediterranean. Just agreed has been the text on cooperation in culture which provides, inter alia, for convening a forum on questions of culture and containing agreements on a number of other issues.

At the same time, Leonid Ilichev said, in the discussion of the humanitarian issues, the delegations of the United States and a number of other countries of the West, despite the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act, are making futile attempts to exert pressure on the socialist countries. Quoting Leonid Brezhnev's words uttered on April 7 in Prague that the experience of history, including that of the last decades, convincingly indicates that the success in the negotiations of states with each other comes only when attempts to dictate to each other their own conditions are laid aside and when there is an actual will to achieve peace and mutual respect, which has been confirmed, in particular, by the Final Act signed in Helsinki, the Soviet representative called on the participants of the Madrid meeting to adopt the same approach. In this case, the Madrid meeting will rise to the expectations of the peoples of the European continent and will go down in history as an important stage in Europe's progress to peace, security and mutually advantageous cooperation.

Leonid Ilichev called for the use of the break that is about to begin in the work of the Madrid meeting for pondering over the results of the work, for appraising what has been reached and what has failed to be reached so as to make fresh efforts to move forward and to worthily complete the enterprise begun.

MBFR NEGOTIATIONS ROUND ENDS WITHOUT RESULTS

AU101520 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 10 Apr 81 p 3

[Text] The 23d round of negotiations on reduction of troops in central Europe ended in Vienna Thursday without tangible results. At a concluding press conference, the Western side pointed out that a clarification of the controversial troop strength figures of the Warsaw Pact troops was a precondition for any agreement to be concluded. At the same time, it was stressed that the only positive development in this round was the formal confirmation that East and West had reached agreement about the duration of a first reduction phase, as well as about the period in which the withdrawal of U.S. and Soviet troops from central Europe should be implemented. The East accused the NATO countries of dodging a "serious search for possibilities to expand the mutual understanding regarding the key problems of reducing armed forces and armament," and of withdrawing "even from those limited steps they had earlier undertaken."

Subsequently, both sides expressed hope that the now beginning conference recess would be used for serious deliberations both in East and West.

USSR Urges "Constructive Reply'

AU101528 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 10 Apr 81 p 4

[Text] Vienna--At the Vienna negotiations on a mutual reduction of armed forces and arms in central Europe the Soviet delegation has appealed to the Western side to use the recess now beginning for an objective and careful examination of the socialist countries' proposals and for preparation of a constructive reply.

On Thursday Soviet Chief Delegate Tarasov declared at the closing session of the 23d negotiating round at Hofburg Palace that this round took place in a period of a continuous complication of the international situation, a period during which the opponents of detente fanned the hostility among states and attempted to alter the military-strategic balance in Europe and to undermine international stability.

Against this course, that is pushing the peoples to the dangerous brink of an armed conflict, the 26th CPSU Congress has set a comprehensive and extensive program of detailed measures for the struggle to preserve peace and to consolidate and deepen detente, Tarasov said.

He went on to say that preparation of a new agreement is still being protracted without justification by the "numbers discussion" arbitrarily touched off by the West, which the Western participants in the talks were seeking to use to obtain information not only about the numerical troop strength of the socialist countries' armed forces but also about their organizational structure. The West itself, however, reveals nothing about its methods of calculating the socialist countries' troop strengths, and it even comes up with mounting results of its calculations, although it is known that this number has by no means grown but, on the contrary, has been reduced by the unilateral withdrawal of 20,000 Soviet troops from the area concerned, he said.

TIKHONOV MEETS WITH COMMUNIST PARTY LEADERS

AU101355 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 10 Apr 81 p 1

[Text] Vienna--Within the framework of his visit to Austria, Comrade Nikolay Tikhonov, CPSU Central Committee Politburo member, on Wednesday also met with Comrade Franz Muhri, chairman of the Austrian Communist Party [KPOE]. The talk, which was held in a friendly spirit, was also attended on the Soviet side by Ambassador Comrade Mihail Yefremov, and on the Austrian side by Comrades Erwin Scharf, KPOE Central Committee secretary; Hans Kalt, KPOE Central Committee Politburo member; and Hans Steiner, head of the KPOE Central Committee Foreign Relations Department.

Comrade Muhri stressed the usefulness of Comrade Tikhonov's visit to Austria, especially at the present stage of development marked by an exacerbation of the international situation. He pointed out that we advocate a further improvement in relations between Austria and the USSR, and especially in the economic situation, whose positive importance for Austria has become evident particularly in the current difficult economic situation. Comrade Tikhonov expressed the Soviet Union's intention to further develop relations with Austria, with special emphasis on the economic sector.

Visits Austria-USSR Society

AU101402 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 10 Apr 81 p 2

[Text] On Wednesday, USSR Council of Ministers Chairman Tikhonov visited the Austrian-Soviet Society [OESG] in Vienna. OESG Vice Chairman Friedrich Traenkler welcomed the high guest and his entourage. On the Austrian side, among others Trade Minister Staribacher, Vienna City Counselor Zilk, Burgenland Landtag Chairman Pinter and Austrian Communist Party Chairman Franz Muhri attended this festive session of the OESG National Executive Committee.

OESG Central Secretary Margereta Klug-Steiger outlined the activities of the society, stressing the importance of partnership relations between the various Austrian provinces and individual socialist Soviet republics. She emphasized the unwavering line of Soviet policy vis-a-vis the Austrian Republic, a policy which, irrespective of all the ups and downs of the historical development, was always aimed at defending and supporting Austria's national existence, freedom and independence.

In his speech, Council of Ministers Chairman Tikhonov paid tribute to the OESG's work. He especially stressed that the OESG draws attention to the USSR's contribution toward smashing Hitlerite fascism and Austria's liberation. Tikhonov stressed the OESG's high reputation in the Soviet Union, noted President Kirchschlaeger's statement that the OESG's work serves not only the improvement of relations but also peace, and added: "We share this assessment." Council of Ministers Chairman Tikhonov underscored that Austrian-Soviet relations are exemplary for relations between countries with different social systems. In conclusion, the Soviet Council of Ministers chairman thanked the OESG National Executive Commission, its president, Prof Anton Sattler, as well as all OESG activists and members for their endeavors to deepen the friendship between Austria and the Soviet Union.

KREISKY TO UNDERGO EYE SURGERY IN BOSTON

AU090926 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 9 Apr 81 p 2

[Text] Vienna--On the periphery of Chancellor Kreisky's talks with Soviet Premier Tikhonov, it was learned that the Chancellor will fly to Boston this weekend to undergo an eye operation. The further visiting program of the Austrian Government chief will depend on the success of this surgery. Scheduled are visits to Saudi Arabia 9-11 May, to Bulgaria 12-15 May and to Hungary 23-25 May.

BELGIUM

PARLIAMENT GIVES APPROVAL TO EKSYKEN GOVERNMENT

NC082153 Paris AFP in English 2146 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Brussels, 8 Apr (AFP)--Belgian Prime Minister Marc Eyskens' new government was approved by the Chamber of Deputies here tonight by vote of 118 to 52 with four abstentions. The Eyskens government, Belgium's seventh in the past seven years, was formed to deal with the country's critical economic situation, after the resignation as premier of Wilfried Martens.

THE NETHERLANDS

COMMUNISTS REJECT HUSAK COMMENTS ON POLAND

LD101001 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 7 Apr 81 p 1

[Text] Amsterdam--The Communist Party of The Netherlands (CPN) yesterday recalled its representative from the Czechoslovak Communist Party Congress. The reason for this decision was the speech by Czechoslovak party leader Husak. The CPN representative, party committee member J. Ijsberg, will return to The Netherlands at the earliest possible opportunity.

In an explanatory statement, party committee member R. Haks said that in his speech Husak "had given a completely negative picture of developments in Poland. This indicates no confidence at all in the movement which is afoot in Poland." In particular, the comparison Husak drew between events in Hungary in 1956 and in Czechoslovakia in 1968 stuck in the CPN's throat.

"In 1968 we were against the interference of the Warsaw Pact countries in Czechoslovakia," Haks said. "If Husak is now comparing Poland with his own country in 1968 this could be interpreted to mean that intervention is now necessary in Poland. We reject this completely. We think that there will have to be a political solution in Poland, reached by the Poles themselves without interference from outside, and certainly without the use of force."

For a time now the CPN has supported the wish of the free Polish Solidarity trade union for changes in the system. Last Friday CPN Chairman H. Hoekstra said in a radio interview that was reprinted in DE WAARHEID that the gigantic movement of the Polish working classes was inevitable and completely necessary.

"This movement grew out of the workers' general resentment of, and general dissatisfaction with, the policy pursued by the party there and the government. That policy was responsible for enormous mistakes in the field of social policy, for the slow emergence of democratic tendencies and for symptoms of corruption." Hoekstra also said in the interview: "Any idea that it would be possible to solve the problem in Poland through force or, even worse, through intervention is a dangerous misconception."

According to Haks this is the first time that such hard words have been used about Poland at a party congress in the Eastern bloc. That was not the case at the Russian congress and even less so at the Bulgarian Communist Party Congress held last week. Haks said that he did not know if other communist parties apart from the CPN had left the congress in Prague. There is no connection between this CPN decision and the coming elections in The Netherlands, Haks said. "This has nothing to do with the elections, but everything to do with our stand on principles."

SCHMIDT URGES REAGAN-BREZHNEV SUMMIT MEETING

LD101843 Hamburg DPA in German 1540 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 10 Apr (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has once again spoken out in favor of a summit meeting between new U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Soviet head of state and party Leonid Brezhnev. In an article for the journal EUROPA-ARCHIV published in Bonn on Friday, the chancellor stated that just because relations between East and West at present are difficult and extremely complex, "we do not need fewer talks, but more." A meeting between Reagan and Brezhnev at the right time would therefore be logical during the current state of East-West relations.

Schmidt also advocated that the elements of cooperation which had been built up with the Soviet Union and its allies during the past decade be developed, quite apart from the necessary dialogue with the East. Care would have to be taken that the longer-term opportunities for cooperation would not be jeopardized on account of "short-term necessities to have a dialogue" or even on account of trials of strength.

At the same time, the chancellor underscored the significance of the partnership between the Europeans and Americans, which remains the most important factor for stability and one "constant of our politics." The fundamental orientation of the Federal Republic's foreign policy remains unchanged, something on which the American and European friends as well as partners everywhere in the world can rely.

SCHMIDT, HAIG AGREE ON NUCLEAR MODERNIZATION

LD111634 Hamburg DPA in German 1514 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 11 Apr (DPA)--Alexander Haig, the U.S. secretary of state, and the Federal Government have agreed that in addition to nuclear modernization in West Europe, arms control talks between the United States and the USSR should start early in Geneva or somewhere else if possible. Haig spent only 2 hours in Bonn on Saturday. He had a meeting with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

The meeting in Bonn showed, in addition to concurring interpretations of the 1979 NATO decision and identical assessments of other problems in a strained world situation [words indistinct]. Both sides were also unanimous in their view that talks on medium-range missiles should be conducted separately but later included as a part of the general SALT treaties.

During the luncheon at the federal chancellor's office, which was attended only by the chancellor's closest associates and the two foreign ministers, an intensive exchange of views took place. Federal Chancellor Schmidt stressed his concern about the strained world economic situation.

Both sides stressed afterward that the possible deliveries of arms to Saudi Arabia was not mentioned in the talks.

Replying to a question later, Haig said that the United States was facing the same problem. Although details were still to be worked out, Washington would probably fulfill Saudi Arabia's wish for modern military aircraft.

Haig then left for Washington and ended his first trip as the new U.S. secretary of state, which had led him to the Middle East and five West European capitals.

BECKER: NO PLANS TO REALLOCATE FUNDS TO DEFENSE

LD101140 Hamburg DPA in German 1017 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 10 Apr (DPA)--Federal Government Spokesman Kurt Becker made it clear today that the Federal Government is not planning to reallocate funds from the social budget in favor of the defense budget, which is financially stretched. Becker thus refuted speculations that, at the meeting of the Nuclear Planning Group in Bonn this week, such demands had been made by the American side. Becker stressed there had not been any such prompting during Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's talk with U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, either.

In this connection, Becker pointed to the "coordinated statement" by U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher during the latter's recent visit to Washington. He said the two ministers had expressly noted in this statement that defense burdens must be fairly distributed and that economic stability and social justice must be included in this criteria. Becker added that this document was regarded as binding.

GENSCHER REAFFIRMS FRG-U.S. VIEW ON NATO

LD130906 Hamburg DPA in German 0817 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 13 Apr (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has reaffirmed the basic German-American agreement on NATO's double decision. In an interview with Deutschlandfunk transmitted in Bonn today, Genscher warned against paying too much attention to any contrary and critical reports from Washington.

Bonn and Washington agreed to view both parts of the NATO double decision--modernization of weapons and arms negotiations--on an equal basis and to push for both with the same amount of energy. U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig's weekend visit to Bonn confirmed that the policy concerning this particular point was the same as it was when Genscher visited Washington.

HAMBURG SPD MEMBERS OPPOSE NATO'S DUAL DECISION

DW101114 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 10 Apr 81 p 12

[Commentary signed FK.: "Breach of Dam"]

[Text] What has happened in Hamburg is tantamount to an internal dam breach in a party: One-third of the members of the Social Democratic citizens faction has signed an appeal of the German Peace Union for a "Hamburg forum" against NATO's counter-armament decision. Federal SPD manager Glotz simultaneously sends circular letters to the lower level organizations of his party reminding them of the organizational support given to such peace appeals ranging from that of the DKP to that of the Greens. The appeal says with remarkable restraint that one ought not to sign these appeals "erroneously." The possibility that a people's front alliance could be formed in this way was not even hinted at.

All of this casts a terrifying light on the internal SPD situation. The leading Hamburg Social Democrats who signed the German Peace Union appeal can hardly be termed politically naive. They most purposefully steer a course against the Bonn leadership, exactly as in nuclear powerplant matters. Nobody will be mistaken with regard to the aim: The Bonn coalition is to be broken and the unpopular chancellor should at least be forced to resign in connection with these issues, issues which are being discussed more and more strongly.

CDU'S KOHL QUESTIONS MOTIVES OF BREZHNEV VISIT

LD101004 Hamburg DPA in German 0908 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 10 Apr (DPA)--In the opinion of CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl, U.S. President Reagan should discuss medium-range missiles with the Soviet head of state and party before Brezhnev's visit to Bonn. In view of the openly anti-U.S. trends in the SPD and its flood of polemics against the NATO dual decision, this is important not only for German-U.S. relations but for the alliance as a whole, Kohl said in an article in NORDSEE-ZEITUNG (Saturday edition).

The leader of the opposition raised the question of what Brezhnev, who seems to be in a hurry to come to Bonn, hopes to achieve by visiting the Federal Republic. Could there be any doubt that one of the aims of the Kremlin chief is to sow distrust and even discord among the Western allies, especially between the Germans and Americans, in order to frustrate the measures decided upon by NATO against the threat to West Europe posed by the excessive Soviet missile buildup, Kohl asks. In Bonn, Brezhnev will make every effort to persuade the Federal Republic to accept a special role as "courier" or "mediator" between the Western and Eastern leading powers. In the final analysis, this would amount to the Federal Republic becoming detached from the United States. To resist Brezhnev's blandishments is therefore one of the most important tasks of German foreign and security policy, Kohl emphasized.

FOREIGN MINISTER BRIEFS TURKISH COUNTERPART

LD101956 Hamburg DPA in German 1651 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 10 Apr (DPA)--German politicians pointed out to Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen on Friday the importance of reestablishing human rights in Turkey. During a 90-minute working session, Turkmen was briefed by his German colleague Hans-Dietrich Genscher on the experiences and expectations of the German parliamentary delegation which visited Turkey last march. Genscher accepted an invitation from Turkmen to visit Turkey in the autumn of this year.

Turkmen told journalists in the afternoon that Genscher promised him that Turkey could expect to receive "substantial" aid again this year. Turkmen pointed out that increasing terrorism had necessitated the suspension of "a number of" civil liberties. Only now, following the impounding of 200,000 firearms and 1 million rounds of ammunition had his government become fully aware of the problem of terrorism. Concerning the situation in his country, Turkmen said that the convening of a legislative assembly is planned for October or November.

Turkmen Comments

TA110554 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has said that developments in Turkey will not affect FRG aid to Turkey. Turkmen, who is on an official visit in the FRG, met with Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Bonn. At a news conference after the meeting, Turkmen said that the aid to Turkey will continue without it being affected in any way by developments in Turkey. A Turkish Radio Television correspondent in Cologne reported that Turkmen said that primarily bilateral relations, the international situation, Poland, the Iranian-Iraqi war and East-West relations were discussed at the meeting. Turkmen added that views were exchanged on his contacts in the United States and Genscher's contacts in Moscow.

In a statement after the meeting, Genscher said that there is no change in his government's attitude that the visa imposed on Turkish citizens is temporary. Turkmen will return to Turkey tomorrow.

Meanwhile, it has been announced that FRG Foreign Minister Genscher will make an official visit to Turkey in the fall. In a statement in Bonn, the FRG Foreign Ministry spokesman said that Genscher accepted Turkmen's visit and that the date of the visit will be determined later.

OFFERGELD MEETS WITH MEXICAN FINANCE SECRETARY

FL091550 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1523 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 9 Apr (NOTIMEX)--David Ibarra Munoz, Mexican secretary of finance and public credit, today met in Bonn with German Minister of Economic Cooperation Rainer Offergeld. The Economic Cooperation Ministry reported in Bonn that the purpose of the meeting was to plan the upcoming development committee meeting to be held in Gabon on 22 May.

Ibarra Munoz is chairman of the development committee, a joint agency of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund established in 1974. The committee, to which Offergeld also belongs, takes care of development problems in the Third World.

ECONOMIC OFFICIALS TALK WITH JAPANESE MINISTER

LD121236 Hamburg DPA in German 1045 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 12 Apr (DPA)--A meeting was held in Kronberg-Taunus today between the Japanese finance minister and Horst Schulmann, the state secretary for financial and currency policy in the Federal Finance Ministry, and Karl Otto Poehl, president of the Federal Bank. A communique published in Bonn stresses that there was total agreement on all points discussed during the exchange of views on current questions of economic and financial policy. The parties agreed that the close cooperation between the Federal Republic and Japan should be continued and intensified. State Secretary Schulmann represented the federal finance minister, who was ill, at the meeting with Watanabe.

SOVIET CONDUCTOR, SON UNDER FRG PROTECTION

LD131006 Hamburg DPA in German 0941 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 13 Apr (DPA)--Contrary to earlier reports, Soviet conductor Maksim Shostakovich and his son Dmitriy--who last Saturday placed themselves under the protection of Bavarian authorities following a concert in Fuerth--have so far not requested political asylum in the Federal Republic.

A Federal Interior Ministry spokesman said in Bonn today that, as far as he knows, they had not yet applied for asylum. The spokesman gave no further details.

It was said in Bonn that Shostakovich and his son did not want to stay in the Federal Republic but wanted to go to another Western country. The defection by the two musicians apparently has caused a stir among the Soviets. It became known today that the Soviet Embassy in Bonn tried early yesterday to obtain clarification from the responsible German authorities, especially about where father and son were staying.

U.S. MILITARY TRAIN STOPPED BY PROTESTERS

LD131002 Hamburg DPA in German 0833 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Verden, 13 Apr (DPA)--An American military transport train was stopped on the Bremen-Hanover line near Langwedel in Verden district last night by unknown persons who claimed in leaflets to be sympathizers of the imprisoned Red Army Faction terrorists. According to the police today, they threw a steel cable measuring about 10 meters across the overhead cable system. Damage of about DM200,000 was done to the system as well as to the locomotive's current collector.

The perpetrators said in leaflets that the attack was an act of solidarity with the Red Army Faction prisoners on a hunger strike and they demanded their release. At the same time, they declared war on the "U.S. imperialists." The train was stopped to give the American soldiers "time to think things over." The search for the perpetrators so far has been unsuccessful.

PRESS DISCUSSES SCHMIDT'S STATE OF NATION MESSAGE

DW101110 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West German 0505 GMT 10 Apr 81

[From the press review]

[Excerpts] FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes: This time, Helmut Schmidt gave a shorter and firmer state of the nation report than ever before in his years as chancellor, and he stressed the core issue most clearly—the national problem. This time, nothing was missing, so to speak. Regarding the repugnant inter-German border, there was the demand that no shots be fired. Regarding the characterization of measures by the GDR regime against German-German contacts, there was the expectation that they will be corrected. The chancellor again used the word setback in his diagnosis of inter-German affairs, while the opposition, represented by CSU land group chief Zimmermann, insisted on a diagnosis which put relations at a low point. It seemed, however, as if the distance between the two words became smaller. Some sort of change through rapprochement seems in the offing here.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG notes: As in earlier years, the government left the description of the situation in divided Germany to the opposition. The spokesman of the CDU and the CSU tried on their part not to exploit the omissions of the government for an exchange of blows between the parties and not to create inter-German friction. The differences were great wherever the domestic political situation was involved, particularly the difficult situation of Schmidt's government party. This as well as the fact that neither the federal chancellor nor the parties could resist the temptation to become involved in the Berlin election campaign made the discussion to some extent an election forum where Berlin Mayor Jochen Vogel and his opposing candidate Richard von Weizsaecker had to be involved.

LUEBECKER NACHRICHTEN points out: Although it was not mentioned in this debate, it was clear to everybody that a decision on Poland also would involve a decision on Germany. Will the overly powerful Soviet Union tolerate a more humane and liberal reformist communism? If it does in Poland, will it dare do it also in the GDR? The answer to this question demends on the continuity of contacts between both German states. It would mean much if the Germans in the GDR were given half the liberties Lech Walesa and his people have achieved.

WIESBADENER KURIER writes: The coalition parties and the oppsition realize that the sky over German-German relations will remain dark until the world political thunderstorms have disappeared. Relations between the world powers, the Soviet armament lead and NATO's dual decision play their role. Behind the efforts of the Social Democrats to give priority to negotiations on missiles stands the hope for a possible continuation of German-German normalization.

GISCARD, FRANCOIS-PONCET DISCUSS LEBANON WITH HAIG

LD111247 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Text] The president of the republic and Francois-Poncet this morning discussed the Lebanon issue with U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig. When leaving the Elysee, the American secretary of state told journalists that France and the United States are considering the need to mobilize a UN force to put a stop to the fighting in Lebanon. As for Francois-Poncet, he added that France is very concerned about the situation in Lebanon and that decisions will be made in the coming hours regarding measures which would facilitate a return to the cease-fire. This will be the object of tomorrow evening's meeting with the ambassadors and the results will be conveyed to the president of the republic on Monday morning.

Foreign Minister on Talks

LD111138 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Text] General Haig, who arrived this morning in Paris from London, has already departed for Bonn, capital of the FRG. This morning, the U.S. secretary of state discussed the international situation with the president of the republic and with Francois-Poncet, the French foreign affairs minister. Here is a comment by Jean Francois-Poncet, outside the Elysee Palace at the end of the meeting:

[Begin recording] We have tackled the problems regarding East-West relations. I note that in this field we have the same objective, that of stabilizing these relations. In this context, we naturally discussed the situation in Poland. As you know, we share the concern that the situation in Poland should remain the business of the Polish people and develop without any use of violence. We also discussed the situation in Lebanon in detail. We are very concerned about this situation and in hours and days we shall examine the initiatives which could be taken to restore a cease-fire in Lebanon. [end recording]

AMBASSADORS CONFER ON SITUATION IN LEBANON

LD121210 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] At the initiative of French Minister of Foreign Affairs Jean Francois-Poncet, there will be a conference in Paris this afternoon comprising the French ambassadors in Syria, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Israel and Ireland. Ireland presently holds the presidency of the UN Security Council. This is what Minister Jean Francois-Poncet explained to our correspondent:

[Begin recording] I have decided to summon to Paris the ambassadors in order to attempt to see how it would be possible--probably within the framework of the United Nations--to reestablish a cease-fire. This is the first objective.

The second objective is to determine in which way--on the basis of this cease-fire--one can first of all make it last, and secondly reestablish a situation of improved understanding and peace inside this very deeply-divided country of Lebanon which is, one must not forget, the receptacle and the reflection of divisions which are tearing the Middle East apart. [end recording]

Foreign Ministry Communique

NC122028 Paris AFP in English 2020 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 12 Apr (AFP)--Six French ambassadors from five foreign countries and the United Nations met here with Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet today to study the situation in Lebanon.

According to a Foreign Ministry communique, issued after the working session, the participants considered various ways of obtaining an end to the fighting in Lebanon, of providing for the security of civilians and of reinforcing the authority of the Beirut government.

Mr Francois-Poncet will present the results of the meeting to President Valery Giscard d'Estaing Monday and they will serve as the basis of future policy decisions.

The French ambassadors to Lebanon, Syria, Saudi Arabia, Ireland, Israel, the U.N. and top ranking Foreign Ministry officials participated in the meeting.

COMMUNIQUE ON FRENCH-GERMAN LOAN AGREEMENT

LD101043 Paris LE MONDE in French 10 Apr 81 p 10

[Text] The text of the communique published 9 April in Paris and Bonn:

1. The Governments of France and the FRG, noting the slowing down of economic activity in Europe and worldwide, the need for structural adjustments in the economies and the insufficient increase in new jobs, have decided to undertake immediately and simultaneously new and concerted action in favor of productive investment which is technologically innovatory, designed to create jobs and capable of contributing to a redressing of the balance of payments, particularly by reducing dependence on petroleum imports.

2. Each government, consequently, will act according to its own procedures for improving the finances of priority investments:

--In France, the Credit National will be the operating agent for a special jobs investment fund to which the state will make interest payments;

--In the FRG, the Kredit Anstalt Fuer Wideraufbau will be given the task of offering the necessary finance on these special conditions.

3. Long-term external loans will be floated simultaneously by these institutions--each for that with which it is concerned--on the international money market.

The total amount of the operations to be carried out in several stages during the next 18 months will rise to 5 billion European currency units, half for France, half for the FRG.

4. The proceeds of these loans will be used to finance priority investments to be implemented by enterprises and organizations wishing to come to terms with the new conditions of economic activity. These investments, which will take account of each country's own needs, will be, in particular, as follows:

--Investments in favor of saving energy and raw materials, of forms of energy to replace petroleum and of new forms of energy;

--Investments facilitating enterprises' structural adaptation particularly to the new exchange terms, new energy costs and the new demands of competitiveness;

--Investments in advanced technology such as data processing and automation.

A particular effort will be made in these spheres in favor of small and medium enterprises.

LE MONDE Editorial

LD100911 Paris LE MONDE in French 10 Apr 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Two Friends"]

[Text] Seen from Paris, the announcement of the French-German loan plan certainly smacks of the election. Seen from Bonn, the report takes on quite a different dimension. Not that there can be any doubt as to Chancellor Schmidt's preference for Mr Giscard d'Estaing's candidacy, but because this new stage of French-German cooperation fits with the logic of the policy which the chancellor and his "friend" Valery are constantly developing.

In a Europe which is ailing, increasingly divided, short on imagination and--to quote the president of the republic--prey "to national egoisms," Bonn and Paris have long since chosen to display a certain "political will." Whatever opinion one may form on the efficacy and the consequences of the international loan they have just decided on, it must be said that it is a new manifestation of this will. One could--and should--wonder, however, whether Mr Schmidt and Mr Giscard d'Estaing have not gone a bit too far this time by presenting as a common initiative within the Community framework something which looks, in the last analysis, like two quite separate loans, not implying any solidarity between the two recipient countries. This slight of hand, intended to impress the uninitiated, is reminiscent of the Coue Method [reference to "positive thinking" method of psychotherapy].

In any case, the operation, which is aimed at presenting the French-German pair as the only valid EEC axis, will not greatly impress Mrs Thatcher, who has just responded in her way to the interview given by Giscard d'Estaing last week to the DERNIERES NOUVELLES D'ALSACE, in which the president of the republic openly wondered about Britain's Community spirit after the Maastricht European summit and the latest collapse of the fishing talks. In the same way, the new French-German initiative, carefully concealed from the partners of Paris and Bonn at the time of the last European Council, will do nothing to calm the anxieties and irritations of the "small" countries, which are increasingly annoyed at being left out of major deliberations.

Whether Bonn likes it or not, the matter of the French-German loan, less than 3 weeks before the French election, has the air of a publicity operation. In the longer term, and if the outgoing president is returned to office, it also confirms that the current French-American honeymoon could suffer some eclipses. Certainly, it is only in Bonn that distinct reservations can now be heard on the new diplomacy which Mr Reagan has not finished defining precisely. There is a strong chance that the silence maintained by Paris on this topic is more tactical than anything else, and that people are preparing to be more explicit in the postelection phase and to present the French-German policy as that of reason, in contrast to the policy of excessive risks.

In this respect, it is significant that Chancellor Schmidt confirmed Thursday that he has invited Mr Brezhnev to visit the FRG this year. Paris, subjected to the same pressure from Moscow as Bonn has seen, has not yet agreed to make the same gesture. However, it would be interesting to know whether this problem--that of inviting Mr Brezhnev to a Western capital while the Polish crisis is far from over--was touched on by the two men and, if so, what was said.

GALLEY ON ARMS TO SAUDI ARABIA, GULF SECURITY

LD081513 Riyadh AR-RIYAD in Arabic 6 Apr 81 pp 1, 17

[Mustafa al-Yahyawi report]

[Excerpts] Paris--French Defense Minister Robert Galley said that his country pays great attention to cooperation in the military field with Saudi Arabia. He said there are two fields of cooperation, the Saudi armored corps, in which great progress has been made, and the naval field, in which France sells the kingdom a number of vessels and naval equipment and trains Saudi personnel.

The French defense minister was speaking to an AR-RIYAD correspondent at Orly Airport in Paris just before his departure for Riyadh.

The French defense minister said that the military cooperation existing between France and the Saudi Arabian Kingdom is most important. It is natural that we should meet with our Saudi friends from time to time, be it in Paris or Riyadh, in order to discuss the development of this cooperation and how to further it in the interest of both countries.

In his statement to AR-RIYAD, Galley said: We the French pay great attention to our military cooperation with the Saudi Arabian Kingdom because it has a special position in our principal interests. For this reason, I asked his royal highness Amir Sultan ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz if it was possible to hold a meeting in Riyadh to review aspects of military cooperation between our countries. His highness welcomed our request and I will have the pleasure of meeting him for the second time, as we previously met 2 years ago when King Khalid visited France.

The French defense minister added: "There are at least two fields in which cooperation was developed rapidly. The field of the Saudi armored corps has achieved great progress. I will discuss with our Saudi friends how to develop cooperation between our countries in this field and how France can further participate in it. There is another new field in which we cooperate and this concerns the implementation of the (Savori) program for the creation of a full-fledged Saudi naval force. In this field, France sells the kingdom vessels and naval equipment and trains Saudi personnel to operate them. In view of the fact that the implementation of this program will take several years, it is necessary to follow up the stages of work. I will discuss this matter in particular with Amir Sultan and we will seek to establish cooperation between us in this field on a solid basis."

Replying to a question as to whether France, as a major power producing most types of arms, is capable of meeting its friends' requests for arms, Galley said: "I believe that France is capable of meeting the requests of its friends for arms supplies because it has a diversified and developed military industry that produces all types of arms and because its advanced technology makes its arms among the world's best. It is therefore capable of meeting the wishes of the countries dealing with it.

"But here I would like to point out a very important point, namely, that the French military industry basically was founded to meet the needs of the French Army before anything else and its production capacity should accord with these needs. The French Armed Forces absorb most of the arms our factories produce. Sometimes this puts us in a difficult situation, particularly when a friendly country asks us to urgently supply it with arms. This is what happens sometimes when the request involves arms that might not be sufficiently available to us. What is required in this case is to find an urgent and suitable solution to reconcile three requirements: production capacity, our army's needs and the friends' requests. Sometimes we might be compelled to supply the friendly country with military hardware by taking arms that had been earmarked for our armed forces if the friendly state is in a very difficult position, that is, if its security and independence are threatened."

Replying to a question regarding the major powers' military presence in the area and the call for the demilitarization of the Indian Ocean, the French defense minister said: The presence of major powers--that is, the United States, France and Britain, in the Gulf waters and the Gulf of Oman has two reasons. The first is the Soviet military presence in the area, which has prompted the Western countries to seek to establish military equality with the Soviet Union and the second is the vital importance of freedom of shipping within the framework of guaranteeing oil supplies to the West and Europe in particular.

I believe that the countries that criticize the Western military presence in the area are those which are linked to the Soviet Union in one way or another.

As for the question of demilitarization of the Indian Ocean, it is not necessary that it should be a matter of immediate concern because disarmament will not be possible unless there is a real desire to begin consultation between the Eastern and Western forces on this matter. But France, as you know, has accepted in principle the idea of initiating international negotiations on the problem of the Indian Ocean. This idea was put forth by the Madagascar president last year. If the objective is to sit down at the negotiating table to discuss ways of easing tension in the area and, consequently, reducing the military presence of the major powers because their presence is the result of the said tension, then France will be ready to participate in negotiations in this case.

LE MONDE DETAILS CONTRADICTORY OPINION POLL RESULT

LD101439 Paris LE MONDE in French 10 Apr 81 p 15

[Text] Paris MATCH for 17 April publishes a poll carried out by Public S.A. from 26 March through 4 April on a national sample of 5,000 people of voting age.

For the first round, Giscard d'Estaing comes out on top, with 29.5 percent of voting intentions (that is, 0.5 percent less than at the time of the previous poll carried out in two sessions from 11 through 13 March and 19 through 21 March, of which the results were published in LE MONDE for 27 March). Five other candidates also lose half a point each compared with the previous poll. They are Mitterrand with 24 percent, Garaud (3 percent); Debre (2.5 percent); Laguiller (1.5 percent); and Crepeau (1 percent). The loss recorded by Lalonde (ecology candidate) is more substantial: He goes from 6 percent to 2.5 percent. On the other hand, Chirac goes up (from 13 percent to 16.5 percent) as does Marchais (from 16 percent to 18.5 percent). Bouchardeau is credited with 1 percent.

For the second round, the current head of state collects 52 percent of voting intentions (as opposed to 50.5 percent previously) as against 48 percent for the Socialist candidate (instead of 49.5 percent). The latter, if fighting Chirac, would win with 54 percent.

In its issue dated 9-15 April, VSD gives the results of a poll carried out by Indice Opinion from 21 March through 1 April using a national sample of 5,355 people aged 18 and over. Indice Opinion specifies that 82 departments were covered by the poll and that the margin of error is 1.5 points, because of the size of the sample. For the first round, two hypotheses are envisaged. In the first, with 15 candidates standing, Giscard d'Estaing comes out on top with 24.5 percent of voting intentions as against 24 percent for Mitterrand, 19.5 percent of Chirac, 18 percent for Marchais, 3.5 percent for Lalonde, 2.5 percent for Debre, 1.5 percent of Crepeau, Garaud, Krivine and Laguilier, 1 percent for Bouchardeau and 0.5 percent for Garaudy and Le Pen. Gauchon and Hintermann score nothing, and 16 percent expressed no voting intention. In the second case, involving only seven candidates, 17 percent of those polled expressed no voting intention. Giscard d'Estaing and Mitterrand are equal at 26.5 percent; Chirac is credited with 20 percent; Marchais with 19 percent; Debre with 3 percent; Laguiler with 3 percent and Crepeau with 2.5 percent.

For the second round, the Socialist candidate takes 52.5 percent, as against 47.5 percent for the outgoing president, with 20 percent not expressing a voting intention. If Chirac stays in the fight, he takes 44.5 percent, as against 55.5 for Giscard d'Estaing.

According to this poll, taking the two hypotheses for the first round, the category of workers shows a 28 to 29 percent vote for Marchais, 26.5-28.5 percent for Mitterrand and 20-21.5 percent for Giscard d'Estaing. Chirac takes 13 percent in either case. In the second round, 63.5 percent of workers come out in favor of the Socialist candidate, as against 36.5 percent for the current head of state.

Indice Opinion asked the polls commission, on 7 April, to verify its poll. The institute would also like the poll carried out by Public S.A. to be checked. Michel Pinton, general representative of the UDR, has approached the commission in connection with "the various polls conducted by Indice Opinion." Pinton says he is surprised that Indice Opinion is alone in giving one of the candidates--a score which he does not achieve in any of the other polls published by the press at the same time."

For his part, Jacques Toubon, secretary general of the national committee of support for Chirac's candidacy, is astounded that Pinton should express surprise when a poll is unfavorable to Giscard d'Estaing.

WEINBERGER MEETS WITH FORLANI, COLOMBO, LAGORIO

LD101924 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1500 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger has left Rome after 2 days of talks with Prime Minister Forlani, Foreign Minister Colombo and Defense Minister Lagorio. The U.S. side described the talks as extremely positive and very open. The need has been emphasized to strengthen the tactical nuclear capability for defense in order to reestablish the balance in Europe with the USSR. The United States and Italy are in favor of a future resumption of the East-West dialogue.

Missile Site Talks Denied

AU111611 Rome ANSA in English 1553 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 11 Apr (ANSA)--The Italian Foreign Ministry denied newspaper reports here today to the effect that sites for the intallation of cruise and Pershing missiles in Italy were discussed here this week in U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's talks with Rome government officials.

The denial came in response to press leaks about Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo's talks with Weinberger Friday and reiterated Colombo's own account of those talks.

The Italian diplomatic chief told reporters yesterday after his meeting with the U.S. defense chief that "the general political aspects of strategic and political balance (in Europe)" were reviewed. He added that both sides reiterated their "political determination" to promote NATO's offer to the Soviet Union to negotiate controls on medium-range nuclear warhead systems. "No reference was made to Italian sites for NATO's updated missiles, whose installation in Europe starting in 1983 was decided by NATO defense ministers in Brussels on December 12, 1980, and should be carried out," the Foreign ministry asserted. A spokesman for the American delegation told reporters in Rome yesterday that there was "complete Western unanimity" on the need to strengthen NATO's nuclear tactical defense potential in Europe.

LIBYA'S JALLUD ARRIVES UNANNOUNCED FOR TALKS

NC121816 Paris AFP in English 1808 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 12 (AFP)--Libyan No 2 Major 'Abd as-Salam Jallud arrived here today unannounced, informed sources said. The length of his stay was not known. Observers believed his arrival was linked with the possibility of a visit by Libyan leader Col Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, who has been planning to go to Italy for some time. Italian Foreign Trade Minister Enrico Manca went to Libya in February officially to take part in Joint Italy-Libya commission talks, broken off for two years, but also probably to renew political contacts between the two countries.

Last Wednesday, Libyan Oil Minister 'Abd as-Salam az-Zaq'ar stated at a conference here that Col al-Qadhdhafi could visit Italy before the end of the summer if "political conditions were favourable."

BRIEFS

ANGOLAN OIL DEVELOPMENT--Italy's AGIP oil company has signed an agreement with Angola's SONAGOL for off-shore oil exploration and drilling in the African nation. AGIP will carry out the research operations and will be the head company of a consortium soon to be formed. The "production-sharing" agreement will go into effect as soon as it is ratified by the Angolan cabinet. [Text] [Rome ANSA in English 0812 GMT 11 Apr 81 AU]

TREATY NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S. SET FOR END OF APRIL

LD111859 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1750 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Text] Negotiations will begin before the end of April on the new U.S.-Spanish treaty, according to a statement after the cabinet meeting yesterday evening by Secretary of State for Information Ignacio Aguirre. Agreement on this was reached during U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig's visit to Spain. The U.S. delegation to negotiate the treaty will be headed by the U.S. ambassador in Madrid, Terence Todman.

GOVERNMENT, PSOE CONSULT OVER AUTONOMIES ISSUE

LD101525 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 8 Apr 81 p 8

[Excerpt] Madrid, 7 Apr--At a meeting this morning, the government and the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] reached agreement on appointing the members of the committee of experts who are to formulate on a consultative basis the main guidelines of the state of the autonomies, within the policy of "consultation" between the government and the opposition.

The meeting, held at the Moncloa Palace, lasted more than 2 hours, and was attended on behalf of the government by Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo and Ministers Pio Cabanillas and Rodolfo Martin Villa. Felipe Gonzalez and Alfonso Guerra attended on behalf of the PSOE. The chairman of the above-mentioned committee, Professor Garcia de Enterria, also was present. It was agreed that the committee will include these professors of public law: Tomas Ramon Fernandez, Louis Cosculluela Muntaner, Francisco Sosa Wargner and Tomas Cuadra Salcedo. Santiago Munoz Machado will act as secretary and Miguel Sanchez Moram, as deputy secretary. Agreement also was reached on the committee's work methods.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Felipe Gonzalez stated: "Our opinion is that it is necessary to involve in the process of negotiation and resolution of the autonomy problems the political forces which are prepared for this, and we will take part in this undertaking. The prime minister soon will be receiving the other leaders of political forces to set out to them the discussion we held this morning, will ask them for suggestions which they deem opportune and thus will be able to organize the process in this way in the future."

He added that the setting up was discussed of a consultative body within the framework of implementation of the law on financing the autonomous communities, for the purpose of monitoring the redistribution of wealth, the launching of the interterritorial compensation fund and the machinery which will make it possible to resolve the local administrations' problems.

With respect to the unease which has been created in some autonomous communities, he said: "There has been a decision to conduct the autonomy process from a comprehensive viewpoint. If anybody deduces from the existence of these talks that the intention is to curb the autonomy process, he is reaching an absolutely false conclusion. What is intended is to impart strigency to the building of the state of the autonomies insofar as we are concerned, and this does not mean in any way curbing the processes but imparting stringency to them, and sometimes stringency requires measures which were unsuspected a few months ago and are, therefore, measures of progress."

In Felipe Gonzales' opinion, the autonomy processes of Catalonia and the Basque country will continue "stringently and steadfastly."

He explained that other experts also will take part, according to the matters broached.

He later said that "specific stages of development are envisaged. For instance, an initial stage of a comprehensive approach to the issue, which needs political solutions, and a catalogue of outstanding problems of a general nature which need technical solutions. I cannot specify the time, but I believe that we soon will have a general approach. We must wait to find out what other political forces' suggestions are, and after that, there will be a second stage during which we will have to agree on a number of specific measures, some of an executive and others of a legislative nature, to provide a response to the autonomy problems."

For his part, Minister of Territorial Administration Martin Villa stated at the conclusion of the meeting that the involvement of other political forces in the autonomy negotiations "is a matter on which the prime minister must decide." Martin Villa stated that "the implementation of autonomy requires many years, and I believe that we have all said that we could consider ourselves lucky if the process is completed in the remaining 20 years of the century. What could be the aim is for all the uncertainties in the formulation of the statutes to be clarified by 1983. I believe that this is the real interpretation which must be given to the word 'calm,' which has sometimes been interpreted as 'curb.' Imparting calm to a process sometimes means hurrying, but I would say that the real meaning is 'doing things seriously.'"

Referring to the principal problems of the autonomy negotiations, he said that some statutes are already before the congress. "The parliamentary deliberation of those statutes and, in particular, the allocation of powers between the state and the communities will be some of the contentious issues." Together with these, Martin Villa cited the problems of relations among parties, such as electoral problems, as well as the quotas to be allocated to each of the districts, both in the uniprovincial and in the multiprovincial communities, and the date of the elections itself. "But in my opinion," he added, "the principal problem is the definition of the state and of the powers allocated to the state by the constitution, which must be specified."

He emphasized again that there will be no curb, and with respect to the uneasiness of some communities, the minister replied: "I would like to be told where there are cutbacks." Last, he stated that the negotiations on this issue are almost permanent. "There are contacts at the political level begun by the government and the foremost opposition party which will be extended to the remainder of the nationwide parties, principally, and also to the nationalists."

PRC VICE PREMIER GU MU CONCLUDES OFFICIAL VISIT

LD102346 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] PRC Vice Premier Gu Mu concluded his official visit to Spain this evening. Hector Arenas reports from Barajas airport:

At the end of PRC Vice Premier Gu Mu's official visit to Spain, it seems that the two countries have reached agreement on a number of international issues and, more importantly, on trade and industrial exchanges. Gu Mu, who was seen off at Barajas airport by the ministers of foreign affairs, culture and industry, made a statement on the main aspects of his visit to Spain.

[Begin recording in Mandarin fading into Spanish translation] My contacts with various government and private circles created good conditions for the continuing development of relations between our two countries. [end recording]

We also have learned that the vice premier has confirmed the contract for the construction in Spain of four 35,000-ton ships for delivery to China. The plan to build in the near future other ships at the Seville Shipyards and plans for Spanish participation in the exploitation of important Chinese coal mines also were confirmed.

ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT: THATCHER ON MIDDLE EAST

LD101045 London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT in Arabic 9 Apr 81 pp 1, 2

[Mahir 'Uthman report]

[Text] London--British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher held a press conference exclusively for Arab journalists, including an ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT correspondent, on the occasion of her impending visit to Saudi Arabia (beginning 19 April), the UAE [United Arab Emirates], Oman and Qatar.

At the beginning of her press conference, Mrs Thatcher said that she is looking forward to her visit to the Gulf area and added: "We have felt that, after our withdrawal from the Gulf, a number of people believe that we are no longer interested in the area. But, as you know, we recently have sent a number of our senior ministers there, and Queen Elizabeth visited the area in 1979, thus opening a new era in relations. My visit will come next within these contacts, through which we want to show our realization of the importance of the area in relation to the world's stability and peace. We also want to show that the peace and stability of the area are in the hands of the area itself and that we welcome the efforts of those countries in cooperating with us to guarantee their stability. Perhaps, we may be able in other parts of the world to make a certain contribution to the efforts to ensure that no confrontation takes place in the Gulf, because a confrontation there would be against the interest of everybody. Our interest in the Gulf area goes far beyond interest in oil, since our relations with the area are historical and traditional and started long before the appearance of oil there."

Asked why Kuwait and Bahrain were not included in her visit, Mrs Thatcher said that she did not want to compress her coming visit more than necessary and felt it essential to give sufficient time to the talks in the countries she will be visiting. She said: "We would like and, indeed, have every wish to visit Bahrain and Kuwait, and we intend to visit them in September."

Speaking about bilateral relations between Britain and the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, the British prime minister said that these relations are quite normal after the difficulties they encountered some time ago and will be as good as they can be in the future. She added: "We realize the importance of all the efforts which the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia is making, and are aware of its great influence. We acknowledge its moderate policy in oil pricing and take note of the joint efforts it is making with the other Gulf countries to guarantee its future and defend itself."

Asked about her statements in the United States regarding Britain's readiness to contribute to the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force [RDF] and the Gulf countries' reaction to the effect that the escalation of tension between the two superpowers in the area does not serve stability in that important part of the world, Mrs Thatcher said that the RDF, if formed, will not be specially for the Gulf, but will be available to help any country that seeks help from it. She added: "As for the question of stationing the RDF in the Gulf, it is absolutely not on."

Thatcher said that there is no RDF at present, "but, should the Americans desire to form a force of this type, then we will participate in it." She said that the difference between this force and any other force is to give particular attention to the ability to move rapidly should there be a request to send military aid to a crisis area.

Thatcher was asked if she agrees that the Palestine problem is one of the most urgent problems in the Middle East. She said: We have been trying to solve that problem for a long time and we will continue our efforts to solve it, but, as everybody knows, it is not an easy problem.

We must continue our efforts to see whether we can solve it in cooperation with the United States, since our intention is not to compete with the efforts of the United States, but rather to be complementary to them. In fact, some of our friends in the area always ask us whether we can exercise some influence on the United States and make it clear that finding a solution is an urgent matter. As I said, we will continue our efforts in trying to reach a solution to the problem.

Asked if she agrees with the American notion that the main issue at present is the Soviet threat to the Western interests in the Gulf and not the Arab-Israeli conflict, Mrs Thatcher replied: "I do not know if it would be of any significance to say that one question is more important than the other. We must tackle all existing problems, and I believe that the issues are not completely divorced. The Arab-Israeli problem has existed for a long time, and we will continue our efforts and attempt to solve it. We are aware that the Palestinian problem, until it is solved, will remain a source of tension in the area."

In the course of her reply to another question, Mrs Thatcher alluded to the present line of American thinking in the search for a way to continue the Middle East peace process. She said that she is aware that the Egyptian-Israeli efforts have not been welcomed by other countries. Nevertheless, she said, these efforts have at least led to the restoration of part of the territories to Egypt. She went on to say: "During my U.S. visit, it was clear that the U.S. Government had not yet made up its mind on the best way to continue with the peace process and to give it momentum. We sense that the United States was aware of the need to continue the process because the problem has existed for a long time and has to be solved. It was obvious to us that the United States wishes to consult with other quarters before deciding on the course it is to pursue. You know that Alexander Haig is now visiting a number of Middle Eastern countries to learn their views before he and the President decide on the best way to move forward. I believe that it is good news for all of us to see such high-level consultations being conducted by the United States at present. This is good news for the states of the Gulf, the Middle East and Europe and for the United States itself."

Asked if the Reagan administration will accept the European initiative, the British prime minister said: "We do not regard our efforts as being separate. There will be less chance of success if one initiative is completely detached from the other, because eventually we have to consult with the parties themselves, that is, with all the area's states which are interested in and concerned with the problem."

Replying to another question, Mrs Thatcher said: "We cannot clearly see the road ahead until we hold talks with the United States on the procedure it wants to follow. I have absolutely no doubt that the procedure which the United States will follow will be influenced by what we say to it."

Asked if British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington's assumption of the EEC Foreign Ministers Council chairmanship in July will produce any tangible results regarding the Middle East problem, Mrs Thatcher replied: "I think we must wait for two things. The first is for the United States to make up its mind on the best procedure to follow in the future, and the second is the result of the Israeli election. We must exercise patience for a long time so as to overcome the complexities of the problem." Mrs Thatcher went on to say: "We will never achieve a settlement unless both sides recognize the rights and legitimate aspirations of the other, that is, unless Israel recognizes the legitimate rights and aspirations of the Palestinian people and the Palestinian people recognize Israel's right to exist peacefully within secure borders.

"There are problems also concerning the Golan Heights, Jerusalem, the West Bank and Gaza. As you know, there are Palestinians in Syria and Jordan and the Gulf states and many other details which need effort and time."

Asked about her government's attitude to the PLO, Mrs Thatcher said that Britain does not recognize organizations, it only recognizes states. She added: "But it could happen that Lord Carrington, in his capacity as chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers, could meet with persons from the PLO, just as the former EEC Council of Ministers chairman did."

Asked about the possibility of Britain selling arms to the Gulf states following the British defense secretary's recent visit to the area, Mrs Thatcher said: "We have been selling arms to the area's states for a long time. We naturally would be pleased to receive requests for defensive weapons. Clearly, one of our aims is to do everything in our power to promote our trade, but the main aim is to help the Gulf states to guarantee their security."

CARRINGTON TALKS WITH U.S. SECRETARY OF STATE

LD101506 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1250 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] London, 10 Apr (LPA)--Lord Carrington and American Secretary of State Mr Alexander Haig had a 90-minute session of talks at the Foreign Office today which centered mainly on the Middle East, but included aspects of the Polish crisis. However, little information was forthcoming from either man at a doorstep press conference at the Foreign Office as they went to lunch.

Lord Carrington abruptly broke off the press conference when Mr Haig was about to answer a question on the possible future role of the Palestine Liberation Organisation in the Middle East peace process.

Extra-tight security was in operation for Mr Haig's visit, reflecting the assassination attempt made on President Reagan two weeks ago.

Lord Carrington and Mr Haig had a private session of talks for 30 minutes before they were joined by advisers. Mr Haig reported to Lord Carrington his four-nation tour of the Middle East and they also discussed Afghanistan in the light of Lord Carrington's recent visit to Pakistan.

Reporters were herded behind metal barriers on the pavement as the two foreign secretaries stood behind microphones at the end of the first session of talks. Lord Carrington, however, merely introduced Mr Haig and gave no indication of the nature of the discussions. Mr Haig said they had discussed his Middle East tour and the observations from each of te four capitals. They also discussed the inter-related problem of external threat to the Middle East and his stopover visit in Madrid, on his way to London.

Mr Haig then offered to take reporters' questions (?on). The first was about the next step forward in the Middle East. He replied that he and Lord Carrington had had "good exchanges" with respect to the peace process. There were a number of aspects to be included, among them the Sinai peace-keeping force and the total withdrawal of Israeli forces from Sinai by April 1982. But Mr Haig added: "I am studying the entire picture."

The next question was on the role of the Palestine Liberation Organisation. It was at this stage that Lord Carrington intervened to say that he had to take Mr Haig to lunch where the talks would be continued.

The two men, accompanied by advisers and security men, then walked across Horseguards to Admiralty House for a working lunch. Observers questioned if there was any significance in Lord Carrington's decision to conclude the press conference as soon as questions on the PLO were raised. He could meet PLO members when he becomes president of the EEC Council of Ministers in July. In Parliament this is a sensitive issue among MPs and peers, particularly those supporting Israel.

GOVERNMENT OPPOSES RDF USE OF BRITISH BASES

NC100850 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 10 Apr 81 p 8

[Text] House member T. Khatzidhimitriou has questioned the foreign affairs minister in connection with pertinent reports "on the formation of British and U.S. rapid deployment military units and the possible use of the British bases against neighboring Arab countries."

The foreign affairs minister stated: "The stance of the Cyprus Government on this question has been defined and has been known for a long time. Particularly in connection with the possible presence of a Rapid Deployment Force [RDF] at the bases, it is observed that the treaty of establishment does not envisage this. The Cyprus Government will emphatically seek the British Government's compliance with its commitments provided for in this treaty."

DENKTAS OPPOSES UK TALKS WITH GREEK CYPRIOTS

TA121249 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that Britain, which accepted the existence of two joint administrations in Cyprus in an agreement signed in Geneva in 1974, is said to have begun negotiations with the Greek Cypriots on the issue of compensations concerning the bases.

In reply to a question on his views regarding reports that the British Government has begun negotiations with the Greek Cypriot administration on compensation concerning the bases, Denktas said that the fact that Britain, one of the guarantor countries of the 1960 agreement and the 1960 constitution, has begun negotiations on the issue of compensation only with the Greek Cypriot administration in contravention of the 1960 agreement and the fact that it is making additional payments to those who have usurped the Turkish Cypriot community's rights including its financial ones offends the Turkish Cypriot [word indistinct]. Recalling that the Greek Cypriot attacks in 1963 (?destroyed) the validity of the 1960 constitution, Denktas added that the British wish to negotiate with this community would cause a Turkish Cypriot reaction. Denktas said: By giving additional strength to the Greek Cypriot community which has, for years, been trying to crush the Turkish Cypriot community through its economic superiority in Cyprus, Britain will have committed an act of animosity against the Turkish Cypriot people.

In reply to a question in connection with the Greek Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis' [words indistinct] is well aware that he did not represent the Turkish Cypriot community in the north. Noting that there are two states and two governments in Cyprus and that the results of [word indistinct] visit would not affect the Turkish state in the north, Denktas added: All the [words indistinct] by Rolandhis is not binding on the Turkish Cypriot people and it does not affect it. (?Initiatives) taken (?or to be taken) by Rolandhis or any other Greek Cypriot official at the United Nations, at any country or at an international conference are not binding on the northern (?state). It cannot affect the Turkish Cypriot people living within the boundaries of this state.

In reply to a question on his views regarding a film being shown in the Greek Cypriot sector concerning the Armenians, Denktas said that he was not (?amazed) at the fact that such an anti-Turkish film was being screened. He stressed that the Greek Cypriot church and leadership are (?provoking) the so-called Armenian problem. Denktas said: Now everyone is aware of the difficulties involved in concluding an agreement and developing a friendship with these people who consider the Turks their eternal enemy and who (?in principle try to) hurt the Turks at every opportunity.

Through their attitude and through their [words indistinct] of Turkish animosity they make us long for the days when we will say "do not stand between me and the sun." Through their cruel attitude they make everyone appreciate the value of separate existence in one's own region.

POLICE ARREST STUDENTS FOR RECENT BOMB EXPLOSIONS

NC110734 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 11 Apr 81 p 8

[Text] An official police statement says that after an intensive investigation, on Thursday night police traced the perpetrators of recent explosions who, according to the statement, are 15-to 18-year-old students. Police have arrested 10 students. Questioning revealed that they manufactured firecrackers from sulphur and saltpeter to test before the approaching Easter holidays. It is expected that 10 more students will also be questioned.

According to the police, the ingredients used by the students were purchased in a Ledra street pharmacy in Nicosia. A number of firecrackers and strong explosive devices made with tin cans were handed over to the police. The investigation also revealed that the explosions had absolutely no political character but were simply childish and irresponsible pranks.

On this opportunity the police appealed to all persons possessing explosive material or explosives not to sell such materials to students or other young persons in order to avoid unpleasant consequences and public confusion. In conclusion, the police called on parents and teachers to check up on students' out-of-school activities and appealed to the public to inform police of any suspicious movements or actions by youngsters.

POLICE INVESTIGATE EXPLOSIONS IN NICOSIA, LIMASSOL

NC120716 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0430 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] There were two bomb explosions yesterday. One was in Nicosia and the other in Limassol. Police said the Nicosia explosion was under an automobile parked on Ayios Andreas Street in the suburb of Pallouriotissa. It damaged the automobile, two other vehicles and a shop window. In Limassol the explosion took place in the rear of a night club in the Yermassoyia river area. Damage was caused to a door and to windowpanes. Police are investigating the motives behind the explosions.

FOREIGN MINISTER DEPARTS FOR BAHRAIN, KUWAIT

NC121416 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis departed for visits to Bahrain and Kuwait today. After Kuwait, Rolandhis will go to Algiers to participate in the work of the nonaligned coordinating office on the issue of Namibia. The conference will begin at the foreign minister level next Thursday and will continue until Saturday.

EDEK LEADER LEAVES FOR PALESTINIAN CONFERENCE

NC111903 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Text] Mr Lissaridhis, chairman of the socialist party EDEK, has left for Damascus to attend the conference of the Palestine National Council at the invitation of PLO.

DEFENSE MINISTER RETURNS FROM BONN, LONDON

NC112224 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Text] Defense Minister Averof returned today from London. He earlier had visited Bonn, where he participated in the conference of NATO defense ministers.

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS TURKISH AIRSPACE VIOLATIONS

NC121425 Athens NEWS in English 12 Apr 81 pp 1,4

[Text] Greece has protested to Turkey about repeated violations of its airspace by Turkish military aircraft earlier this week, a government spokesman said yesterday.

He said that Turkish planes had entered Greek airspace over the Aegean six times last Wednesday.

"Greek military aircraft intercepted the Turkish planes three times and forced them to leave. In the other three cases the Turkish planes had already left," the spokesman said.

Greece and Turkey are at odds over territorial rights in the Aegean.

Opposition leader Andreas Papandreou criticized the government earlier yesterday for lifting restrictions on air traffic over the Aegean as a goodwill gesture aimed at improving relations with Turkey.

The restrictions were eased in March in order to help aircraft movements in Greece's Flight Information Region.

The Greek Government said the measure was taken to meet requests by neighboring countries using the air corridors and it was not likely to affect Greece's security and the country's defense system.

Mr Papandreou, leader of the Panhellenic Socialist Movement (PASOK), said the government had not learned from experience that concessions and gestures of goodwill increased insolence on the part of Turkey.

"On Wednesday, April 8, the Turkish Air Force made its basest violation yet of Greece's airspace," Papandreou said. It violated not only the 10-mile but the 6-mile limit, at least 18 times at 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. and in addition had made repeated flights over the island of Khios.

It should be stressed, continued the statement, that this time Greek aircraft did not restrain the Turkish planes--while the government sent a protest, which remains unanswered.

This Turkish provocation comes after the goodwill gesture made by the foreign minister to Mr Turkmen. I stress this point, said Mr Papandreou, because the government does not seem to realize from its experience that "gestures" make Ankara even bolder.

"But," concluded the PASOK leader, "it is incomprehensible for the government to continue with the Greek-Turkish dialogue on Aegean airspace as if nothing had happened. The Turkish experts arrive today in Athens to participate in the negotiations which begin on 13 April. Doesn't the government have the good judgement to at least postpone the arrival of the experts?"

In Ankara, Turkish Government officials said that no Greek protest alleging violations of its airspace had been received.

"We have received no such protest in Ankara," a senior Foreign Ministry official said. He did not know whether any message had been passed to the Turkish Embassy in Athens.

TURKMEN RETURNS FROM U.S., EUROPE VISITS

TA111658 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen returned to Ankara today after completing his visits abroad. In a statement at Esenboga Airport, Turkmen said that the resolution on Turkey adopted by the European Parliament was a hastily adopted one and that he did not think that it would affect the relations between Turkey and the members of the European Community. Turkman said: The European Parliament is composed of 434 parliamentarians and only 51 of them voted in favor of the resolution. Of 434 members, 45 voted against the resolution. It is apparent that there was no quorum.

On his contacts abroad, Turkmen said that he held positive talks with EEC officials in The Hague, with high-ranking officials in the United States and with Foreign Minister Genscher in the FRG. He pointed out that the main aim of his visit was to meet the new U.S. administration and to exchange views with them on the international situation. Turkmen said: I am very pleased about the meetings I held with Vice President Bush, Secretary of State Haig and Defense Secretary Weinberger. I observed that the new U.S. administration attaches great value to our country and to our country's friendship and that it is showing increasing interest in strengthening Turkey. The cloudy days which had cast a shadow on our relations with the United States for a while are completely over. Our very sincere discussions showed that there is harmony between our viewpoints regarding several important international developments.

Foreign Minister Turkmen stated that during his visit he saw, once more, that during recent years certain fanatical Armenian elements had stepped up their destructive activities against Turkey. Turkmen said: Even though they make up only a small minority of the overall Armenian community, there is no doubt that it is necessary to effectively struggle against the activities of these conditioned circles--activities which are based on the shameless distortion of historical truths. Such a struggle will be waged. At this opportunity, I would like to point out with pleasure that I personally saw at the meetings I held with them that the 110,000 Turks who have settled in the United States are enthusiasically making efforts to make their presence increasingly felt.

Replying to a question, Turkmen said that Southeast Asia [as heard] was a neighboring region to the NATO area and therefore any threat to that region should be considered a threat to NATO's southeastern wing. He added that if there was a threat in Southeast Ais, strengthening Turkey, which is an important element of NATO's southeastern wing, would reinforce the deterrent factor in that region.

COUNCIL OF EUROPE OFFICIAL ARRIVES FOR VISIT

TA121641 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] Hans de Koster, president of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, arrived in Ankara today for talks. De Koster was received at Esenboga Airport by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen. Turhan Gunes, a deputy president of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, Turkey's permanent representative at the Council, Amb Semih Gurler, as well as Cevdet Akcali, leader of the Turkish delegation at the Parliamentary Assembly were also among those who received the visitor at the airport.

In reply to a question by a Turkish Radio and Television correspondent, De Koster said he did not believe the European Parliament's resolution against Turkey was of any great significance. De Koster added that the report he will prepare on his visit to Turkey would be submitted to the assembly's session on 11 May.

In reply to another question, De Koster said that the future of the democratic system in Turkey would be discussed during his talks in Ankara. He said he hopes he would leave Turkey with a positive impression. The president of the assembly noted that the 12 September [coup] was viewed with understanding by the great majority of the assembly members of the Council of Europe. De Koster is expected to have talks in Ankara with head of state Gen Kenan Evren, Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu and Foreign Minister Turkmen.

Received by Turkmen

TA130941 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0900 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Hans de Koster, president of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, began his talks in Ankara today. Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen received the visiting Council of Europe official this morning. In a statement before the meeting, Turkemn expressed the importance Turkey attaches to its relations with the Council of Europe. He added that issues between Turkey and the Parliamentary Assembly of the European Council would be discussed during the talks.

In his statement, De Koster recalled that as one of its founder countries, Turkey had played a significant and constructive role in the European Council's history. Noting that in spite of periods of crisis, relations between Turkey and the Council had never been broken off, De Koster said that since 12 September solutions have been found to several problems. He added that he was confident that he would receive positive replies to the issues to be dealt with during his talks.

De Koster will be received this afternoon by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren and Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu.

DELEGATION TRAVELS TO GREECE FOR TALKS ON AIRSPACE

TA131032 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] A technical delegation departed Turkey for Greece today. A Turkish Radio and Television correspondent has learned that issues concerning the airspace between the two countries will be discussed in talks to be held in Athens. The Turkish delegation is composed of officials from the Foreign Ministry as well as other concerned institutions.

ATTACKS AGAINST DIPLOMATS PROTESTED IN COPENHAGEN

TA121449 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1420 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 12 Apr (AA)--Turkish migrant workers and students staged a demonstration in Copenhagen Saturday to protest the Armenian terrorist attacks on Turkish diplomats. The latest victim of those attacks being the Turkish labour counselor in Copenhagen, Cavit Demir, recently shot critically. The marchers assembled in front of the municipal building in central Copenhagen and condemned the attacks. Later, they proceeded to the hospital Demir has been staying at. The demonstration ended peacefull with marchers handing out leaflets to passersby and to the news media.

PLO ENVOY DISPUTED ON TERRORIST TRAINING REMARK

NC130720 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 8 Apr 81 p 3

[Article by Husamettin Celebi: "The Confession of the PLO Representative"]

[Excerpts] Mr Abu Firaz, PLO representative in Ankara, has said: "We are not responsible for the militant acts of those trained by the PLO when they return to their country."

This gentleman has made this statement following a television program which exposed the crimes of the separatist Kurdish militants. Those who have seen that program know that one of the militants of the illegal "Kurdish Workers Party" announced that he had been trained for several months at the PLO camps. The same militant admitted that idealists and raiders [names of factions of the Turkish terrorist organizations] were also trained in the nearby camps. The same militant admitted to having seen Armenians, who have been atrociously killing Turkish diplomats, trained there also.

That is why Mr Abu Firaz has felt the necessity of talking. Although his role in the raid on the Egyptian Embassy is known, he is allowed to go about in the capacity of a diplomat. And now, he chooses to talk at a time when the people's anger is at its peak, but of course only in a confessing manner. He is unable to say "we have not trained nor are we training now anyone from Turkey." Instead, he says "we are not responsible for their militant acts in their own country."

Mr Abu Firaz too has been trained at the PLO camps. It is understood that it is not easy for people with such training to qualify as diplomats. Had Abu Firaz been in a position to understand this requirement of diplomacy, he would have known that the Turkish nation is shrewd enough not to believe such fallacious arguments. It is high time the PLO, which has become a nursery garden where troublemakers for Turkey both at home and abroad grow, was told "to come to its senses."

Turkish-PLO relations can be maintained not through comic statements but through apologizing.

ROMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER BEGINS VISIT 13 APRIL

TA121453 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1430 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 12 Apr (AA)--Romanian Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei is expected to arrive in Turkey tomorrow for a 5-day official visit. Andrei will meet Turkish officials and pay a visit to the central Anatolian Refinery being constructed in Kirikkale district of the capital.

Welcomed by Turkmen

TA131050 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Romanian Minister of Foreign Affairs Stefan Andrei arrived today on an official visit in Ankara. At Esenboga Airport he was received by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who expressed the belief that this visit will further develop the existing traditional good relations and cooperation between the two countries. Andrei said that his visit will further the good relations in the economic, political and other fields. Noting that in addition to issues concerning the two countries, the Balkans, world peace and international cooperation will also be discussed at the talks to be held in Ankara, Andrei expressed the belief that developments will be achieved in these fields. Andrei will hold bilateral talks this afternoon. The Turkish and Romanian delegations will begin talks tomorrow morning.

BULGARIAN DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR BORDER TALKS

TA121739 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] A Bulgarian Foreign Ministry delegation arrived in Turkey today for talks on the delineation of the border between the two countries at Rezve [Rezevo] creek. Talks with the Bulgarian delegation led by Ambassador Stoyan (Venes) will begin in Ankara tomorrow. Foreign Ministry senior adviser, Ambassador Asaf Inhan will head the Turkish delegation at the talks.

MARTIAL LAW RESTRAINTS IMPOSED ON PUBLICATIONS

Editor Sentenced

TA101532 Ankara Domestic in English 1455 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] Istanbul, 10 Apr (AA)--Editor of "PARTIZAN" magazine Irfan Isik was sentenced to 8 years and 8 months of hard labor by the marital law tribunal of Istanbul for "publishing communist propoganda material."

The charges had stemmed from his articles in the magazine's 1978 issues. The tribunal also decided to confiscate the issues involved.

MILLI GAZETE Restricted

TA111102 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Text] The Ankara Martial Law Command has indefinitely halted the publication and distribution of MILLI GAZETE [rightwing pro-Islamic daily favoring the National Salvation Party] in the provinces of Ankara, Cankiri and Kastamonu, as of tomorrow. According to the Ankara Marital Law Command decision, the distribution, transportation and possession of more than a single copy of the daily has been banned.

PROSECUTOR ASKS DEATH SENTENCE FOR 97 SEPARATISTS

TA121509 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] Diyarbakir, southeastern Turkey, 12 Apr (AA)--The PKK [Kurdish Workers Party] case of the illegal leftist militants known as the "APOists" with 2,331 defendants including three former members of parliament starts at the martial law court of Diyarbakir tomorrow. The first batch consists of 447 defendants for 97 of whom the military prosecutor has asked for death sentences. They are being charged with separatism and staging killings and holdups in order to establish a communist state in the region. The "APOists" as a whole are being charged with killing during the recent years.

MINISTER RETURNS FROM ENERGY MEETING IN ROME

TA111921 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Text] Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol returned to Turkey today after attending the Rome meeting of the energy ministers of oil-exporting Arab countries and of Mediterranean European countries. In a statement to our correspondent at Yesilkoy Airport, Bingol said that at the meeting which was attended by the energy ministers of nine oil-exporting Arab countries--the participants expressed their views on the drawing up of long-term plans for joint economic ventures.

Pointing out that Turkey was a bridge between the oil-exporting Arab countries and the European countries, especially the Mediterranean countries, Bingol stressed that both sides needed Turkey in their mutual relations and in future developments.

COUNCIL RATIFIES INTERNATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

TA121450 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1444 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 12 Apr (AA)--The Turkish Council of Ministers ratified the "accord on the international energy program" under which the 16 signatory countries will establish emergency oil reserves separately calculated to tide them over for at least 60 days without importing any oil and become self reliant in the long range through energy conservation and development of alternate energy sources.

DELEGATION REACHES TRADE AGREEMENT WITH HUNGARY

TA101614 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1525 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 10 Apr (AA)--A team from the National Chamber of Trade and Industry led by chamber president Mehmet Yazar, currently visiting Hungary, has reached agreement in principle with Hungarian officials on prospective Turkish exports to that country, chamber of trade headquarters in Ankara announced.

The Turkish Ambassador to Budapest was also present in the negotiations on future Turkish exports of citrus, tobacco, clothing and certain manufactured goods. Turkey will be importing railway engines and fertilizer from Hungary.

TRANSPORTATION MINISTER RETURNS FROM BULGARIA

TA111710 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Transportation Minister Necmi Ozgur has said that positive talks were held between Bulgarian and Turkish officials in Sofia in connection with the issue of ground, air and maritime transportation. Ozgur returned to Turkey after completing his official visit to Bulgaria.

OFFICIALS COMMENT ON FOREIGN INVESTMENTS

TA101548 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1420 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 10 Apr (AA)--Under Secretary of the State Planning Organization Yildirim Akturk said applications for foreign investment in Turkey would be rated on their export orientation, and there would be no restrictions as to the field of investment.

Commenting on Turkey's adoption this week of the OECD guidelines for multinational enterprises and the declaration on international investments, Akturk said facilities for foreign investment would extend to the fields of petroleum and mining. The current decree on foreign capital would be transformed into a full-(?fledged) law.

Akturk expected foreign investements to help close Turkey's balance of payments deficit. The share of foreign capital in the balance of payments was $150 million, he noted. The government hoped to liquidate the major part of Turkey's unguaranteed commercial debts by allowing creditors to become shareholders in Turkey, he explained.

The general manager of the Tourism Bank said priority would be given in their distribution of credits to Turkish partners of foreign firms investing in tourist accomodations.

The state would undertake to build the infrastructure for tourism, while foreign capital, foreign and domestic enterprises jointly, or the Turkish private sector by itself, would be allowed to build the superstructure, the bank's manager said. The construction firms could also operate the accomodations they built, he added, while the foreign investor could serve as the promoter abroad of the facilities it operates in Turkey.

IMPORT-EXPORT FIGURES ANNOUNCED FOR 1980

TA101607 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 10 Apr (AA)--Turkey's exports in 1980 have reached $2,910,122,000 while her imports totalled $7,667,324,000 during the same period. Thus Turkey's 1980 foreign trade deficit was $4,718,968,999 the officials announced. Agricultural products of $671,742,000 and industrial commodities of $1,047,366,000 were exported in 1980.

VOTCP REPORTS ON ICFTU OFFICIAL NEWS CONFERENCE

TA110828 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Text] International Confederation of Free Trade Unions [ICFTU] Secretary General Otto Kersten has criticized the fact that labor unions have been banned and that union rights and freedoms have been curtailed in Turkey. Kersten, who has been holding contacts in Ankara since the beginning of the week, held a news conference on Thursday and made a statement on the ICFTU delegation's impressions. Kersten said that during his stay in Ankara he met with Prime Minister Ulusu, Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is] leader Denizcier, administrators from the Turk-Is affiliated Turkish Mine Workers Federation, Turkish State Highway Workers Federation [Yol-Is] and Turkish Petroleum, Chemical, Nitrogen and Atomic Workers Union [Petrol-Is], the leader of Hotel, Restaurant and Amusement Places Employees Union of Turkey [OLEY-IS] which is affiliated with the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK] and, Halit Celenk, one of the lawyers of the Turkish Teachers' Unity and Solidarity Association [TOB-DER] which has been closed. Kersten added that he also met with the former RPP leader.

Kersten said: One of the main reasons for our visit to Ankara was to be informed about the situation of DISK--whose activities were banned immediately after 12 September--and its affiliated unions. We especially wanted to meet with the DISK leader and other unionists who are under arrest. We openly expressed this wish to Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu. However, our request was rejected due to various legal situations. Our delegation will now leave for Istanbul. We will reiterate our wish to see Basturk [head of DISK] there as well. We will pursue till the end possibilities to at least meet with the relatives or lawyers of the unionists under arrest. We, as the representatives of an international trade union organization, of course, cannot remain spectators to the closing of union organizations in Turkey and the keeping of its administrators in prisons for nothing.

At the news conference, Kersten also said that many international unions applied to the International Labor Organization [ILO] in connection with lifting the ban on DISK. He added that ICFTU has not yet made such a move but that the issue will be taken up at the confederation's general council meeting to be held in June and that a decision will be reached. Kersten said: During our contacts in Ankara, we told government and [presumably National Security] Council officials that the ban on DISK activities is against the ILO agreement No 87.

Referring to Turk-Is, Kersten in short said: Turk-Is, which is our member, has been reduced to a position in which it is even incapable of conducting collective wage contracts. If the saying is appropriate Turk-Is today has been reduced to a "paper lion." It has become an organization with a name but no substance. However, the thing that amazed us most was that when we pointed this out to various Turk-Is administrators they replied: We are content with the state of affairs. We are able to continue our activities freely. We could not understand the meaning of such statements by certain administrators of a labor federation that was even incapable of negotiating collective wage contracts.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 071 14 April 1981

CONTENTS

AUSTRIA

Tikhonov Departs; Oil Drilling Pipes Ordered [DIE PRESSE 11-12 Apr] E 1
Gas Project [WIENER ZEITUNG 9 Apr] E 1
Magazine Publishes Map of USSR Missile Pads [KURIER 13 Apr] E 1
Organization Head Suspected of KGB Function [DIE PRESSE 14 Apr] E 2

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Willy Brandt Heads SPD Delegation to Belgrade J 1
SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG Comments on Haig Talks [13 Apr] J 1
Brazilian Minister Secures Loans, Investments [O GLOBO 10 Apr] J 2
Volunteers Deliver Food to Polish Charity J 2
Papers Discuss Honecker, 10th SED Congress J 2

FRANCE

Presidential Candidates Give Election Speeches K 1
Giscard d'Estaing K 1
Francois Mitterrand K 2
Georges Marchais Discusses Campaign Issues, Poland [L'HUMANITE 7 Apr] K 3
PCF's Gremetz Comments on Lebanon, French Role [L'HUMANITE 9 Apr] K 5
Government Reportedly Supplying Tanks to Chile [LE MONDE 3 Apr] K 5

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Premier Forlani Meets With Libya's Jallud L 1
Libyan Petroleum Secretary Holds Interview in Rome L 1
PCI's Bufalini Comments on Differences With CPSU [L'UNITA 9 Apr] L 2
PCI's Anxieties 'Not Lessened' by CPCZ Congress [L'UNITA 11 Apr] L 3
Delegation Develops Aid Program for Egypt L 3

PORTUGAL

Balsemao Outlines Tour of France, UAE, Oman M 1
Briefs: Record Loan M 1

SPAIN

Gonzalez, Carrillo Discuss PCE-PSOE Consultation [LA VANGUARDIA 9 Apr] N 1
Politicians Express Views on NATO Membership [ABC 5 Apr] N 1

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

Folketing's Social Democrats Reject Neutron Bomb [AKTUELT 9 Apr] P 1

FINLAND

Denmark's Prime, Energy Ministers Arrive for Talks P 1
Prime Ministers Meet P 1

NORWAY

Utsi: Nuclear-Free Zones Step Toward Disarmament [AFTENPOSTEN 9 Apr] P 2

UNITED KINGDOM

NOW! Reports on KGB North Sea Spy Ring [10-15 Apr] Q 1

TURKEY

Kenan Evren, Ulusu Meet Council of Europe Official T 1
Government Counters Resolution by European Parliament T 1
Newspapers Decry EEC Imposition of Sanctions T 2
HURRIYET Editorial [11 Apr] T 2
GUNAYDIN Article [12 Apr] T 3
Romanian Foreign Minister Begins Official Visit T 3
Border Talks Begin With Bulgarian Delegation T 4
TCP Leader Congratulates Bulgaria's Zhikov [VOTCP] T 4
Military Court Begins Mass Trial of Secessionists T 4
Labor Group Returns to Minimum Wage Committee T 5
Minimum Wage Set T 5
Turk-Is Statement T 5
GUNAYDIN Reports on Oil, Gas Projects With Iraq [12 Apr] T 6
Briefs: Businessmen Return From Hungary; Heroin Seized in Izmir T 6

TIKHONOV DEPARTS; OIL DRILLING PIPES ORDERED

AU130917 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 11-12 Apr 81 p 2

[Philipp E. Gudenus report: "Soviet Premier's Visit Promoted Economic Contacts"]

[Excerpts] Vienna--After a 5-day official visit to Austria, Soviet Premier Nikolay Tikhonov returned to the USSR on Friday. During his visit, the largest Soviet order so far, worth 14 billion schillings, was placed with the Voest-Alpine Corporation. It concerns the delivery of Austrian pipes for oil drilling, which will be paid for by the USSR in cash--in contrast to the latest Eastern order of a comparable magnitude concerning the building of an LD [Linz-Donawitz--steel producing process] steelplant in Eisenhuettenstadt in the GDR. The 12 billion schillings involved here will be paid by goods delivered from the GDR.

Reportedly good progress also was made in the negotiations on the building by Austria of three compact steelplants in the USSR. The same goes for Austria's participation in the huge project of a gas pipeline from the USSR to West Europe. Here, however, the final closing of the deal primarily will depend on the Soviet side's coming to terms with the "big" partners, FRG, France and Italy. However, Moscow is expecting France's opposition to the gas project to decline after the French presidential elections. Austria cannot count on any Soviet coal, or higher oil deliveries, but it is one of the few Western countries that sill receives oil deliveries from the Soviets.

Gas Project

AU121604 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 9 Apr 81 p 7

[Summary] "The Soviet Union is interested in Austrian participation in the large project providing for the delivery of natural gas from western Siberia to West Europe in exchange for pipeline equipment." This was stated by Nikolay Komarov, USSR deputy foreign trade minister, in a talk with Austrian Trade Minister Staribacher in Vienna on Tuesday afternoon. Komarov has come to Austria with Soviet Premier Tikhonov. The two ministers agreed to establish a joint Austrian-Soviet commission to clarify the details of this project. On Austria' side, the commission will include, among others, representatives of the Austrian oil administration, the Voest-Alpine Corporation and the Knotrollbank. The Soviet delegation will be headed by USSR gas minister [title as published] Osipov. The commission is to begin its work in the near future.

MAGAZINE PUBLISHES MAP OF USSR MISSILE PADS

AU130922 Vienna KURIER in German 13 Apr 81 p 3

[Text] A virtually sensational map on missile launching pads and missile launching areas [raketenfelder] in the Soviet Union, which was published in the latest issue of OESTERREICHISCHE MILITAERISCHE ZEITUNG (OEMZ), has caused some stir in the past few days both in the East and West. Never before have the Soviet missile positions been shown with such accuracy. "Yet the information on which the map is based is publicly available to anyone," OEMZ chief editor Colonel Freistetter declared. All that is necessary is to make the effort to exactly evaluate existing sources. But this is something that is possible even in a small country like Austria....

[KURIER carries a 9 by 5 reproduction of the map showing the entire USSR, with missile pads or areas marked with "M" for medium-range missiles, "ABM" for antiballistic missiles, of specific missiles types SS-4, 9, 11, 13, 17, 18, 19 or 20. Two places are marked "test center" in English; place and geographical names on the map are all in German].

ORGANIZATION HEAD SUSPECTED OF KGB FUNCTION

AU140826 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 14 Apr 81 p 1

[Special DIE PRESSE report]

[Text] Vienna--In connection with recent increasingly frequent reports about Soviet espionage activity in the West, there have been indications that one center of these activities is controlled via Vienna, and that Dzermen M. Gvishiani, president of the International Institute for Applied System Analysis [IIASA] is involved. On the other hand, it is believed that reports of the British news magazine NOW! are exaggerated, in which it was asserted that a Norwegian double agent--an oil engineer with the cover names "Arne" and "Jan Jansen"--met his Soviet partners in Vienna and that his most important contact was a Soviet staff member of the Laxemburg IIASA.

Gvishiani is president of this institution, which was founded under U.S. and Soviet patronage, as well as deputy chairman of the State Committee for Science and Technology under the USSR Council of Ministers. In Austrian state security police circles, it is regarded as highly unlikely that such a qualified person as Gvishiani could be directly involved in spying on the activities of Western oil companies, but it is pointed out that this man's career and background do indicate that he plays a special part in the Soviet hierarchy.

Security authorities in the West and also in Austria have observed for quite some time the extraordinarily large Soviet delegations to international institutions, and in this context, there have been indications that the IIASA chairman could be the "legal resident" [preceding term in English], that is, the KGB chief for all of Europe. Gvishiani, born in 1928 in the Georgian SSR, is the son of an NKVD colonel general who fell victim to de-Stalinization. He graduated from the Moscow diplomatic academy, has been a CPSU member since 1951, served in the Soviet Navy as an officer 1951-55 and subsequently was called into the State Committee. His marriage to Kosygin's daughter Lyudmila was helpful to his career. But his later divorce did not impair Gvishiani in any of his numerous domestic and international functions, nor did it affect his extensive travel activities.

Gvishiani is a member of the academy and a leading expert on Western science and economy. He has an excellent command of several languages, is always very well-dressed in the latest Western fashion and is regarded as virtually "un-Russian" in view of his smart and easygoing manner. Reportedly, it has been observed that he is in the habit of giving orders when speaking with KGB agents stationed in Vienna.

Western counterintelligence services claim that Gvishiani holds the rank of a general in the Soviet secret service. In Vienna, a very reserved attitude is taken regarding this matter, and it is pointed out that the Laxembourg institute has developed positively, although the IIASA is a byproduct of the era of detente and might also be affected now by the drastic deterioration of the world political climate. As for the rest, it is argued that it is no secret that the big powers have built up worldwide espionage networks and that Gvishiani may well play a part in that.

WILLY BRANDT HEADS SPD DELEGATION TO BELGRADE

LD140900 Hamburg DPA in German 0836 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 14 Apr (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt today flew to Belgrade for 2 days of political talks. According to the SPD, he will meet with Premier Veselin Djuranovic and Lazar Mojsov, president of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia, and others. Brandt is accompanied on the trip by SPD Bundestag Deputies Egon Bahr and Wolfgang Roth.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG COMMENTS ON HAIG TALKS

DW131025 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 13 Apr 81 p 4

[Klaus Dreher article: "German-U.S. Understanding"]

[Text] Bonn, 13 Apr--The federal capital within a few days saw the strange spectacle of a U.S. secretary having to correct misunderstandings produced by another member of the Reagan government. Secretary of State Alexander Haig quite obviously dissociated himself from the thesis articulated by Caspar Weinberger, his colleague of the Defense Department, that the situation in Poland would have to improve before Soviet-U.S. arms control negotiations could be resumed. To avoid the contradiction coming to light too clearly, Haig simply said he viewed the situation in Poland with somewhat more relief than several days ago.

Whether Haig arrived at a different assessment as a result of his own insight or whether he was convinced by the arguments produced by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher during his blitz visit to Bonn is unclear. At any rate, he was hardly able to refute Bonn's stance, which also was confirmed at the foreign policy closed session in Gymnich Castle, that all contacts between East and West can contribute toward a mitigation of tensions. This means that if the Americans are interested in doing their share to prevent the Soviets from intervening militarily in Poland, they will have to sit down at the negotiating table with them as soon as possible.

This also was why the chancellor and the foreign minister accepted the offer by Soviet party and government chief Leonid Brezhnev to come to Bonn. They only negotiated a later date with him. The political signal of this offer from Moscow, which meanwhile also has been announced officially, is relatively clear. If Brezhnev intended to march into Poland, he would hardly have announced his visit to the West (although unforeseeable events cannot be ruled out). Or, in other words, if the West can influence decisions by the Kremlin at all, it can do so by offering cooperation rather than by uttering threats.

According to Bonn's assessment of the situation, Brezhnev wants to resume a strategy of negotiations which contains the simultaneous continuation of disarmament measures. The Soviets have not fared badly with it. In the United States, however, there seems to have been the misunderstanding sometimes that detente policy means a replacement of security policy. For the Americans to correct this neglect now, the Europeans do not have to follow them in all points with the same rigorism. Haig did not reiterate Weinberger's demand that the Europeans would have to intensify their defense efforts at the disadvantage of their social budgets. Such a linkage would be unacceptable.

Finally, the chancellor and the two foreign ministers seem to have agreed on the framework of arms control negotiations. The Nuclear Planning Group meeting differed over this issue. Haig, Schmidt and Genscher have returned to the original NATO concept that negotiations will first be held only on medium-range nuclear weapons.

In a later phase, the results of the first phase are to be introduced into negotiations on a global balance. The Americans will not hold it against the Europeans if they make sure that they again are not excluded from the talks of the superpowers as they were in the SALT negotiations.

BRAZILIAN MINISTER SECURES LOANS, INVESTMENTS

PY110058 Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 10 Apr 81 p 16

[By correspondent Graca Magalhaes]

[Excerpt] Frankfurt--Planning Minister Delfim Neto said yesterday the FRG businessmen should invest nearly $3 billion in Brazil over the coming years. In Cologne, Neto spoke with 10 FRG businessmen yesterday and 2 of them already have offered to invest in coal gasification projects.

In the afternoon, Neto signed 3 contracts in Frankfurt with the Dresdner Bank. With the Dresdner Bank, which is the largest FRG private bank, Minister Neto signed 2 loan agreements for the Sao Paulo Electric Company [CESP], one in the amount of $75 million for the purchase of equipment and another amounting to $150 million for working capital. Another agreement was signed with the same bank for NUCLEBRAS in the amount of $150 million.

Minister Delfim Neto, Central Bank President Carlos Langoni, Vale do Rio Doce Company President Eliezer Batista and NUCLEBRAS President Paulo Nogueira Batista ended their visit to the FRG today after obtaining the trip's most important loan of $300 million for the Vale do Rio Doce Company. Neto told Brazilian correspondents that in 2 weeks he will contract another $70 million loan for NUCLEBRAS. The minister considers this a success since it will be the first transaction closed with the Kreditanstalf Fuer Wiederaufbau Bank.

VOLUNTEERS DELIVER FOOD TO POLISH CHARITY

LD101948 Hamburg DPA in German 1628 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Essen, 10 Apr (DPA)--"Our impression is that the supply situation in Poland is much worse than expected," members of the first convoy team bringing foodstuffs by truck from the Federal Republic to Poland on behalf of the charity campaign "Aid for Polish Families" have said. The nine trucks, which left Essen on Tuesday, returned last night.

The 18-man team which went on the trip using some of their annual leave delivered 32 tons of powdered milk, sugar, canned meat, oil, rice and semolina worth DM150,000 to the Poznan seminary. The food is to be distributed by the priests this weekend to the especially needy in the Poznan-Gniezno diocese. The team said that the drive through the GDR had been without incident. GDR authorities dealt with the convey when crossing the frontier "speedily, in a friendly manner and even preferentially."

PAPERS DISCUSS HONECKER, 10TH SED CONGRESS

DW131107 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 13 Apr 81

[From the press review]

[Text] STUTTGARTER NACHRICHTEN writes: Nobody expected sensations and there were none. If one subtracts from Erich Honecker's speech all the usual ideological attacks against the imperialists in the West as routine statements of an SED party congress spokesman, one will achieve the usual picture consisting of a mixture of a desire for political delimitation and economic profit of the GDR's German policy.

Halfway between Honecker's fiction of reunification under socialist conditions and the existence of two German nations, an idea supported by some people in this country, lies the identity of East Berlin's and Bonn's interests, namely, to continue German-German business as smoothly as possible. Honecker's word that one cannot uncouple oneself from world politics can be considered a realistic assessment of the situation.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAJ points out: Signs for detente in Europe and in the world are not good. And yet, no alternative exists with regard to detente. Erich Honecker and Helmut Schmidt indicated simultaneously that they are prepared to take their part in detente policy as soon as the international situation will permit. In the near future, however, it is unlikely that even small things will be achieved.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG notes: The Soviets had a say in the progress report of SED General Secretary Honecker given to the 10th party congress. The Kremlin obviously signalled to the comrades in East Berlin that political loyalty and loyalty to the alliance must be demonstrated most of all now. Priority must be given to this rather than to the further development of German-German relations. Honecker took a clear position of distance with regard to Bonn. He revised the expectation recently uttered by him in Leipzig that international tensions should not have an effect on inter-German relations. It was striking, however, that Honecker chose moderate formulations whenever he thought that strong criticism of Bonn's policy was called for. Despite all delimitation efforts, it seems that Honecker does not want to derive himself of all possibilities to resume talks with Bonn in due time.

NORDWEST-ZEITUNG of Oldenburg states: With the great announcement of the GDR to basically continue to develop its relations with the FRG, Honecker has offered an old hat to Bonn in a new bandbox. If viewed more closely, he has said nothing new. The speech of the SED general secretary does not indicate the intention of the GDR, which is facing economic difficulties, to deviate at least in some places form the path of strict delimitation policy.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes: Honecker's attitude must be viewed as a whole in the background of his concerned statements regarding the economic future. He had spoken with remarkable frankness in this respect. It was clear to every listener how much more difficult this situation would become if the economic connection with the West would be disrupted.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES GIVE ELECTION SPEECHES

Giscard d'Estaing

LD132330 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Presidential election campaign speech by President Valery Giscard d'Estaing; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] French women, French men, my friends, you are preparing to elect your president of the republic. My role in this campaign is to enlighten your choice, stating first and foremost that you will be making this choice in absolute freedom. And you know that this is a rare situation in the world. During my mandate, I have kept France a country of freedom, in spite of the tensions and the violence that existed elsewhere, and if you renew your confidence in me, I will keep France a country of freedom.

In this campaign, there are 10 candidates. In the last weeks you have already heard--and you will no doubt hear also in the coming weeks--the fact that nine candidates criticize the action that has been pursued by the president of the republic whom you elected. It is an excessive criticism, a systematic criticism, and, as you are well aware, an unjust criticism. It is entirely natural in a democracy to discuss and even to criticize certain actions which were undertaken. But when the criticism becomes excessive, it has a consequence, and this consequence is that in this campaign, I am the only one to defend you. I defend France.

You have heard the presentation which has often been made of France's foreign policy or international situation, a presentation that was a caricature. Because I may tell you that France is at present a respected and influential country in the world. You also have seen that these criticisms affect you yourselves, since they denied that you strove to work during these last 7 years. And I recall that in these years France undertook the greatest nuclear energy program in the world to ensure its independence in energy. I recall today, when we have witnessed the launching of the U.S. Space Shuttle, that France, apart from the United States and the USSR was the only country to have launched a rocket into space during these last 7 years. I remind you who work and who know well the results of your efforts that French workers in industry and agriculture each export as much as two Japanese. And I recall, finally, that our country, in spite of the crisis, has led a solidarity effort which is without parallel among the Western countries, in favor of old people, in favor of the disabled, single women, large families, and in favor of the necessary revalorization of the conditions of manual workers, who ensure the wealth of our country.

All this you have done and I testify to it. Since those who dispute your efforts cannot bring you hope, I will bring you hope. I will be the only one in this campaign to bring you not illusion, but hope. I will defend you also against false promises, against illusions, against demagogy, of which you well know--since our whole history bears witness to it--that it would ruin France by leading it into deficit. This hope which I want to bring you in the campaign is what I call hope a la francaise--a hope that comes from the alliance of the heart and of the reason. France is a country of reason, but it is also a generous country. And I ask you what can the heart do without reason? And what is reason worth without the heart? We shall unite the two.

Finally, I will keep France in peace. When I came to the Elysee 7 years ago, I, who had known the occupation and war, my first concern was to keep France in peace. And I shall keep France in peace, by our national effort of defense and by the continuation of dialogue. At the end of this campaign, it is you who will decide France's fate as well as me, whatever your circumstances, your situation, your activity. And that is the honor and the greatness of the republic. I know that I can trust you to choose well the interest of France. Good night.

Francois Mitterrand

LD132346 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Presidential election campaign speech by Socialist Party candidate Francois Mitterand, date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] For several weeks, since the start of the presidential campaign, I have scoured our country, and I have even met some of you. I have seen your anxiety and shared your hopes. I have seen your anxiety. With all the strength at our disposal, we must now bring France out of the moral and material state into which it has been put by the people and the policies that have governed us for 7 years.

Disorder is everywhere. It is in unemployment--nearly 2 million are unemployed. It is in the high cost of living--you know that better than anybody. It is in a society which rejects youth. Disorder is in the difficulties encountered by old people, in the inequalities which afflict women in work and in daily life.

It is in the difficulties which some have in borrowing, others in finding accomodations or paying their rent. Disorder is in the disappearance of 100,000 family holdings, in the acceleration of bankruptcies and judicial liquidations. It is in the way that workers, laborers, employers and cadres are kept away from management and information in their own enterprises.

Briefly, disorder is in injustice: Privilege and insolent luxury on the one hand and the great mass of people, most families, who have trouble making ends meet on the other.

We are told it is the crisis. Of course, it is the crisis. And it is true that the Western world has some difficulty in adapting to the progress of science and technology, in seeing that man is not completely crushed or eliminated by the machines.

And yet, we are not wrong. We will not get out of the crisis by the methods used now. We will not get out of the crisis by always demanding sacrifices from the same people. Only a national impetus, the will to awaken energies and to give a chance to everybody, only a tremendous surge of national solidarity will enable us find the way.

[Words indistinct] Everything in life is movement. Seven years--it has already been too much. And who among you does not know that 14 years would be too much? I have shared your hopes, and, yes, I am amazed at seeing this will for work, this capacity for good work, in the working man and even more often [words indistinct] in the peasant, who knows the weight of the seasons and of the realities: the artisan, who loves objects, the entrepreneur who creates, the teacher who awakens our children's intelligence.

I marvel to see in the universities adults and old people seeking to learn, provided that they are given the means. I marvel at seeing young people demanding, searching for harmony in things, more intransigent than others in the defense of human rights. Yes, I repeat again, I believe in the possibilities of our country, in its talent, in its intelligence, and I say to myself: Why so many setbacks, why so many failures? No doubt it is because there has to be a change of direction.

That is why, as a candidate of the Socialists, as a candidate of the left, the only one in a position to win, I need your help. Faithful to my undertakings, as I have practiced them for 15 years and since I have had the good fortune and the strength to represent the popular will, I repeat to you all--I rule out no one--and I ask you only to serve together with me in the great work of the country.

GEORGES MARCHAIS DISCUSSES CAMPAIGN ISSUES, POLAND

LD091515 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 7 Apr 81 pp 5-6

[Report on PCF Secretary General Marchais 6 April press conference in Paris]

[Excerpts] Following the reading of the preliminary statement, a large number of questions were put to the Communist candidate.

The Communist candidate told one journalist, who thought he preceived a change of tone with regard to the Socialists recently, that he has not altered his approach to the problems. Ever since 1977, when the PS abandoned the union and the joint program, the Communists have never ceased stating that they consider the union an irreversible option.

"No party can resolve the country's problems alone. There must be a coalition and the conditions must be established to create a broad, majority popular movement in the country which will be represented in the union of the left and also a government including Communists and Socialist ministers. This has been the consistent policy of the Communists and their candidate.

"It is precisely because we are not abandoning the union," Georges Marchais continued, "that I clarify matters whenever necessary. I present the facts and draw the necessary conclusions from them so as to urge the workers and the French people to help us surmount the obstacles. The way to do this, obviously, is to vote Communist in the first round."

One journalist asked: What do you think of the item published by NOVOSTI which states that there are divergences between the PCF's short-term interests and the socialist countries' foreign policy?

"I am satisfied," Georges Marchais replied, "to see that the Kremlin has come around to the opinion which I and my friend Jean Kanapa expressed some years ago.

"It is both a theoretical and a political issue. We said a long time ago that the policy of peaceful coexistence with all that it implies, namely, the establishment of a new kind of cooperation on the political, economic, scientific and cultural planes--would not fail to highlight contradiction between the policy pursued by ruling communist parties and the policy of parties struggling to gain power in the capitalist countries.

"It is well known that on certain issues we have differences of assessment with the socialist countries. Most often, these differences concern foreign policy and the assessment that must be made by the policy pursued by various governments. However, this does not and will not cause us to abandon the policy of peaceful coexistence. Quite the contrary, we believe that this policy is now the only possible choice, because there is either war, involving mass destruction weapons and a consequent disaster for mankind, or a policy of peaceful coexistence.

"Obviously, when such a policy is implemented, state interests are the priority--even for the socialist countries. But we believe that the priority is the interests of the French workers and people, France's interests. We will never sacrifice them to any kind of consideration in implementing the policy of peaceful coexistence.

"Of course, this does not mean that I share the opinion of Chirac who said the other day: This policy must be implemented without any compromise. That is diktat. When there is a refusal to reach any compromise, there can be no peaceful coexistence. The solution of international problems and cooperation between socialist and capitalist countries must always take mutual interests into account. There must always be a quest for a compromise that will not jeopardize any of the partners. This is what we believe.

"I would add that if any socialist country whatever suggested making the aim of peaceful coexistence a social status quo, that is, keeping the right in power in France or giving our endorsement to left-right coalitions pursuing a similar policy, it would mean an immediate break with us."

A West German journalist asked the Communist candidate whether he would disapprove of an intervention by Soviet troops in Poland.

"For 8 months," Georges Marchais replied, "people have been announcing every night that Poland would be occupied the following morning, that there would be an intervention by the USSR and the Warsaw Pact countries.

"Since this is not happening, after a while people are saying that they were mistaken, especially when we inform them of what the sides involved are saying.

"The Polish leaders say that it is up to them to resolve the problems facing their country. And I recently read a speech by Lech Walesa, saying that he does believe at all in an intervention by the USSR in Poland's affairs.

"None of this in the least prevents the big media from spreading false information. Therefore, people who have gone away for the weekend after hearing the news have gone away with the idea that the general secretaries of all the socialist countries were meeting in Prague and that there would be a summit conference. Only late last night was it disclosed that only Leonid Brezhnev was in Prague!

"Well, as they hear more and more nonsense, people no longer allow themselves to be deceived. This does not mean that the French people are indifferent toward what is happening in Poland. The overwhelming majority of them hope that the Polish people will surmount their present difficulties.

"Then they begin to realize that these campaigns of misinformation are not disinterested. As the elections draw nearer, some people believe that it is perhaps one way of trying to weaken the Communist candidate's positions.... All this prompts me to state that those people are false friends of Poland. They are people who pray every night and every morning that there will be the foreign intervention in Poland's affairs for which they fervently wish.

"As far as I am concerned, I believe, as my party does, that there will be no intervention. It is inconceivable.

"It is up to the Poles themselves to resolve their own problems. But it is necessary to accelerate the course of the proces begun in pursuing a new economic and social policy and in the democratization of the country's life. This is a subject familiar to us.

"This is why I truly welcomed the agreement reached last week. When there is good will on both sides, which is the case with the Polish party and Lech Walesa, agreement is reached. I hope that they will continue along this path and that satisfaction will not be given to Poland's false friends, who hope for this intervention in Poland for political reasons."

When the same journalist asked Georges Marchais whether he would protest in the event of such an intervention nevertheless taking place in Poland, the Communist candidate replied: "When I tell you that it is inconceivable, you have my answer."

Pointing out that Georges Marchais once declared himself "willing to ally with the devil," one journalist received the following reply: "The issue to be faced in the first round is not an alliance. I am in favor of the union. I have made a clear proposal. French men and women know that if I am elected there will be a Socialist-Communist government. They also know that in the event of my not being elected, but of another leftwinger being elected, the PCF is willing to shoulder its government responsibilities. So for my part, everything is clear.

"Where things are less clear is with our potential allies, the PS. The Socialist candidate refuses Communist ministers. He is always saying so."

Next, Georges Marchais digressed: "It is up to French men and women to decide. The other candidates have a somewhat insulting attitude toward the voters. Obviously, they are all trying to secure the maximum number of votes in the first round. But to act as if one were already elected, as if the French people had already decided, to act as if there were no first round--I call that insulting....

"They are trying to deceive us with an American-style election. On the one hand, we hear laments for the fate of the minor candidates who have been unable to gather the 500 signatures--but at the time we Communists were the only ones to oppose this measure, claiming that pluralism would not be observed with this method. In the same breath, the same people try to eliminate all the other candidates and talk just about the duettists.

"As far as I am concerned, I say to the French people: This is my analysis of the causes of the crisis. These are my proposals. It is up to you to decide both through your votes and through your actions. If you want the union and change, it is essential that the candidate fighting for the union and change, the Communist candidate, secure the maximum number of votes in the first round. It is only on this basis that it will be possible to surmount the obstacles placed in the path of the union and change by Mr Mitterrand.

"I would point out that the Socialist candidate's supporters act quite differently. Jean Daniel, for instance, aims not to defeat Giscard but to weaken the PCF. His editorial throws much light on F. Mitterrand's policy."

Georges Marchais replied to one journalist, who mentioned the formation of an "interim government" after the second round, that "the government that I will form if I am elected will be the legal government envisaged by the constitution." The Communist candidate pointed out that in this connection he rejects the term "interim."

The last question concerned Lebanon. Georges Marchais explained that we are witnessing an offensive against the Lebanese and Palestinian national forces to hinder the solution of the real problems in that part of the world. He pointed out that he is acquainted with the area presently under bombardment: "The number of deaths caused by the Falangist bombardments," he said, "is considerable. The Israeli Government is trying to use this situation as an excuse for intervening in Lebanon's affairs. France could play a useful role in enabling Lebanon to surmount its difficulties and restore its tranquillity."

PCF'S GREMETZ COMMENTS ON LEBANON, FRENCH ROLE

LD131017 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 9 Apr 81 p 10

[Text] PCF Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz reaffirmed French Communists' solidarity with the Lebanese people and "all those who are working for aunited and democratic Lebanon" yesterday evening [8 April] and stated in particular: "The French Government's responsibility is clearly implied....

To justify the absence of an independent French initiative, Giscard d'Estaing is hiding behind the need to promote a European initiative. That is not in keeping with the role France ought to play. Moreover, it is not by sending a new intervention force to Lebanon that the country will be safeguarded, since the important thing is to ensure respect for its independence....

"France must help end the fighting and ensure respect for Lebanon's territorial integrity. The only way of doing so is, as the Lebanese Communist Party and the National Movement propose, 'a specifically Lebanese, political and national solution.' France can help to revive this harmony and can take action to ensure the withdrawal of the Israeli troops occupying southern Lebanon, in keeping with the UN resolution."

GOVERNMENT REPORTEDLY SUPPLYING TANKS TO CHILE

LD130939 Paris LE MONDE in French 3 Apr 81 p 38

[Text] At the end of last week, France began to supply about 50 AMX-30 combat tanks to Chile, according to information received on 1 April from the port of Bordeaux where this equipment was loaded on a Liberian ship. The General Commission for Armaments in Paris is making no comment.

Up till now, the Chilean ground forces had already purchased from France 155mm artillery guns, Milan antitank missiles, Puma helicopters, 68mm antitank rockets and 90mm turret guns mounted on Brazilian armored vehicles. The AMX-30 tanks will complement the equipment of the armored divisions, which have had the French AMX-13 tank for a long time.

Last year, Chile ordered 16 Mirage 50 air defense fighters. This supersonic fighter is based on the classic Mirage III, but is powered by the more powerful Atar 9K-50 jet produced by SNECMA for the Mirage F1 fighter.

Moreover, the Chilean Air Force has ordered Crotale anti-aircraft missiles to defend its bases against low-altitude enemy flights. Finally, the Chilean Navy has installed Exocet surface-to-surface missiles on frigates and escort vessels.

Most of these deals, with the exception of the rockets and the already outdated AS-11 and AS-12 air-to-ground missiles, were concluded after the tragic disappearance of President Allende in September 1973 and with the government of General Pinochet.

PREMIER FORLANI MEETS WITH LIBYA'S JALLUD

AU131540 Rome ANSA in English 1520 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 13 Apr (ANSA)--Italian Premier Arnaldo Forlani discussed bilateral relations and international affairs here today with Major 'Abd as-Salam Jallud, the second in rank in the Libyan regime.

They focussed their foreign affairs talks on the Mediterranean region.

A communique issued at the end of the meeting voiced the two sides' mutual desire to develop and improve relations, especially in the field of technological and economic cooperation. Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo sat in on the talks.

LIBYAN PETROLEUM SECRETARY HOLDS INTERVIEW IN ROME

AU131548 Rome ANSA in English 1518 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 13 Apr (ANSA)--The people of Europe were urged today to "wake up and stop falling for propaganda blaming the Organization of Petroleum Exporting countries (OPEC) for inflation."

Libyan Petroleum Secretary 'Abd al-Salem az-Zaq'ar comment in response to an interview question about the possibilities of European countries helping poor Arab states make more development progress.

"To start with", Az-Zaq'ar said in the interview published by Milan's IL GIORNO daily today, "Europeans should wake up and see how obnoxious the propaganda against OPEC countries is".

"OPEC is accused of causing inflation because it raises oil prices", Az-Zaq'ar said, arguing that "oil is still the most economical of energy sources".

The Libyan Government official, who was interviewed in Rome where he accompanied Tripoli leader 'Abd as-Salam Jallud on a visit, insisted on the need for industrialized countries to share their technology with the Arab world at non-discriminatory international prices.

Industrialized nations, he said, must contribute to the development of internal natural (and energetic) resources in oil producing countries as well as to the implementation of industrial projects.

According to Az-Zaq'ar, the West should also "open themselves up more" to other Arab export products and work to develop alternative energy sources.

"(The West) must keep in mind that our countries have to be careful about preserving sufficient quantities of oil reserves for our own future needs", the Libyan energy minister said.

Focussing more specifically on Italy, Az-Zaq'ar indicated that he would predict a visit to this country by Libyan strongman Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi this summer "if the atmosphere is right".

He described Italian-Libyan economic and trade cooperation as being "exemplary" while decrying shortcomings in cultural and community relations between the West and the Arab world.

Among these, he charged, was the West's "deep misunderstanding" about the Palestinian question and its substantial unawareness about the poverty of the Arab masses.

PCI'S BUFALINI COMMENTS ON DIFFERENCES WITH CPSU

LD131435 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 9 Apr 81 p 19

[Elio Petruccioli report: "Workers Movement, Peace, Socialism; What Answers From PCI?"]

[Excerpt] Rome--A seminar on foreign policy with [PCI Directorate member] Paolo Bufalini is being held at the Communist Studies Institute. Those taking part include representatives of regional and provincial organizations, as well as comrades more directly involved in this field of research.

The report centered on the issues highlighted by the Moscow "incident," on which an animated debate has developed within the party. Bufalini referred to the questions that have been asked most frequently at the many meetings that he has attended in recent weeks in Rome and other cities and which have, he said, revealed a broad majority consensus with the stance adopted by our party on that occasion; but also the existence of vestiges of incomprehesion, disagreement and criticism vis-a-vis not so much the policy line but the "inaccuracies" that can occur in its implementation.

It is important, however, that in this debate attention also be centered on the political issue--that is, on the divergences that exist between our party and the Soviet comrades on the strategy of peace and the advance to socialism throughout the world. We have always been in favor of a clear exposition of the motives for disagreement, discussion of which can be beneficial for the movement as whole. This was the method adhered to by Togliatti, for instance, in the "Yalta memorandum," the topicality of which has been emphasized by the latest events in Poland and elsewhere. The recourse to various methods such as discrimination and protocol "snubs" reflects the survival of the "leading party" or "father party" mentality, which is incompatible with the autonomy of every party.

Next Bufalini discussed and provided information on the various subjects of argument that have occurred between the Soviet comrades and ourselves, especially at the time of our 15th congress, years after we had been seeing the USSR adopt--in contrast to what has happened at other times--stances of systematic opposition to the United States and the emergence of a tendency to substitute its own military presence for the weaknesses of Third World liberation or revolutionary movements, thus damaging the process of the quest for peace and of the principle of noninterference. He outlined the framework of the successive problems that have emerged--from Afghanistan to the Euromissiles issue and Poland--confirming the correctness of the theses approved by the congress and inspired by the quest for the broadest unity among the various forces in the struggle for peace and by what has been called "new internationalism."

What relationship can exist between these stances and the USSR's proper role in the East-West dialogue? No one answer can be given once and for all. We warmly, but not uncritically, supported the major innovations of the 20th CPSU Congress, with regard to both the relationship between socialism and democracy and the possibility of different "paths" to socialism and the approach to peace action. Subsequently we agreed with other options. In Brezhnev's report to the Moscow congress we found a constructive response to the new increased conflict imparted by Reagan, and "openings" with regard to the major world problems which we esteemed and still esteem. However, we do not conceal the fact that the international framework has deteriorated considerably. A positive contribution to remedying it demands a comprehesion--on the part of our party, too--of the new world situation and new answers incompatible with past schemes.

PCI'S ANXIETIES 'NOT LESSENED' BY CPCZ CONGRESS

LD140855 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 11 Apr 81 p 16

["S.T." dispatch]

[Text] Prague--Yesterday morning saw the conclusion in Prague of the 16th CPCZ Congress, without any change in the leadership group, as expected, for that matter. The closing session was attended not only by CPCZ First Secretary Gustav Husak but also by USSR President Leonid Brezhnev, who also attended the CPCZ Central Committee meeting, at which he delivered a brief speech, before returning to Moscow.

The Czechoslovak congress proceedings were attended by PCI Central Committee member Comrade Luca Pavolini in the capacity of observer. Comrade Pavolini made the following statement to L'UNITA:

"As on the two previous occasions," Pavolini said, "the PCI was presented at this CPCZ Congress with observer status. This is because of the well-known divergences that exist between the two parties. There will be a further opportunity to return to the persisting problems and difficulties of Czechoslovak society, some, but not all, of which are of an economic character, and which emerged despite the ritual nature of the congress. Of course, much interest was centered on the possible repercussions here of the Polish events, especially in view of the presence of CPSU First Secretary Leonid Brezhnev. What was said did not lessen our anxieties. Indeed, worrying parallels were drawn in the report and some of the speeches with the previous Hungarian and Czechoslovak 'experiences.' At the same time, however, it must be said that some authoritative speeches expressed the conviction that the Polish Communists and workers will be able to positively resolve their country's present situation--which is, in any case, the only possible way. This problem, moreover, is situated in a critical international framework. In this connection," Pavolini concluded, "the utmost attention was given to the proposals for a moratorium on missiles and for starting arms reduction negotiations which Brezhnev, as he said himself, was keen to confirm and to specify here in Prague, in the heart of Europe."

DELEGATION DEVELOPS AID PROGRAM FOR EGYPT

AU111424 Rome ANSA in English 0810 GMT 11 Apr 81

[Text] Cairo, 11 Apr (ANSA)--An important economic, technical and financial cooperation program between Italy and Egypt for the 1981-83 period was drafted at the end of a visit to the Egyptian capital by an Italian Foreign Ministry delegation. The program calls for credit to the tune of 160 million dollars and is the first program of this kind drafted by the Italian Government with a foreign nation under the framework of development aid for Third World nations.

The projects, to be carried out by Italian firms, cover a vast number of sectors, from fishing to irrigation, from rural development to food conservation industry, transportation, telephone networks, electricity, clothing industry, hospital equipment, art restoration, professional training and tourism.

The Italian Government will also grant Egypt 21.5 million dollars in supplementary aid to finance bilateral projects and projects of the European Economic Community and World Bank.

BALSEMAO OUTLINES TOUR OF FRANCE, UAE, OMAN

LD130858 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao left for Paris this afternoon on the first leg of a 7-day tour that will also take him to the United Arab Emirates and Oman. At the airport, Pinto Balsemao spoke to reporters about his tour:

[Begin recording] As you know, gentlemen, we are leaving on a 7-day tour comprising first a visit to France where I will be received by President Giscard d'Estaing tomorrow morning and subsequetly will hold talks with Premier Raymond Barre. We next will be going to the United Arab Emirates where we will be received by the head of state, Shaykh Zayid; and then to Oman where we will stay for 2 and 1/2 days and where we also will be holding talks at the highest level.

There are, therefore, two different components in this tour. One concerns our policy of drawing closer to Europe and, therefore, will be linked with Portugal's bid for Common Market membership. It will not, however, be limited to this subject because we are linked to France by very old historical and cultural ties and, therefore, there are bound to be matters to discuss in the sphere of bilateral relations.

The second component concerns our rapprochment with the Arab countries, in this specific instance, with the countries of the Arabian gulf. This is the first time that a Portuguese head of government has visited that part of the world, a part of the world to which we are also linked by very old cultural ties and relationships between peoples and nations--even if pertaining to another time and different circumstances.

I believe this rapprochement to be very important to us. With regard to the Gulf countries and the Arab countries in general, we have this trait that makes us different--it is shared by very few other European countries--the trait of comon cultural and historic links. Obviously, in the talks we hold with the leaders of the Gulf countries, economic matters will be raised, not restricted to oil, but also covering the expanson of trade exchanges and the possibility of investments in Portugal. [end recording]

Asked about France's stand on Portugal's bid for EEC membership, Pinto Balsemao pointed out that the French authorities have no reservations over its realization, and in this connection, recalled the assurances of support given by Paris to the former administration, specifically to late Prime Minister Francisco sa Carneiro.

Speaking of his recent visit to Oporto, Pinto Balsemao stated that it had not met with the degree of hostility that certain newspapers claimed. Of the demonstration against him, Balsemao described it as unlawful and organized by the PCP.

Commenting on the recent strikes by transportation workers and state employees, Pinto Balsemao described them as part and parcel of a clearly politically motivated climate of agitation being fostered in preparation for the coming 25 April and 1 May anniversaries.

BRIEFS

RECORD LOAN--A group of 10 international banks has advanced $500 million to our country. The ceremony at which the terms of the loan were signed took place at the Bank of Portugal this afternoon and was presided over by the secretaries of state for the treasury and finance. The $500-million loan is the largest ever to have been raised so far by our country. [Text] [Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 9 Apr 81 LD]

GONZALEZ, CARRILLO DISCUSS PCE-PSOE CONSULTATION

LD131223 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 9 Apr 81 p 9

[Excerpt] Madrid, 8 Apr (EFE)--Spanish Socialist Workers Party Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez and PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo have met for over an hour at the Palace of the Congress of Deputies. The meeting, which concluded at 2130 hours, was centered on the policy of consultation.

Felipe Gonzalez stated that they discussed the subject matter of the method for the consultation. For his part Santiago Carrillo added that there are no problems about the subject matter. "It is in the method that the difficulties could lie, and we have reflected on this," the Communist leader said. Carrillo stated that the prime minister telephoned him Friday, when he was in Yugoslavia, and that he will meet soon with Calvo-Sotelo.

For his part, Felipe Gonzalez asserted that, with respect to the method, no dark areas should be created. "It is not clear," he pointed out, "what can and should be done to make the consultation effective."

Next Felipe Gonzalez stated that "there are opposition political forces which are prepared to conduct a policy to defend democracy, but obviously the government is primarily responsible for this and this means that it is necessary to talk with the government. The fact that the responsibility of those who should support the government does not appear to be functioning is another matter."

Carrillo commented that nobody should be surprised that the left is more interested in and concerned about maintaining democracy, "because it is more interested in it than others."

Felipe Gonzalez said in conclusion that he believes that there are certain suspicions and apprehensions. "It is a matter of discussing thoroughly a serious and positive procedure," he stated in this connection.

Last, Carrillo emphasized the need for the consultation not to be conducted bilaterally and for it to be carried out openly, so that everybody knows what is happening. "That is why," he said, "the method in this instance has become something very important."

POLITICIANS EXPRESS VIEWS ON NATO MEMBERSHIP

LD101221 Madrid ABC in Spanish 5 Apr 81 pp 10-12

[Unattributed report on ABC "enquiry" findings: "Unanimity About Agreements With Washington and Leftwing Opposition to NATO"--after introductory paragraph, item consists of politicians' responses to three numbered questions asked by ABC]

[Excerpts] NATO--and no longer Spain's hypothetical entry into the Atlantic alliance--has become the "hot potato" of the Santa Cruz palace [Spanish Foreign Ministry] since the accession to power of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] in the first democratic election. In the wake of the initial Third-Worldist aspirations, Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo --pursuing the line laid down by Suarez during his final stage as head of government--has declared himself unequivocally in favor of Spain's entry into NATO, and, if possible, within the briefest space of time. However, the controversy has intensified even further in view of the coming renewal of the Washington-Madrid treaty. For Washington the issue of Spain's entry into the alliance is a Spanish decision. Of course, there is full support for the continuation of the cooperation which serves both countries' interests.

And, of course, if Spain joins NATO, the bilateral treaty would resemble those which it maintains with other NATO member countries. According to an enquiry conducted by ABC, there is no unanimity at all among the parties. The Popular Alliance and the UCD declare themselves in favor of entry into NATO and the renewal of the agreement. In the UCD's opinion, it would be the decisive step for our becoming full allies of Washington.

However, there are grave apprehensions about the issue within the left. The PCE [Spanish Communist Party]--which gives its support for renegotiating a strictly defensive treaty--declares itself in favor of "freezing" the controversial issue of our entry into NATO with a twofold argument: not changing the European balance and avoiding greater controversies within our border. On the other hand, the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] rejects outright Spain's possible entry into NATO. "Yes" to the bases--fully Spanish bases--and to renegotiating a treaty on an equal basis, but "no" to NATO. And the weighty argument which they use is the alleged low blow which it would entail for the strength of West Europe.

Guillermo Kirkpatrick (Popular Alliance): "Treaty Is Inadequate for Our Defense"

1. Broad outlines which the treaty should have.

Spain has been linked with Western strategy since 1953. The treaties with the United States are no longer a favorable or adequate solution for our country's defense. Not even the treaty signed shortly after the previous head of state's death can be deemed satisfactory. We remain in danger of suffering on our territory the consequences of an armed conflict, without taking part as full members in the Western defense system. Our connection with this system peculiar to the world to which we form part historically and culturally, is imperfect because we have almost all the obligations of a member state and yet virtually none of the advantages. Such an anomalous situation has been imposed on us so far because we lacked a democratic system. The bilateral relationship with the United States prevents us from taking part as befits our own importance and on an equal basis with other Western nations in the alliance's supreme decisionmaking bodies and in its strategy with respect to defense. The advantages of a multilateral relationship with NATO over the bilateral situation which we currently have are obvious. Excessive dependence on a single country would disappear and our scope for maneuver with all countries would increase. It is not logical for us to wish to extend on our territory a situation which offers us a level of guarantees inferior to the Atlantic treaty, and even greater weakness in our negotiating position in any international controversy. Suffice it to recall in this connection that NATO's role is important not only in the event of armed conflict but also in situations of international crisis.

Too little time is already left for a thorough renegotiation of the treaty of friendship and cooperation, and I greatly fear that it will be necessary to opt for a mere extension in September, as a lesser evil.

2. How the military section should stand. Situation of the bases.

With respect to the military section and the situation of the bases, it must be said that our armed forces undertook some time ago a process of modernization which is necessarily leading them toward their coming into line with NATO. This was reflected in the setting up of the Ministry of Defense. Joining the alliance would facilitate that task and would entail considerable incentives and opportunities for improving their equipment. The Spanish Navy is already using organization codes and is taking part in combined maneuvers. The air forces meets the alliance's standards in its performance, and as far as the army forces are concerned, although they have a lesser relationship with the Western countries' armies, they could probably soon be on a level with those nations.

The Spanish Armed Forces would have all of NATO's information, knowledge and technology and would attain command responsibilities within it. Close contact with the best Western armies would undoubtedly benefit ours, and modernization would be carried out at the pace allowed by our budgetary means, without it being possible in any event to speak of an impossible cost. If Greece and Turkey belong to NATO, it is unacceptable to believe that Spain could not, for financial reasons, aspire to the same goal. The bases should remain under Spanish sovereignty.

3. Bilateral treaty and/or NATO.

The NATO countries also have treaties with the United States; for instance, Portugal is now renewing its treaties concerning the Lajes bases in the Azores. There is no obstacle to Spain's also having both.

Javier Ruperez (UCD): "Atlantic Alliance and Specific Defensive and Military Agreements"

3. Bilateral treaty and/or NATO.

I would like to begin my exposition by changing the order of the questions, in the conviction that in this way the outcome is not only altered but is clarified. Since as far back as 1978 (the first UCD congress), we have maintained that it should be within the great foreign policy innovation which its entry into the Atlantic alliance will represent for Spain, that part of our relations with the United States should be included and understood.

Insofar as, following this entry, we acquire active political membership and not cosmetic membership in that international reality which we term the West--the Western world--so certain very specific bilateral relationships find their significance: this is applicable not just to the United States.

In the event of that membership--governed by a multilateral pact of alliance; let us not forget this detail--these bilateral relations are more complex. All the members agree on aims, share a political conception and hold the same values; they are allies. So the substance is not affected by differences of opinion in considering and defending their own interests. All this makes these relations freer and clearer, because factors of subordination are surmounted.

In conclusion: the Atlantic alliance, of course. It comprises part of the relations with the United States which give rise to specific defensive and military agreements.

1. Broad outlines which the treaty should have.

From this viewpoint what is now a treaty is enhanced by eliminating during its modification a host of accretions and impurities which have been created in recent times. This is extremely positive: in the first place because, automatically and without interruption, the relationship between Spain and the United States acquires the highest attainable legal status--that of allies. And this is impossible without belonging to the Atlantic alliance.

Second, because the commercial significance of renting pieces of national territory in return for a price which--let us not deceive ourselves--is not in our power to set, is eliminated.

Third, because the contents of the new agreement are confined to a quid pro quo for an additional facility of using certain military or logistic installations, without further hocus-pocus, frills or embellishments.

2. How should the military section stand? Situation of the bases.

The military section would also be radically altered--at least as it is currently understood--by Spain's entry into the Atlantic alliance as a frame of reference for Spanish-U.S. relations, basically in three ways.

These are: (A) With a reduction of the permanent force presence.

(B) With greater responsibility for the Spanish services, especially the navy, in tasks of considerable defensive importance which--for reasons of a political nature and of resources--are performed today strictly by U.S. units and services. These responsibilities, needless to say, constitute pure political capital.

(C) By means of access without the present restrictions to supplies of arms in quality and quantity and of technologically very advanced defense equipment.

These reflections, based on the idea upheld at two party congresses, are prompted on my part by the expiration of the 1976 treaty of friendship and cooperation between the United States and Spain.

Manual Azcarate (PCE): "The Bilateral Treaty and NATO Are Two Issues Which Should Remain Clearly Separate"

3. Bilateral treaty and/or NATO.

I prefer to answer the third question first, because I believe that the crux of the problem now lies here.

In the speech of investiture, Calvo-Sotelo said that the renegotiation of the bilateral agreements with the United States lay within a new framework, intimating that this was due to the government's intention to enter NATO.

If this stance on the part of the government persists, this would mean that the bilateral agreements would be a supplement to Spain's entry into NATO, and that therefore the possible maintenance of what have been termed "specific military facilities"--in fact bases under U.S. control--would only considerably aggravate the already harmful consequences of Spain's entry into NATO. The negotiations have apparently not yet begun. Secretary of State Haig's coming visit will undoubtedly be aimed at setting under way or accelerating this process. Haig is not coming to Spain with the best preparation; his scandalous statement on the night of the putschist attack on parliament have not been forgotten.

But in any event the relationship between the bilateral treaty and NATO apparently still an open issue. And in my opinion it is essential for Spain's interest--and would also help European balance and improve the international atmosphere--for those two issues to remain clearly separate. There has been talk of the need for consultation on state problems. I believe that if there are in fact state problems today, one of them is undoubtedly the need for agreement on postponing Spain's entry into NATO, which is deeply dividing Spanish society at a time when it is necessary to concentrate on pressing problems.

1 and 2: Broad outlines which the treaty should have. How should the military section stand? Situation of the bases.

I believe that the negotiations on the bilateral agreements with the United States could in no event be aimed at a mere extension of what was signed in 1976. An essential point is that now, for the first time, it is a democratic Spain with a parliament and with public opinion channels for expressing itself which is going to negotiate this treaty. Moreover, it is a Spain which has a constitution. it therefore seems logical that in the renegotiation of a bilateral agreement, first importance should be attached to seeing that the agreement complies strictly with the letter and spirit of the Spanish Constitution, that its provisions are implemented equally for all sides, and that it has a strictly defensive content and does not in any way allow the strategic use of Spanish territory for U.S. operations in other regions--for instance, the Middle East.

Another essential aspect to be taken into account, in my opinion, is the need for a treaty of this kind not to influence or limit Spanish foreign policy in any way; in the first place with respect to Europe, and also toward the Arab world, Africa, Latin America and the Third World in general. The diversity of our country's relations in all fields, including military supplies and so forth, should also be guaranteed.

Although unable to broach all the issues, I wish to emphasize the need, in my opinion, for parliament, through its Foreign Relations Committee or an ad hoc committee to begin to play a new and important role in all the problems of monitoring and implementing a possible bilateral agreement.

Fernando Moran (PSOE): "No to the Policy of Bases, Yes to the Renegotiation of the Treaty and No to Entry into NATO"

1. Broad outlines which the treaty should have.

The 1976 treaty, which this year is subject to denunciation, renewal or renegotiation, is the outcome of a process in relations between the United States and Spain which began with the 1953 agreements--relations which are therefore based on inequality in negotiating ability. Although the 1976 document is raised to the status of a treaty of cooperation and friendship, the inequality remains clear. Moreover, the interests have been different throughout the process: The United States is interested in the use of the bases and in certain facilities; General Franco's regime was interested in emerging from political isolation. He paid with the currency of Spain's strategic and tactical importance. The agreements and also the treaty are filled with consequences of a situation of domination. Some aspects have a semicolonial look, such as the compensation in the economic field--always meager--in the form of supplying military equipment, and the cultural cooperation agreement. It is clear that Spain is interested in intensive economic relations, and with the most privileged treatment possible, with the United States, and also that the cultural programs should be increased. Spanish is the second language of the United States. For instance, the Fulbright scholarships program has produced excellent results for Spanish universities and researchers. The United States is the first country in the world in research, in technology and even in humanities. Economic, scientific, technological and cultural relations must be intensified. Moreover, Spain belongs to the family of Western peoples, of which the United States is an essential part. U.S. society, toward some of whose structures and principles we Socialists maintain a legitimately critical stance, is an open society. The liberal ideas are our own. However, it is a consequence of dependence for the cultural, economic and other agreements to be complementary to a treaty whose core is the defense relationship.

In short, from a Socialist perspective--which is conceived more from the viewpoint of the national interest than from a partisan or ideological viewpoint--it is necessary to view the treaty in its real nature; a treaty of friendship and a defense relationship. It is therefore necessary to conclude treaties or agreements on specific matters; the economic field, technological and cultural cooperation, and so forth. But these instruments should not depend on the defense relationship. The agreements--in the form which they have taken since 1953 and took in 1976--also include matters of jurisdiction over U.S. personnel, exemptions from customs duty and so forth which should be regulated more in accordance with the principle of sovereign equality, always within current international law and in the atmosphere of friendship, understanding and clarity which we wish to govern our relationship with the United States.

There are also certain just demands from the areas affected by the bases which should be satisfied; essentially by the Spanish Government, but the other side must accept the fact that these obligations of our government toward municipalities and regions stem from a use which that side enjoys.

2. How the military section should stand. Situation of the bases.

The treaty does not provide a real guarantee of defense. The closest to this lies not in the treaty but in the joint declaration of July 1974. There is no guarantee of defense for Spain. Moreover, specifically Spanish scenarios of tension or conflict--for instance, in North Africa--are not covered by the treaty. It does not seem very likely that the United States will provide a real guarantee of defense. In this instance the document will have to be judged on the basis of what it itself contains, not proceeding from pious wishes or wooly ideas. it is necessary to define in a manner more in keeping with our own strategic position the geographical area of common interest.

It is unnecessary to add that this lack of a guarantee of defense also occurs in the case of NATO. It is sufficient to read Article 6 of the Washington treaty in relation to Articles 4 and 5.

With respect to the bases, it is necessary: 1) that they be really Spanish bases in which the U.S. forces will enjoy facilities which must be specified and controlled; 2) that their denuclearization be maintained effectively and without alteration in the event of a crisis; 3) that their use in transit to a third destination by the U.S. Air Force cannot jeopardize Spain's own independent foreign policy.

I know this last-mentioned point--currently regulated in an exchange of notes whose text is necessary but imprecise--will be an important topic in the renegotiation. The foregoing does not mean that certain U.S. aims in the area outside the area of common interest cannot coincide with Spanish interests. But there will be instances in which they do not coincide. It is necessary to establish clearly the principle and the procedure to ensure that Spain has the guarantee that the bases will not be used in a crisis with grave harm to its interests and positions. With respect to cooperation in the field of arms, although we must undertake diversification--within the necessary rationality and standardization--of sources of supply, the U.S. supply is essential for our armed forces. Nevertheless, we must seek to ensure that transfers of technology count more than the supplying of arms which are sometimes obsolete or inappropriate for our own purposes. Well conceived cooperation agreements on arms and technology were concluded with France in the seventies.

3. Bilateral Treaty and/or NATO

Joining NATO is not an alternative to the treaty. There will be NATO and the treaty if we join the former. This is what Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo unambiguously stated in his speech of investiture. Our stance is opposed to the policy of blocs. We want an international community whose peace and balance are not based essentially on the balance of nuclear terror. Our policy is conceived on the basis of three principles: 1) working for peace and detente; 2) achieving a minimum degree of independence which will prevent our satellitization; 3) not upsetting balances and, at all events, not weakening the Western positions in the slightest.

We find the renegotiation of a bilateral treaty on an equal basis, and not entry into NATO, far more in keeping with these principles--deduced from the national interest and not applied on the basis of ideology.

The desirable thing would be for a sound Spanish negotiating position to formulated and for the issue not to be ideologized. We Socialists are prepared to take part in this formulation, first on the basis of a critical but open analysis and, if this is what is decided, on the basis of sincere cooperation. It is a matter of the national interest, not that of the parties.

DENMARK

FOLKETING'S SOCIAL DEMOCRATS REJECT NEUTRON BOMB

LD131303 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 9 Apr 81 p 14

[Unattributed report: "Social Democrats Say No to Neutron Bomb"]

[Text] "In accordance with our overall position on such matters, Social Democrats also say no to the neutron bomb," Folketing member Lasse Budtz said in the first debate on a proposed Folketing resolution from the Socialist People's Party, the Left Socialist Party and the Single Tax Party which oppose the neutron bomb.

Both Lasse Budtz and Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen rejected the proposal, partly for the reason that there are no plans at present to deploy U.S.-made neutron bombs on European soil.

Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen repeated that the Danish Government stated on several occasions that it considered the Carter administration's decision to postpone production of the neutron bomb correct.

Apart from the three parties which made the proposal only the Radical Liberals supported the resolution, which was rejected by all the other parties.

FINLAND

DENMARK'S PRIME, ENERGY MINISTERS ARRIVE FOR TALKS

LD131016 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0930 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Approximately 1 and 1/2 hours ago, Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen began his official 3-day visit to Finland. His host, Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto, and Prime Minister Jorgensen will conduct official talks this afternoon dealing with relations between the two countries and Nordic security issues.

Danish Energy Minister Poul Nielson also arrived today on a 3-day visit to Finland at the invitation of minister of commerce and industry, Ulf Sundqvist. The two ministers will discuss questions linked with Finnish energy policy and energy supply.

Prime Ministers Meet

LD131520 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen and Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto have expressed joint concern over the increasing tension between the big powers. Big power relations were discussed this afternoon in the talks between Prime Minister Jorgensen, who is now visiting Finland, and Prime Minister Koivisto.

Concerning Finnish-Danish trade relations, Prime Minister Jorgensen noted that the trade between the two countries shows a gratifyingly increasing balance.

The prime ministers also discussed a nuclear-weapon-free north. Prime Minister Jorgensen pointed out that a nuclear-weapon-free north is already a fact in practice. Denmark, on the other hand, wants to enlarge the idea of a nuclear-weapon-free north so as to include areas from both East and West.

Tomorrow the Danish prime minister, who arrived in Finland today, will meet President Urho Kekkonen and the speaker of the Diet, Johannes Virolainen. Jorgensen is accompanied by Danish Energy Minister Poul Nielson.

NORWAY

UTSI: NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE STEP TOWARD DISARMAMENT

LD101101 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 9 Apr 81 p 3

[Unattributed report: "Nuclear-Free Zone a Means Rather Than an End"]

[Text] The idea of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area must be seen more as a means than an end, the Labor Party's foremost defense policy spokesman in the Storting, Per A. Utsi, said in a lecture yesterday.

Utsi, who is deputy chairman of the Storting Defense Committee, was commenting on this section of the Labor Party's manifesto for the next Storting period at a meeting of the newly formed Holmestrand Defense Society. He rejected the objection that the Nordic countries already comprise a nuclear-free area, and stressed than an area guaranteed nuclear free under international law would have a calming effect on its surroundings and would thus facilitate measures to reduce military forces outside the zone.

In Utsi's opinion the idea ought to be pursued further if international talks reveal that nuclear-free zones, guaranteed in international law, in some parts of Europe could pave the way for reducing the numbers of nuclear arms in other parts of Europe. He stressed that it is necessary to act in consultation with the countries which possess these arsenals, primarily the Soviet Union and the United States, and that a reduction in nuclear arms is only possible if the superpowers themselves want it.

According to Utsi, through increased efforts in this area the Labor Party is trying to find out to what extent a Nordic zone would appear as a confidence-building and calming measure that might induce the superpowers to get rid of parts of their arsenals as a compensatory concession.

"We want to use such a possible zone as a means to limit the nuclear threat," he stated, and sketched the objectives under three headings:

1. Preventing and limiting the deployment of nuclear arms;

2. Strengthening and making credible Norway's position as a nuclear-free area;

3. Reducing the nuclear threat to Norwegian territory.

Utsi said that few places in the world live under a greater nuclear threat than the Nordic countries. He also devoted much attention in his lecture to how exposed Norwegian territory is in military terms, especially in the north and along the Norwegian seacoast. The Soviet Union is at present building up a military strength which far exceeds reasonable defense requirements, and is the whole time doing so in new areas, he said.

"What is worrisome in the situation is that the Soviet Union is both expanding its military potential and showing little sign of any inhibitions in using such instruments of power, as we saw in Afghanistan and to a certain extent in Poland too," Storting member Per A. Utsi said.

NOW! REPORTS ON KGB NORTH SEA SPY RING

LD101215 London NOW! in English 10-15 Apr 81 pp 14-21

[Christopher Dobson and Ronald Payne report]

[Excerpt] An international KGB operation to probe the technological secrets of Britain's North Sea oil fields and to prepare the way for Soviet naval attacks on them in the event of war has been foiled by a courageous double agent working for Western intelligence. NOW! can reveal that for six years the KGB spymasters were completely hoodwinked by an agent they knew as "Jan Jansen." He fed harmless information to his Russian contact while their meetings were photographed and their conversations recorded.

NOW! has seen some of the "shopping lists" of information the KGB sought. The Russians wanted highly detailed technological and geological information about exploration and drilling for both oil and gas in the North Sea. They also wanted him to spy on NATO. But the answers supplied by Jansen (the codename the KGB gave a Norwegian oil engineer) were carefully doctored, not only to mislead the Soviet Union, but to get for the West valuable information about the Russians' own military and technological advances.

Jansen's double-cross continued until just over a week ago. And, ironically, it was on April Fools' Day that the KGB realised that it had been duped. On that day Timoy Besedin, a Soviet trade officical, was expelled from Oslo for "activities incompatible with his diplomatic status." Besedin was a member of the "Jansen ring" and his explusion set the alarm bells ringing--especially in Vienna. For there, Dr Arkadiy Belozerov, the distinguished Soviet scientist who is secretary of the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis, but was also "running" Jansen, had a rendezvous with him for 5 o'clock on Saturday, April 4 outside the Vienna Volksoper to pick up more information. When Besedin was expelled Belozerov knew that his KGB role had been "blown." He must be wondering how his carefully nurtured operation went wrong. NOW! can enlighten him. Jan Jansen had another codename: Arne, given to him by the Norwegian security service. For more than six years Arne, thought by the Russians to be "nash" (ours), played the dangerous and difficult role of double agent. He completely outfoxed the Russians and when the Norwegians finally decided to end the game they wrapped up yet another KGB spy ring.

At every meeting Dr Belozerov and, earlier, a predecessor made specific requests for information from Arne, many of them involving British oil interests in the North Sea. But every request was passed directly to Western analysts. Every scrap of information passed to Dr Belozerov was "sanitised" before being handed over. All their meetings were monitored by counter-intelligence.

It was a brilliant operation. Much valuable information was gathered by studying the Russian requests for information. They revealed not only those fields in which the Russians were interested but, by a process or reverse questioning, gave the Western analysts a picture of Russian's own advances in certain areas of great importance both militarily and economically. A certain amount of "disinformation" was also filtered back and now the Russians are faced with the task of re-evaluating all Arne's material. Psychologically, it has also given the KGB a bloody nose at a time when the rest of the world has begun to think that it gets everything right and the Western security services are made to look foolish. This time it is the KGB which is wearing the dunce's cap. And, with these revelations by NOW!, the international espionage activities of Dr Belezorov should be at an end and he will be able to return to Moscow to carry on his studies in his speciality of plasma physics.

KENAN EVREN, ULUSU MEET COUNCIL OF EUROPE OFFICIAL

TA131721 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] The president of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, Hans de Koster, who is continuing his contacts in Ankara, was received by head of state Gen Kenan Evren and Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu separately today. De Koster visited Ulusu in his office at 1330. The meeting between Ulusu and De Koster lasted 90 minutes. At 1500, De Koster was received by Evren. Certain Foreign Ministry officials also attended the meeting, which lasted 90 minutes. De Koster had met with Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen before noon. He will continue his contacts tomorrow and leave Turkey on Wednesday.

GOVERNMENT COUNTERS RESOLUTION BY EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT

TA102106 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] The Office of the Prime Ministry issued a statement today in connection with the resolution passed by the European Parliament. In its session held today the European Parliament, which has 434 members, approved a resolution against Turkey with 51 votes against 45; 8 members abstained. There were 104 members in the assembly when the proposal was put to vote. This is much less than the majority of the members.

The parliamentarians that voted against Turkey belong to a small group that would like the continuation of the atmosphere prior to 12 September and the developments that such an atmosphere would cause. In fact, their desire was clearly reflected in certain parts of the resolution adopted today.

The opening of the resolution states that the policy of terror continues in Turkey under the support of the present regime. It is then stated in the body of the resolution that the struggle being waged by the Turkish people for the restoration of the democratic institutions, the parliament, the political parties and the trade unions would be supported. All this proves their aim. To portray as terror the legal struggle being waged for the elimination of terror centers in Turkey and to speak of a so-called struggle being waged by the Turkish people against the present administration, which in fact they support wholeheartedly, reiterates this stand.

The struggle that is mentioned in the resolution is in fact being waged only by a small group that has escaped from Turkey and settled in foreign countries because of the crimes they have committed and because they do not want to appear before the Turkish courts.

Another passage of the resolution calling for the support and safeguarding of the freedom and democratic rights of the Turkish workers and students in EEC countries is another effort to portray the unpatriotic struggle being waged by that insignificant group as if it were being waged by the whole of the immigrant Turkish workers and students abroad.

The statement by the Office of the Prime Ministry expresses the Turkish view on the resolution of the European Parliament as follows: As it will be recalled, the European Parliament--of which Turkey is not a member--had expressed the desire to send a delegation to Turkey in a bid to have talks with officials as well as with private persons. This desire was gladly accepted by Turkey. The fact that such a decision was passed hurriedly in the parliament--without a majority of its members--at a time when the delegation of the European Parliament was expected in our country and without the delegation having a chance to report its findings, proves that there was concern that the delegation would tell the parliament the truths it would observe.

In fact, the recent visit by an FRG parliamentary delegation and statements made proved that delegations visiting Turkey leave the country with positive impressions.

We do not believe that such a resolution that reflects the views of circles that are disturbed by the change of power for the restoration of a genuine and strong democratic system in Turkey represent the views of the great majority of the EEC parliamentarians who wholeheartedly cherish democratic principles. We think that this resolution contradicts the views of the governments of the EEC countries as well.

The statement expresses the hope that the resolution of the European Parliament will not have a negative effect on relations between Turkey and the EEC and adds: The new government, which is responsible to the Turkish nation only, has decided, without foreign pressure, to restore the democratic system, which the country deserves, in the near future. It will surely not be affected by them in the implementation of its decision through determined efforts.

NEWSPAPERS DECRY EEC IMPOSITION OF SANCTIONS

HURRIYET Editorial

NC140709 Istanhul HURRIYET in Turkish 11 Apr 81 p 3

[Editorial by Oktay Eksi: "Sanctions Against Turkey"]

[Excerpts] It is our conviction that Turkey should be ruled not by a military staff but by a "peace-loving", civilian, democratic system, and certainly not by the kind of democracy preached by the Marxists and desired by the fascists which exists only in name.

We therefore support every effort, every meaningful effort, which would lead Turkey to a "peace-loving democratic system."

Despite this firm conviction on our part, we regard as highly strange the resolution adopted yesterday by the "European Parliament", that is, by the parliamentarians directly elected by the Common Market countries. This resolution demands Turkey's speedy transition to "a democratic order" and proposes that this should be done in "2 months time." The Turkish military authorities are being informed that if the present administration in Turkey does not introduce an operable democratic system during this period, that is, if it does not return to a democratic practice which would enable all institutions to function smoothly, relations between Turkey and the EEC will be frozen.

The test of the resolution is in fact longer than this and it contains "rude terms." But the point we wish to raise is that the Europeans with whom we share the same philosophy of life have been tricked and misled.

As we have said, this resolution of the European Parliament is probably manifesting a trick placed on the other members of this parliament. For the parliamentarians who pretended to be fighting for a "peace-loving" democratic system and who managed to extract this resolution from the European Parliament have, in fact, resorted to one of their usual intrigues. They pose as the only protectors of the classical freedoms which, in actual fact, they would destroy at the first opportunity. Their real intention is not to protect freedoms in Turkey. Their intention is to sow discord between Turkey and the other Western countries which truly believe in a peace-loving democratic system.

It is important not to fall into such traps. Therefore, the Europeans which wish the Turkish people to be free and to live under a regime which respects human rights must realize that this resolution is "untimely" and that they have been exploited by those who wish to see Turkey hurled over a precipice again and not its transition to a democratic system.

GUNAYDIN Article

NC140806 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 12 Apr 81 p 3

[Article by Necati Zincirkiran: "Such a Contrast That...."]

[Excerpts] Our Western allies have discovered another reason why we should not be accepted as a full member of the Common Market. They say: "There is no democracy in Turkey, so let us freeze our relations." Now one is tempted to ask: "What did you do when there was democracy in Turkey?"

The attitude of the Common Market and the Common Market countries toward Turkey is indeed full of contrasts. Their latest resolution adds insult to injury. As is known, we are allies in NATO with most of the Common Market countries. That is, we share the same fate with them. And we, Turks, a soldierly nation, fulfill our obligations in the best manner possible even under the most strenuous conditions. We always express our allegiance to the Western alliance. Only 3 days ago, our Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said: "If the Soviet Union occupies Poland, we will act together with our NATO allies." This is how Turkey views the situation. This is its attitude toward its obligations within the Western alliance system. But the Westerners, that is, our allies, can afford to adopt resolutions against us. They can hinder our progress.

It was obvious beforehand that the resolution of the European Parliament would be against us. The temporary suspension of democracy in Turkey gives them a good pretext.

Turkey has been officially an "associate member" of the EEC for 14 years. Such a membership is a step toward full membership. Is it not a contrast that at a time when associate member Turkey's workers were about to be granted freedom of movement in the EEC countries, visa requirements should be imposed on them? How can one interpret otherwise the embargo placed on our textile products? The EEC administrators who expedited Greece's entry and who gave the green light to Spain and Portugal have kept telling Turkey: "For goodness sake, don't ask for membership now. It is untimely." They have kept gagging us by such pretexts. Moreover, they have failed to fulfill their obligations toward us. They have made more concessions to Israel and the Greek Cypriot administration, which are not even associate members.

No one should entertain the idea that we are fomenting animosity toward the West by citing these facts. We have to expose the contrasts of the Western world, which has been taking contradictory decisions against Turkey. We cannot allow our sincerity to be abused any more.

Those who wish Turkey to identify itself with a Western type of democratic regime and to implement such a regime say that we can only then be considered Europeans. In wishing and saying this, they are not aware of the fact that they are hindering Turkey's economic progress and strength. Don't they really know that the model of Western democracy cannot gain ground in a country not economically strong? Or is it against their interests to know?

ROMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER BEGINS OFFICIAL VISIT

TA131658 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Romanian Minister of Foreign Affairs, Stefan Andrei, who arrived on an official visit in Ankara today, has begun his contacts. Head of state Gen Kenan Evren received the visiting foreign minister at the Cankaya mansion at 1700 today. During the meeting, Andrei extended to Evren a message from Romania President Nicolae Ceausescu. In his message, Ceausescu noted that Romanian attaches great importance to the good relations and cooperation between the two countries and expressed the wish to further develop this. Ceausescu invited Evren to Romania.

In his statement, Evren said relations with Romania are improving every day and Turkey is determined to further develop this. Andrei was also received by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu. Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen was present during the meetings. Andrei had visited Turkmen previously and conferred with him for some time. The talks between the Turkish and Romanian delegations will begin tomorrow morning. A cultural exchange program and a cooperation protocol in the fields of radio and television are expected to be signed during Andrei's visit to Turkey.

The visiting foreign minister, who will inspect the construction site of the central Anatolia refinery in Kirikkale, will depart Turkey on 17 April.

BORDER TALKS BEGIN WITH BULGARIAN DELEGATION

TA131832 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1520 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 13 Apr (AA)--Turkish and Bulgarian teams met in Ankara on Monday to resume negotiations on redrawing the common border along the Rezve [Rezovo] River.

The Turkish team is led by senior consultant at the Foreign Ministry Asaf Inhan, while the Bulgarian team is headed by Deputy Chief of the Balkans Department Stoyen Venev, of the Bulgarian Foreign Ministry. The teams had last met in Sofia after the two governments decided last December to resume negotiations on delineation of the border along the river bed.

TCP LEADER CONGRATULATES BULGARIA'S ZHIVKOV

TA100940 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Congratulations message from Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to BCP Central Committee Secretary General Todor Zhivkov; no date given]

[Text] To Comrade Todor Zhivkov, secretary general of the BCP Central Committee:

Very distinguished Comrade Todor Zhivkov, I sincerely greet you on behalf of the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee and on my behalf on the occasion of your election as the secretary general of the BCP Central Committee and your assuming this very responsible, important and honorable duty.

We--the Turkish Communists--know you as one of the able and distinguished Leninist fighters of the international communist and labor movement. You have for many years been leading with skill, sacrifice and intelligence our neighbor Bulgaria on the path of developed socialist construction. You are struggling for the strengthening of peace and the perpetuation of detente in the world and particularly in the Balkans. You are continuously encouraging the development of good neighborly and friendly relations, in all aspects, between the Turkish Republic and the People's Republic of Bulgaria and between our peoples. You are exerting the greatest efforts in this direction. We wish you great success in your work in the future as well.

[Signed] With our communist greetings, TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen, 5 April 1981.

MILITARY COURT BEGINS MASS TRIAL OF SECESSIONISTS

TA131726 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1550 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Diyarbakir, 13 Apr (AA)--The mass trial of 447 members of the illegal secessionist organization "PKK" (Partiya Karkere Kurdistan), known as "APOcular" started at a martial law court in Diyarbakir Monday morning, with the prosecution demanding the death sentence for 97.

Strict security measures were observable at the trial which was followed by a large number of foreign and Turkish reporters. The military prosecutor charged the defendants, 440 of whom were present at Monday's hearing, with the murder of 243 persons since 1978, including 30 members of the security forces. Individual charges cited in his 207-page indictment included cases of kidnapping and torture before murder, fratricide, matricide, armed robbery, the shooting of a captain, NCO and private of a gendarmerie unit, and of a policeman and his 8-year-old daughter.

The indictment also claimed militants of the separatist organization were trained in groups of 50 at Palestine Liberaion Organization camps under an agreement with PLO.

Three ex-parliamentarians, Celal Paydas [former RPP deputy from Urfa], Ahmet Turk [former RPP deputy from Mardin] and Mustafa Kilic [state minister in the 1978-79 Ecevit government] were charged with offering material and moral support to the APOcular gang, including men, land and funds. The three ex-deputies did not appear at Monday's hearing as the investigation on them was still underway.

There were two women among the defendants, one of them a school teacher. The other defendants also included teachers as well as civil servants, [word indistinct] policeman, customs officers and engineers in addition to [words indistinct] and unemployed. The majority of the defendants came from the townships of Hilvan and Siverek and surrounding [words indistinct] neighboring Urfa Province.

LABOR GROUP RETURNS TO MINIMUM WAGE COMMITTEE

TA101624 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1520 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 10 Apr (AA)--The Turkish Confederation of Labor "Turk-Is" has decided to attend today's session of the committee on minimum wage. Turk-Is members of the committee had walked out of last week's session when they disagreed with government and management representatives' criteria in fixing the minimum wage.

A statement will be issued Saturday on the proposals adopted by the Turk-Is board of directors at its meeting earlier this week.

Minimum Wage Set

TA101715 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Excerpts] The minimum wage for workers older than 16 has been fixed at 10,000 liras a month and that of workers younger than 16 at 6,690 liras a month. This decision was unanimously taken by the minimum wage committee, which completed its work today.

Announcing the committee's decision, Labor Minister Turhan Esener said that the minimum wage for workers was determined taking into consideration its impact on cost and the number of workers employed on a national scale.

Turk-Is Statement

TA121559 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1511 GMT 12 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 12 Apr (AA)--A statement issued at the end of the Turk-Is (Turkish Labour Confederation) executive board meeting pointed out today that the recent raise in the minimum wage was satisfactory in the face of the economic realities in the country and asked the Supreme Arbitration Council charged with determining the provisions of new collective work contracts for thousands of workers to speed up its activities and conclude the contracts to the benefit of the worker and labour peace.

Turk-Is administrative council would meet extraordinarily in Ankara May 7 and the confederation would apply to the prime minister and seek an end to the suspension of union activities. The administrative council would also propose certain amendments to the existing "laws with a social content" and as well as to laws No 274, 275 and 506.

The statement praised efforts to quell terrorism and bridle galloping inflation and expressed allegiance to the principles of Ataturk. It also praised Head of State General Kenan Evren's decision to raise to four the number of salaries as bonus payments public sector workers can get each year from two recommended by the court of public accounts.

"Hotbeds of violence which have been eradicated in the country seek now to continue their activities abroad with the support of certain anti-Turkish circles. Taking into consideration this fact, our confederation has decided to represent the Turkish working class in a more effective way at international platforms and to attend the ILO meeting to take place in Geneva in June," added the statement.

GUNAYDIN REPORTS ON OIL, GAS PROJECTS WITH IRAQ

NC140820 Istanbul BUNAYDIN in Turkish 12 Apr 81 p 4

[Report by Erdem Noyan]

[Text] Ankara (Special)—Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol has announced that four big projects costing billions of liras will be jointly undertaken with Iraq. Bingol, who has noted that all four projects were examined separately during his official visit to Iraq, added that one project was the establishment of a new oil refinery at Iskenderun.

Bingol further stated that such projects as the establishment of natural gas installations in Kirkuk, the expansion of the capacity of the Yumurtalik-Kirkuk pipeline and the use of low-quality oil for generating electricity have been approved by Iraq as well. The natural gas to be obtained in Kirkuk will be brought to Turkey through the gas pipeline project and it will be processed at a plant to be established in Iskenderun. This will meet a major part of Turkey's need for tube gas. According to the project which aims at evaluating low-quality oil, Iraq will set up power stations which will be run by this oil. The electric energy which will be generated at these power stations will be jointly used by both countries.

BRIEFS

BUSINESSMEN RETURN FROM HUNGARY—Ankara, 11 Apr (AA)—A 15-man delegation of Turkish businessmen headed by Mehmet Yazar, chairman of the Turkish Union of Chambers of Trade and Industry, concluded a visit to Hungary. During their stay, Turkish businessmen were received separately by Hungarian Deputy Prime Minister in Charge of Economic Affairs Marjai as well as by the acting minister of foreign trade for discussions on development of bilateral economic relations. Marjai said he was following the economic stability program of the Turkish Government with interest and that they were also adopting measures of the same kind, a union of chambers statement said today. [Text] [Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1435 GMT 11 Apr 81 TA]

HEROIN SEIZED IN IZMIR—A narcotics smuggling network has been uncovered in Izmir. The police seized 6 kilos of pure heroin at a foreign market value of about 200 million Turkish liras and a large amount of foreign currency. Eleven persons were arrested, including a retired policeman and a policeman. [Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 11 Apr 81 TA]

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 072 15 April 1981

CONTENTS

AUSTRIA

Authorities Investigating Alleged Soviet Plot E 1
ARBEITER-ZEITUNG Report [15 Apr] E 1

BENELUX

BELGIUM

Prime Minister Eyskens Outlines Government Aims [LE SOIR 9 Apr] F 1
Belgium Agrees to Increased Price for Algerian Gas [LE SOIR 11 Apr] F 1
Briefs: New Finance Minister F 2

THE NETHERLANDS

Spokesman Announces Expulsion of TASS Correspondent F 2

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Foreign Minister Interviewed on Talks With Haig J 1
Vice Admiral Bethge Discusses Navy's Mission [FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE 14 Apr] J 3
Banks Agree To Defer Polish Credit Repayments J 5
Press Comments on Economic Experts' Forecasts J 5
Paper Views Bonn's Approach to Arms Control Talks [FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE 14 Apr] J 7

FRANCE

Foreign Affairs Committee Discusses Lebanon [LE MONDE 11 Apr] K 1
LE FIGARO Examines New U.S. Attitudes in Near East [9 Apr] K 1

PORTUGAL

Paper Surveys Progress in EEC Membership Talks [DIARIO DE NOTICIAS 4 Apr] M 1
Two Main Unions Declare 3-Day Strike 14-17 April M 1

SPAIN

Senate Passes Draft Law on Rebellion, Terrorism N 1
Defense Ministry Criticizes Tejero Article N 1
Appeals Against Coup Plot Indictments Rejected N 1
Police Report Two Killings in Basque Region N 2
Minister Reviews Foreign Relations With Deputies [LA VANGUARDIA 3 Apr] N 2
Juan Carlos Receives U.S. Senate Delegation N 2

NORDIC AFFAIRS

Nordic Red Cross Responds to Polish Aid Request [HUFVUDSTADSBLADET 10 Apr] P 1

DENMARK

Leaders Call Nuclear Zone Debate 'Superfluous' [HUFVUDSTADSBLADET 12 Apr] P 1

FINLAND

Authorities Deny Increased NATO Activity in Baltic P 2
DPRK Gains 3-Year Postponement of Debt Payment P 2
Construction of Railcar Plant in USSR Possible P 2
[HUFVUDSTADSBLADET 3 Apr]

NORWAY

Brundtland Elected Leader of United Labor Party [AFTENPOSTEN 6 Apr] P 3

CYPRUS

Turkmen Promises Talks Progress After Elections [O FILELEVTHEROS 14 Apr] R 1
Disagreement Continues on Nicosia Airport Issue [O AGON 14 Apr] R 1
Government Denies Dispute R 2
Rolandhis To Protest Denktas' Title Deed Action R 2
Denktas Refuses To Sign Missing Persons Agreement [O AGON 15 Apr] R 2
EDEK Leader Lissaridhis Returns From Damascus R 2

GREECE

U.S. Expresses Concern Over Neorian Ship Repairs [TO VIMA 14 Apr] S 1
Official Statement Issued on Aegean Violations S 1
AKROPOLIS Warns Ankara [14 Apr] S 2
Government Answers Criticism [AKROPOLIS 14 Apr] S 2
Papandreou Calls For Government To Resign [ELEVTHEROTIPIA 14 Apr] S 3
Technical Talks Begin With Turkish Delegation S 4
Mitsotakis Receives Hungarian, Portuguese Envoys S 4
Hungarian Farm Delegation Arrives for Visit S 4
Polish Trade Relations Discussed in Athens S 4

TURKEY

Romanian Foreign Minister Begins Talks in Ankara T 1
Cooperation Agreements Signed T 1
Minister Ozal Comments on Economic Situation T 1
Additional Comments T 2
Prosecutor Reads Indictment Against Separatists T 2
Former Prime Minister Ecevit Editorial on Torture [ARAYIS 4 Apr] T 3

AUTHORITIES INVESTIGATING ALLEGED SOVIET PLOT

NC141209 Paris AFP in English 1154 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] Vienna, 14 Apr (AFP)--Austrian authorities are investigating an alleged Soviet plot to collect classified technical information on offshore oil-drilling operations, police sources here said today. Austrian security services said that Arkadiy Belotserov, 47, a Soviet researcher in the International Institute for the Analysis of Applied Systems in nearby Laxenburg had been recruited for the mission. Mr Belotserov was suspected of being a high-level official of the Soviet KGB, the sources said. Contacted by AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE, he dismissed all the allusions as "ridiculous" and refused further comment.

The plot was reportedly uncovered following disclosures by Mr Belotserov's alleged contact, a Norwegian counter-espionage agent who worked under the code names "Arne" and "Jan Jansen." The police source said that the agent furnished on several occasions false information to Mr Belotserov. In their last meeting, the sources said, the Russian asked for documents that were so important the contacts were suspended. Following the decision, a member of the Soviet commercial delegation in Oslo, Timor Anatolyevich Besedin, was expelled and declared persona non grata. He was said to have been in contact with Mr Belotserov.

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG Report

AU150800 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 15 Apr 81 p 2

[As report]

[Text] Vienna--an international espionage affair has spread more or less accidentally to Austrian territory. A Soviet employee of the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis (IIASA) in Laxenburg near Vienna attempted to obtain information about oil production technology in the North Sea and the South China Sea. Reports in the Tuesday issue of a Vienna daily, according to which IIASA President Gvishiani, son-in-law of Kosygin, could be involved in the affair are depicted at the Interior Ministry as fairy tales.

The affair began several years ago in Norway. At that time, Soviet secret service officer Dementiyev approached an oil specialist, of whom only the cover names Arne and Jan Jansen are known, to induce him to supply information about Norwegian oil technology. However, Arne informed the Norwegian counterintelligence service. For some time, Dementiyev was supplied with rather worthless information, but then he was expelled from the country.

However, the Soviets did not give up. Dementiyev, who did not know about the double-dealing of his informer, suggested Vienna as a new meeting place. After the first meeting in Vienna with Arne, he passed him on to a colleague by the name of Belotserov who got a job with the IIASA as a scientist--he is actually a space research specialist--in February 1980. The contacts between Arne and his new contact man, of which the Norwegian counterintelligence service was constantly kept informed, did not work out too well, however. Belotserov failed to show up at arranged meetings and was "flabbergasted" (as Arne stated in his report to the Norwegian authorities) when his contact man from Norway on one occasion called on him at IIASA. Thus, there were altogether only two meetings between Arne and Belotserov. As ARBEITER-ZEITUNG has learned from the Interior Ministry, there are no indications that Austrian interests were affected. The amount of money paid to Arne was fairly moderate: in the final stage, he was paid $5,000 for his services. The affair has been revealed by a publication of the London magazine NOW!.

[Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German on 15 April says on page 2 under the headline "Does Reagan Want To Strangle the Laxenburg Institute?" that the IIASA, where scientists from the the East and West are working together, is obviously no longer acceptable to the "cold warriors" in Washington, and that the "incredible 'espionage story' is obviously intended to touch off a campaign" against the institute."]

BELGIUM

PRIME MINISTER EYSKENS OUTLINES GOVERNMENT AIMS

LD130929 Brussels LE SOIR in French 9 Apr 81 p 2

["DV" report]

[Excerpt] Our country still has many possibilities and therefore opportunities, but it has become much more vulnerable. Let us work together, day by day, to avoid a deterioration of our situation and to face the future with the courage of hope. It is in this spirit that the government seeks the confidence of parliament.

This is how the statement made to parliament on Tuesday by new Prime Minister Marc Eyskens ended. He first set forth to the chambers the means which his government intended to use to achieve this aim. This is what he said:

The economic crisis which is affecting our country in several areas and the seriousness of the international situation demand a rapid end to the political crisis.

It has been shaken. All those who are affected by the crisis must regain hope and realize that there is a way out. The victims of the crisis--the unemployed, the self-employed who are seeing their enterprises regress or their activities decline, managers and workers who are experiencing the decline of enterprises --must be encouraged by an energetic policy which proves by its action that we can come through the crisis.

It is also very important to preserve confidence between the two big political families of our country, which together have the heavy responsibility for governing the country in these difficult times.

Especially Employment

The second basic aim is to preserve and promote employment, primarily by a policy of vigorous economic rehabilitation.

The progressive elimination of the big fluctuations in the balance of payments and the state budget will be pursued. The Belgian economy and the policy pursued must result in maintaining a stable and healthy currency. To achieve this, efforts at rehabilitation must be accelerated in all areas, even if this requires voluntary sacrifices, in solidarity and according to each person's ability to contribute. The government in collaboration with the National Bank, each according to its role and responsibility, will take all steps necessary to maintain the rate of the Belgian franc.

The government will do everything to reabsorb the balance of payments deficit, by bolstering the competitiveness of our economy.

The pursuit of an efficacious policy of struggle against the crisis requires stability. This is why the government will encourage in the constituent chambers initiatives aimed at establishing a government and a parliament which can really legislate.

Emergency Program

An emergency program will include the following guidelines:

Our economy's capacity will be bolstered by reducing fiscal pressure on enterprises. The planned fiscal relief will be centered on investments creating employment.

This fiscal program, which already has been submitted to the round table on new industrial policy, mainly includes: enlarging the reserve of taxfree investments; adapting employment; exempting reinvested profit from taxation; measures aimed at promoting risk capital and encouraging foreign investment in Belgium.

Extra effort also is needed to promote employment in the small and medium enterprise sector by means of exemption from double taxation.

BELGIUM AGREES TO INCREASED PRICE FOR ALGERIAN GAS

LD140951 Brussels LE SOIR in French 11 Apr 81 p 2

["P.L." report]

[Excerpt] Belgium signed an agreement with Algeria on Wednesday which raises the price of liquefied gas, which will be supplied to us via Arzow and Zeebrugge, to $4.80 per million BTUs. This is the first time that such a price level has been reached, and this agreement is regarded as a great victory for Algiers which, as is known, dreams of aligning gas prices with crude oil prices. Although it places us among the Third World's most generous partners, this agreement is bound to spark off strong reactions both in Belgium and among the other industrialized countries. In addition to the irritation to be expected from Belgian consumers--they will probably pay slightly more for their gas than other Europeans--the agreement will very probably annoy other countries which buy Algerian gas, particuarly France, Italy and the United States, which are engaged in tough negotiations on a new price for their gas supplies from Algeria. Already on Thursday very negative reactions were being expressed in international energy agency circles in Paris.

BRIEFS

NEW FINANCE MINISTER--The new prime minister, Marc Eyskens, has taken over the former government team with only one change. His own place at the Ministry of Finance has been taken by Robert Van de Put, a former governor of the National Bank and former chairman of the National Industrial Credit Corporation. [Brussels Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 7 Apr 81 LD]

THE NETHERLANDS

SPOKESMAN ANNOUNCES EXPULSION OF TASS CORRESPONDENT

NC150625 Paris AFP in English 0608 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] The Hague, 15 Apr (AFPO--Vadim Leonov, correspondent here for the Soviet state news agency TASS, has been expelled from The Netherlands, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said today.

The spokesman declines to give the reason for the correspondent's expulsion, while the Soviet Embassy here said that Mr Leonov had gone home as his parents-in-law were in poor health.

FOREIGN MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON TALKS WITH HAIG

DW141505 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0518 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Heribert Schwan interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; date and place not indicated--recorded]

[Text] [Question] U.S. Secretary of State Haig met Federal Chancellor Schmidt and you in Bonn on Saturday. Has the 2-hour talk eliminated Bonn's irritation at America?

[Answer] I think this visit must be seen in connection with the U.S. secretary of state's visits to Rome, Paris and London, which means that the U.S. Government also wanted to use this occasion to coordinate its views with its European allies. And indeed, the U.S. secretary of state confirmed the line which manifested itself during my visit to Washington and in our joint press statement, especially regarding the very important matter that in the implementation of NATO's dual decision of December 1979 both parts are of equal value and both parts must be advanced with equal energy, namely, our will to negotiate as well as our determination to implement counterarmament.

This is considerably in line with our ideas because we are interested in the earliest possible resumption of U.S.-Soviet negotiations on medium-range missiles. Naturally, we also discussed developments in Poland and other issues, including the Middle East problems. The talk was a good preparation for the NATO foreign ministers' meeting in Rome early in May, which we expect and hope will confirm the line of NATO in important foreign policy positions. We must be interested not only in the clearly predictable continuation of our own German policy but also in the consistent and resolute implementation of the alliance's policy.

[Question] But are the Americans convinced, is Haig convinced that the talks between the big powers on the mutual reduction of Eurostrategic missiles must be resumed?

[Answer] Yes, he said that in Bonn clearly. They must be resumed without delay. I think many statements coming from Washington and producing perhaps a different impression just are attributable to the fact that the new U.S. Government is about to formulate its positions. Therefore, this phase is so very important not only for the Federal Republic but for the U.S. European allies on the whole, because what matters in this phase is that we exert influence on this policy as partners, as equal partners. This influence must be aimed at the constant and predictable continuation of the common policy NATO has pursued during the past years, this clearly formulated policy which not only comprises defense policy but also disarmament policy problems and problems of the East-West relationship.

It is no wonder in this respect that the U.S. secretary of state has a special understanding for this concern, because as NATO supreme commander in Brussels for many years, he took part in this opinion-forming. Seen this way, it certainly is an advantage that somebody who knows Europe, who knows the alliance very well, who knows the European partners and also their problems very well heads the U.S. Department of State.

[Question] Does this mean that U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger's statement that the beginning of negotiations, the beginning of U.S.-Soviet negotiations, not only depended on developments in Poland but on Moscow's behavior in all regions of the world doesn't hold true anymore?

[Answer] May I remind you that a NATO foreign minister's meeting was held in Rome in December 1980, which dealt very intensely with developments in Poland. At the time, we, meaning not only the Federal Republic, but all NATO partners, held the view that it must be our goal to contribute to a stabilization of Polish developments through a consistent policy of noninterference in Poland, through economic aid and also through an improvement of international framework conditions. Nothing has changed about this. You must realize that the U.S. Government, too, the new U.S. Government, does not by any means make disarmament negotiations dependent on the conditions you just mentioned. There are not only explanations, but quite practical examples in this respect.

Let me mention one. The CSCE followup conference meets in Madrid and the United States as a matter of course takes part in this conference on the basis of the common Western line. This followup conference deals with the convocation of a European disarmament conference--something we consider particularly important--which is to resolve on confidence-building measures from the Atlantic to the Urals. The new U.S. Government has agreed to this European disarmament conference and also to the common Western proposals. This means it is right in the midst of very practical East-West negotiations, with the participation of the neutral and nonaligned countries, on confidence building and also arms control in Europe.

According to the logic of this stance, it is also a matter of course that one seeks to resume East-West negotiations, U.S.-Soviet negotiations on medium-range missiles, as soon as possible so that the time does not elapse that we have up until the end of 1983 when the first Western missiles, the medium-range missiles, will be stationed in West Europe. We have a vital interest in having concrete negotiation results up until then.

[Question] Is Washington prepared to negotiate on medium-range missiles without making any preconditions as Brezhnev pledged to do in his talks with you in Moscow?

[Answer] The West's position has always been that these questions must be negotiated and dealt with without any preconditions. In Moscow, it became clear that this is also the Soviet view and that there must be no preconditions which would delay the substantial negotiations on the very complicated and difficult issue of medium-range missiles.

[Question] No few political observers talk about a new version of the Cold War because the Americans are rearming rather than disarming and because Washington wants to retain the decisive say in central issues of the strategic balance. Are all these just wild notions and speculations or is there anything to it?

[Answer] I think we must see first of all that detente policy to which we Germans say that there can be no reasonable alternative--we share this view with all our partners--that this policy of detente naturally has been extremely burdened by the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, which continues, as you know. Naturally, we also are concerned about developments in Poland. These are the reasons why we are interested in the East-West dialogue and its continuation. An example of this was my visit to Moscow. Another example is our view that the visit by Soviet General Secretary Brezhnev here should take place, because such a dialogue can contribute toward creating better international framework conditions for the solution, the peaceful solution of all these problems.

This also includes efforts for achieving a balance on the lowest possible level of armament. Balance means being neither superior nor inferior to anyone. If I may refer to the joint communique again which the U.S. secretary of state and I agreed upon during my visit to Washington in March and which thus far has not been contradicted by anybody there, it states that our goal is a balance, and this on the lowest possible level of armaments, and not superiority of one side or the other.

Naturally, you are absolutely right, there also have been other voices in Washington, but you should explain this the way I did earlier when we discussed another topic. This government is about to formulate its opinion. There are also voices which have different views. I am firmly convinced that, in the end, the new U.S. Government will confirm the course developed by NATO in recent years. This course certainly cannot be pursued without the Americans or against them, but with the participation of the United States and not only with the participation of Democratic U.S. Governments, because 4 years ago the United States had a Republican government. This is a great asset of common policy which will prevail in the end.

VICE ADMIRAL BETHGE DISCUSSES NAVY'S MISSION

DW141255 FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 14 Apr 81 p 5

[Report on Adelbert Weinstein interview with Vice Admiral Bethge, navy inspector]

[Text] Bonn, 13 Apr—As before, the German Navy can fulfill its Atlantic defense mission. "The painful cuts which had to be accepted in the closed session will not affect our striking force and readiness for action. The prerequisite being, however, that we will not have to cope with more cuts. In addition, it is necessary for us to get an offset payment for the inflation, permitting us to continue the complex service, to carry on training and to preserve the branch's high standard of performance." This was told to FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE by Vice Admiral Bethge, inspector of the navy.

This assessment of the situation by the Federal Navy prompted the defense minister to say: "The navy is the most content branch of the armed forces." This formulation is correct, said Vice Admiral Bethge, but it must be placed in proportion. One of his aides said in this connection that if there is a "most content" navy, there is probably also a "more content" and a "content" navy. Such a play on words best characterizes the situation. "The content has nothing to do with the amount of money we dispose of, our content pertains, relatively speaking, to the balance enabling us to be prepared for all kinds of combat.

The navy is used to thinking in terms of systems. The naval forces would never think of building a ship without radar equipment. A submarine without torpedo equipment also would be unthinkable. Sometimes in other branches of the armed forces, a special weapon is introduced without complementary parts, such as a tank without radio equipment or a plane without automatic arms. The navy thinks and acts in a more far-reaching way—"carrier plus arms or effector plus sensor. The factors platform, sensor, effector and the leadership means in connection with naval headquarters always have made us think along the lines of a uniform system." A ship must always be considered a combined system consisting of various arms, installations and carriers of arms.

Since the navy could not scratch entire systems or parts of systems due to the cuts, only the balance of the picture of this branch of the armed forces was somewhat distorted, while the balance itself was preserved. "We would have liked to see more frigates in the destroyer fleet. Now we have some old frigates, and we will get only six new ones, and later on two more of them—making a total of eight." One can live with such a fleet. All old ships can become active in every form of combat. The older constructions also have radar equipment, guns and arms for hunting submarines. They have sensors, effectors and telecommunications. "But these arms systems are not as modern as we would have liked them to be." Modernization is not an end in itself. Every navy strives for perfection because the possible enemy is becoming more perfect too. Every navy is exposed to the hard natural law of war at sea, permitting only those to survive who think, work and act in systems.

From such a basic view, it is not difficult to interpret the strategic mission of the German Navy. "Our navy is the navy of a border sea, with the Baltic, its exits, the North Sea and the Norwegian Sea belonging to our operational area." German and Atlantic naval planning is based on the consideration that central and northern Europe are one strategic unit. "This unit must not be broken up. If in case of defense, it should be impossible to keep the Baltic Sea exits under control, or if decisive positions were lost in Norway, the central European front, that is, the Federal Republic, The Netherlands and Belgium, could not be held any more."

By disrupting connections in the northern section of the Atlantic alliance, a possible adversary would have the opportunity to set up new fronts in the south. The Russian Baltic fleet could also penetrate the Atlantic. "The most important task of the Federal Navy remains therefore the defense of the Baltic Sea exits." The naval and air force units in the northern flank area therefore received the strict mission to hold Atlantic territory and to safeguard the moving of allied troops and materiel to the endangered zone. "For the support of this fight, the American naval air force is of considerable significance."

The aircraft carriers from which these aircraft start need to have freedom of operation, however. "This must be gained by fighting against the strong Soviet Northern Fleet." Therefore, Atlantic defense to which the Federal Navy contributes its share depending on the respective situation will have to be in deep echelons both in the Baltic Sea and in the Arctic Sea. "We must fully use the sea space, the deployment of an aggressor must be harrassed in time, his potential must use itself up. All this requires initiative, quickness and quality."

But within the framework of a strategy of war prevention, the Federal Navy has an important task in peace. "The possible aggressor must be constantly and credibly shown even now that we will defend our sea space. He must be aware that we do not intend to give up our claim to the free use of sea space. The presence of our armed forces must be considered by every possible enemy as a normal state of affairs. The other side must see the signal we give through our presence, which is our preparedness for defense."

However, this signal also is addressed to our friends. The activity of the Federal Navy signals to the Norwegians, for instance, that the Germans feel solidarity with them. "But Norway cannot be asked to defend its coast of 2,000 km alone. The North Sea states must make the necessary contribution to their security."

The demonstration in times of nonwar also includes showing one's flag in areas outside the Atlantic territory. "I see in trips abroad by the Federal Navy a national peace mission." They are planned solely in coordination with the Foreign Ministry. "These trips are of great value for the military and political training of the crews. In addition, they help us recruit personnel."

An analysis of the importance of the German Navy in the Atlantic alliance would be incomplete, Vice Admiral Bethge stressed, if the strategic objective of the Red Fleet was not studied as well. "The Soviets are striving continually to become the number one world power. After bitter disappointments, the Soviet Union has had to realize that land power alone is not enough to pursue power politics on a global scale--by the way, this is something that was already known to the tsars. One must also be a strong naval power. Therefore, the Soviets hold the view that the Red Fleet must become so powerful that it can be victorious in every armed conflict.

The Soviet fleet pursued a shipbuilding program enabling the political and military leaders in Moscow to operate with different combat groups in all our globe's seas over long periods of time. "This facilitates power projection, the transfer of military strength into political action." The Soviet fleet developed its units and enlarged its number to a point that the Red Fleet has "overtaken" many naval forces of the West. The Soviets are superior in long-range missiles launched from the sea as well as in localizing and transmitting data to arms carriers. "On the other hand, they have nothing equivalent to our fighter bombers and aircraft based on U.S. aircraft carriers. The Western military apparatus is also superior in fighting submarines."

Therefore, NATO should spare no efforts to retain its numerical and qualitative superiority in the fields of air reconnaissance and antisubmarine fighting from the air as well as ocean-going antisubmarine fighter units, "because the Red Fleet can use all of its naval capabilities. It doesn't have to worry about the protection of communication lines. Russia is autarchic. Only 4 percent of its raw materals must be imported." The Atlantic alliance, in contrast, depends on the world's raw materials. "Given the present global situation, the protection of the regions from which we buy raw materials and the maritime cover of the West's supply lines seem to me to be the most urgent mission of the Western fleets."

In conclusion, Vice Admiral Bethge said that despite the importance of the naval power, the most important strategic principle must never be left out of account, however. "In every phase of an armed conflict, naval forces will have to be put into action to support land forces. Only ground troops can defend or reconquer a terrain, lebensraum or territory. Naval forces, on the other hand, transport the means, they safeguard the supply and they fight the enemy in the forward-based operational or strategically important zones."

BANKS AGREE TO DEFER POLISH CREDIT REPAYMENTS

LD141942 Hamburg DPA in German 1846 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Frankfurt, 14 Apr (DPA)--Banks in the Federal Republic have allowed Poland to defer $4.5 billion in credit repayments which have come due. According to a press release, after a meeting today in the Dresdner Bank in Frankfurt, the banks declared "their readiness in principle, as part of an immediate action program, to suspend initially all repayments due or falling due between 26 March and 30 June 1981."

According to the release, this readiness is conditional on regular payment of all interest falling due. The principle of equal treatment of all international creditors must be observed. The banks in the Federal Republic proceeded from the expectation that the representatives of the 15 governments concerned would sign a protocol in Paris on 27 April on the medium-term rescheduling of state and state-guaranteed credits. Another prerequisite, in line with international harmonization, is the conclusion of corresponding agreements with banks in the other (?hard currency) countries.

PRESS COMMENTS ON ECONOMIC EXPERTS' FORECAST

DW140953 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 14 Apr 81

[From the press review]

[Text] MANNHEIMER MORGER writes: There won't be an economic upward trend in the spring of 1981, the first spring swallows will fly in at the beginning of next year at the earliest.

All statements by experts or their public listeners in the field of politics or economy reflect deep insecurity regarding the further development of the German economy. Since the first oil crisis, economic developments have become more and more unpredictable. An individual country is less and less able to steer economic developments because too many unpredictable persons outside the borders grab the helm. With that background, it is more and more difficult for economic experts to replace vagueness in their predictions by concrete statements. The expertise supplied yesterday is an example.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG of Munich notes: This expertise indicates that the monetary policy is the reason for the economic part of the decline of investments and of the social product. The opinion of the experts indicates that the state saves money in the field of expenditures which would promote some growth in the future, because it does not have the courage to keep the current collective consumption within narrower limits, and the wage partners look like horse traders who cover up the fact that the working people will be the ones still cheated in the end. This is tough stuff for a country that is very proud of the art of economic policy and the handling of special conflicts, even if the criticism voiced in an academic language reads milder than the situation looks.

RHEINISCHE POST of Duesseldorf maintains: Germans live far beyond their means. It seems unfortunate that all responsible persons still don't understand and realize it. The trade unions and some SPD politicians demand programs to crank up the economy, although it ought to be clear that this economy doesn't suffer from slight circulation problems, but from a grave structural weakness regarding achievements. It cannot be eliminated with economic stimulators to be financed with new state debts, but only with the cutting out of the numerous factors handicapping performance.

HESSISCHE-NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE of Kassel points out: If the predications of the experts are correct, problems will increase in a downward economic trend up to the end of this year, When the state has use of the Federal Bank to make foreign loans, little leeway remains for economic incentives. But if more signs are set generally, indicating that investments and work activity will pay off, chances for an upward trend would not be so bad. The Federal Bank, which was incorrectly scolded so much by the institutes, should continue its persistent stability policy, seeing to it that the necessary basis for this will be preserved--that is more important than intentionally cheaper credits.

WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE of Essen says: All in all, little news was heard and even less of an economic policy change. What the five institutes sang was another refrain of the economic policy tune: Instead of acting, one ought to wait for better economic times. It must be assumed, however, that we would then make the same economic policy mistakes again. It seems that economic policy is as little immune against the fall of man as the economy with regard to its ups and downs.

RUHR-NACHRICHTEN of Dortmund writes: The experts have pointed out to the economic politicians now only the grave crisis. They have simultaneously offered solution possibilities which are worth being examined. It isn't surprising that they maintain that a key position is held by the wage policy and the policy of high interests rates. High interest rates as well as high wage costs equally handicap the preparedness to make investments. The curtailment of subsidies and a thinning out of social benefits should be seriously viewed with regard to their being misused. But all efforts cannot obscure the fact that the fat years are over and that the economic problems cannot all be equally well solved.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU comments: The public will not become much wiser after this new hunt of the economic experts for the culprits of the misery, because the modern call for a curtailment of investment handicaps and social pampering, voiced by the scientists, remains as uncertain as the ensuing consequences. The dilemma cannot have been caused by a misuse of the social network because why should the many unemployed in the Ruhr area be lazier than the few ones in prosperous Swabia? Is it the old tune: Those always supposed to tighten their belts are those who have nothing much anyway?

PAPER VIEWS BONN'S APPROACH TO ARMS CONTROL TALKS

DW141041 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 14 Apr 81 p 1

[Commentary signed G-N.: "Sedatives"]

[Text] The Federal Government indefatigably states that both parts of the dual decision on medium range arms are equally important to it: preparations for the deployment and efforts aimed at negotiations with the Soviet Union on these arms. Since the weekend, since the visit of Secretary of State Haig to Bonn, the federal foreign minister also adds that the U.S. Government has bascially similar ideas.

That is a bit hasty, but it may be correct before long, once the U.S. Government will have coordinated its foreign policy. Secretary of Defense Weinberger last week described more the mood of the Reagan government vis-a-vis armament negotiations than depicting its line--which does not yet exist. Haig tried to calm the Europeans. Naturally, it would be wrong to show Western eagerness to negotiate now when the Poles are being threatened by the Soviet Union. Eagerness does not fit into the political situation, although it can be seen at a close look that arms control is or should not be something one does for the sake of the adversary or "detente;" but only for the purpose of improving one's own security if possible.

One should also not strive for arms control negotiations to appease the domestic opposition--in this case, the opposition in one's own ranks. The Federal Government pretends that the most important matter to be discussed in the alliance is the beginning of negotiations on medium-range arms. It presses the Americans to negotiate as if not a day should be lost. The Federal Government knows also that pressure does not help any. The West can negotiate on medium-range arms only once it knows how possible results will fit into the strategic overall balance. But the U.S. Government still must make up its mind with regard to the new balance. Washington has not yet advanced that far. Schmidt and Genscher know it too. More than preparatory and exploratory talks with the Soviet Union cannot be expected this year. The Federal Government should not withhold that from its own public--in order to cool off the debate.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE DISCUSSES LEBANON

LD141555 Paris LE MONDE in French 11 Apr 81 p 40

[Text] Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet on 9 April made a statement to the National Assembly Foreign Affairs Committee.

According to a communique published at the end of the hearing, the minister expressed the French Government's and people's emotion with respect to the tragic ordeal to which the Lebanese people have again been subjected. The minister informed the committee of the report prepared by Hubert Argod on his visit to Lebanon. This visit has confirmed the extreme gravity of the situation at Zahlah.

Jean Francois-Poncet immediately sent a message to Syrian Foreign Minister Khaddam, asking him to facilitate the withdrawal of the wounded from that city, in particular those who are to receive medical treatment in France. In the course of the night, he was advised of the Syrian minister's consent. Contacts immediately were established with a view to carrying out this humanitarian operation.

Furthermore, the government has been considering various diplomatic initiatives which could be taken in the international sphere and also within a UN framework with a view to supporting the Lebanese authorities' efforts and securing an effective cease-fire.

Maurice Couve de Murville, chairman of the National Assembly Foreign Affairs Committee, expressed support for the humanitarian action thus started. He stated that in his opinion the main thing was to find out what kind of initiative France would take in the political sphere in order to achieve a settlement.

Eduard Frederic-Dupont, a Paris deputy affiliated with the RPR, stated that France's political will seems strangely weak. He expressed surprise that no sanction against the Syrian Government has been envisaged. Jacques Baumel (RPR, Hauts-de-Seine) asked whether France intends to consult its European partners to determine a common attitude.

Replying, Francois-Poncet remarked that France's immediate humanitarian action had fulfilled Lebanese public expectations and that France had contacted the Syrian authorities in a most firm manner. He recalled that France has continually maintained that peace in Lebanon can be restored only if that country is protected from foreign interference.

LE FIGARO EXAMINES NEW U.S. ATTITUDES IN NEAR EAST

LD131329 Paris LE FIGARO in French 9 Apr 81 pp 1, 4

[Paul-Marie de la Gorce article: "What Remains of Camp David?"]

[Text] There can be no doubt following U.S. Secretary of State Haig's tour of the Near East that that part of the world is where the new concepts of international relations professed by the Reagan administration are being applied. The fact that everything has been deliberately reduced to the question of East-West conflict and looked at and dealt with from that viewpoint is bound to lead to a significant change in U.S. policy.

This has been confirmed in recent days. Haig has very clearly shown his intention to relegate the Israeli-Arab conflict and any possible solution to it to the background and to concentrate all his efforts on bringing all his interlocutors into the framework of a single political undertaking and a single strategy, both prompted by one single concern--struggle against the Soviet Union.

A corollary of this is obviously the intention to relegate to the background the implementation of the Camp David accords or, at least, to look at it from a different viewpoint. In any case, all this was quite predictable. At the time the accords were concluded, several prominent Republicans expressed some serious reservations which Haig himself echoed at a Senate Subcommittee session on 27 April by declaring that "these accords...have discouraged Saudi Arabia's generally constructive attitude toward the restoration of peace in the Near East."

Obviously, this does not mean that the Reagan administration intends to officially repudiate the Camp David process, since the United States has derived too many advantages from it to do so. Not only has the dismemberment of the former Arab camp, as a result of the path followed by Egypt and the other states' opposition, rendered any new conflict comparable with the 1967 and 1973 conflicts most unlikely, but President as-Sadat has turned his country into a staunch ally of America on a par with Israel, thus providing Washington with some new and formidable means for action in the Near East. However, the Reagan administration also knows to what deadlock the Camp David accords have led and has no intention of letting itself be trapped in it. In particular, it knows that these accords have neither led nor can lead to a settlement of the Palestinian problem, which is at the very heart of the Israeli-Arab conflict. Therefore, what it wants is not to cling to them, but to turn the Camp David process in a direction consistent with its own objectives.

What the U.S. Government seeks is to achieve a rallying of the greatest possible number of Near East states within one political and strategic organization directed against the Soviet Union. This organization is to be supported by a permanent military deployment in the region. The initial decisions with respect to this point were adopted by the Carter administration. It was planned at that time that the American naval and naval air forces in the Indian Ocean should be supported by port and air installations which would be granted to them in four places--Al-Masirah in the Sultanate of Oman, Ras Banas in Egypt, Berbera in Somalia and Mombasa in Kenya.

However, the Reagan administration would like to go much further than that. First, the deployment of American forces in the Indian Ocean is to be complemented by an equally permanent "land" presence. It will no longer be a question merely of port or air facilities--security and protection requirements, stockpiling of materiel and, in particular, the possible use of these support points for its "rapid deployment force" have promoted the American command to ask for real bases. At the same time, the idea of an American military presence, instead of the international force envisaged by the Camp David accords, which it has been impossible to organize, is being entertained.

Finally, the Reagan administration is determined to involve all its partners in the region in its overall strategy. The case of the 62 F-15 aircraft sold to Saudi Arabia is significant in this respect: It is a case of providing these aircraft with additional devices which will give them a considerable offensive capacity. Of course, Israel opposed this. But the U.S. administration considers that it has replied to its objectives, even if these objectives are still being voiced officially and with vehemence. It has quite simply given Israel additional economic and military aid. It has thus attained several goals simultaneously--seeming to respect a certain balance between an Arab country and Israel, strengthening in the military respect two countries regarded equally as U.S. allies and involving both in the same policy and the same strategy directed exclusively against the Soviet Union.

It might be though that the sum total of U.S. concepts as they can be seen to be put into practice is seemingly logical and coherent. But it is clearly at odds with the French concept of Near East affairs which is also, in principle, the concept of the EEC. For the French Government, to want to combat Soviet influence in the region without resolving the Israeli-Arab conflict and the Palestinian question means reasoning and acting in a confused way.

The French Government believes, with reason, that it is precisely the protraction and exacerbation of this conflict which gives the Soviet Union opportunities for intervention, obtain allies for it and supply it with room for maneuver which would otherwise probably be closed to it. Defending this French analysis during his trip to Washington, Francois-Poncet rightly reminded his U.S. interlocutors that there has never been any dominant or even important communist party in any Arab country.

But this debate unfortunately isn't merely theoretical and intellectual. Events in Lebanon are a tragic reminder that the results of the Israeli-Arab conflict are still making themselves felt, whatever the imposing strategic edifices behind which people would like to forget it. In March, commando operations and artillery fire from the Israeli Army and Commander Haddad's militia were responsible for the deaths of 200 people in south Lebanon. Whatever reasons prevailed on Begin's government, this recrudescence of military activity inevitably is going to entail a retaliation against the Christian sectors held by the Phalangists in central and west Lebanon, these latter being regarded as virtual Israeli allies not only by the Syrians and Palestinians but also by all the political leaders of the Lebanese Muslim communities.

Observers on the spot in the Near East were aware of this and Western governments were informed over a week ago. It seems that several important Israeli leaders, particularly Chief of Staff General Eytan, were in favor of using a wide-ranging military operation to intervene against the Syrian and Palestinian forces. But it is established that Haig recommended a postponement: A new Israeli-Arab conflict, whose ramifications no one could predict, would have been totally at odds with his immediate aims.

For the moment, the dramatic radicalization of differences and conflicts in the Near East has resulted in Lebanon being more divided than ever, and the restoration of its unity seems even more remote and problematical. This is a new and tragic consequence of the world's disastrous inability to effect a fundamental solution to the Near East crisis.

PAPER SURVEYS PROGRESS IN EEC MEMBERSHIP TALKS

LD100859 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Apr 81 pp 1, 3

[Joao Vale de Almeida dispatch]

[Excerpts] Brussels--Portugal and the EEC Commission yesterday reached agreement on our country's membership timetable. However, the Ten's internal difficulties make it impossible to set a precise date. Minister for European Integration Alvaro Barreto told DIARIO DE NOTICIAS that it was agreed that entry in 1983 is "practically impossible," but there are good chances of it taking place in 1984.

Alvaro Barreto and Foreign Minister Goncalves Pereira met for an hour with President of the EEC Commission Gaston Thorn and Lorenzo Natali, vice chairman in charge of matters concerning expansion. Previously, the Portuguese ministers met with Natali for 90 minutes.

The EEC leaders assured the Portuguese leaders that the EEC will do its utmost to accelerate negotiations but did not conceal the fact that the divergences within the EEC on topics vital to its future preclude a definite guarantee with regard to stepping up the negotiation process. For its part, the Commission pledged to expedite the dossiers in hand and Thorn informed the Portuguese ministers that the EEC executive already has adopted proposals on the transport dossier and that it will very soon do the same with the foreign relations and agriculture dossiers, as DIARIO DE NOTICIAS reported yesterday. These proposals will then be submitted to the Ten's council of ministers, which will decide what stance to adopt in negotiations with Portugal.

With regard to the customs union dossier, which the ministers of the Ten have had since October, an EEC spokesman disclosed that Thorn and Natali guaranteed that the EEC will do everything possible to help resolve the existing divergences among the member states regarding Portuguese textile exports, which are preventing the approval of the EEC's negotiation stance in this important field.

In connection with this point, Antonio Barreto told DIARIO DE NOTICIAS that Portugal considers "unacceptable any restriction on the free movement of textiles, following membership." Barreto pointed out that textiles account for 30 percent of Portugal's exports and added that "it is inconceivable that membership prejudice Portugal in what is such an important sector of our economy."

Thorn and Natali responded positively to Portugal's request for a complete separation of the Portuguese and Spanish membership processes. They stressed, however, that the simultaneous membership of the two Iberian countries would be advantageous to the EEC. Alvaro Barreto told us that the EEC would agree not to insist on simultaneous membership in the event of one of the processes being excessively delayed. This position corresponds in principle to Portugal's fears that a possible delay in Spain's membership process, which poses considerably more problems to the EEC, would have negative repercussions on our country's membership process.

TWO MAIN UNIONS DECLARE 3-DAY STRIKE 14-17 APRIL

NC141257 Paris AFP in English 1250 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] Lisbon, 14 Apr (AFP)--Public services were seriously disrupted today by the start of a three-day strike on pay called by the two main unions, the communist CGTP [General Federation of Portuguese Workers] and the Social-Democrat UGT [General Union of Workers]. This is the longest public sector strike since the April 1975 revolution. Ministries were affected along with regional and local government services, hospitals, customs and fire services. After Easter, teachers are to stage a three-day strike. The two unions have 400,000 civil services members, who are claiming a 22 percent pay rise. The government is offering 17 percent and says inflation does not allow a higher offer. The government is also postponing the uprating of long service bonus and meal subsidies. Several thousand civil servants yesterday staged a demonstration outside the Ministry of Administrative Reform here calling for reopening of talks.

SENATE PASSES DRAFT LAW ON REBELLION, TERRORISM

LD132000 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1900 GMT 13 Apr 81

[(Juan Ramon de la Cuadra) dispatch]

[Text] The Senate has approved in plenary session a draft organic law modifying certain articles of the penal code and the code of military justice. The articles in question are those relating to rebellion and terrorism. This draft law has already been approved by the Congress of Deputies, but it will now have to go back to the Congress because the Senate has made some changes.

Under the original draft, the offense of rebellion applies to those who rise to abolish the constitution, try to remove the head of state, prevent the holding of free elections, dissolve the Cortes or prevent it from holding sessions. The offense is now to be considered to apply also tho those who launch any attack against the Cortes, the Council of Ministers or the legislative assemblies of autonomous communities, the councils of government of those communities or their members.

The draft also provides for prosecution for conspiracy or incitment to commit or for attempts to justify the aforementioned offenses and terrorist actions through the printed word, radio, television or any other medium. Another article in the draft provides for prosecution of those have come to be known as intelligence commandos of terrorist groups.

Basque senators voiced doubts about certain juridical technicalities, particularly the formulation of the reference to justification of rebellion or terrorism.

For their part, Socialist senators said that the government's original draft had been significantly improved upon, as had the version passed by the Congress of Deputies. They said that freedom of expression is not restricted in the amended draft of the law.

DEFENSE MINISTRY CRITICIZES TEJERO ARTICLE

LD132046 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] The Ministry of Defense has issued a note in connection with the article which Lt Col Antonio Tejero published last Saturday in the newspaper ABC.

Among other things, the note points out that Lt Col Tejero has been indicated on a charge of military rebellion and that his actions on 23 February was at variance with the spirit of the Civil Guard. To attack the constitution, it adds, is to violate the century-old tradition of the Civil Guard and puts personal feelings before discipline which is the basis of all military conduct.

The ministry also expressed its regret that a newspaper such as ABC should have given frontpage treatment to Lt Col Tejero's article, and said that editorial published by the paper cannot excuse what is in effect yet another attack upon the discipline and unity of the armed forces.

APPEALS AGAINST COUP PLOT INDICTMENTS REJECTED

LD101422 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Excerpt] The Supreme Council of Military Justice has rejected the appeals submitted by defense lawyers against the indictments issued against Major General Torres Rojas and Navy Captain Menedez Vives, according to sources at the office of information and public relations of the Ministry of Defense.

POLICE REPORT TWO KILLINGS IN BASQUE REGION

NC141130 Paris AFP in English 1112 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Bilbao, northern Spain, 14 Apr (AFP)--Two retired civil guards (paramilitary police) were killed in the Basque region of northern Spain today, police said. Early today retired Lieutenant Oswaldo Jose Rodriguez, 60, was shot in the head in San Sebastian. Shortly afterwards retired Commander Luis Cadalso San Hoser, 68, was shot twice in the head as he was leaving a church in Basauri, 15 kms (9 miles) south of here. Witnesses to the killing said a girl and a youth were responsible.

MINISTER REVIEWS FOREIGN RELATIONS WITH DEPUTIES

LD091501 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 3 Apr 81 p 9

[Excerpt] Madrid, 2 Apr--Spain's foreign policy will be determined on the basis of consultation and dialogue among the political forces, [Foreign Minister] Perez Llorca told the Congress of Deputies Foreign Affairs Committee today. With regard to relations with France, he said that "if France's position on Basque Homeland and Freedom terrorism reflects a basic policy, which is consistently denied by Paris, I consider it a suicidal policy." He added that contacts are not yet entirely satisfactory. He said that it will be ascertained whether better cooperation exists following the elections in France.

Regarding the fishing agreement with Morocco, he said that it involves two lines of credit and two agreements. He stressed that the question of the transit of Moroccan citrus fruits through Spain has been "forgotten." With regard to Gibraltar he said that there is an ongoing dialogue and that there must be no return to the former status quo, which discriminated against Spanish citizens. He added that "we are moving in the right direction."

JUAN CARLOS RECEIVES U.S. SENATE DELEGATION

LD101418 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Excerpt] King Juan Carlos this morning received in audience a delegation of senators from the United States led by the leader of the Republican majority in the Senate, Howard Baker. Later they met a delegation from the Spanish Senate. Pedro Fernandez Cespades now reports on this meeting:

The Republican and Democratic representatives from the U.S. Senate were reminded today in Madrid that Spain is a democratic, European country with an American and Atlantic (?projection), with (?established) links in the Mediterranean and Africa, and, in short, with a complete foreign policy. (?In case) the U.S. senators (?had forgotten), they were once again told by [Democratic Center Union Deputy] Ignacio Camunas that Spain is aware of the fact that it is not a great power, but an intermediate one, and this imposes a clear realism on our foreign policy. During the meeting, the Democratic Center Union and the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party clearly expressed their positions on Spain's entry into NATO.

NORDIC RED CROSS RESPONDS TO POLISH AID REQUEST

LD141035 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 10 Apr 81 p 11

[Text] Red Cross organizations in the five Nordic countries have reached agreement on sending joint aid to the Polish Red Cross. The aid will be worth 430,000 markkaa. The deliveries are at the request of the Polish Red Cross organization. The aid embraces 27 tons of food, including 6 tons of canned meats, 6 tons of milk powder and 4 tons of edible fats. The goods will be shipped to Poland from Finland. The Polish Red Cross will use the food to help needy children, old people and the sick.

DENMARK

LEADER CALLS NUCLEAR ZONE DEBATE 'SUPERFLUOUS'

LD141419 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 12 Apr 81 p 7

[Interview with Danish Prime Minister Anker Joergensen by Sigyn Aleniu; no date given]

[Excerpt] "Of course there are differences of opinion among the Nordic countries," Anker Joergensen said in an interview with HUFVUDSTADSBLADET before he left for his visit to Finland. Despite the fact that there is so much cooperation between the Nordic countries, and despite the fact that we are very close to each other, it is clear that we cannot always have the same views. But the important thing is that we respect each other. Denmark is a member of the EEC and NATO, Finland is neither, but this has never been an obstacle to intensive and constructive cooperation.

"The debate on the Nordic countries as a nuclear-free zone, no, it cannot be really be called troublesome or embarrassing--but it is pretty unnecessary," Joergensen said. "The Nordic countries are nuclear-free. So a discussion which advocates that the Nordic countries should be nuclear-free is therefore completely superfluous. As a NATO member Denmark has always stressed in its cooperation with NATO that it does not want to have nuclear arms on its territory--and NATO has respected this. What could be usefully debated is a larger nuclear-free zone around the Nordic nuclear-free area.

"There ought to be a more detailed explanation of what Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev really intends with his in-itself interesting proposal (put forward at the party congress) for larger zones for confidence-building measures. As long as words and proposals are left hanging in the air without its being clear what they really mean, they have hardly any value, not even for the disarmament of which Denmark is such a clear supporter. The same is also true of the proposals from the Madrid conference for a European disarmament conference--we already have a whole series of disarmament initiatives underway. Denmark has given its support to the French proposal, but the government's position is that we would all do well to first find out clearly what point we have reached in the international work toward disarmament before we start thinking about new paths to follow.

"These ideas--in the international dialogue, too--should be given concrete substance, to the extent this is possible. What we need is disarmament, not disarmament meetings. It is not always those who shout loudest who say what is most important or those who say most who reach the objective quicker. Everywhere there is too much talk and too little action."

[Question] Should security questions be discussed by the Nordic Council?

[Answer] I raised the matter myself at the recent Nordic Council meeting in Copenhagen--this probably amounts to an answer to this question: I honestly do not think that like children playing blindman's buff we can ban such an important and central issue when Nordic politicians meet. The sort of meetings we should have and the form they should take are questions of lesser importance. But questions of security and foreign policy cannot be banned from the Nordic forum. The issue has nevertheless been raised at every council session, despite the fact that we have in fact never intended that it should be discussed. It would be better if we were more honest!

FINLAND

AUTHORITIES DENY INCREASED NATO ACTIVITY IN BALTIC

LD091622 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Report by Marjo Nikkilae--live or recorded]

[Summary] "In the last few days, Finnish attitudes toward events in Poland have been analyzed by, among others, FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG, published in the Federal Republic of Germany, and THE TIMES of Britain." According to an article in THE TIMES yesterday on the foreign pages, the aggravation of the internal situation in Poland was also visible in the Baltic region in the form of increased NATO air intelligence collection. "The paper also claims Finland protested to the West Germans and French about violating Finnish territory. Departmental head Klaus Toernudd from the Foreign Ministry denies that such protests have been lodged. According to Toernudd, Finnish airspace in the Baltic region has not been violated for at least a couple of years. The general staff says the Finnish authorities have not recently noticed anything different from the usual [words indistinct]."

DPRK GAINS 3-YEAR POSTPONEMENT OF DEBT PAYMENT

LD131634 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Finland and the DPRK have agreed on new arrangements to pay for cellulose, paper and cardboard machines delivered to Korea in 1974. At the end of the talks, which went on in Helsinki for 2 weeks, it was agreed that North Korea will be granted a 3-year postponement of its debts. The Korean debt for the delivery of the equipment, including interest and currency changes, is about FM180 million. The Koreans are due to pay interest on the debt for the whole period of repayments and postponement.

The Export Guarantee Fund has conducted talks on the outstanding debts on several occasions during the latter half of the 1970's. The last agreement on a postponement of payments with the DPRK, which is suffering from payment difficulties, was signed in February 1978.

CONSTRUCTION OF RAILCAR PLANT IN USSR POSSIBLE

LD091449 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 3 Apr 81 p 7

[Text] Negotiations have begun with the Soviet Union for the supply of railroad cars from Finland to the Soviet Union. If the plan is realized, a new car construction plant will have to be built in Finland. Reports indicate that the Soviet Union is interested in twice the number of cars Finland is now exporting--that is, at least 3,000 cars.

Negotiations between Railways Minister I.G. Pavlovskiy and Transport Minister Veikko Saarto dealt chiefly with the production of freightcars for the Soviet Union. The question will next be discussed at the June meeting of the Finnish-Soviet economic commission in Helsinki.

As far as is known, it is mainly the Finnish firm of Rautaruukki which is interested in supplying the cars. The company has conducted negotiations with Soviet representatives. At the end of last year Rautaruukki and V/O Mashinimport agreed on the supply of 2,700 steel containers for freight transport to the Soviet Union. Rautaruukki's container factory in Oulu is capable of an annual production of 5,000 containers. As well as containers, Finland will also have the chance of building containers [as published] suitable for railroad traffic and other freightcars. It seems that Rautaruukki is also interested in supplying these.

Director Panu Kaapala of Finnish State Railroads stated that the workshops at Boele, which are responsible for domestic production of freightcars, could also be involved in the project in some way or other. The Boele workshops have a capacity of 1,400 cars per year, but in recent years this capacity has not been fully utilized.

The ministerial negotiations also discussed the question of whether the planned depot for freightcars in the Leningrad area should be built with Finnish labor. At least two Finnish tenders for the depot and the adjoining housing estate have been submitted already. The repair factory for railroad cars which is to be built in Tosno, 40 km south of Leningrad, will have a capacity of 6,000 car repairs per year. The project also includes the construction of schools, shops and a housing center. According to Transport Minister Veikko Saarto, the project's value amounts to several hundred million markkaa.

Railways Minister I.G. Pavlovskiy announced that the Soviet Union is ready to bypass the already agreed freight quotas so that 55 percent of the agreed foreign trade goods for the whole year can be shipped during the first half of this year. Pavloskiy also expressed the hope that the Finns would delay railroad cars less than in the past and at the same time reduce the number of cars which come back empty.

NORWAY

BRUNDTLAND ELECTED LEADER OF UNITED LABOR PARTY

LD130947 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 6 Apr 81 p 3

[Excerpts] If necessary, Gro Harlem Brundtland is prepared to work with other parties to stay in power after 14 September [the general election] and does not want to exclude the possibility of cooperation with the centrist parties. Gro Harlem Brundtland has united the Labor Party for the fight for government power. The political "ballast" from the party's national conference she will take into the campaign includes such controversial issues as introduction of an interest rate ceiling, a 6-hour work day and extension of the Nordland [railroad] line. "We are agreed that NATO now provides the foundation of our policy, but this is not a truth fixed for all eternity", new party chairman Gro Harlem Brundtland said at the press conference following the national conference. The national conference voted unanimously that nuclear-free zones "in the Nordic area" are the Labor Party's objective, but Harlem Brundtland said the actual shaping of policy in this sphere must take place with close party-government cooperation and contact with Norway's allies.

TURKMEN PROMISES TALKS PROGRESS AFTER ELECTIONS

NC140827 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 14 Apr 81 p 1

[Special dispatch from New York dated 13 April]

[Text] Diplomatic circles at the UN headquarters have said that the talks between U.S. Secretary of State Haig and Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen, beyond the usual expression of interest in the dialogue, have dealt with the substance of the Cyprus problem. It is rumored among diplomatic circles in New York that Mr Turkmen promised Mr Haig that after the Turkish Cypriot general elections the Turkish side will submit concrete proposals on the constitutional and territorial aspects of the Cyprus problem.

As has already been announced, the Turkish Cypriot elections will be held next July and the submission of proposals after the elections is due to the wish of the Turkish leadership to avoid a controversy on the proposals on the Cyprus problem during the election campaign.

After seizing power in Turkey, the military themselves gave the impression that they would decisively proceed with the creation of conditions that would promote the Cyprus problem through the intercommunal dialogue. However, the delay by the Turkish side in the submission of proposals--apart from the fact that it constitutes practical admission of the causes for the filibustering in the intercommunal talks--gives rise to many questions among the diplomatic circles in New York.

Basically, these circles have strong doubts, backed by long experience about Turkish inconsistency in connection with Turkish promises on the Cyprus problem. The diplomatic circles express the view that the fresh Turkish assurances to Mr Haig will prove nebulous, because they aim at impressing the Congress and the U.S. public.

Mr Turkmen has discussed the Cyprus problem in Washington within the framework of his agonizing goal for open U.S. backing of the Turkish military regime and for more military and economic aid to Ankara.

The appraisals by the same circles tend to agree that the Turkish promises constitute a maneuver in order to neutralize any reaction from congressional circles to the grant of fresh aid to Ankara in view of the obligation by the Congress (at the time of the lifting of the "embargo") that Turkey should be given aid only when it contributes to progress in the Cyprus problem.

DISAGREEMENT CONTINUES ON NICOSIA AIRPORT ISSUE

NC140824 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 14 Apr 81 p 1

[Text] There is serious divergence of views between the Cyprus Government and the foreign experts who have been invited to advise the government on the question of the Nicosia airport. According to our reports, after having studied every detail of the airport question, the foreign experts consider the suggestion to link this question with that of Famagusta wrong. The attorney general of the republic, who has been requested to give legal advice, has also put forward a similar view.

However, the government has prepared its proposals on the question of the airport and it is ready to discuss this question if the UN secretary general suggests such discussion after the elections that will be held in the occupied territories.

The Center Union Party, the Democratic Rally and EDEK have disagreed for a long time with the decision of the government to link the question of the airport with that of Famagusta.

The Turks have asked the government to discuss the question of the airport unofficially, without including on the talks agenda. As is already known, the suggestion to link the question of the airport with that of Famagusta has been rejected by the Turkish Cypriots.

Government Denies Dispute

NC141805 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] In reply to a question the government spokesman said that no experts have been called to advise the government on the Nicosia airport issue. Consequently, he added, a press report that there is a serious divergence of views between the government and the foreign experts is not true.

ROLANDHIS TO PROTEST DENKTAS' TITLE DEED ACTION

NC091428 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis has instructed Ambassador Mavrommatis, Cyprus' permanent representative at the United Nacions, to file a protest with UN Secretary General Waldheim against the unacceptable statements made yesterday by Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas. In his statements, Denktas said he would issue to Turkish Cypriots title deeds for Greek Cypriot property in the occupied areas and that measures are now being taken in that direction.

DENKTAS REFUSES TO SIGN MISSING PERSONS AGREEMENT

NC150644 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 15 Apr 81 p 1

[Excerpt] Under various pretexts and despite UN efforts, Denktas refuses to sign the agreement on missing persons which has recently been reached with the committee on missing persons.

The delay in signing the agreement has caused concern to the government, which at this point does not know the exact reasons for Denktas' refusal to sign it.

The question of missing persons will be discussed in the next few months at the Council of Europe. The Committee of Ministers has already taken a decision in this connection.

EDEK LEADER LISSARIDHIS RETURNS FROM DAMASCUS

NC142011 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] Lissaridhis, chairman of the socialist party EDEK, returned from Damascus, where he spoke at the opening meeting of the Palestinian National Council. In his speech, Lissaridhis referred to the common problems of Cyprus, Palestine and progressive forces in the area and to the need for cooperation toward a common goal, which should be the recovery of lost fatherlands and the guaranteeing of the people's inalienable rights.

During his stay in Damascus, Lissaridhis had contacts with the leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, 'Arafat, and other members of the organization's leadership. He also had talks with the supreme command of the Syrian ruling party Al-Ba'th.

U.S. EXPRESSES CONCERN OVER NEORION SHIP REPAIRS

NC141625 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 14 Apr 81 p 1

[St. Evstathiadhis' 13 April dispatch from New York]

[Text] The Pentagon continues to be dissatisfied with the "compromise turn," as it calls it, which the issue of Neorion, in Siros [Island] has taken. The Pentagon has recently expressed to the Greek Government, in an indirect but quite clear manner, its "disappointment" because "the issue continues to exist," implying that it could also become a question for discussion at the forthcoming ministerial conference in Rome.

Recently, the Greek Government officially terminated the contract for the maintenance of Soviet auxiliary vessels at Neorion, Siros. But, at the same time, it renewed the agreement for the free use of Neorion by ships of the Soviet merchant fleet, according to responsible NATO sources in Brussels who maintain that "Athens apparently has preferred a compromise solution to a question that had occupied them for a long time."

Moreover, the Pentagon's stand indicates a divergence of views within the Reagan administration on the issue of Neorion, Siros. This is so because [circles] in the State Department give the assurance that, as far as they know, there is no "problem" with the Greek Government at this time concerning Neorion, Siros. However, they do not rule out that the question may be raised for discussion at the Rome conference. It is noted that the Greek stand has finally compelled the Russians to accept a renewal of the contract only for Soviet commercial vessels, whereas they initially linked this contract with the renewal of the agreement for the maintenance of the Soviet Navy's auxiliary vessels.

The U.S. military justified their "disappointment" the other day over the compromise turn saying that those "appearing" as Soviet commercial vessels are actually part of the Soviet Navy in the Mediterranean and, specifically, basic units transporting supplies and arms for Soviet warships. In recent months, the Greek side has repeatedly refuted this allegation by supplying even lists of Soviet merchant vessels that had been serviced at Neorion, Siros, proving that they were clearly commercial vessels.

Dispatches by U.S. correspondents from Athens a few days ago noted that a $2-million contract was recently signed between a Soviet shipping company and Neorion, Siros, for repairing a Soviet tugboat. This is the first to be repaired this year at Neorion, Siros.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT ISSUED ON AEGEAN VIOLATIONS

NC142020 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] This evening the Foreign Ministry issued the following statement: Regarding the 8 April 1981 air incidents that compose on the one hand the entry by formations of Turkish military aircraft in the Athens FIR [Flight Information Region] area without adherance to the ICAO [International Civil Aviation Organization] regulations and, on the other hand, the violation of Greece's national airspace in the Aegean, the following explanations were given by the Turkish Ambassador in Athens to the secretary general of the Foreign Ministry, and the secretary general of the Turkish Ministry [as heard] to the Greek Ambassador in Ankara.

Awaiting these explanations, which would contribute to giving to these serious incidents the appropriate dimensions, the Foreign Ministry avoided making a hasty announcement and assessment of events. The Turkish side has stated that the 8 April exercise had been planned to take place exclusively within the Istanbul FIR limits and having its objective the protection ofthe Turkish national area.

For this reason the necessary announcements had not been foreseen. According to the Turkish version, a few sorties of small duration into the Athens FIR were noted. The Greek side stressed that the entry into the Athens FIR of formations of Turkish military aircraft, even in the form that is being put forth, constituted deliberate violations of the ICAO regulations which dictate the issue of a NOTAM and the submission of flight plans. As regards the violations of our national airspace, the Turkish side stated that Turkish pilots had explicit orders to respect Greek airspace. Appropriate Turkish authorities are examining Greek charges which, if confirmed, would lead to the severe punishment of the responsible persons.

The Turkish Government apologizes in advance in case it is ascertained that Turkish aircraft have indeed violated the 6-mile Greek airspace.

The Greek side has stressed that the reported violations of the national 10-mile airspace have been absolutely ascertained and, in most cases, have occurred in the zone within the 6-mile coastal limit.

The Turkish side expressed the hope that these incidents would not restrain the progress of negotiations on airspace which are being held at various levels and, more generally, that they will not make cooperation between the two governments more difficult.

In its reply, the Greek side returned to the seriousness of the 8 April incidents which have caused reasonable emotion and justified reaction among Greek public opinion and our armed forces. Furthermore, the statement concludes, the Greek side has stressed the need that the Turkish side take all necessary measures for the prevention of incidents like those of 8 April which inevitably hinder the improvement of the atmosphere of Greek-Turkish relations that both governments strive for.

AKROPOLIS Warns Ankara

NC141639 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 14 Apr 81 p 2

[From the "Laconic" column: "They Play With Fire"]

[Text] We were beginning to believe that more sober and consistent thoughts were already prevailing in Ankara and to hope for the consolidation of a climate of detente that had prevailed lately in the Aegean issue. It appears, however, that something happens to our neighbors every year when the hot weather begins. The fact that they now begin to provoke us, as last Wednesday's violations of Greek airspace and Athens FIR by Turkish aircraft, cannot be explained in any other way. The people in Ankara are playing with fire. They should not misunderstand our intentions. Tolerance and patience have their limits. So far, we have done and will do in the future whatever we can to preserve peace in the Aegean. We have no designs against anyone; we threaten no one. We need security and tranquillity because we have many things to do. We will not hesitate--as we have not hesitated before--to give a good lesson to those who threaten our sovereign rights and offend our national dignity. If our neighbors confide more to their memory than their reason, they should remember that those who misunderstood our intentions or undermined our capabilities paid very dearly. These were not small countries but great and powerful forces.

Government Answers Criticism

NC141651 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 14 Apr 81 p 10

[Text] The Government has proven that it knows very well how to defend our national rights. Mr Papandreou should have been convinced of this, stressed the government spokesman in reply to new statements by the PASOK chairman on the new arrangements regarding the Aegean airspace and the violations by Turkish planes.

The government spokesman's statement is as follows:

"1. The government has already issued a statement on the Turkish violations. We await explanations from the Turkish side to the protest we have submitted.

"2. In any case, our air force is in a position and it is taking appropriate measures to be able to deal with any situation.

"3. The leader of the official opposition knows very well that the government is ready to brief him on all points.

"4. The government has proven that it knows very well how to defend our national rights. The PASOK chairman should have already been convinced of this."

In his statement Paprandreou mentioned the following:

"Today talks began with a group of Turkish experts on finalizing the things that were agreed upon during the meeting of the secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries in Ankara. After the well-known 'arrangements' which the government made in Ankara concerning the airspace, it proceeded further and accepted the abolition of the firing ranges in the Aegean. With this concession the government denuded Greek sovereignty in the Aegean of its minimal supports and opened wide the road to Turkish expansionism.

"Turkey has replied to these concessions with a mass invasion of Greek airspace, which I reported to the Greek people through my statements the day before yesterday.

"The prime minister and government of New Democracy should ponder the huge national responsibilities they shoulder when, through their unjustified and constant concessions to Turkey, they endanger the country's security and the nation's fate."

In addition KODISO [Democratic Socialist Party] chairman Pesmazoglou, in a statement made yesterday, mentioned that the violations of Greek airspace confirm the continuing arbitrary acts and expansionism by Turkey.

Last night, a 6-member Turkish delegation arrived in Athens and today they will begin talks in connection with the new arrangements in the Aegean airspace.

In a counterreply last night, Papandreou said the following:

"It is impossible for the government to supply satisfactory explanations to the Greek people which will justify tomorrow's (today's) start of new negotiations between Greece and Turkey in connection with the Aegean airspace without the Turks giving an explanation to the (Greek) Government concerning the mass and unprecedented violation of our country's integrity on 8 April.

"However, the issue which the government conceals is the acceptance, on part of the Greek Foreign Ministry's secretary general in Ankara, of the abolition of Greek firing ranges in the Aegean. We expect from the government an official and final assurance to the Greek people that under no circumstances does it intend to abolish Greek firing ranges which constitute a critical factor for our country's security."

PAPANDREOU CALLS FOR GOVERNMENT TO RESIGN

NC141558 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 14 Apr 81 p 16

[Text] Deadlocks in all the country's big problems as well as the recent interparty developments within the New Democracy [ND] confirm that the present government, which has no precedent, is literally nonexistent. The only service this "ghost government" can now offer the country is to resign and there should be an immediate recourse to the people's verdict.

According to our information, this is the position which sums up the contents of Andreas Papandreou's report to the PASOK parliamentary group that has been meeting in the Senate Hall [of the Chamber of Deputies] since 1030 today.

According to the same information, in his report on developments in the domestic political situation, the course of the economy and on national affairs, Mr Papandreou insisted on all the PASOK forces to be vigilant and to be prepared for elections since it cannot be ruled out that the government may attempt a surpise proclamation of elections in June.

Today's meeting of the PASOK parliamentary group as well as its Central Committee meeting, slated to convene in May, actually fall within the framework of this preparedness.

PASOK has announced that Andreas Papandreou will deliver an important political speech at a conference of the movement's scientists to be held at the Hilton hotel on Friday evening.

TECHNICAL TALKS BEGIN WITH TURKISH DELEGATION

TA141650 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] The talks on the problems between Turkey and Greece on the level of technical experts have started in Athens; especially the Aegean airspace issue is being discussed during the talks. Ambassador Riza Turmen is heading the Turkish delegation during these talks, which are being held in accordance with the Turkish-Greek dialogue started between the foreign ministers and the secretaries general of the Foreign Ministries. The views to emerge from the Athens meetings will be discussed by the foreign ministers of the two countries during their meeting in Rome in the first week of May on the occasion of the NATO Ministerial Council Meeting.

MITSOTAKIS RECEIVES HUNGARIAN, PORTUGUESE ENVOYS

NC141335 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] Today, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis received successively Hungarian Ambassador Istvan Dobos and Portuguese Ambassador Alfredo Lencastre de Veiga. Bilateral and international matters were reviewed during the talks.

HUNGARIAN FARM DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR VISIT

NC141434 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] A Hungarian agricultural cooperative delegation arrived in Athens today headed by Bela Czimbalmos, general secretary of the National Council of Agricultural Cooperative Societies. The visit of the Hungarian cooperative delegation takes place at the invitation of PASEGES [Panhellenic Supreme Confederation of Unions of Agricultural Cooperatives] and aims at developing cooperation between the two countries' agricultrual organizations.

The Hungarian cooperative delegation will have talks with several cooperative organizations in Greece. In Crete, it will visit vegetable producing areas as well as agricultural cooperative unions in Iraklion and Peza.

The first meeting of the Hungarian cooperative delegation with its Greek colleagues was held at the PASEGES offices. Concrete proposals on the economic cooperation and the development of their bilateral trade exchanges were examined on a partnership basis.

POLISH TRADE RELATIONS DISCUSSED IN ATHENS

NC141332 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] Bilateral trade relations were discussed today between Commerce Minister Kalantzakos and Polish Ambassador to Athens Janusz Lewandowski.

ROMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER BEGINS TALKS IN ANKARA

TA141054 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] The official talks in which Turkish-Romanian relations will be discussed have begun in Ankara. The Turkish and Romanian delegations are being headed by Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen and Romanian Minister of Foreign Affairs Stefan Andrei respectively. The talks are expected to end this afternoon with the signing of a cultural exchange program and a protocol envisaging cooperation in the radio and television fields.

Meanwhile, Andrei is holding bilateral contacts in Ankara. He called on Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk and conferred with him for some time. In a statement at the meeting, Canturk said that cooperation between Turkey and Romania, especially in the fields of iron and steel production, transportation and tourism, will be very beneficial for both countries. Andrei expressed Romania's satisfaction with the developing cooperation between the two countries. He also expressed the belief that the cooperation between the two countries in the fields of oil, iron and steel production, construction and transportation will develop. He later called on Minister of Energy and Natural Resources Serbulent Bingol. The minister discussed the importance of developing cooperation in the energy field.

Cooperation Agreements Signed

TA141628 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1520 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 14 Apr (AA)--Three documents were signed between Turkey and Romania covering various aspects of bilateral cooperation. Present at the occasion were visiting Romanian Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei and Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, while their diplomats actually signed the documents: a cultural exchange program for 1981-82, an exchange of letters providing for expanding the functions of the respective consulates of each country in Istanbul and Constanta, and a protocol for cooperation between the Turkish Radio-TV Corporation "TRT" and the Romanian Broadcasting Agency.

MINISTER OZAL COMMENTS ON ECONOMIC SITUATION

TA141241 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Excerpt] State and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal has said that the inflation rate estimated at 40 percent in the 1981 program can be further reduced following the successful implementation of the program.

Ozal made a speech today at the scientific meeting on export loan insurance organized by the Ankara Economic and Commercial Sciences Academy Banking and Insurance School for Higher Learning. Ozal said that the rate of inflation has been reduced to 40 percent during the past 12-month period and that the sources of income for the treasury that have been strengthened through the new tax laws have enabled a further reduction of the rate of inflation. Pointing out that the transfer of foreign currency payments is now back to normal. Ozal noted however that this is not an indication that the problems have been solved completely.

Noting that it will take 3 to 4 years for the economy to be restored, Ozal said that during this period general production should be increased and exports should be developed in a bid to overcome the foreign currency bottleneck. Pointing out that the purpose of the new economic program is to ensure a structural change in the Turkish economy which was desired for many years but could not be realized, the deputy prime minister said that the speedy achievement of this goal is essential for Turkey's recovery.

Additional Comments

TA141841 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1541 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 14 Apr (AA)--Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal said the Turkish economy was rapidly being transformed into an export-oriented economy instead of an import-substituting one. Addressing a seminar on export credit insurance sponsored by the Academy of Business Administration in Ankara, Ozal voiced the belief that Turkey's economic salvation lay in achieving this structural transformation as soon as possible. He admitted Turkey's major problem was shortage of foreign exchange. He considered the curbing of inflation as the biggest achievement of the past 15 months.

Ozal believed Turkey has succeeded in obtaining a considerable amount of foreign credits in 1980, but admitted she should not expect to borrow a larger amount "under prevailing world conditions." He believed the new (?process) of insuring export credits was an important guarantee for exporters, who should not expect too much more from the government.

PROSECUTOR READS INDICTMENT AGAINST SEPARATISTS

TA141538 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1510 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] Diyarbakir, 14 Apr (AA)--The trial by a martial law court of 447 members of the illegal separatist organization using the initials "PKK," and known as "APOcular," continued in Diyarbakir Tuesday.

Following verification of identity for the defendants, 270 of whom are under arrest, the military prosecutor started to read his 200-plus page indictment, which gave an account of the origins of the illegal organization.

The prosecutor traced the separatist gang back to 1974 when 14 students, including gang-leader Abdullah Ocalan, alias "APO," met in an outlying district of Ankara to found a leftist society they called the "Democratic Higher Education Society." The group met again in 1976 in Ankara and Diyarbakir where they decided to set up the illegal organization they called "Kurdistan Workers Party" (PKK), based on a program drafted by Ocalan.

A December 1978 meeting in a village of Lice County in Diyarbakir adopted the party rules, which provided for an organization going down from a Central Committee through regional and local committees to individual cells. Ocalan was elected secretary of the Central Committee.

The prosecutor summed up the aim of the clandestine organization as "to separate by armed conflict part of the territory under the sovereignty of the Turkish Republic in order to found a Kurdish state based on Marxist-Leninist lines." The first step by which the gang proposed to reach its secessionist aim was to indoctrinate youth, organize people, and conduct "armed propaganda" which meant to "kill those opposing the PKK views, seize and raid their property and force them to move out."

A large number of inhabitants in the countries of Hilvan Batman and Derik in southeastern Turkey were in fact forced to leave their homes and shops and migrate to other areas, the indictment went on, and the clandestine organization took over abandoned property.

The second step in the gang's activities was the so-called "punishment" of civil servants and others opposed to them. After training groups in armed action, the group hoped to draw upon itself "intervention by the state" which they expected would cause a negative reaction on the part of citizens [words indistinct].

The clandestine group (?sent) a member to Federal Germany for the purpose of soliciting support from workers in various European countries, the indictment noted, and set up contacts with "certain groups in Syrian, Iran and Iraq." The indictment also claimed documents including false passports were available to show an agreement had been reached between a member of the PKK Central Committee and the Palestine Liberation Organization in order to send militants in groups of 50 to Palestinian camps for training. The APOcular trial is expected to be recessed until Monday 10 April [as received] after the prosecutor completes presenting his indictment. Close to 2,000 other defendants await trial in the APOcular case pending completion of further investigation.

FORMER PRIME MINISTER ECEVIT EDITORIAL ON TORTURE

NC101350 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 4 Apr 81 p 5

[Editorial by former Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit: "Torture"]

[Text] The administration is meticulously dwelling on allegations of torture. When allegations are convincing, they are tackled effectively; when the persons responsible are discovered, they are prosecuted. In his speech in Manisa on 28 March, the honorable head of state dwelt at great length on the question over torture. He said: "We are against torture. It is contrary to both humanity and conscience." The administration thus once again emphasized its sensitivity on this matter. Nevertheless, the question of torture is very disturbing to the public, and the allegations being made against Turkey in foreign countries stem from this issue.

The question of torture is being discussed within three different frameworks: 1. What is torture? 2. Is torture being inflicted during interrogations? 3. And if it is, is it "systematic" torture? In other words, is it being carried out with the blessing of the administration as part of the system and regime?

Notions vary as to what torture is. Generally, democratic societies do not take torture to mean only the infliction of certain harmful acts on the human body. If an accused person is subjected to nonstop interrogation for 5 days and 5 nights running, if he is compelled to sign a document blindfolded when he becomes utterly exhausted, or if he is deliberately made to hear the cries of a person being tortured in another room, then this too is considered torture by democratic societies. Again, there are many who consider that keeping a person in custody for months without knowing what he is accused of and without being allowed to communicate with his relatives is also a form of torture.

Those who view this matter from this point of view are not satisfied when certain people are proved not to have been subjected to any "physical torture" or "rough handling." What is more, there is the general conviction that physical torture is being inflicted. However, most of the observers who come to our country leave with the impression that systematic torture is not being inflicted. This undoubtedly is something to be pleased about. The observers form this impression mainly because the administration, very sensitive over certain allegations of torture, prosecutes those against whom sufficient evidence is found. Unfortunately though, the administration's good will is not enough to resolve the question over torture and to prevent it from being a bone of contention both at home and abroad.

In Turkey, even if the administration did not approve of it, torture is carried out in a "traditional" manner. In open regimes, torture diminishes if administrations deal with it resolutely, while it becomes widespread where closed regimes exist. We cannot pretend ignorance of these facts. It would, therefore, be appropriate to deal with the substance, as well as with the source, of the matter. The fundamental reasons for torture are that the security forces are not adequately trained either to find evidence or to conduct interrogations. The tendency then is to cover up the inadequacy of proper training by beating up and torturing the accused, and this has become very prevalent.

One of the prerequisites of being able to detect an offense by collecting sufficient evidence without resorting to violence is the development of certain scientific methods and technical means which have been greatly improved in our day and age, but in which Turkey has remained backward. According to observations by foreign experts, when most of our security officers reach the scene of a crime, the first thing they do is destroy--through ignorance and lack of training--the evidence.

In 1978 and 1979, experts were brought to Turkey from democratic countries or members of the Turkish security forces were sent to attend courses organized in those countries, and steps were thus taken to eliminate our shortcomings. Security laboratories and ballistics centers were developed at least in certain big centers, and experts and detective teams that could benefit scientifically from such facilities were trained. The detective teams had begun to throw light on many crimes "the authors of which were unknown" and to catch the culprits by endangering their own lives.

No matter how hard we might try, spreading these methods and facilities throughout our country would take years. But later these efforts were pushed aside. Those well-trained teams were largely scattered and old methods and habits again gained ground. Filling the police cadres with persons of very low education and inadequate "professional training," given to them in just a few months, is resulting in the use of very primitive methods. The extensive ideological polarization within the ranks of the security forces and the increase in the tendency to revengefully meet force with force has also been a major factor in the spread of torture.

Detaining people in great numbers of mere suspicion or information without sufficient evidence against them and efforts on the part of the ignorant and untrained security forces to make these accused persons "talk" without support of adequate intelligence is another reason why torture has spread. When failure to be concerned about the social and cultural needs of policemen, who live and work under heavy moral and material conditions and who have given many martyrs in recent years, is added to all this, and when lack of training and moral decadence are combined, the security forces increasingly tend to carry out their duties through the use of force. The impression that statements are taken mostly under duress places the judiciary in a difficult position.

Since many prosecutors and judges share this impression, they feel compelled to put aside the documents and the "proof" provided by the policy when a defendant who signed a confession at the police station says: "I was tortured to say all this. This is not the truth." Some persons, when tortured, feel the need to "confess" crimes they have never committed or to provide "information" about certain innocent people in order to save their own skins, while certain accused persons who, in reality, did commit an offense and admitted it to the police may manage to escape judicial punishment.

Measures that must be taken urgently to resolve the torture issue fundamentally can be summed up as follows:

The educational and cultural standards of the police must be raised and their living conditions must be both materially and morally improved.

Interrogation and detective teams made up of efficient and impartial officers instructed to carry out their duties according to civilized methods must be trained.

Those trained personnel who have proved their talents and impartiality in this field but who have been assigned to passive duties must be evaluated again by being assigned to duties where they can be more useful.

These teams must be supported by laboratories and technical facilities which must be founded throughout the country.

Rules resolving frictions that may crop up between these teams who could be assigned to duties in any part of the country and the local authorities must be established.

The intelligence organization of the security forces must be reinforced.

The judicial police, which have been talked about so much over the years but which have somehow proved impossible to establish, must be set up to operate under independent judicial organs.

While these measures are being taken, the places where the accused are detained must be effectively controlled. As torturers are detected and convicted, they must be disclosed to the public. The public must also be widely convinced that the torturers shall be punished.

There are indications that certain well-meaning steps are being taken to ensure supervision. For instance, in some places the accused who are placed in custody after their period of detention expires undergo a medical examination to ascertain whether they were subjected to torture. But this is insufficient, because some of the security officers who are not very familiar with the scientific methods and techniques of collecting evidence and conducting an interrogation are, instead, far advanced in the technique of concealing signs of physical torture.

Many accused persons who have been tortured are probably sent into detention after they have been "treated" according to this "technique." One way of countering such practices is to arrange regular control by reliable teams at unexpected moments.

It was disclosed at an international conference on torture in Stockholm last week that methods to completely conceal from the naked eye the traces of torture on a person's body have greatly advanced, but that the traces of destroyed nerves persisted. Torture leaves negative effects not only on the tortured but also the torturer at least as much, if not more. Those among the tortured who possess a strong personality and whose nervous system has not suffered great damage may, in time, eradicate the traces of the torture from their souls, the wound of the torture in their heart may heal and they may eventually save themselves from becoming sullen, revengeful and aggressive.

The torturer, the person who somehow reconciles himself to torturing other people, greatly misses, from the psychological point of view, the chance of becoming a healthy person. If he has managed to preserve some of his humanity and if he keeps some room in his heart for human love, he will feel guilty for the rest of his life. But since many of the torturers, that is, those who can reconcile themselves to torturing other people, are not mature enough to feel guilty, they are carried away by a tendency to suppress their human feelings and to forget their humanity. They seek ways and means of justifying their aggressive and oppressive mood.

Apart from this, they feel the need to contribute to the formation of communal conditions and regimes that legalize terror. While, on the one hand, their sense of humanity is destroyed, on the other, they seek to block the way to a decent democratic regime, or to destroy such a regime if it exists. Then they begin to search for conditions and regimes that would cover up or tolerate the offense they have committed against humanity.

For these reasons, the real victims of torture are probably those who actually inflict torture on others rather than the tortured persons themselves and the community in which they live.

Though painful results of the wounds inflicted on the community in this manner may not be quite so noticeable during the periods of closed regimes, they nevertheless create serious communal problems during a transition to an open regime.

It is hoped that the administration, which has on various occasions proved its good will toward countering torture, will not hesitate to take urgent measures that will lend more effectiveness to such good will.

DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 073 16 April 1981

CONTENTS

AUSTRIA

Soviet IIASA Secretary Pleads Innocence, Resigns [WIENER ZEITUNG 16 Apr] E 1
Large Deficit Incurred in East Europe Trade [ARBEITER-ZEITUNG 8 Apr] E 1
Briefs: Cooperation with Hungary; Ambassador to GDR E 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Spokesman Says Reduction of Tension Is FRG Goal J 1
Officials React to Honecker Remarks on German Ties J 1
Papers Comment on 10th SED Congress, Honecker J 1
DIE WELT Weighs NATO Strategy After Haig Talks [15 Apr] J 2
Press Views Bahr's Criticism of U.S. Policy J 4
FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Rejects U.S. 'Tutelage' [9 Apr] J 4
Vogel Meets With Soviet Ambassador to East Berlin J 5
Willy Brandt Visits Yugoslavia; Meets Officials [cross-reference] J 5
Briefs: Hashish Seized J 5

FRANCE

Foreign Minister on Poland, Afghanistan, Iraq [LE MONDE 12-13 Apr] K 1
Giscard Discusses Defense, German Ties, Election K 1
Television Interview K 1
Press Club Remarks [LE MONDE 14 Apr] K 5
Mitterrand Criticizes Giscard Foreign Policy [LE MONDE 14 Apr] K 7
AFP Reports on Presidential Election Polls K 7

SPAIN

PCE Sees Government Avoiding Broad Consultation [MUNDO OBRERO 10-16 Apr] N 1
Saudi King Khalid To Make Visit 15-18 June N 1

NORDIC AFFAIRS

NORWAY

Newspaper Editorials Cover Labor Party Conference P 1
ARBEIDERBLADET Hails Results [6 Apr] P 1
AFTENPOSTEN Appraisal [6 Apr] P 2

UNITED KINGDOM

Reportage on Romanian Prime Minister's Visit [AGERPRES] Q 1
Downing Street Talks Q 1
Thatcher Dinner Q 1
Lord Carrington Meeting Q 2
Interview With Foot Q 2
Visit With Lord Mayor Q 2
Meetings With Officials Q 2
Blaker-Duma Session Q 3
Interview With Parliamentarians Q 3
Conclusion of Talks Q 3
Nott Set To Review Defense Spending Projects Q 4
UK, Belize Agree on Independence Constitution Q 5

CYPRUS

Intercommunal Talks Turn to Constitutional Aspect R 1
Turkish Cypriot Answers Greek Cypriot UN Claim [Bayrak Radio] R 1

GREECE

Mitsotakis Departs for Official Visit to Cairo S 1
Talks on U.S. Bases Postponed for Easter S 1
TO VIMA Editorial on Turkish Airspace Violations [15 Apr] S 1
Briefs: Mitsotakis Receives Ambassadors; Admiral Visits Yugoslavia; KKE Delegation to GDR S 2

TURKEY

Romanian Foreign Minister Continues Official Visit T 1
Tours Kirikkale Refinery T 1
AGERPRES Reports Receptions T 1
Foreign Ministers' Talks [AGERPRES] T 2
General Evren, NSC Members Observe Exercises T 3
CUMHURIYET on NATO Effects on Foreign Policy [11 Apr] T 3
Council of Europe Official Comments on Meetings T 4
Ends Contacts, Departs T 4
Bank Director Reports Contacts in Italy, Bulgaria T 5
'Our' Radio: U.S. Expands Arms Race Into Space T 5
VOTCP Warns Against Turkish-U.S. Agreement T 6
Property of TLP, TOB-DER Leaders Confiscated [VOTCP] T 6

SOVIET IIASA SECRETARY PLEADS INNOCENCE, RESIGNS

AU160754 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 16 Apr 81 p 2

[Excerpts] According to a news release from the International Institute for Applied System Analysis (IIASA) in Vienna-Laxenburg, Dr Arkadiy Belotserov, Soviet secretary of the institute, has resigned "in the institute's interest." His voluntary resignation was accepted by institute management, the release says adding: "In the past few days certain charges were raised against Dr Belotserov in both the foreign and Austrian press. Dr Belotserov has rejected these charges, but the institute has no independent means of establishing the truth." The IIASA release stresses that the institute is registered in Vienna as an Austrian "association" and that all of its employees are subject to Austrian laws. The institute will continue to make every effort to ensure that its staff members are fully qualified, professionally and scientifically, for their work and that--as has always been the case--they do not engage in any kind of activity running counter to the institute's aims, the release says.

In his letter of resignation, Dr Belotserov stresses that the charges against him are void of any foundation. At the same time, the charges are detrimental to the special "spirit of the IIASA." "I do not want these false charges to be used to put a wrong complexion on the IIASA. That is why I have regretfully decided to offer my resignation in the institute's interest. The anonymous charges, from an unnamed source, do not offer me any opportunity to prove their lack of foundation before an independent forum--which does not exist, in any case," Dr Belotserov writes in conclusion.

LARGE DEFICIT INCURRED IN EAST EUROPE TRADE

AU081602 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 8 Apr 81 p 10

[Summary] In 1980, Austria's trade with East European countries was marked by a strong expansion of imports and only a moderate growth of exports, resulting in a deficit of 3.3 billion schillings as against a 2.6 billion schillings surplus in 1979. Austria's imports from East European countries went up 34.4 percent as compared with 1979, primarily as a result of higher power and fuel prices--fuels and electric power accounted for 57 percent of the country's imports from East Europe in 1980. Exports to East Europe last year were 7.6 percent higher than in 1979, mainly as a result of substantial increases of exports to the GDR and Bulgaria, and a 10 percent increase of exports to the USSR. The overall trade deficit with the East was largely a result of the doubling of Austria's deficit in trade with the USSR in 1980, which amounted to 7 billion schillings as against 3.4 billion schillings in 1979. The Soviet Union is using less than half the hard currency proceeds from its exports to Austria to import Austrian goods.

BRIEFS

COOPERATION WITH HUNGARY--Tamas Bacskai, director of the Hungarian national bank has declared that so far 96 cooperation contracts have been concluded between Hungarian and Austrian firms, and that another 42 contracts are being negotiated. He called for intensified joint research and development by Hungarian and Austrian firms. [Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 28-29 Mar 81 p 10 AU]

AMBASSADOR TO GDR--Dr Hellmuth Strasser, 47-year-old career diplomat who has been workng since 1977 at the Vienna Foreign Ministry as head of the personnel department and deputy chief of the administration section, has been appointed ambassador to the GDR. The GDR government has approved this appointment. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 3 Apr 81 p 3 AU]

SPOKESMAN SAYS REDUCTION OF TENSION IS FRG GOAL

LD151628 Hamburg DPA in German 1423 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 15 Apr (DPA)--Following the trans-Atlantic confusion concerning various foreign policy statements, the Federal Government has announced that "the reduction of tension between East and West" will continue to be the foremost goal of German foreign policy.

Government spokesman Lothar Ruehl today linked the goal of detente directly with a continuation of a sensible and moderate policy of a balance of power between arming and arms limitation, based on reciprocity.

Ruehl made it clear that NATO had made its offer for negotiations as part of the 12 December 1979 decision when the alliance, without equal weapons, saw itself facing a Soviet superiority in the sphere of medium-range weapons. Until approximate parity in these weapons systems is reached at the end of 1983, one and a half years remains for the Soviet Union to put its willingness for negotiations into practice.

Differently-phrased Western statements must be subordinated to the clear-cut NATO position, as it was confirmed by the defense ministers in Brussels and at a meeting of the Nuclear Planning Group in Bonn. A new opportunity to emphasize the unanimity will be given by the NATO Council meeting in Rome at the beginning of May.

OFFICIALS REACT TO HONECKER REMARKS ON GERMAN TIES

LD151122 Hamburg DPA in German 0949 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 15 Apr (DPA)--The CDU/CSU sharply rejected the statements by SED chief Erich Honecker at the East Berlin party congress, which linked further positive development in inter-German relations with the Brussels' NATO dual decision.

Speaking to the CSU/CDU press service today, CDU politician Olaf von Wrangel said the Federal Government should make it clear to the GDR leaders that inter-German relations and human contacts are not a "suitable means of blackmail," for bringing about the downfall of the dual decision. Wrangel, deputy chairman of the Inter-German Committee, emphasized that the Federal Government should under no circumstances allow itself to become involved in a German-German disarmament debate, for which neither state has the competency. The government should realize, especially in view of the 10th SED Party Congress at which the SED again underlined the fact that it is Moscow's star pupil, that a clear and creditable Western policy is the best possible basis for a successful Ostpolitik and Deutschlandpolitik.

Opposition leader Helmut Kohl stated in an article for the Thursday evening edition of ABENDPOST that Honecker was well aware that his enticements and threats would have an effect on the place they were aimed at--the leftwing sections of the SPD and FDP. The SED boss was aiming at those forces within the coalition to whom the Brussels decision had been a thorn in the flesh from the outset. In telling these forces that existing "achievements would be endangered" within the inter-German relations if "the U.S. confrontation policy" is implemented, he is giving Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and his foreign minister the bare facts.

PAPERS COMMENT ON 10TH SED CONGRESS, HONECKER

DW151343 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 15 Apr 81

[From the press review]

[Text] SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG writes: At the 10th SED Congress, there were no surprises, no new accents, let alone changes of course. This party congress serves the representation of power. The communist unity party demonstrates stability and continuity, spreading self-confidence and optimism.

In contrast to recent party congresses of the Soviet comrades or the Czechoslovak neighbors, neither criticism nor self-criticism can be heard in East Berlin. This SED congress is not a party congress of the people, as pretended by official statements, it is a party congress of Erich Honecker.

KOELNISCHE RUNDSCHAU comments: One must concede that the SED is in firm control of everything. Erich Honecker holds a review. The actual purpose of the mammoth enterprise seems to be patting oneself on the shoulder and confirming that everything is in fine shape. But one shouldn't just laugh at that. The GDR has indeed many reasons at present to be more or less content with itself. It is one of the most stable East bloc states, politically as well as economically. Naturally, there are bottlenecks created by poor planning. If the people between Moscow and the Visla had the same freedom of movement so natural to Western countries, many people would frequently come to the Spree River. But the domestic political inflexibility is depressing. Hardly any other communist-ruled country has so little movement in this respect as the GDR. Even in Czechoslovakia, one of the most loyal vassals of Moscow, efforts are aimed at breaking up the political crust. Let alone Poland!

GENERAL-ANZEIGER of Bonn deals with the Polish aspect: The SED congress was not oppressed by the concern that the Polish example could infect GDR citizens. The current result of the Polish unrest--a catastrophic production decrease, empty shops and more and more depressing state debts--does not invite imitation. In its current state, Poland isn't in a position to prove that better economic results can be achieved through less leading by the nose. The GDR plan economists can therefore pride themselves with holding top position regarding the living standard of the populace--at least in the East bloc.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU writes: What SED General Secretary Erich Honecker rather paraphrased in a flowery way in his report to the central committee this weekend was said clearer yesterday by Premier Willi Stoph, namely, where the current difficulties of the GDR are. This was simpler for Stoph. Honecker spoke about the past 5 years and everything had to be rosy in this respect. Stoph explained the plans for the next 5 years. And since the ideology says that everything can become just better and more beautiful, it was easy for Stoph to admit some negative things too. Even if supply shortcomings are used occasionally to let off steam about political delimitation, there is too often a lack of what is actually natural. The promise of the party to eliminate this shortcoming and to simultaneously curtail the inflated bureaucratic apparatus is still the best guarantee not to let ideas come up among the people with regard to "Polish conditions."

DIE WELT WEIGHS NATO STRATEGY AFTER HAIG TALKS

DW151541 Bonn DIE WELT in German 15 Apr 81 p 6

[Friedhelm Kemna article: "After Haig and Weinberger"]

[Text] The good last picture almost made us forget our uneasiness about the next to the last scene. Official Bonn demonstratively, though perhaps a bit too laboriously after the experience with a reserved Weinberger, embraced the "European" on the Reagan team. Alexander Haig gave welcome nourishment to the hopes the chancellor's office on the Rhine has placed on him.

Compared to "our man in Washington," Weinberger seemed to the Federal Government to be a sort of Roman proconsul. Egon Bahr, who also is at the front of those comrades who are particularly critical of America, reacted without restraint. The note of his angry lecture shows to what abyss the German-U.S. relationship could move.

Naturally, even leaving Bahr out altogether, this relationship today is characterized more by a harmony of doubts. German assumptions that the concept of detente is losing its significance in America are complemented by American suspicions that the Federal Republic, together with other European NATO partners, wants at almost any cost to give negotiations priority over additional joint defense efforts. The thesis that the dialogue with Moscow must be continued under any circumstances, including "Polish" developments, largely collides with the mood of renewal in Washington, above all, because this renewal has not been translated into clearly visible foreign and security policy strategies.

The Federal Government believes the West way to keep tendencies toward tensions in the East-West relationship, in particular also in connection with the Polish crisis, under control is an unconditional offer to Moscow for talks. To exaggerate a bit, this would mean that the denser the network of negotiations, above all, disarmament talks with the Soviets, is and the more contacts exist or are agreed upon with the Kremlin leadership, the more "safety controls" are installed against actions that aggravate tensions, actions by which Moscow would jeopardize the economic and political "balance of interests" between East and West.

The weakness of this old and spectacularly unsuccessful concept of "change through rapprochement" is obvious. It is based on the iron priority of the Soviet claim to power in central and East Europe as well as on the central significance of its strategy of securing the area surrounding it. This includes the colonialization of Afghanistan and its offensive to gain influence in the Third World in Africa, Asia and Latin America. Would TNF [theater nuclear forces] negotiations with Americans, would the planned Brezhnev visit to Bonn really be able to make the Russians abandon their doctrine in Poland and elsewhere.

On the other hand, what innumerable various possibilities would the Kremlin have in negotiations to manipulate the determination of the alliance and the political will of its partners to counterarm, at least as long as the West has nothing to set against the superior Soviet strategic and conventional armament, but the threat to deploy its own medium-range weapons?

Such considerations nourish the deep skepticism about the Soviet Union which determines the alliance and Eastern policy course of the new administration in Washington. It is its conviction that negotiations with Moscow seem to be sensible only if a military-technological balance exists. The fact that there is a backlog following the paralysis resulting from Vietnam and Watergate and also a backlog following its self-containment as a result of more than 15 years of preoccupation with arms control and disarmament--these facts today cause America's distance from Europe's political thought.

The European contribution to the alliance is constantly burdened by the realization that the balance of the seventies also shows that the Soviet Union has gained more influence between the Elbe and the Atlantic. The vulnerability of European positions, which is a result of geography anyway, has grown.

There are clear signs indicating that Moscow is determined to make use of this specific "situation" of the Europeans and in particular of the Federal Republic to paralyze the alliance at a strategically advantageous time. The Kremlin hopes that the NATO countries will disagree over the fate of the dual decision. The first half-time period without negotiations has considerably increased the pressure by the Europeans to really use the second half-time period now.

In Washington, where the first 100 days of Ronald Reagan's presidency end after the Easter recess, the Americans who like Alexander Haig are oriented by the alliance and its common foreign policy are convinced that a one-sided "American" strategy toward Moscow would be hopeless, that the alliance is more than the sum of its soldiers, tanks and missiles, that it requires different contributions by its partners depending on their history, culture and geography and that Europe cannot take the place of the American superpower.

Somewhere in the middle of the way to an understanding among the allies the European, the German contribution toward a renewal of the alliance must become effective. Its basis must, however, be the realization that talking alone is useless unless the Soviet negotiating partner is ready for compromise, and that in this case the adequate means must be available. This is a realization which should be furthered in time also in our own ranks.

PRESS VIEWS BAHR'S CRITICISM OF U.S. POLICY

DW151346 Cologne Detuschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 15 Apr 81

[From the press review]

[Text] SPD Bundestag delegate Bahr made statements in connection with the counterarmament debate. In the current edition of the Social Democratic weekly VORWAERTS, Bahr criticizes particularly the demands of U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger to increase the armament budget at the expense of social benefits.

HESSISCHE-NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE of Kassel notes: One could ignore it if Bahr's statements came from a vocabulary of a chairman of a local club, but Bahr belongs to the intelligent SPD leadership. His scoldings at Washington signal most clearly what must be thought of the loudly praised Bonn-Washington agreement on security and defense policy problems. Impediments continuously occur. But not just that. Bahr also articulates the deep disgust of the Social Democrats with regard to U.S. pressure for more armament. The chimera of NATO's dual decision frightens everyone. The militant deputy is not that wrong in the matter as such. Except for the United States and France, which does not belong to NATO, no member state of the Atlantic alliance has invested more money in armament than the Federal Republic. It ought to be possible to state that, vis-a-vis the smart U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger, without the alliance immediately going to pot.

BRANSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG says: Bahr's statements are rhetorical retreat fights. Naturally, expenses for the Bundeswehr and for NATO will increase, and naturally, social cuts will become inevitable because sufficient financial means will not be available at other places. Indications that the United States has looked on inactively for years at the progressive Soviet armament, thus saving its own cashboxes, don't help. First, this wrong development will be corrected now. And second, no German politician warned Carter and his predecessor against making this mistake. On the contrary, this fitted very well with the concept of those detente politicians who believed that weakness must be offered to the East in order to achieve a balance.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU REJECTS U.S. 'TUTELAGE'

DW091223 Frankfurt FRANKFURTHER RUNDSCHAU in German 9 Apr 81 p 3

[Article signed Mac: "Important Experience"]

[Text] The new U.S. Government obviously undertakes considerable efforts to advance the European unification process. At any rate, this conclusion suggests itself, considering the more or less drastic attempts by the Reagan administration to induce its NATO partners to make larger defense efforts. In this context, the tougher term "pressure" may even be more appropriate.

As a result of this pressure, the Europeans (including the Britons) are closing their ranks to resist such a demand. They are successful in doing so. True, it is too early as yet to make a concluding statement on whether Washington only wants to find out how far it can go or whether it just shows a lack of sensitivity. But one thing is now already clear. If the Europeans show resolve, Washington gives in. Naturally, this cannot be the firm behavior of NATO partners, but it clarifies position.

This was proved by the NATO Nuclear Planning Group Meeting in Bonn. Negotiations with Moscow (however, only if there is no military intervention in Poland) on a reduction of medium-range capabilities and adherence to both parts of NATO's dual decision—these two positions were established against the delaying tactics of the United States. Europe does not accept tutelage. This certainly is an important experience for Washington.

VOGEL MEETS WITH SOVIET AMBASSADOR TO EAST BERLIN

LD101500 Hamburg DPA in German 1337 GMT 10 Apr 81

[Text] Berlin, 10 Apr (DPA)—The governing mayor of Berlin, Hans-Jochen Vogel (SPD), today had a lengthy private meeting with Soviet Ambassador to East Berlin Petr Abrasimov. The 2 and 1/2-hour talk in the guest house of the Berlin Senat centered, according to Senat spokesman Sepp Binder, on "questions of mutual interest". Binder declined to give further details of the contents of the talk and its atmosphere. It was Vogel's first meeting with Abrasimov since he took office at the end of January.

WILLY BRANDT VISITS YUGOSLAVIA; MEETS OFFICIALS

For Belgrade TANJUG and other reportage on the visit to Yugoslavia by SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, see the Yugoslavia section of the 15 April and subsequent issues of the Eastern Europe DAILY REPORT.

BRIEFS

HASHISH SEIZED--Hamburg, 11 Mar (DPA)--Hamburg police have made their biggest catch in the history of Federal German drug investigations. While checking an overloaded delivery truck last night, the police found 50 hundredweight of hashish. The hashish, according to the chief of the Hamburg Drug Department, Wolf Plefka, is worth about DM10 million on the black market. It was discovered in the back of a rented delivery truck which was stopped in the Wilhelmsburg district. The driver and passenger of the van, a 26-year old and a 28-year old Berliner, were arrested. [Hamburg DPA in German 1230 GMT 11 Mar 81 LD]

FOREIGN MINISTER ON POLAND, AFGHANISTAN, IRAQ

LD151423 Paris LE MONDE in French 12-13 Apr 81 p 4

[Text] Poland must "remain free to follow through the renewal policy it has started without resorting to internal violence or any foreign intervention or pressure, Jean Francois-Poncet said on 9 April to the National Assembly Foreign Affairs Committee.

According to the communique published by the committee, the chief of French diplomacy also "noted that the Polish leaders and people have shown their ability to overcome the country's internal difficulties in a reasonable and responsible way over the past few months." He stressed the scope of the aid France is giving to Poland.

With regard to Afghanistan, Francois-Poncet said that he thinks that "the Afghan people's courageous resistance remains unshaken" and that it is "more important than ever to find a political solution involving the withdrawal of Soviet troops and enabling the Afghan people freely to exercise their right to self-determination," to enable that country "to regain its traditional position as an independent, neutral and nonaligned state."

Asked about French-Iraqi nuclear cooperation, Francois-Poncet replied that the equipment supplied to Baghdad could not be used for military purposes. "France," he added, "pursues a strict nonproliferation policy and refrains from supplying anything which might encourage the use of the atom for military purposes." "What is at stake," the minister concluded, "is the developing countries' right to have access to the peaceful use of nuclear energy."

GISCARD DISCUSSES DEFENSE, GERMAN TIES, ELECTIONS

Television Interview

LD152310 Paris Domestic Television Service in French 1810 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Interview with French President Giscard d'Estaing by Arthur Comte--date and place not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] The true greatness of a country lies in its service to peace. The greatest wars are those that do not take place, those which wise men know how to avoid well in advance. France precisely, currently plays a magnificent role, an unquestionable and fundamental role in order to prevent another world war, with its train of suffering and misfortune. But so that the country can better defend peace, it must be strong, firm and respected. The first question is how?

[Answer] It is a question at the heart of the nation's life, the service of peace. I would say a service of peace starting from a position of strength, because one ought to see that if one is in a position of weakness in the present world, then one is subjected to the will of others. Then what is this strength of a nation? First of all, I believe it to be its political strength, that is, the solidity and stability of its political institutions--that the world knows what France's policy is, who is leading and that there is a political stability there. Then, there is economic strength which means economic power and, in actual terms, monetary stability: A country which is being helped cannot be a strong one and cannot carry out an autonomous action for peace. Also, scientific and technological strength, for example, at the moment, our new missiles, which we will install as from 1985 and which are at the same level as the Soviet and American missiles, they have been entirely conceived and built in France, without borrowing any foreign technology. This is an element of strength. Finally, there is what I would call the national strength, that is, the vitality of the nation, the fact that the nation should want to have an active foreign policy and, in particular, a policy of peace. The vitality of the nation resides in the unity of the nation. This is for me the meaning of the strength of a nation within the modern state.

[Question] I have one fear. In 1940, we believed strongly in the Maginot Line, which was supposed to save us and could even contribute to assuaging national energies. We are a thousand times right to equip ourselves with ultramodern nuclear armaments. I fear, however, that behind this new wall we might install yet another false security. Hence, a very important question: How to avoid this false security, how to maintain France vigilant and alive, with the army protecting it?

[Answer] First of all, this nuclear force should be a deterrent one which involves a large effort because there is a steady scientific race in the nuclear field and everyone is perfecting one's arms and defense. Therefore, our force must be a deterrent one. One should know that during the 7 years, France's nuclear capacity has increased approximately by 240 percent and that we will enter a new stage from 1984-85. Therefore, one must have this deterrent force, but I believe indeed that we should have a complete system of force. Why? First of all, for the reason you mention, that is, the fact that the entire nation should show concern for the defense effort and also because there could occur situations or types of conflicts in which nuclear means are not used. If we look at what has been happening in the world in the past few years, nowhere have conflicts involved the use of nuclear means even when the big powers have been engaged in them. That is why we have made an effort toward the reorganization of our classical forces and of our land forces as well as of our navy.

A few indications of this: First of all, we have had ministers of defense who devoted to it considerable capability--I am thinking of Messrs Bourges, Galley, General Bigeart [words indistinct]. What do we have now? We have 15 divisions, well organized, 8 armored car divisions, 7 mechanized infantry divisions, we have 14 reserve divisions--in all 29 divisions capable of intervening. We also have created an intervention force which currently has around 25,000 men, that is, 24,500 men. Therefore, we have an army capable of intervening when only a few years back we had means which were rather dispersed. This army is well trained and the young people, whether in the land forces, navy or the air force, spend many days in training camps--on the seas, if they are in the navy or in the air, if they are pilots. This army is based on conscription and this conscription is an effort required from the young Frenchmen, but it has a meaning. Undoubtedly, one could improve the ways it is carried out, but the entire nation is concerned with the defense effort and the entire young generation is associated with the defense effort. You also can see that we have very good staffs within our forces. I have been at their head because the president of the republic is the constitutional head of the army. Well, our professional officers and NCO's currently represent an excellent military leadership.

Finally, to have this defense desire one must think of those who have fought, that is, those who have been in the battle and have participated in the defense effort. That is why I believe that the place and role of the war veterans in the life of French society is an important one for our defense spirit.

[Question] Regarding France, peace is conditional upon an essential element, the reconciliation between the French people and the German people. Let us state it clearly: The honor of our generation rests in preventing for our sons and grandsons European civil wars which our parents and grandparents could not prevent. During the present 6-year term, one has worked remarkably in agreement with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. How can one continue to protect such a miracle?

[Answer] [Words indistinct] are becoming permanent, and I believe this ought to be, come what may, one of the big changes brought by history. You are an historian, and indeed in our history there are undefined battles on the eastern and northeastern frontiers with millions of dead throughout our history and entire provinces devastated and then rebuilt only to be devastated again and once again rebuilt. I would say that French-German reconciliation already existed before my 7-year term, and this was the work of General de Gaulle and of Chancellor Adenaeur, courageous and audacious work where they anticipated history.

[Question] With a tribute to Robert Schuman...

[Answer] With also a tribute to Robert Schuman. Chancellor Schmidt and I assumed responsibility of office practically at the same moment, that is, both of us in 1974. We knew each other; we had been finance ministers at the same time and we knew each other personally. We decided to go into a higher gear, that is, to go from reconciliation to entente. What we made work during these 7 years was the French-German entente. To give an example: I have met Chancellor Schmidt more than 50 times in 6 years and we have had innumerable telephone conversations in order to get used to dealing with the problems through cooperation and, above all, mutual knowledge between Germany and France.

Quite recently, we settled two fundamental problems; that of the agricultural prices we would have never settled--I say this--we would have never settled but for the entente, the direct entente between Chancellor Schmidt and myself, and this represents for France an important saving, an important element in 1981. A second example: Our action toward investments, our joint loan. Never in history have there been two countries which together have launched loans. This has never occured. Two big industrial countries Germany and France will do it. Therefore, we are giving an important concrete content to this historic element, which from now on is entente. I would say reconciliation is finished. What we must preserve now is entente, and if I am re-elected president I say that my first encounter will be with Chancellor Schmidt.

[Question] The worst enemy of a country is solitude. Alas, we experienced it at least three important times: In 1870, in 1914, in 1939 we exposed our soldiers alone, or almost so, on the front of freedom. The strength of a country also resides in the strength of its alliances. Now how can we avoid in the future finding ourselves in this or that position of such tragic solitude?

[Answer] It's true that solitude can be a greak risk for a country. And in the criticisms which are sometimes made of France's foreign policy, there is this idea of being indulgent toward solitude, saying we don't want anything to do with others, we don't want to get along with them, we don't need them and so on. Now the misfortunes in our history have been approached alone. In the wars to which you allude, when we remained alone right until the end--unfortunately--we lost them, like the war of 1870. On the other hand, when we have had allies, friends on our side, as in the case of the 1914 war, the case of the 1939-45 war, we won them.

Now, France is not alone at the moment, as it is part of an alliance, which is the Atlantic alliance. When I was elected president of the republic, it was part of this alliance, but there was a discussion about whether we would go into the complete military system of the alliance. And I have always said no. We have an independent and national military power. On the other hand, we respect the alliance, and I can tell you that France is certainly, because of its historical tradition, the country which keeps its undertakings best. So we are not alone. We are part of the alliance of the countries of freedom. And on this subject I would like to say that foreign policy doesn't consist of trying to fall out with everyone. I have sometimes been told, asked questions, about how strange it is--France seems to have good relations with a large number of countries in the world. Well, so much the better. This is the aim of foreign policy. So France is now and will therefore exercise its own responsibilities.

[Question] What strikes me most in this campaign is that by trying to put Valery Giscard d'Estaing's France on trial, many candidates are putting France itself on trial--immediately, incorrectly presented as a country which is disheartened, broken, (?anesthetized), smothered, incapable of justice and generosity. France is portrayed as a caricature. Is it thus true that France could lose its enlightening power?

[Answer] There are those who, first of all, in a campaign and for electoral ends, giving this degraded picture of France, do not qualify themselves to lead it. One cannot claim to lead a people or a country which one doesn't respect. And I would say that in the statements they make either they do not know or they are lying, as, in my opinion, they have no right not to know. The main candidates are parliamentarians, so they have access to all sorts of sources of information. They know very well what France's international situation is at the moment. There too, there are a few points to make. France is a country which has played a particularly active role in international life. Of the large initiatives of recent years, most of them are French. I shall mention a few: The creation of the European Council, which now meets three times a year. This is a French initiative which I took in 1974. What is called the North-South dialogue--meetings between industrialized countries and poor countries to try to work out a new international economic order--a French initiative of autumn 1975, which is continuing at the moment and which will further develop, I hope. So, there have been a succession of French initiatives.

We now take part in the debate on disarmament, we did not take part in it before. We have taken a certain number of initiatives.

You must have seen, for example, that for security in Europe the idea which is currently being discussed, the plan which is being discussed, is a French project.

As for relations with world leaders, I, on the occasion of the campaign, have thought about the number of meetings I have had. I have received in Paris 238 heads of state and government in 7 years, 238. As there are only 500 in the world, that means that several have come, but it shows the intensity of international relations. I remind you that I have been to visit all the big countries in the world during my 7-year term. I'll take them from West to East--the United States of America, the Soviet Union, India, China--I have seen all of these, and for trips which were working trips, that is to say, during which we studied world problems. So France is, at the moment, a respected and influential country. And those who say the opposite either do not know this, and this is proof of ignorance, or they are lying, and this is worse.

[Question] Yes, I now come to the main question, that of world peace. Peace is becoming fragile, extremely fragile. Now, in this position, which is essentially very dramatic, how--and this is a question of prime importance--can we preserve France's full power of arbitration and dialogue?

[Answer] First of all, why say that we are going to enter a difficult period? For the following reason, we have gone through a difficult period because we have gone through the period of the weakness of the United States of America, which lasted 4 years of my 7-year term, and which posed for me very concerning, sometimes worrying questions for a series of security problems. We have entered a different situation which is an affirmation of the power of the United States of America. But this means that the Soviet Union will of course closely follow this affirmation of power--from which will stem a situation of tension. Moreover, the main conflicts of the world have not been solved, particularly the Middle East conflict, which still remains an open wound. And I hope we will be able to bring about peace in that area of the world. Therefore, we do indeed have a dangerous situation.

Now, my reply is I have fought for peace. I am fighting for peace-for Lebanon at the moment. I shall fight for peace. Why? First of all, because this is France's role. France has always fought for peace, and when it gave itself a fact which extends over the international scene this meant it was fighting for peace. Next, because this is the fundamental interest of our country. I think that when one looks at the delay in France's development, this is because of the devastation of wars. And if the French can live in peace for, I hope, a long time yet, they are capable of organizing the progress of their country. So, the first responsibility of a president of the republic in the world as it is is to be able to bring peace to his country.

We hear about many things in this electoral campaign. If one above others should be written at the top of the list on the wall of history I would say it should be peace. Because it is on this that the fate of France depends. Therefore, I reply to your question in the simplest way: I have fought for peace, I am fighting for peace. If I am elected president of the republic, I shall fight for peace.

Press Club Remarks

LD151407 Paris LE MONDE in French 14 Apr 81 p 9

[Report on French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's 12 April remarks to "Europe 1 press club"]

[Text] Valery Giscard d'Estaing started by telling the press club that the election campaign had opened "in a calm democratic atmosphere." He added: "The truth is that 9 of the 10 candidates criticize the outgoing president of the republic. That is a fact. When for instance Mr Marchais says that he is the only anti-Giscard candidate, they are making a mistake....

"Of course, at first public opinion was struck by those criticisms.... then people noticed that the criticisms were aimed not only at the president of the republic but at France. During two important programs, two major candidates criticized French foreign policy in terms which shocked public opinion. (Note 1), (reference to the comments made by Francois Mitterrand on 16 March on the 'Cards on the Table' program on Channel 2, on PRAVDA's review of Giscard d'Estaing's action. The PS candidate stated: 'There had to be some payment for the trip to Warsaw.' This is also a reference to the 'Cards on the Table' program on 9 March during which Jacques Chirac said, with regard to France's prolonged 'silence' after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan: 'It is shameful that nothing was said for 3 weeks.') You remember the way in which some of the president's actions were caricatured, especially my meeting in Warsaw. You also remember that the word 'shameful' was used three times with reference to French foreign policy, whereas that policy is unanimously respected in the world today. The French people have thus seen that these criticisms directed at the president of the republic hit at France too. Moreover, during the past few weeks they have also seen that they were directed at the French people too."

With regard to his plans to strengthen the majority's unity, Giscard d'Estaing stated: "There are of course the shocks and upheavals of a presidential campaign which are strong and, in my view, perfectly comprehensible. Where does the majority come from? It is the 1978 majority for which there was a contract between the voters and elected representatives who were the constituency deputies. If I am reelected in May, there will again be a majority voice. The elected representatives have a contract with their voters dating from 1978.... Do you think that after a second majority expression of public opinion they will break the contract binding them to their voters? I am convinced that they will not."

After reaffirming that his decision not to run for a third term would enable him, if reelected, "to take more nonpartisan initiatives," the outgoing president pointed out: "Here is some legitimate ambition in being a candidate for any post. I do not criticize that: I had that legitimate ambition but in my case that legitimate ambition is no longer present because I was elected in 1974. As you know, I was elected then as the youngest president of the French Republic. (Note 2), (in fact the youngest president of the republic was Jean Casimir-Perier. He was born in 1847 and elected in 1894 when he was 47 years old. Giscard d'Edtaing was 48 when he entered the Elysee. Asked: 'Do you know that if elected you will not in fact be the youngest president of the French Republic,' Giscard d'Estaing had replied in an interview published by LE MONDE on 3 May 1974: 'Yes, I know. I have not forgotten Casimir-Perier. It's rather a shame.') Therefore I no longer have any ambition in that respect. I am no longer interested in winning power."

The head of state announced: "On the one hand, I think that France must conserve the experience acquired by a number of politicians and statesmen and, on the other, a major change is necessary. The same is true of the Elysee: I have decided on a fundamental change in the Elysee team if I am reelected."

Giscard d'Estaing made the following remarks about what he thinks would happen if Mr Mitterrand won: "There would be two elections. The presidential election, in which the influence of the Communist voters necessary for his victory would be considerable, since it is completely out of the question for Mr Mitterrand to be elected without massive support from the Communist voters, who represent almost half of his own voters. In addition, Mr Mitterrand has said that he will dissolve the National Assembly; therefore there will be an election at the end of June. So there will be a kind of perpetuation of the election in France, with all the major elections coming together, in a regime characterized by a majority election system in chich no Socialist deputy can be elected unless the PCF stands down in his favor."

After reiterating that he is not in favor of proportional representation, "because the French people are attached to the choice of their deputies by name," Giscard d'Estaing continued: "If there are two successive election agreements, in other words a Socialist and Communist majority for the presidential election and a Socialist and Communist majority for the parliamentary election, what policy can you hope to implement? People are trying to suggest that it will not be a policy in keeping with the objectives and intentions of that election alliance, which will have been seen twoce. That is completely unrealistic. It means that there will be two majorities going in the same direction--Socialist and Communist--and that the policy will be in keeping with that Communist and Socialist alliance. That will certainly lead to serious economic and social distrubances."

Questioned on his intention--which he asserted at the beginning of his 7-year term--to reduce the size of the Communist electorate (Note 3), (on 16 June 1976 during an interview with Jacques Chancel, Giscard d'Estaing stated: "The PCF is in a historical decline.... in other words both the size of its membership and its electoral influence will continue to fall in the coming period. I observe this first in the change in its membership between 1950 and the present time. I observed it during the presidential election since, although the PCF put forward a candidate for the previous presidential election, it did not put one forward in 1974".) The candidate replied: "In fact I consider it unnatural for there to be a Communist option in France. It is unnatural. I am sure that the Communist voters vote according to their convictions and, of course, it is not for me to pass judgment on that conviction. But, it is unnatural.... It is unnatural because no Frenchman and woman would choose to live under a Communist regime if they had the choice. There are French people who cast protest votes against me, but I know very few Frenchmen or women who would use their voting slip to choose to live under a Communist regime.... My objective remains the same, namely to achieve a constant reduction in the number of French people who opt for a Communist regime, that is my ambition. It is my objective and I maintain it.... It is one of the reasons why I went to Monteuil in Seine-Saint-Denis, to say that I was going there as the candidate for the liberal opposition because I want France to be a French republic and for the Communist option to be chosen by only a small number of French people."

With regard to the launching of French and German borrowing to promote the modernization of enterprises, the president of the republic said: "The idea of concerted French and German action came from Chancellor Schmidt.... I would like to point out that, first, we had to borrow from abroad in any case to cover the annual balance of payments deficit and that, second, we are containing the growth of the French money supply within fixed limits and that the loan is compatible with those limits. Moreover, that is why Mr Barre would certainly not have accepted those figures or negotiated that loan if he had not been convinced of that."

MITTERRAND CRITICIZES GISCARD FOREIGN POLICY

LD151419 Paris LE MONDE in French 14 Apr 81 p 12

["J.M. C." report on speech by PS presidential candidate Francois Mitterrand at election rally in Dijon on 12 April]

[Excerpts] Dijon--Welcomed by the strains of the Socialist anthem in the Dijon conference hall, Francois Mitterrand crossed a packed auditorium and mounted the platform where Bourgogne Regional Council Chairman Pierre Joxe was awaiting him. To enthusiastic applause Mitterrand said: "I believe that we are witnessing a rejection of the outgoing, I nearly said departing candidate. We are witnessing signs of weariness with regard to this indifferent and insolent government, this display of privilege, these increased inequalities and economic and social failures. There is possibly also some condemnation of an attitude in foreign policy which means that France has lost its most original aspect."

Mitterrand then went into more detail about French foreign policy. He indicated that what "shocked" him in the African "affairs" was not "what people think." "What shocked me was that close personal relations were maintained with a paper emperor." He explained: "What disgusts me is the thought that French policy could have depended on such relations. Paris knew what was happening and relations were maintained for the pleasure of a nice trip or a trophy which brought our country into disrepute."

After recalling that he had "warned" the government in the National Assembly back in 1972, he criticized the head of state's attitude toward the Chad conflict, stressing that, 48 hours after a solemn declaration from the Elysee, "Libyan troops were ending the war in Chad and the French Government immediately opened negotiations on selling new arms to Libya."

Mitterrand again criticized the head of state's attitude toward the invasion of Afghanistan and then he mentioned the support which Brezhnev, Schmidt and Reagan seem to be giving the outgoing president. He pointed out: "This intervention by foreign powers in France's affairs shows what an accomodating attitude has been taken to them.... It is time that France found its greatness again."

AFP REPORTS ON PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION POLLS

NC152104 Paris AFP in English 2015 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 15 Apr (AFP)--Socialist candidate Francois Mitterrand would beat President Vallery Giscard d'Estaing by 54 percent to 46 if they face off in the second round in upcoming French presidential elections, an opinion poll indicated today.

The poll, commissioned by the LE QUOTIDIEN of Paris newspaper during the second week of April among more than 2,000 persons, said that if the second round pitted Mr Mitterrand against Gaullist Mayor of Paris Jacques Chirac the Socialist leader would win by 56 percent to 44, On the other hand, President Giscard d'Estaing would win a run-off against Mr Chirac by 53 percent to 47, the poll said. Ten candidates are standing in the first round on April 26 with the two leaders facing off in a second ballot on May 10.

PCE SEES GOVERNMENT AVOIDING BROAD CONSULTATION

LD150947 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 10-16 Apr 81

[PCE Standing Committee 6 April communique: "Consultation Must Be Plural"]

[Text] At its 6 April meeting the PCE Standing Committee listened to a detailed report on the meeting of Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] and PCE executive leaderships and welcomed the points of convergence that emerged from it, stressing in particular the importance of the agreement on the need for a coalition government with a broad base of support in parliament and society to tackle the serious unresolved problems. It also listened to a report on the top level contacts among the PSOE, the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] and the PCE in connection with the defense of the constitution and democracy.

The Standing Committee, which considered positive Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo's proposal to [PCE Secretary General] Santiago Carrillo to seek consultation among the political and trade union forces in the form of "committees" that will examine the most pressing issues in both sectors, notes and regrets that, whereas the "economic" or trade union committee has begun working, the UCD government has, however, taken a series of political initiatives [affecting security, the antiterroism struggle and the autonomies) without prior consultation with the constitutional parties at the state and nationality levels. Moreover, recent press reports reveal that the government is holding bilateral talks apparently with "miniconsultations" in mind, in other words excluding a number of political forces at the state and nationality levels. The Standing Committee reasserts the PCE's principle that consultations must be plural, lucid and centered on the quest for solutions having broad political, parliamentary and popular support.

The PCE Standing Committee expresses to Basque Communist Party Secretary General Robert Lertxundi its most heartfelt solidarity following his disgraceful kidnapping by Basque Homeland and Liberty [ETA] and the assassination threats that have been made. It appeals to the Basque democratic forces to repulse the latest upsurge of ETA criminal activity, which marks a new increase in the terrorist escalation, to organize the citizens' mobilization against this and all manifestations of terrorism and to guarantee the specific protection of Roberto Lertxundi and other democratic leaders and party members threatened by ETA.

The PCE expresses its active solidarity to the Basque people in the struggle against terrorism and for the Basque country's autonomous rights.

SAUDI KING KHALID TO MAKE VISIT 15-18 JUNE

LD141606 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] King Khalid of Saudi Arabia is to pay an official visit to Spain from 15 to 18 June to return the visit the king and queen paid to his country 3 years ago. In Saudi Arabia, considerable importance is attached to this visit, not only for fostering bilateral relations, but also in connection with the Middle East political crisis. Saudi Arabia is one of the main Arab economic powers and the major political force in the region, and its role is therefore decisive. Spain, as a traditional ally of the Arab cause, hopes to act as a bridge between the Middle East and Europe. This will undoubtedly be one of the main questions which King Khalid will discuss in Spain.

In the field of bilateral relations, economic agreements may be reached which might help ease our balance of payments with Saudi Arabia, which is the major power in OPEC. Saudi Arabia is particularly interested in bringing about Spanish participation in its current development plan, and this could help prospects for creating jobs in Spain.

NORWAY

NEWSPAPER EDITORIALS COVER LABOR PARTY CONFERENCE

ARBEIDERBLADET Hails Results

LD091039 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 6 Apr 81 p 4

[Editorial: "After Hamar"]

[Text] A Labor Party National Conference is a central event in Norwegian political life. Norwegian politics are never quite the same before and after such a national conference. The Hamar national conference, which ended yesterday, has been described as "a force for policies." All who were present as either delegates or observers perceived the national conference as a political workshop where decisions were made and guidelines drawn up which will have significance for the development of Norwegian society for many years to come.

Words such as "split" and "conflict" were also used before the Hamar conference. But in fact the Labor Party has rarely had a national conference so characterized by unanimity. For the first time since the NATO resolution in 1949 no opposition to foreign or security policy was expressed at the national conference. We see this as a positive result of the open debate on these questions which has gone on in the party in recent months.

During the 4 days the conference lasted, all political attention in Norway was directed at Hamar and the Hamar hall. All Labor Party officials, friends and voters expected that the conference would give the political answers to present and future problems. The national conference fulfilled its task. The political challenges facing us are many and demanding. The national conference showed that the Labor Party is willing to shoulder the responsibility and meet the challenges with policies whereby the people jointly solve social questions for the good of all. If a national conference has a unifying effect on a party it has done a good job. The Hamar conference had a unifying effect. The breadth of the party is also represented in the party's leadership. In the new Central Executive the district parties are better represented than in the past. We are convinced that the new central party leadership, the new Central Executive and the new National Executive will make a good cooperative team.

The party leadership willbe a working team. Now that Gro Harlem Brundtland is both party chairman and prime minister, there are individuals who have interpreted this as a strong concentration of power. This is a stupid way of looking at things. On the other hand, we think that it is wrong to extract principles from such a question. What is important here is what is useful in practical terms in a particular situation. Johan Nygaardsvold was prime minister for 10 years without being party chairman. For 3 years the same was true of Torp. Einar Gerhardsen and Trygve Bratteli combined the two posts. We believe that the Labor Party will continue in the future to solve such questions on the basis of an assessment of what is best in a particular situation. Many new faces have appeared in the Central Executive, and as many old ones have disappeared. Names such as Trygve Bratteli, Tor Aspengren, Reiulf Steen, Per Kleppe, and Bjartmar Gjerde have all been important men in Norwegian politics for many years. We are glad that all of those leaving the Central Executive are not also leaving active politics. The new central leadership, with Gro Harlem Brundtland as chairman, Einar Forde as deputy chairman and Ivar Leveraas as secretary, represent young forces and solid political experience. They form a leadership with which the whole party can identify.

"To arms, comrades!" such were the new party chairman's final words to the national conference. And the struggle is primarily to ensure a Labor election victory and a Labor government for the next 4 years. Trends in the last few months show that the Labor Party can win the election in September.

If the party is to succeed in doing so it must have faith in itself and be able to win confidence and enthusiasm from outside. The national conference's days at Hamar have strengthened the faith, the confidence and the enthusiasm. They have been an important contribution to the election victory, for which full mobilization will now begin.

AFTENPOSTEN Appraisal

LD081533 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 6 Apr 81 p 2

[Editorial: "New Leadership, Old Policies"]

[Text] The Labor Party has elected a new leader. A divisive and seemingly irreconcilable conflict of personalities ended happily for the party when Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland was elected to great applause as the first female chairman in the party's history. The election is also a milestone in the sense that Harlem Brundtland is the first party chairman whose social and vocational background differs from that which has traditionally characterized the Labor Party's most important leaders. But the Norwegian Labor Party's 48th National Conference was not satisfied with this one historic event. By electing Ecclesiastic Affairs and Education Minister Einar Forde deputy chairman, the Labor Party now has two decidedly academic figures in its top leadership. This says much about the social and sociological developments in our country, developments which are gradually--albeit with great reluctance--being accepted as a significant factor in the recruitment to the highest posts in the Social Democratic [Labor] Party too.

It is of course possible to discuss whether it was wise of the Labor Party to elect Forde in preference to Gunnar Berge, the sheet metal worker and trade union official from Rogaland, who in recent years has been a highly respected chairman of the Storting Finance Committee. Berge represents precisely the social group which--according to Trygve Bratteli--must not be left lying forgotten at the side of the road when the Labor Party tries to embrace other groups of voters. Since Harlem Brundtland was an obvious choice for the post of leader, Berge as deputy leader would have given the party leadership a better balance and the continuity which is so important for a party with the Social Democrats' strong traditions. On the other hand, there was no doubt that Einar Forde was a candidate with very strong qualifications. With his intellectual gifts, his talent as a speaker, and his capacity for ideological and political rethinking, he and Gro Harlem Brundtland will make a leadership team to be followed closely. They will certainly not be boring, and that is something that we can all be thankful for.

Both these elections and the general course of the national conference can be expected to have a stimulating effect on the Labor Party. The "Gro-wind" has once again created optimism, enthusiasm and drive in the ranks of party officials. To unrestrained applause at the national conference, the new prime minister and party chairman spurred the party on to a fight to retain government power. But there is little use in blowing the trumpets when the Labor Party is incapable of presenting a policy capable of satisfying the voters' needs and desires, quite unlike the present one. After four days of the national conference it must simply be stated that new answers to present and future problems will not come from the Labor Party. And it is impossible to expect anything else when a party so openly demonstrates that it does not want to listen to the signals the people themselves are giving.

The Labor Party National Conference showed curiously little interest in fundamental problems connected with inflation and weakened competitiveness, problems which quite simply will have to be solved to ensure social welfare and create a better economic foundation for getting a grip on urgent social tasks. Instead we saw that the national conference adopted a resolution for a 6-hour working day, something which Planning Minister Per Kleppe described in advance as pure economic irresponsibility. And it is also worth noting the resolution on the introduction of an interest rate ceiling.

REPORTAGE ON ROMANIAN PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT

Downing Street Talks

AU141233 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0900 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] London, 14 Apr (AGERPRES)--Official talks started on Monday afternoon at 10 Downing Street between Romanian Prime Minister Ilie Verdet and Margaret Thatcher, prime minister of Great Britain.

The two premiers examined the evolution of the Romanian-British relations in various domains, the way in which the decisions made at top level during the state visit President Nicolae Ceausescu and Elena Ceausescu paid to Great Britain June 1978 were being implemented, with stress on the need for stimulating the attainment of the objectives set under the joint statement signed on that occasion.

Satisfaction was expressed at the fact that, of late, the Romanian-British relations had expanded in all domains, for the benefit of both peoples, of the cause of detente, understanding, national independence and peace. During the talks, particular emphasis was placed on the analysis of the relations of economic and industrial cooperation with a view to identifying concrete modalities of more efficiently capitalizing the economic potential of the two countries.

The positive evolution of the bilateral commercial exchanges, which have increased three times in the last decade, was highlighted and the need was pointed to for further expanding exchanges with highly processed goods produced in cooperation, for concluding longterm export-import contracts especially in the machine-building, chemical and light industries. Likewise, the possibilities were highlighted provided by the industries of the two countries for cooperation on third markets.

Positive assessments were made of the collaboration in education, culture and art. It was considered that possibilities existed for stimulating those relations, for a better knowledge of the achievements scored by the two peoples.

During the working dialogue that passed in an open, constructive spirit the prime minister of the two countries exchanged opinions on some current questions of the international life particularly relating to the strengthening of European security, to the need for steady efforts for concrete results to be obtained at the Madrid conference, to the achievement of disarmament, nuclear disarmament in the first place. At the same time, the main hotbeds of conflict extant today in the world were pointed out with emphasis on the need to solve them peacefully.

Attending the talks are for Romania: Aurel Duma, minister secretary of state at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Alexandru Margaritecu, minister secretary of state at the Ministry of Foreign Trade and International Economic Cooperation, cochairman of the joint governmental commission of economic collaboration, industrial and technological cooperation, Gheorghe Boldur, deputy minister of Machine-Building Industry, Vasile Gliga, Romania's ambassador in London, councillors and experts. For Great Britain: Lord Carrington, secretary of state for foreign affairs, Peter Blaker, member of the government, minister of state for foreign affairs, Paul Cecil Holmer, ambassador of Great Britain in Bucharest, J. Bullard, deputy secretary general for foreign affairs, B. Fall, director for foreign affairs, J. Pownall, director, Department of Trade, concillors and experts.

Thatcher Dinner

AU141231 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0915 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] London, 14 Apr (AGERPRES)--Margaret Thatcher, prime minister of Great Britain, gave a dinner on Monday in honor of Romanian Premier Ilie Verdet.

During the dinner, which passed in a warm, friendly atmosphere, the two premiers proposed toasts to the health of Romania's and Great Britain's leaders, to the broader expansion, on mutually advantageoud terms, of the Romanian-British collaboration and cooperation, to the prosperity and happiness of the two peoples.

Lord Carrington Meeting

AU141236 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0934 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] London, 14 Apr (AGERPRES)--Premier Ilie Verdet had an interview with Lord Carrington, secretary of state for foreign affairs. On the occasion, some questions were approached relating to the bilateral collaboration which has witnessed an ascending, manysided development. During the talk, which passed in a deeply cordial atmosphere, the positive course was highlighted of the Romanian-British collaboration on an international plane and the idea was emphasized that Romania and Great Britain would contribute more substantially to the improvement of the international climate by steadily developing their cooperation.

Interview With Foot

AU141245 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0926 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] London, 14 Apr (AGERPRES)--The same day [13 April], Ilie Verdet met with Michael Foot, leader of the Labor Party, with whom he conducted a cordial talk.

During the interview, which occasioned an exchange of messages between Nicolae Ceausescu and Michael Foot, the good relations were highlighted of collaboration between the RCP and the Labor Party. In this context, the policy of the RCP was brought to the fore of broad openness to collaboration with the other parties of the working class--socialist and social democratic parties--with all the democratic and progressive forces in the struggle for democratically transforming society, for peace. At the same time, some questions regarding the development of the Romanian-British economic relations were approached.

On behalf of the Central Committee of the RCP, of Nicolae Ceausescu personally, the Romanian premier addressed Michael Foot the invitation to pay a visit to Romania. The invitation was accepted with pleasure.

Visit With Lord Mayor

AU150903 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0805 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] London, 15 Apr (AGERPRES)--On Tuesday, Romanian Prime Minister Ilie Verdet called on Sir Ronald Laurence Gardner Thorpe, lord mayor of the city of London. On the occasion the sides have considered the relations between Romania and Great Britain to follow an ascending course in all the fields, that the exchanges of visits and contacts at the level of governments, parliaments and in the field of the local administration have been intensified. They have also stressed that such vast relations play an important part in complementing the overall relations between our countries and peoples. The lord mayor gave a working luncheon in honour of the Romanian guest and of the persons accompanying him.

Meetings With Officials

AU151040 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0920 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] London, 15 Apr (AGERPRES)--Premier Ilie Verdet met on April 14 with John Biffen, secretary of state for trade. They examined aspects of the development and diversification of the bilateral commercial exchanges, of the expansion of cooperation on third markets.

The Romanian prime minister also had a working meeting with representatives of British business circles and industrial and commercial firms when stress was laid on the progress made by bilateral relations, possibilities being examined provided by the economic potential of the two countries of further expanding and diversifying bilateral economic, technical and scientific cooperation just as cooperation on third markets and mutual commercial exchanges.

In the afternoon, Ilie Verdet had interviews with Sir Keith Joseph, secretary of state for industry, David Howell, secretary of state for energy, and Sir Derek Ezra, president of the National Council for Coal. Aspects were approached of the Romanian-British cooperation in the field of industrial production, power resources, coal extraction and mining equipment manufacture.

Blaker-Duma Session

AU151033 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0930 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] London, 15 Apr (AGERPRES)--On April 14, Aurel Duma, minister secretary of state at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, had an interview with Peter Blaker, member of government, minister of state for foreign affairs, when some aspects of the Romanian-British bilateral relations, as well as current international questions, those regarding European security in particular, were approached. On that occasion, the necessity was highlighted that the proceedings of the Madrid meeting should materialize in the adoption of some concrete measures conducive to the convening of a conference on confidence-building and disarmament in Europe, in the spirit of the provisions of the Final Act.

Likewise, Romanian and British officials met in working groups to examine concrete aspects of the further development of the economic collaboration between the two countries.

Interview With Parliamentarians

AU151038 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0925 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] London, 15 Apr (AGERPRES)--The same day, the Romanian premier had an interview with the British Parliamentary Group of Friendship With Romania. He was warmly greeted by James Johnson, chairman of the group.

During the interview, which passed in a cordial, friendly atmosphere, it was considered that the Romanian-British parliamentary relations were most consistent covering exchanges at the level of both the two parliaments' leadership, the national groups of the interparliamentary union, and the groups of friendship. In this country, the special attention was highlighted which President Nicolae Ceausescu gives to the enhanced role of parliaments and parliamentarians, as exponents of public opinion, in backing, promoting and developing bilateral relations, in finding negotiated solutions to the major questions of mankind.

The Romanian premier voiced the will of the Romanian parliamentarians, of the group of friendship with Great Britain, to further develop the bilateral contacts and cooperation with a view to actively promoting the Romanian-British relations on all planes, the complex questions of the international life.

Conclusion of Talks

AU150900 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0803 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] London, 15 Apr (AGERPRES)--Ilie Verdet, prime minister of the Socialist Republic of Romania, had a conclusion-drawing interviw, at the Parliament, following the official talks with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. On the occasion they further examined certain most topical international problems.

The two premiers expressed satisfaction at the results of the visit and of the talks, that would contribute to the multilateral development and deepening of the Romanian-British collaboration.

The dialogue occasioned by the visit has contributed to the deepening of the mutual knowledge and confidence, to the better capitalization of the possibilities offerred by the economies of the two countries, opening fresh paths to the Romanian-British cooperation, to the collaboration on multiple planes to the interest of the Romanian people and of the British people, of the cause of international peace, independence and collaboration.

Ilie Verdet thanked for the warm, cordial reception given to the Romanian delegation--an expression of the good relations existing between the governments and peoples of the two countries.

At the conclusion of the interview, in behalf of President Nicolae Ceausescu and of the Romanian Government, Ilie Verdet addressed the British premier, Margaret Thatcher, the invitation to pay an official visit to the Socialist Republic of Romania. The invitation was accepted with pleasure.

In turn, the British premier asked the Romanian premier to convey best wishes to President Nicolae Ceausescu and to Elena Ceausescu.

NOTT SET TO REVIEW DEFENSE SPENDING PROJECTS

LD152208 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1820 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] Defense Secretary Mr John Nott is to take some harsh decisions on equipment and policy within the next two or three weeks in a bid to keep the troubled defence budget within its limits over the next decade.

Although manpower and some weapons projects are not sancrosanct, the long-term review of Britain's defences will not involve cutting out major roles now played by the 332,000-strong armed forces, it was understood tonight.

Mr Nott stressed in the defence white paper published today that too much money is tied up in ships, aircraft and tanks and not enough in the weapons and sensors they need to carry.

The review will look at existing equipment or that due to come into service shortly to see if it will remain viable in the 1990s to counter the growing Soviet threat. The early phasing-out of such equipment has not been ruled out, it is believed.

Among decisions due to be taken this year which come under the scope of the review, are those dealing with the replacement of the Sea-King anti-submarine helicopter; the Sea Eagle anti-ship missile; the new heavyweight torpedo for the navy, the Harrier successor and various design aspects of the Trident strategic deterrent submarine. The Trident missile project intended as the new British nuclear deterrent, will not come into question in the review.

One of the themes of the white paper is that Britain's defence programme is over-extended. In several areas it warns that resources "are spread too thinly."

With the escalating problems in the defence budget--this year's level of 12,274 million pounds shows no increase in real terms over 1980--the Defence Ministry is under pressure to concentrate its efforts more effectively in some areas of military spending.

As one senior officer commented tonight: "We are trying to do too much with too little."

Despite these financial difficulties, the government is pressing ahead with studies into how it can improve Britain's worldwide military capability "at modest cost."

The ministry wants to set up a special equipment stockpile for small-scale overseas operations. It is also looking to restore a "limited" parachute assault ability by providing RAF aircrews with the necessary extra equipment and training to drop a battalion group over a landing ground within 15 minutes.

Improvements are also being made in command and control arrrangements for overseas operations and an existing military Hq, under a major general and his staff, will be nominated to take charge of any "contingency intervention" outside the NATO area.

Earlier Mr Nott attacked speculation that the 55,000-strong British Rhine Army was to be withdrawn in the cost-saving move; "forward defence in Germany is not under review, nor is it questioned," he said.

"We are performing a crucial role in NATO and I am perfectly clear in my own mind we should not do anything which would destabilise it in any way. That would be extremely damaging," Mr Nott said. He promised a public statement on the results of the review before Parliament's summer recess.

UK, BELIZE AGREE ON INDEPENDENCE CONSTITUTION

FL142135 Bridgetown CANA in English 2126 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Excerpts] London, 14 April (CANA-REUTER)--Ministers from Britain and its colony of Belize have agreed an independence constitution for Belize in 8 days of talks in London which ended today. Nicholas Ridley, a minister of state at the British Foreign Office, said it would enshrine most of the existing democratic institutions in Belize, which has been self-governing for the last 14 years.

A new element would be the creation of an advisory council with functions extending into judicial matters. The constitution, still to be published, would be protected from amendment until after a post-independence general election, Mr Ridley said.

Britain's last colony on the American mainland is due for independence this year. Much of the territory is swamp and jungle and it has only 151,000 inhabitants. Prime Minister George Price did not attend the London constitutional conference because of a state of emergency in Belize imposed after rioting in which four people died.

Deputy Premier Lindberg Rogers said in London today when the talks ended: "To pretend that this is the end of the Belizean struggle for independence is to deceive ourselves." He said the next hurdle was to reach a detailed agreement with Guatemala on its right of access to the sea. Belize, Guatemala and Britain will start talks on this next month, probably in London.

At the conference opening ceremony, Mr Ridley hinted that a garrison of 1,600 British troops may stay on in Belize after independence. Britain, he said, intends to make appropriate arrangements for Belize's future security.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS TURN TO CONSTITUTIONAL ASPECT

NC151740 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] Within the framework of the intercommunal talks, a new meeting was held this afternoon at the Ledra Palace hotel during which disucssion was continued on the constitutional aspect of the Cyprus problem. Replying before the meeting to a question as to whether it is necessary for the UN secretary general to take a more active role in view of the slow pace of the talks, the special assistant to the UN secretary general, Mr Gobbi, said that the activities of the person offering his good services are defined, in the end, by the interested parties. We cannot be very dynamic, he added, when the sides are in the preliminary stage of the talks or in a stage in the talks.

Replying to a question in connection with the recent meeting Waldheim held in New York with Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen, Gobbi said that he did not have any concrete reports on it, but added that the secretary general had been very satisfied.

The representative of the Greek Cypriot side to the talks, Mr Ioannidhis, stated that the constitutional and territorial aspects of the Cyprus problem should be discussed together. Unfortunately, he said, the lack of concrete proposals on the territorial aspect by the other side has not promoted the desired dialogue and is hampering the talks.

The representative of the Turkish Cypriot side at the talks, Mr Onan, stated that reports in the press that Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen has stated that after the parliamentary elections in Cyprus the Turkish side will submit proposals on the territorial aspect of the problem are speculation.

A UN announcement on the meeting, which was the third in the sixth round of the talks, said that the examination of the positions and proposals of the two sides was continued. The next meeting will be held on Wednesday, 29 April, during which discussion of the territorial aspect will continue.

TURKISH CYPRIOT ANSWERS GREEK CYPRIOT UN CLAIM

TA152000 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] The TFSC representative in New York, Nail Atalay, has sent a letter to UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim in reply to a letter of 11 March 1981 by Greek Cypriot UN Representative Mavrommatis to the secretary general concerning the status of the TFSC representation in Ankara. In his letter, Atalay says that there are close relations between the Federated State and Turkey; therefore, it is very natural for the TFSC to open a representation in Ankara. Thus, this is the result of the necessities created by the close relations with Turkey.

Atalay requested that his letter be published as a UN document. In his letter he said: The fact that the Turkish Republic has accepted the TFSC as well among the diplomatic missions concerns Turkey and facilitates the TFSC's mutual relations with Turkey. To claim that Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot community are not interested in the intercommunal talks by misrepresenting a decision made 2 years ago is a move devoid of any kind of good will or realism and should not be taken seriously.

MITSOTAKIS DEPARTS FOR OFFICIAL VISIT TO CAIRO

NC160927 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 0900 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Mitsotakis departed today at 1030 for Cairo to pay a 4-day official visit to Egypt following an invitation by Egyptian Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs Hasan 'Ali. During his stay in Egypt, Mitsotakis will be received by Egyptian President as-Sadat. In the talks with Egyptian officials, bilateral and international issues will be examined.

TALKS ON U.S. BASES POSTPONED FOR EASTER

NC151910 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] According to a Foreign Ministry announcement, Greek-U.S. negotiations on an agreement for economic and defense cooperation between the two countries will be temporarily suspended as of tomorrow because of the Easter holidays. During this period, contacts between Secretary General of the Foreign Ministry Roussos and U.S. Ambassador McCloskey and other ministry officials will continue on the discussion of issues connected with the agreement.

TO VIMA EDITORIAL ON TURKISH AIRSPACE VIOLATIONS

NC151948 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 15 Apr 81 p 1

[Editorial: "The Violations"]

[Text] The government is pretending to be surprised over the reaction inside Greece to the new, worse-than-ever violation of Greece's Aegean airspace last Wednesday by Turkish aircraft, on the eve of the resumption of Greek-Turkish negotiations, which started yesterday, for the settlement of specific differences between the two countries.

The government, however, should have been surprised and worried if the exact opposite took place--if the public, the political world and the press "remained silent" in face of this Turkish provocation. Had this happened, it would have demonstrated diminished national attention and lessened sensitivity and political awareness.

The opposition placed the incident within its correct perspective. It criticized the government because yesterday it resumed negotiations with the Turks over issues related to airspace before the Turks even condescended to furnish an explanation for the "deliberate" airspace violation last Wednesday--and "repeatedly" at that. The opposition also underlined the government's responsibilities stemming from its unilaterally submitting to "arrangements"--which it undertook only a short time ago on issues of airspace--that, instead of smoothing out the differences, only encouraged the Turks. The opposition revealed (and the government ignored this point completely in yesterday's statement) that apart from these "arrangements" the government also agreed to abolish the artillery firing ranges in the Aegean area, thus weakening Greek sovereignty over these areas. A progovernment newspaper, in conclusion, also criticized the government for concealing the Turkish violations from Greek public opinion and for referring to them only after the leader of the major opposition party openly denounced them.

According to available information, however, the whole issue shows another aspect. The violation of our airspace a week ago by the Turks was planned in advance. It has not been attempted just once or twice. The PASOK chairman referred to 18 violations of our airspace, and the government admitted to a slightly lower number of such violations. Consequently, any attempt to excuse these violations by saying that they were the result of error is not at all convincing.

At the same time, it is also obvious that Turkish aircraft transferred westward from a distant airfield in the East also took part in these group forays by the Turkish Air Force inside Greek airspace. All this took place barely 5 days before the commencement of negotiations between Greek and Turkish experts in Athens aimed at settling Greek-Turkish airspace difficulties. Since these negotiations were imminent, wouldn't it have been natural to expect increased vigilance against any possible provocations from both sides? Yet the violations were still committed by the Turks.

The "scenario" naturally in no way supports the supposition that the violations were a mistake. Why, however, should such violations be "deliberate" and on purpose?

The ordinary newspaper reader who is not versed in high diplomacy wavers between two possibilities:

1. Despite all the assurances they have made to the contrary, the Turks in reality do not want a settlement of the airspace issue now, at least not at this specific moment. They consider that it is to their advantage to continue the current disputed situation so that they can fish in troubled waters and so that they can "speculate." This is why they are attempting to undermine the negotiations in advance with their provocations or, in any case, to raise obstacles to these negotiations.

2. Last Wednesday's violations by Turkish aircraft are a sort of "advance" statement of the negotiating positions Turkey will take during the Athens Greek-Turkish negotiations that started yesterday.

If during its search for answers to the above questions the government does happen to come across these two possibilties, it should not disregard them. It will at least benefit from this: It will understand why the greatest and crushing majority of public opinion deeply mistrusts the way the government is handling the question of Greek-Turkish differences, in addition to the way it is handling all other issues.

BRIEFS

MITSOTAKIS RECEIVES AMBASSADORS--Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis on 15 April received West German Ambassador Dr Helmut Sigrist with whom he discussed international and bilateral issues. Mitsotakis was invited to visit West Germany in early May. Mitsotakis also received the PRC Ambassador to Athens, Yang Gongsu, with whom he also discussed bilateral and international issues. Mitsotakis was invited to visit China and the invitation was accepted. The date is to be fixed via diplomatic channels. [Text] [Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 15 Apr 81 NC]

ADMIRAL VISITS YUGOSLAVIA--At an official invitation of the leadership of the Yugoslav Navy, Navy Chief Vice Admiral Deyiannis left for Yugoslavia on a 5-day visit. [Text] [Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1500 GMT 14 Apr 81 NC]

KKE DELEGATION TO GDR--A KKE delegation, composed of comrades Mina Yiannou, a member of the Central Committee Politburo and Yiannis Palavos, a Central Committee alternate member, departed at noon, yesterday, to attend the 10th Congress of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany in Berlin. The delegation comrades were seen off at the airport by comrades Khristos Logara, KKE Central Committee member, and Betty Ambatielou, alternate member of the party's Central Committee. Late last night the KKE delegation arrived in Berlin where it was received by cadres of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany. [Text] [Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 11 Apr 81 p 1 NC]

ROMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER CONTINUES OFFICIAL VISIT

Tours Kirikkale Refinery

TA151706 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] Romanian Minister of Foreign Affairs Stefan Andrei, who is on an official visit in Turkey, has visited the construction site of the Central Anatolia refinery in Kirikkale, which is being built with Romanian cooperation. The Turkish Radio Television correspondent in Kirikkale reports that the minister was briefed on the work by the regional director of the Turkish Petroleum Corporation, Mufit Nayir. Andrei said that the Central Anatolia refinery will be a monument of Turkish-Romanian cooperation. Andrei added that Turkish-Romanian cooperation will further develop with agreements signed in Ankara. Andrei will leave Turkey on 17 April after having visited Izmir and Istanbul as well.

AGERPRES Reports Receptions

AU131935 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1905 GMT 13 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 13 Apr (AGERPRES)--Romanian Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei, who starting Monday, April 13, is paying an official visit to Turkey, called on the Turkish head of state, General Kenan Evren.

On the occasion, on behalf of President Nicolae Ceausescu, the Romanian foreign minister conveyed to the Turkish head of state the invitation to pay an official visit to Romania. The Turkish head of state accepted the invitation with pleasure and thanked. The date of the visit is to be decided later.

During the interview the sides have highlighted the good friendly relations existing between the two countries in various domains of mutual interest, the fruitful collaboration in the setting up of important economic objectives. The sides also highlighted the possibilities of amplifying and diversifying the exchanges between the two countries, particularly on an economic plane, in tune with the potential of the national economy of Romania and of Turkey. In the context the sides stressed the necessity of improving the trade exchanges and of initiating fresh actions of cooperation in production, in oil tapping and exploitation, in naval and road transports, in industrial and energy base development as well as in other domains of mutual interest. To this end the sides stressed the usefulness of intensifying direct contacts, at all levels, between the two countries.

On approaching current questions of the international situation, they stressed with satisfaction the close positions of Romania and Turkey as regards the need for intensifying the efforts in order to overcome the tension in the world, to settle all conflicts among states by peaceful, negotiated means, for general disarmament, nuclear in the first place, under efficaceous international control, the resumption of the policy of peace, detente and respect for national independence of all peoples, for concrete results on the path of establishing a new international economic order. Emphasis was placed on the ever more important role incumbent upon the developing counties, upon the small and medium-sized countries in the settlement of the complex issues facing mankind.

As regards the situation in Europe, the necessity was affirmed for everything to be done for the success of the Madrid conference, so that it may give a fresh impetus to the unitary implementation of the Helsinki Final Act. In this context, affirmed was also the necessity of developing good relations bilaterally and multilaterally among the Balkan countries.

On April 13, too, Turkish Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu received Romanian Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei.

During the talk they analyzed the questions related to the current stages and development prospects of the collaboration between the two countries, for the rigorous observance of the summit agreements. Stress was laid on the questions linked to the expansion of the trade exchanges and bilateral economic cooperation, on seeking out fresh possibilities of cooperation in production and marketing meant to confer greater dynamism on the whole of the economic relations relying on mutual interests and advantage.

Romanian Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei and Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen had a first meeting in the afternoon. They discussed aspects of bilateral relations.

Foreign Ministers' Talks

AU151923 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1830 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 15 Apr (AGERPRES)--While on an official visit to Turkey, Stefan Andrei continued the talks with Ilter Turkmen, Turkish minister of foreign affairs, and with other members of the Turkish Government, examining mainly the problems related to the development of the cooperation actions between the two countries. In agreement the sides considered the bilateral cooperation actions carried through in Turkey to develop well, and established a series of measures conducive to the continuation, at a sustained rate, of the respective operations.

In the framework special attention was paid to the important objective of the Romanian-Turkish collaboration, the "Central Anatolia" refinery at Kirikkale, in the vicinity of Ankara. Concrete problems of this development were discussed during the Romanian foreign minister's visiting the site. The hosts highly assessed the contribution of the Romanian side to the materialization of the refinery that will be apt to process 5 million tons of crude annually.

The two foreign ministers also exchanged views on the evolution of the international situation. The talks brought to the fore the resembling stands of the two countries in point of the necessity of intensifying efforts for leaving behind the present tension existing in the world, for settling all the inter-state conflicts by peaceful, negotiated means. In the context the two foreign ministers stressed the necessity of attaining general disarmament, nuclear disarmament first of all, of intensifying efforts for scoring concrete results on the road of setting in a new international economic order, of democratizing the interstate relations.

Special attention was paid to the implementation of security and to developing cooperation in Europe. On this line stressed was the fact that everything must be made for securing success to the Madrid conference, so that the break might be used fully for drawing nearer the stands so that at the resumption of proceedings rapid progress might be achieved in convenanting a substantial document apt to give a fresh real impetus to the application of the Helsinki Final Act as a coherent whole. The sides expressed the joint will to attain an agreement on the convening of a conference on confidence and disarmament, to expand the relations of collaboration on all the planes, to secure the continuity of the process opened in Helsinki, by establishing the date and place of the new reunion included.

Referring to the Balkans the sides reasserted the need of developing and expanding the bi- and multilateral collaboration among the states of this geographic zone in view of turning the Balkans into a zone of peace and good neighborliness.

GENERAL EVREN, NSC MEMBERS OBSERVE EXERCISES

TA151525 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren went to Diyarbakir today to observe military exercises codenamed "The Future Is in the Skies," organized by the 2d Tactical Air Force Command. He is accompanied by the National Security Council [NSC] members, Navy Commander Adm Nejat Tumer and Gendarme Commander Gen Sedat Celasun, Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu and Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol.

General Evren and the commanders were received at Diyarbakir airport by Air Force Commander and National Security Council member Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya, 2d Army Commander Gen Bedrettin Demirel and Army VII Corps Commander Lt Gen Kemal Yamak. Diyarbakir Governor Erdogan Sahinoglu and 2d Tactical Air Force Commander Lt Gen Necdet Volkan were also among the welcoming party.

Necati Yagci and Tevfik Fikret Dincer from the Turkish Radio and Television news center report that General Evren and the commanders visited the 2d Tactical Air Force Commander Lt Gen Necdet Volkan and conferred with him for some time. They then observed the military exercises codenamed "The Future Is in the Skies."

General Evren, the National Security Council members and Prime Minister Ulusu will leave Diyarbakir for Batman tomorrow to tour the Selmo oil well site. They will then go to the South Dincer-I and South Dincer-II oil wells in Nusaybin. General Evren will express his appreciation to the personnel working at the oil wells.

CUMHURIYET ON NATO EFFECTS ON FOREIGN POLICY

NC160850 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 11 Apr 81 p 2

["Window" column by Ilhan Selcuk: "The New Significance of the NATO Umbrella"]

[Excerpts] Has Alexander Haig's visit to the Middle East achieved what it set out to do? What, we wonder, does this fair-haired, blue-eyed American expect to achieve in intimate talks with kings and princes in the Arab deserts? Is this former NATO commander and new U.S. secretary of state in love with the Arabs' black eyes? Why is he trying to blend together the most reactionary kings, shaykhs and princes of the Middle East?

The answer to this question is now known to almost everyone--Middle East oil is important to the West. As the administrations of the various Islamic countries now tend to protect their oil resources with greater effort, a new world is coming into being in the Middle East. Haig wishes to shape this world with U.S. interests in mind.

With the intervention of the United States, relations between Turkey and countries in the Middle East have entered an interesting phase. Washington plans to use Turkey as a springboard in readiness for a plunge into the Persian Gulf. With this in mind, U.S. pressure on Turkey increases. Conversely, Ankara takes shelter under the NATO umbrella and says: "If NATO is expanded to embrace also the Gulf, we are ready to cooperate. We refrain from undertaking any special mission in the Middle East outside NATO."

Yes, the NATO umbrella has taken on a new meaning in the Turkish-U.S. relations. From a lecture at Princeton University of the United States on Turkey's foreign policy, for example, news agencies have quoted Foreign Minister Turkmen on the Polish question in these words: "If the Soviet Union occupies Poland, Turkey will act together with its NATO allies."

This means that NATO is the criterion for Turkey's policy toward the North and the South. Don't we have a policy of our own then? Why do we identify ourselves with NATO and implement every decision it chooses to take?

The new U.S. foreign policy has reckless characteristics. Alexander Haig's world outlook even surpasses President Reagan's in aggressiveness, and has connotations that could worry West Europe as well.

Turkey is now paying the price for its economic crises in having to pursue a timid foreign policy. But conditions in the world are changing so fast that the Middle East situation will compel us to make a radical choice. No one will be powerful enough to place this choice into an orbit that is contrary to our history and geography.

COUNCIL OF EUROPE OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON MEETINGS

TA141629 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1515 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 14 Apr (AA)--Speaker Hans de Koster of the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly said 2 days of contacts in Ankara had been very useful and enlightening.

De Koster, who met Head of State Gen Kenan Evern, Premier Bulent Ulusu, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, plus Justice Party leader Suleyman Demirel and ex-Republican People's Party leader Bulent Ecevit, declined to make a further statement about his interviews, as he would report on them to the assembly. De Koster is leaving Turkey Wednesday.

Ends Contacts, Departs

TA151650 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1600 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 15 Apr (AA)--Speaker of Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly Hans de Koster said assembly debate on the status of Turkey in the Council would probably be held on 13 May. He made the statement before leaving Ankara Wednesday morning.

Speaker de Koster said his report to the assembly would be different from that of Mr Steiner, rapporteur of the Political Committee, who had drafted a fact-finding report. He declined to comment further on his report or to predict the result of the voting of the Political Committee or the plenary session of the Parliamentary Assembly. With regard to the recent resolution of the European Parliament on Turkey, De Koster admitted he had no right to criticize the content of the (?resolution of) the parliament, but added he disapproved of the procedure used by the assembly, as such an important resolution should not have been adopted with such a small number of members present.

During a stop-over at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport De Koster expressed his personal conviction that it was in the interest of both Turkey and Europe if the present Turkish delegation to the Council assembly continued to represent Turkey. Both the assembly and the Turkish Government had to make decisions to this effect, he said, adding some difficulties might crop up regarding procedure.

Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who was at Esenboga to see De Koster off, told reporters he did not believe the forthcoming resolution of the Council of Europe Assembly would be highly disturbing for Turkey.

He explained the current difficulty in relations between Turkey and the assembly arose from the fact that there was no parliament in Turkey at the moment. He acknowledged this created a procedural problem for the Parliamentary Assembly, but added it was up to the assembly to solve it. Turkey faced certain procedural and regulatory problems concerning representation at the Council, he added, but only because of the temporary conditions (?prevailing) at present.

Five members of the Swiss delegation to the Council of Europe Assembly arrived in Istanbul Tuesday. Head of the delegation Richard Muller, a Socialist Party member, said they believed Turkey should remain in the Council of Europe and not be pushed out.

"We are convinced that Turkey's leaders sincerely desire to return to democracy," he commented, adding there could be no comparison between Turkey's current military leaders and the past colonels junta in Greece. The Swiss MP's will go to Ankara from Istanbul to confer with government officials.

BANK DIRECTOR REPORTS CONTACTS IN ITALY, BULGARIA

TA151754 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] Turkish Central Bank Director Osman Siklar has announced that the agreement rendering effective the $25 million program loan pledged to Turkey by the Italian Government within the framework of OECD has been signed.

Siklar, who held economic contacts in Italy and Bulgaria, returned to Turkey today. In a written statement, Siklar noted that the loan, which will go into effect after the completion of certain legal procedures, will be used for imports from Italy.

Siklar also noted that a protocol was signed in Bulgaria for establishing relations between the Turkish Central Bank and the Bulgarian Foreign Trade Bank in accordance with Western banking concepts. Siklar stated that Bulgaria secured a foreign currency surplus in the trade based on free foreign currency and, therefore, the sources obtained from Western banks can also be obtained through the Bulgarian Foreign Trade Bank. Pointing out that he held talks with government officials during his visit to Bulgaria, Siklar announced that the director of the Bulgarian Central Bank will arrive in Turkey in September in a bid to further develop the relations in the field of banking.

'OUR' RADIO: U.S. EXPANDS ARMS RACE INTO SPACE

TA140948 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Station commentary: "International Space Day"]

[Excerpt] Dear listeners, a spaceship carrying two astronauts was launched by the United States on 12 April, International Space Day. Columbia, a spaceship that has not been tried before and is referred to as the Space Shuttle, will orbit the earth 36 times within 54 hours and 30 minutes. However, even before the spaceship was launched, there were reports that the astronauts had military duties in addition to their scientific ones and that they would conduct new arms experiments in space. If one takes into consideration that the United States was making preparations aimed at experimenting with laser arms in space, the great threat posed by these reports becomes evident. No doubt the fact that the United States has extended to space the arms race which it has recently encouraged on earth may yield extremely dangerous results for the whole of humanity. New arms experiments in space will significantly affect the military balance and will increase the arms race. Such a development directly threatens the future of the world. The United States, who has filled the space with spy satellites, is trying to make space a tool for its imperialist aims as though the tension it created and is provoking on earth were not sufficient.

The space activities of two different systems and two different worlds are marked with contradictory characteristics. The socialist world is developing the possibilities for rendering space a region of peace while imperialism is attempting to use space for its narrow class interests. Even these two very different stands vis-a-vis space concretely refute the claims of those who attempt to accuse the Soviet Union and the socialist countries of armament and aggression.

VOTCP WARNS AGAINST TURKISH-U.S. AGREEMENT

TA140919 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Commentary: "Turkey's National Security Necessitates Pursuing a Policy Favoring Detente"]

[Excerpt] In a statement after his return from his U.S. visit, Foreign Minister Turkmen said that an attack directed against the Persian Gulf will, at the same time, be considered an attack directed against the southeastern flank of NATO. Does Turkmen, through this indirect statement, want to refer to a nonexistent Soviet threat? Dear listeners, no doubt, such statements serve the interests of the most reactionary, pro-American and fascist elements within and outside the junta and the army, who aim at eliminating various realistic tendencies in the country's foreign policy and at further involving Turkey in the military adventures of imperialism. These statements also create the possibility for the Reagan administration, which is trying to draw Turkey into the new blocs of aggression it is trying to form in the Middle East and which is pursuing a policy of coarse pressure and blackmail to use our territory for its hegemonist goals, to realize its plots concerning Turkey. In conclusion, this statement is contradictory to the views he expressed in a previous statement. In his previous statement, the foreign minister stressed that one could not talk about a Soviet threat directed against the Gulf and that this view was accepted by the Gulf countries as well.

Dear listeners, developments confirm this viewpoint. The security of the Gulf region is being threatened by U.S. imperialism. The United States attempted a military adventure against the sovereign state of Iran under the pretext of rescuing the hostages. It declared this region one affecting national interests. It created a military concentration in the Persian Gulf, with some 30 U.S. warships now patroling the region. They openly threaten the security and national liberation movements of peoples in the region. The expansionist U.S. imperialists are trying to get their share of the Iranian-Iraqi war and are therefore continuously provoking the dispute between the two countries. The Washington administration is trying to form new military pacts and to open new bases of aggression in our region. The Reagan administration has tried to make extensive use of our country in its adventurist and hegemonist attempts.

A report by Dogan Uluc from New York published in JURRIYET on 9 April confirms this view. This report stated that the Reagan administration views Turkey as the deterrent force in the Middle East. In other words, the United States views us as the new gendarme in the region. It is arming Turkey in a bid to bring Turkey into a more active position against the Soviet Union and the Arab countries. The 15 F-4 planes are being given to Turkey as a result of what bargaining? According to a BBC report, Turkey will pay for the bill by supplying bases and soldiers to the rapid deployment forces. Was a secret agreement signed on the issue during Turkmen's visit to Washington? Turkmen is obliged to make a statement on the issue and inform the public.

Dear listeners, these dangerous adventures of U.S. imperialism are further increasing Turkey's dependence. Our economy is further being destroyed. Above all, our national security is being threatened.

PROPERTY OF TLP, TOB-DER LEADERS CONFISCATED

TA141101 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] Oppression of the democratic forces is continuing. The Bursa provincial leader of the Turkish Labor Party [TLP], Cengiz Koc, has been taken into custody in Eregli, Konya. It has been announced that Cengiz Koc was being sought by the Istanbul martial law command. The Ankara branch leader of the Turkish Teachers Unity and Solidarity Association [TOB-DER], Ilhan Akman, has been taken into custody for a second time. Meanwhile, the property of TLP leader Behice Boran and TOB-DER leader Gultekin Gazioglu, who were denaturalized by the junta on grounds that they failed to return to Turkey, has been confiscated. It is observed that the democratic forces have reacted against these pressures and that annoyance in the face of these acts is gradually increasing.

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 074 17 April 1981

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Former President Discusses Coalition Difficulties [BILD 16 Apr] J 1
Newspapers Comment on U.S. Space Shuttle J 2
DIE WELT [16 Apr] J 2
FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU [16 Apr] J 3
DIE WELT Article: GDR Spy Secretly Exchanged [16 Apr] J 4
ZDF Television Continues Cooperation With USSR [FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU 15 Apr] J 4

FRANCE

Giscard Unhurt in Ajaccio Airport Bomb Blast K 1
Francois-Poncet Explains Efforts To Help Lebanon [LE MONDE 15 Apr] K 1
Quai D'Orsay: EC Grain Export Ruling Unacceptable [LE MONDE 12-13 Apr] K 2
Papers Publish Latest Election Opinion Polls K 2
LE MONDE Reflects on General Haig's European Tour [LE MONDE 14 Apr] K 3

ITALY & THE VATICAN

USSR Ready for Talks 'Without Prior Conditions' [L'UNITA 14 Apr] L 1
President Pertini Hails Space Shuttle Success L 1
Foreign Minister Colombo To Visit Ethiopia L 1
PCI Opposes Government's Economic, Social Policies L 1

PORTUGAL

President Eanes Interviewed on NATO, Politics M 1
Leaders Talk With Guinea-Bissau Foreign Minister M 1

CYPRUS

House Votes Dissolution, Proclaims Elections R 1
U.S. Military Plans Have Effect on Cyprus Issue [KHARAVYI 17 Apr] R 1
Government Protests to UN on Denktas Statement R 2
Government Spokesman Reiterates Position on Talks R 2
Bayrak Radio Criticizes Greek Cypriot Attitude R 2

GREECE

'October-80' Group Causes Explosions in Athens S 1
Mitsotakis, Haig To Hold Crucial Meeting on Bases [I KATHIMERINI 16 Apr] S 1
Foreign Minister Comments on Relations With Turkey S 1
Technical Talks End S 1

TURKEY

Istanbul Paper Reacts to European Criticism [TERCUMAN 13 Apr] T 1
Evren Stresses Importance of Oil Exploration T 2
Romanian Foreign Minister Departs After Talks T 2
Trade Minister Canturk Leaves for Tehran Visit T 3
Arbitration Council Renews Labor Contracts T 3
Martial Law Authority on Last Month's Operations T 3
Annual Inflation Rate Reported at 40 Percent T 3

FORMER PRESIDENT DISCUSSES COALITION DIFFICULTIES

DW161233 Hamburg BILD in German 16 Apr 81 p 4

[Interview with former FRG President Walter Scheel at BILD headquarters in Hamburg; date not given]

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 16 Apr--BILD: Mr Scheel, you are only 61 years old but retired already. How do you feel?

Scheel: Healthwise? Well, I had a heart condition last year which I have overcome, however. But a pensioner? I neither am one nor do I feel like one.

BILD: Do you still wield political influence?

Scheel: If you mean influence in my party, I might put it this way: In my capacity as honorary chairman of the FDP, I take part in all meetings of the Presidium and the party Executive Board. Since the former politicians are friends of mine without exception, they are also prepared to accept this or that advice from me. So much for my influence. Besides, nobody need worry that I might seek his office. A former federal president must resist the temptation to become a party politician again--no matter how young he might be.

BILD: But you could become federal president again?

Scheel: Well, a great deal is possible, though it is not probable. I, in any event, will not make any effort to become federal president again.

BILD: Are you often irked by those people in Bonn?

Scheel: (laughs) Sometimes I do blow my stack.

BILD: There are growing voices that expect the end of the SPD/FDP coalition.

Scheel: This depends entirely on whether the government and the coalition, on which it is based, remain able to function. Should it be unable to cope with the important political tasks confronting us, then a new majority will be sought to solve them.

BILD: These problems are not being solved in the fields of nuclear energy and housing construction. Is the end, therefore, coming closer?

Scheel: I am the inventor of the theory that in coalitions common positions grow fewer and fewer. After all, the facts are these: Two coalition partners sit down at a table and discuss the issues they can solve. What they cannot solve jointly is put aside. Now, if everything that can be jointly done has been done, the unsolved problems remain untouched. These then form the pitfalls through which coalitions fail. Anyone taking a look at the topical political situation cannot actually contradict my theory.

BILD: What strikes us is that in all issues in which the SPD and the FDP no longer see eye to eye (for instance, in foreign and arms policies, in the housing, economic and finance policies and in the energy supply) the CDU and the FDP advocate nearly identical views...

Scheel: This also strikes me. And something of that sort naturally is no good for the internal climate in the SPD/FDP government. This creates irritation, distrust. The responsible people in Bonn must take care lest our state suffer serious harm in its economic and social development as a consequence of a lack of decisionmaking capability. The further development of nuclear energy must not be postponed any longer. The same applies to housing policy. It is depressing that essential problems are not solved just because the majority conditions allegedly do not permit such solution. Yet, you just do not change coalitions as you do a shirt...

BILD: You, after all, have some experience with changing coalitions...

Scheel: Yes. Since many parallels with today's conditions are evident, I would like to tell you how the coalition between the SPD and the FDP emerged in 1969. Extensive common platforms had developed between the SPD and the FDP with respect to domestic and legal policies and with regard to Ostpolitik. Increasing differences occurred between the CDU/CSU and the SPD which were jointly governing at that time. On election night, Mr Brandt and I were watching television. Around 2230, Willy Brandt called me by telephone: "Colleague Scheel, I believe that the results are fairly clear. I have to face the television cameras now. I would like to raise my claim to form the government. May I count on you?" I replied in one word: "Yes." This is how the SPD/FDP coalition came into being.

BILD: Let's get back to the present. Are the years of prosperity past history?

Scheel: Yes, as far as the years of a steadily, rapidly increasing prosperity are concerned. It is primarily the Asian countries which are elbowing their way into the world market with their products which they produce in good quality and more cheaply than we do. This hits us Germans in particular because we export heavily. This pressure grows stronger all the time. The Japanese, the Koreans, the Chinese, the Indonesians--and at some point, it will also be the Latin Americans.

BILD: A gloomy future indeed.

Scheel: This needn't be if we adapt to this future, if we create incentives for your economy to invest in new, futuristic branches. In short, what we need is a climate of spirit like it was in the reconstruction phase after the war.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON U.S. SPACE SHUTTLE

DIE WELT

DW161049 Bonn DIE WELT in German 16 Apr 81 p 6

[Adalbert Baerwolf editorial: "Kitty Hawk in Space"]

[Excerpt] Since Sputnik and Gagarin, space travel has become an instrument of technological warfare. The Soviets, who sent the first human being to space, who were the first to hit the moon, but lost the race for first place on the moon and did not even try to come in second, invest a considerably greater percentage of their national wealth in space travel than does the United States. The Soviets recognize the strategic significance of the new continent. They are woking on a large cosmic station with a crew of 12 whose military options are as yet hard to ascertain.

America's public, in contrast, despite the spectacular flight by Young and Crippen, still seems to fail to comprehend that space travel not only stands for power and technology but also for the technology of power; that it is useless to develop a superior technical vehicle, which is bound to be starved by the budget, if there is no motivation for its potential use.

In the Space Shuttle, the Americans have developed a cosmic craft the emulation of which is out of the question for the Soviet Union in the next 10 years. The computers which refused to communicate with each other during the first liftoff attempt are so superb technologically that Moscow would be happy to take delivery of an inferior generation by IBM. Kremlin engineers likewise could not produce the shuttle's exactly tailored 30,000 heat-protection tiles and its three high-pressure boosters, the basic concept for which comes from German engineers. But what the Soviets can produce is motivation and a fiscal belt that can be tightened.

Still, the hope remains that new U.S. President knows how to cut the budget at the proper place. Granted, Reagan also curtailed the interplenetary missions of unmanned missiles. This is painful to pure science, but it is just as important, after all, the the President has not overlooked the military potential of the astronauts, just as John Kennedy did not at the time. Under Reagan, the military ranks priority as far as the mission of cosmic vehicles is concerned, a priority which is imposed on him by the world situation.

Consequently, of the 44 shuttle flights planned for the Space Shuttle from 1982 to 1985, a mere 11 were cut or called into question, which were of a purely scientific nature. The remaining 33 planned missions of an operational nature will largely serve military or commercial character of the flights.

Under President Reagan, however, the aims of the rocket program not yet recognized by the public become evident: Defy the Soviets wherever we meet them--including in space. The wings in the cosmos have a long way to go.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU

DW161322 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 16 Apr 81 p 3

[Karl Grobe editorial: "Columbia and the Possible"]

[Text] Columbia has returned from orbit, and the self-confidence of the North Americans is on firm ground again. The world's most rich and powerful nation has brought about not merely a brilliant technical achievement for 10 billion, it now wins a material argument vis-a-vis the imagined or real military strength of the Soviet Union. It seems, however, that the enthusiasm over the first flight of the space shuttle was limited to two groups of people: the U.S. citizens and those in other states who always are enthusiastic about top-level technical achievements such as space flights.

This is due to the fact that the intoxication of the initial achievements has already faded away. The first flight around the world by Yuriy Gagarin--almost exactly 20 years ago--the first landing of man on the moon by Neil Armstrong and Michael Aldrin on 21 July 1969, then the Soviet group flights and the international meeting of Soviet and American astronauts in orbit inspired the imagination, forming a feeling of international cooperation and even of belonging together. A technically dominated future seemed possible,the "reaching for the stars" had become more than a paraphrase for the unachievable.

This has changed. All thoughtful people realized long ago that not everything that is technically possible is desirable. Protests of citizens against nuclear powerplants, which a short time ago were considered a symbol of a shiny future (and the word did not sound ironic at all); a general increase of awareness for the environment; irritation regarding bureaucratic, technicalized apparatuses; the realization that all acts of life can be electronically controlled--all thse are indications of a changed attitude toward technological utopias. Just a decade ago they caused enthusiasm, but now they create uneasiness and even fear of the future.

The changed feeling toward life--not merely of a younger generation which is desperate about many encrusted structures--is not directed toward destroying machines, not a backward oriented romanticism. It is the expression of experience which has come through dealing with threats, the more accurate realization of dangers which are not imbedded in technology as such but in those handling it.

It is the frustrating realization that mere administration of objective necessities has replaced policy, a policy aimed at the purposeful forming of future social life, the basic law formulated in the United States more than 200 years ago involving, among other things, humanity and happiness. This older utopia is in danger of being torn apart through technology. The perception of the danger turns into a protest which is not aimed at machines, but against classes and ruling castes who have lost sight of their fellow man.

Columbia is therefore fascinating as a technical achievement, but it also touches off new thinking which goes beyond fascination. Moreover, other problems are more urgent. Two comparisons indicate the dimensions involved. One refill of the reusable tanks of Columbia costs about as much as all workers make in 1 year in a large tractor plant in India or China; the whole enterprise has used up about all the cash the peasants produce in 12 months in the relatively rich Chinese province of Szechwan, and Szechwan has 100 million inhabitants.

Only such a rich country as the United States can afford space enterprises, and it affords it only because in the end the general staff on both ends of the military-industrial complex sees certain opportunities in the project with a view to a new Cold War. On the other hand, however, living conditions in the United States, its economic prosperity and political power are tied at least through the unequal world trade conditions with the miserable conditions in the Third World, and even societies that think slowly have realized that all North-South problems have not been solved through the granting of political independence.

Columbia is with these dark sides and particularly through them, a symbol for the greatness of a world power. The space shuttle also demonstrates how far the United States, West Europe, Japan and with not too great a distance also the USSR and its earthly satellites have been removed from the 500,000 villages of India, the 1,000 peoples of Africa, the 2 billion people who live far beyond the limit of any poverty that can be sized up statistically.

When everything still seemed possible, the beginning of space travel was a code for progress as such. Since the limits of the possible are becoming more visible to all, no really jubilant mood will emerge. But maybe this is exactly the small step man must make: the step toward skepticism and thoughtfulness in order to decide in a new and different way on the future.

DIE WELT ARTICLE: GDR SPY SECRETLY EXCHANGED

DW161238 Bonn DIE WELT in German 16 Apr 81 p 2

[Heinz Vielain article: "'GDR' Spy Secretly Exchanged"]

[Excerpts] Bonn--Norbert Moser, the military spy sentenced to 11 years' detention in December 1977, has been living in the GDR for several weeks now. DIE WELT learned yesterday that the former Bundeswehr officer has been secretly exchanged. Moser had been exposed as the most important man in a spy ring within the Bundeswehr. Details of the exchange are not known.

ZDF TELEVISION CONTINUES COOPERATION WITH USSR

DW161208 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 15 Apr 81 p 20

[Text] The Mainz ZDF Television Network will cooperate with the Soviet television service for another year. A joint protocol was signed in Mainz with the USSR State Committee for Radio and Television (Gostelradio) which regulates the mutual assistance in productions in the respective host country and the exchange of television filsm and news. The agreement was signed by ZDF Director General Karl Guenter von Hase and Deputy Chairman of the State Committee Aleksandr Yevstafyev.

GISCARD UNHURT IN AJACCIO AIRPORT BOMB BLAST

LD181730 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Summary] Two bombs exploded at Ajaccio airport this afternoon just after Valery Giscard d'Estaing's plane landed there. The president has not been hurt, but there are seven people injured--all of them Swiss, two of whom are seriously injured. The bombs were hidden in an automatic left-luggage locker and the lavatories. There is also extensive damage.

It seems that the police were warned by telephone just before the first bomb exploded, but responsibility has not yet been claimed.

Corsican nationalist movements have canceled a demonstration they were due to hold in Station square in Ajaccio this evening. They consider this bomb attack to be a provocation.

FRANCOIS-PONCET EXPLAINS EFFORTS TO HELP LEBANON

LD161431 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Apr 81 p 36

[Text] The following is the text of the statement made on Lebanon by Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet as he left the Elysee on 13 April:

"I have just informed the president of the republic of the reports I have received from the French ambassadors in the Middle East who came to report on the situation in Lebanon, and also of the conclusions reached in those discussions.

"Of course, owing to its ties of friendship with the Lebanese people and its international responsibilities, France intends to take initiatives to help restore peace.

"These initiatives will be based on one central principle, which is the one France has always adopted with regard to Lebanon, namely, that there can only be a return to peace, conciliation and unity through its legal authorities, in other words, the president, government and Lebanese Army.

"It is with this objective that we will resume contact with the Lebanese authorities, to see first what measures can be taken to help them in their efforts for peace and to restore order.

"Second, in the UN framework, we will initiate consultations with a specific objective: to send a special representative from the UN secretary general to Lebanon to examine the situation with the Lebanese Government, to see how the United Nations can give support to the efforts being made by the Lebanese authorities to restore peace and also to see what other international initiatives could possibly be taken at the Lebanese authorities' request to ensure that peace is restored and that the cease-fire is effective and lasting.

"I would also like to say that we will approach all friendly countries in the region to inform them of our analysis and our initiatives.

"Of course, we also will contact our EEC partners, who share our concern and support our efforts. I think, I hope that, taking account of developments in Lebanon, which I am following very closely, we will be able to give effective help to the unfortunate Lebanese people."

QUAI D'ORSAY: EC GRAIN EXPORT RULING UNACCEPTABLE

LD160805 Paris LE MONDE in French 12-13 Apr 81 p 13

[Excerpt] The EEC Commission's refusal to give France permission to export 600,000 tons of wheat to the USSR has sparked off few official reactions in farming circles. The only indignation shown was the statement by Quai d'Orsay spokesman on Friday, 10 April, that the French Government regards the Community decision as "incomprehensible and unacceptable" and asserts that it will use all the possible procedures to make the Commission reverse its decision.

The agriculture minister apparently remained much calmer. Mehaignerie merely stated on Thursday, 5 April [as published]: "The French grain market will be balanced. The French exports necessary to achieve that will be made." This reassuring statement probably explains why only the Standing Assembly of Agriculture Chambers reacted by expressing "surprise" at the European decision, while the National Federation of Syndicates of Farm Operators and the National Young Farmers Center maintained an unusual silence.

PAPERS PUBLISH LATEST ELECTION OPINION POLLS

NC161915 Paris AFP in English 1828 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 16 Apr (AFP)--Less than 68 hours from a week-long blackout on pre-election public opinion polls, forecasts show a drop in President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's support in the first round and an anyone's-guess contest between Mr Giscard d'Estaing and Socialist Francois Mitterrand in the second and decisive run-off.

As French law forbids publication of electoral poll forecasts in the weeks preceding the first and second rounds, publication of forecasts will stop from midnight Saturday and only resume after the April 26 first-round ballot pitting the 10 candidates.

A Louis Harris poll published in the weekly L'EXPRESS forecasts that Mr Giscard d'Estaing and Mr Mitterrand will be on a 50-50 footing in the second round on May 10. The previous Louis Harris poll one month ago gave Mr Giscard d'Estaing a four-point edge over Mr Mitterand in the second round.

Meanwhile, the weekly LE POINT published an IFOP poll predicting victory for Mr Mitterrand: 51.5 percent in second round, against 48.5 percent for Mr Giscard d'Estaing.

The Harris poll also forecast a rise in the first-round votes of Gaullist Jacques Chirac and Communist Georges Marchais. It said that Mr Giscard d'Estaing would get 28 percent of the vote, Mr Mitterrand 24 percent, and Mr Marchais and Mr Chirac 18 percent and 17 percent, respectively. This indicates a rise of two points for Mr Marchais and of one point for Mr Chirac.

None of the "minor" candidates would receive more than 5 percent of the vote. Front-runner is ecology candidate Brice Lalonde for whom 4 percent is forecast.

According, however, to the IFOP poll, first-round scores would be 27.5 percent for Mr Giscard d'Estaing, 23.5 percent for Mr Mitterrand and [number indistinct] percent each for Mr Chirac and Mr Marchais.

Meanwhile, the daily LE FIGARO has published a SOFRES Institute poll on the first round [word indistinct]. This shows 27.5 percent for Mr Giscard d'Estaing--a 1.5 point drop over three weeks--and 22 percent for Mr Mitterrand, a two-point drop. Mr Chirac would obtain 19.5 percent--a 3.5 point rise--and Mr Marchais 18.5 percent, up two points.

The Harris poll was conducted from April 10 to 13, using a 1,000-person sample, and the SOFRES poll on April 14 and 15, also with 1,000 persons.

Forty seven percent of Frenchmen are dissatisfied with President Giscard d'Estaing against 40 percent who are satisfied, an opinion poll conducted by the SOFRES organization for the newspaper FRANCE-SOIR indicated today. A month ago, the same organization found 46 percent were dissatisfied with the president against 35 percent satisfied.

LE MONDE REFLECTS ON GENERAL HAIG'S EUROPEAN TOUR

LD160905 Paris LE MONDE in French 14 Apr 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Mr Haig's Difficult Mission"]

[Text] The results of the first tour which the new secretary of state has just made of his friends and allies with typically military speed (nine capitals were visited in 1 week) probably fall short of what the secretary of state himself and his interlocutors originally hoped.

General Haig was probably the victim of circumstances, since the limelight was initially stolen from him by the anxiety over Poland and, second, his trip was disrupted by the new wave of violence in Lebanon. In addition, the secretary of state was preceeded by a wave of rather malevolent rumors produced by his errors of maneuver in the hours which followed the attack on Mr Reagan.

Nonetheless, Haig's behavior was bound to reflect the uncertainties of a government team which is far from having finalized its options on a series of extremely important problems. Washington is known to want to increase its military strength and adopt a tougher tone toward the USSR, to reassure its allies and to help its friends to settle their quarrels. But these intentions must be precise and stable, especially when they conflict with each other.

For instance, in the Near East, Haig tried to convince his friends in Riyadh and Amman that it is in their interest to unite with the United States to establish the "strategic consensus" for which he is praying in the face of Soviet expansionism. His interlocutors told him that before reaching that stage it was necessary to settle the Israeli-Arab conflict, since the Jerusalem government represents a worse threat to them than the USSR, as General Haig was publicly told by his Jordanian counterpart.

More specifically, the Arabs expect the United States to dissociate itself much more clearly from Israeli policy, failing which they will be unable to become more closely involved with this compromising protector. Haig is willing to arm Saudi Arabia and even to ignore Israel's objections to that, but by describing Israel as an "ally" he is showing that the United States still refuses to make the choice.

Europe shares many Arab positions, and the secretary of state could only ask his community allies to be so kind as to refrain from new initiatives on the Near East while America defines its own stance. However, people, especially in Bonn, were also expecting to find out when and how Washington will open the "Eurostrategic" talks with Moscow which Carter rather imprudently promised in December 1979.

After the many startling anti-Soviet statements made by his defense colleague Weinberger during a parallel--nobody dares say rival--tour of the old continent, Haig had no easy task in that respect. It does not seem that his more reassuring remarks were enough to convince his allies that the new U.S. leaders know what they want as much as they say they do.

USSR READY FOR TALKS 'WITHOUT PRIOR CONDITIONS'

LD161327 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 14 Apr 81 p 17

[Guido Bimbi report: "Bonn and Moscow Provide Glimpses of Hope for Missiles Negotiations"]

[Excerpts] Rome--The question of whether the Europeans have managed to make Washington "change its tune" with regard to the Euromissiles issue and East-West dialogue still awaits a full and considered reply from the United States. For the time being, the only clear thing that has emerged is that the divergences are very serious; it is enough to consider the frankness with which Schmidt said that unless negotiations on Euromissiles with the USSR begin soon, "there will be difficulties" between Bonn and Washington.

Another pointer has come from the Soviet ambassador in Rome, who granted an interview to PAESE SERA. Nikolay Lunkov, whom the newspaper introduces as "Brezhnev's most authoritative spokesman in the Western capitals," was made a CPSU Central Committee member at the latest, 26th congress, which recently ended in Moscow. He explained that the USSR is willing to start negotiations on the Euromissiles without any preconditions, thus going beyond the idea of a prior moratorium, as requested by Genscher during his 2-4 March visit to Moscow. "The USSR," Ambassador Lunkov said, "is willing to negotiate even at once, without prior conditions.... We put forward a proposal for a moratorium, but this proposal is not a precondition. Let us meet and start discussions."

PRESIDENT PERTINI HAILS SPACE SHUTTLE SUCCESS

LD142218 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2030 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] The first and authoritative reaction in Italy to the shuttle success: On the conclusion of the flight of the Columbia Space Shuttle, the president of the republic has sent to the U.S. President a telegram of warm congratulations. The brilliant results of the mission, President Pertini says among other things, justifies our deep satisfaction and gives us pleasure that the progress of science and technology has been boosted for the well-being of mankind. In this spirit I applaud not only the advancement of technology but also the courage of the men who have carried out this enterprise.

FOREIGN MINISTER COLOMBO TO VISIT ETHIOPIA

AU161544 Rome ANSA in English 1525 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 16 April (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo will make a working visit to Ethiopia April 22-23, at the invitation of his Ethiopian counterpart Feleke Gedle-Giorgis, it was announced here today.

PCI OPPOSES GOVERNMENT'S ECONOMIC, SOCIAL POLICIES

AU170847 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 17 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 17 Apr (ANSA)--The Italian Communist Party (PCI) has once again confirmed its opposition to the Rome government's economic and social policies and its demand for a new and different ruling arrangement in light of the latest anticrisis measures launched by Premier Arnaldo Forlani's coalition. The measures were announced late last night after a busy day of consultations highlighted by a meeting at the premier's office between Forlani and PCI Secretary Enrico Berlinguer.

After being briefed about the moves which were to be announced later in the day, Berlinguer re-hashed his party's criticism of the government's economic and social policies for the premier's benefit. A PCI communique disclosed that Berlinguer also re-stated the party's call for "a new government, different in its policy and planning approach, in its methods, its conduct, as well as its structure and make-up."

PRESIDENT EANES INTERVIEWED ON NATO, POLITICS

LD160922 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] The geostrategic position of the Azores archipelago is a factor of vital importance to Europe's defense policy and the NATO alliance. This is stated by Gen Ramalho Eanes, president of the republic, in an interview to be published tomorrow by the newspaper ACOREANO ORIENTAL.

Any talk about the Azores is inevitably tied with the issue of regional autonomy which, in General Eanes' view, represents a gamble and a commitment by the democratic system and is simultaneously the best guarantee of the democratic system itself. Although the present international environment is characterized by a marked economic recession, the development of the autonomy experiment carried out in Madeira and the Azores must be viewed with optimism, the president adds.

The revision of the constitution is another major point touched upon in the interview. In this connection, ACOREANO ORIENTAL asks the president of the republic whether he would consider the possibility of a referendum as a solution better suited to the regional interests, if the forthcoming revision of the constitution failed to contemplate regional autonomy in accordance with the specific wishes already expressed by the local populations. To this question, General Eanes says: I consider the referendum a valid instrument of consultation and an important device to formulate decisions in a democratic system. However, he adds, the constitution does not provide for such a consultation with the population. Consequently, within the existing framework, the possibility of [word indistinct] is ruled out.

Separatism is another topic of the interview. In this respect, the president of the republic considers separatism at the moment as merely a marginal trend. This is so, he adds, in view of the steady consolidation of democracy and the normal course followed by the process of regional autonomy.

Alleged sympathy on the part of Gen Ramalho Eanes for the Communist Party--a favorite charge leveled at him by his opponents--is also touched upon in the interview. The question is quite simple, says Ramalho Eanes. I do not uphold the system of society advocated by communist ideology, but I maintain that nobody ought to be discriminated against for his ideas. In a democratic European system, like the one under which we live, all Portuguese are entitled to equal treatment.

With regard to common ground and existing differences between the democratic alliance blueprint and Eanes' own blueprint, the president of the republic says that the democratic alliance blueprint is a party blueprint geared toward government. Rather than an Eanes' blueprint, the president says, it would be more accurate to talk about a program. A program is indeed the very foundation of his mission, and according to Ramalho Eanes, such a program has not set any political, economic or social targets, but merely defines the overall framework of his action as president of the republic.

LEADERS TALK WITH GUINEA-BISSAU FOREIGN MINISTER

LD152136 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1830 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] The deputy chairman of the Revolutionary Council of Guinea-Bissau, Victor Saude Maria, is continuing his unofficial visit to Portugal. After having been received by President Ramalho Eanes yesterday, the Guinea-Bissau leader this afternoon visited Necessidades Palace and talked with his Portuguese counterpart Andre Goncalves Pereira.

Speaking to journalists outside Necessidades Palace, Saude Maria said that international affairs, relations between Portugal and Guinea-Bissau and bilateral cooperation agreements between the two countries were the major topics discussed at this afternoon's meeting.

HOUSE VOTES DISSOLUTION, PROCLAIMS ELECTIONS

NC170614 Nicosia Domestic Service in English 0530 GMT 17 Apr 81

[Text] The House of Representatives, at its regular session yesterday, decided almost unanimously to its dissolution and the holding of elections on 24 May; there were 31 votes in favor and only 1 against the motion. The decision was taken at 0025 today after a long discussion of the draft resolution tabled by the parliamentary spokesman of the Democratic Party.

The resolution mentioned that the political situation in Cyprus had changed so much in the past 6 months with the formation of new parties that the present composition of the House no longer represented the existing political currents.

After the elections the first session of the new House will be held on 4 June. The House yesterday also adopted an amendment to the income tax law.

U.S. MILITARY PLANS HAVE EFFECT ON CYPRUS ISSUE

NC171008 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 17 Apr 81 p 3

[From the "Views and Comments" column: "U.S. Aggressiveness and the Cyprus Issue"]

[Excerpts] U.S. officials themselves describe their deployment of military intervention forces abroad as the largest every realized. Really, mankind is watching with grave concern the deployment of dozens of U.S. warships, carrying tens of thousands of troops and super-modern aircraft, tanks, artillery and other material, on the seas thousands of miles away from U.S. coasts. At the same time, dozens of U.S. bases have been activated abroad and the notorious "Rapid Deployment Force" is ready to intervene at any point of our planet in order to impose, with the use of arms, U.S. interests.

Vast quantities of money and arms are flowing into Turkey to make it a powerful imperialist bridgehead. In return, the Turkish foreign minister has assured General Haig that Turkey's territory is at the disposal of Americans in order to unleash an attack against not only the Soviet Union but also progressive countries in the Middle East. Greece, entangled again in the gears of military NATO, is bargaining in Athens over what to get in return for its consent that the U.S. bases on its territory be drawn into the more general U.S. aggressive plans. In Cyprus, the Akrotiri bases are illegally and provocatively included in the same plans. The U.S. imperialists are proceeding without hestitation to complete the operation that would allow them to forcibly impose their domination on a huge geographic area, taking the risk of a third world war.

In this light, it is easy to understand the new difficulties arising in the Cyprus issue. The hardening of the Turkish stand and the problems in the intercommunal talks are explained. Under the circumstances of an aggravated situation in our area with the promotion of aggressive goals, for the achievement of which the United States considers Cyprus a necessary bridghead, the prospects for a just Cyprus solution become remote and even more complicated. In order to serve its warmongering interests, Washington is striking against our people's struggle for peace in the country, and normal conditions in an independent, unitary, nonaligned and demilitarized Cyprus. On the basis of these facts, we must intensify our struggle against the imperialist conspiracies.

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS TO UN ON DENKTAS STATEMENT

NC171113 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 17 Apr 81

[Text] An official protest by the Cyprus Government was circulated in the United Nations today against a recent statement by Mr Denktas that he will issue to Turkish Cypriots title deeds for Greek Cypriot property in the occupied areas and that measures are now being taken in that direction.

The protest is made in a letter sent from Cyprus' permanent representative to the United Nations, Mr Mavrommatis, to UN Secretary General Waldheim. The letter has been issued as an official document of the General Assembly and the Security Council. It calls on Mr Waldheim to take all necessary measures to put an end to illegal actions concerning Greek Cypriot property as well as to the provocative statements by the Turkish Cypriot leadership.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN REITERATES POSITION ON TALKS

NC162034 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] A government spokesman in a statement today explained that the Cyprus Government considers the constitutional and territorial problems as interdependent problems that must be discussed simultaneously and in relation to each other. The position of the Cyprus Government, the spokesman added, is that the failure by the Turkish side to submit proposals on the territorial problem is not in compliance with the commencement statement of the UN secretary general on the basis of which resumption of the talks was guaranteed, and this Turkish failure and refusal endanger the talks themselves.

BAYRAK RADIO CRITICIZES GREEK CYPRIOT ATTITUDE

TA161501 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] The deputy president of the Turkish Cypriot Legislative Assembly, Semsi Kazim, has issued a press release on the latest attitude of the Greek Cypriot leadership regarding the Cyprus question. Kazim stressed that their intransigent attitude lay behind the delaying tactics they used at the bilateral talks. He pointed out the most obvious sign of the Turkish Cypriot side's good will was the constitution which was the basis of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus and which stipulated that the problem could be resolved with the establishment of a Federal Cyprus Republic to be based on the equality of the two ethnic communities. Kazim stated that the decisions made by the Turkish Cypriot Legislative Assembly clarifying the solution of the Cyprus problem, the views and proposals deposited by the Turkish Cypriot side and the compromising attitude it adopted during the bilateral talks further developed and strengthened this good will.

Kazim added that in the face of the Turkish Cypriot side's positive and constructive efforts, the Greek Cypriot leadership was acting in a way which made the solution of the problem more difficult. He also said that the Greek Cypriot leadership's unacceptable demands threatened the freedom and security the Turkish Cypriot community had regained after a long and difficult struggle of survival. Kazim stressed that these demands prevented the solution of the problem.

The deputy president of the legislative assembly also criticized the fact that the British were sitting at the negotiating table with the Greek Cypriot leadership in connection with the British bases in Cyprus. He said that the fact that the British considered the Greek Cypriot leadership the legitimate government of Cyprus was a very negative development so far as the Turkish Cypriot side was concerned and showed a completely biased attitude on the part of the British. He stressed that the fact that a guarantor state of the Cyprus Republic [words indistinct] with the Greek Cypriot community--which had disbanded the republic and destroyed its legitimacy--on the issue of the bases was to be condemned.

'OCTOBER-80' GROUP CAUSES EXPLOSIONS IN ATHENS

NC162138 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] A total of six home-made incendiary bombs were placed last night under six automobiles parked in various areas of Athens. They exploded shortly before midnight, destroying a pharmaceutical company's minibus parked on Yeoryiou Papandreou street in the suburb of Zografos, and damaging a small truck and a foreign-registered private automobile owned by a Saudi Arabian prince parked on Eginitou Street No 54. The other three bombs placed under private automobiles did not cause any damage. Responsibility for the bombings was claimed by the underground organization October-80 in anonymous telephone calls to newspapers and in leaflets found in Pedhion Tou Areos Park.

MITSOTAKIS, HAIG TO HOLD CRUCIAL MEETING ON BASES

NC171000 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 16 Apr 81 p 1

[Excerpt] If the meeting between Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and U.S. Secretary of State Haig scheduled for May in Rome does not arrive at agreement on certain differences, the settlement of pending Greek-U.S. issues will be put off until after the elections. This observation was made by Greek Foreign Ministry circles in connection with the question of the bases. The same circles added that the two sides have agreed to temporarily suspend as of today the talks held on technical experts level because of the Easter holidays.

In the meantime, according to I KATHIMERINI reports, the developments of recent days in connection with the Greek-U.S. talks do not provide many hopes for the settlement of differences either on the level of experts or of general secretaries, and at the same time they fail to "prepare" the ground for the Mitsotakis-Haig meeting in such a way that the two foreign ministers may contribute to the positive settlement of some pending problems.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON RELATIONS WITH TURKEY

TA161632 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis said that relations between Turkey and Greece have overcome a period of tension and entered a climate of constructive dialogue. In a statement to the Turkish Radio and Television, Mitsotakis said he was convinced that his meeting with Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen on the occasion of the NATO ministerial meetings to be held in Rome during the first week of May would further enhance this dialogue.

Technical Talks End

TA171034 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 17 Apr 81

[Text] The talks between the technical experts of Turkey and Greece on the problems between the two countries have ended in Athens. Especially, the Aegean airspace issue was discussed during the talks. According to information received by a Turkish Radio and Television correpondent, the views emerging from these talks will be discussed at the meeting between the Turkish and Greek foreign ministers during the NATO Ministerial Council meeting in Rome in the first week of May.

ISTANBUL PAPER REACTS TO EUROPEAN CRITICISM

NC170851 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 13 Apr 81 p 3

[Article by Zafer Atay: "A Resolution"]

[Excerpts] It looks as if the tumult created against Turkey in the outside world after 12 September is to continue in an increasing manner. This tumult is being caused by the Council of Europe, the commissions, the parliamentary delegations, the trade union representatives, the journalists and lawyers of all colors and now by the European Parliament.

Meanwhile, the Council of Europe commissions will meet on 28 April. Turkey is the first item on their agendas. The meeting of the General Assembly of the Council of Europe will follow on 11 May. A decision will be taken as to whether the relations that Turkey has established with Europe through the Council will be continued or not. In the meantime, certain utterly depraved Armenian organizations and fictitious democratic associations in Greece, France and the United States will meet and vomit their spite against Turkey.

We don't really favor an outright denunciation of the interest focused on Turkey. Turkey is on the world agenda because it is an important country that is considered worth debating. Europe has activated its councils, parliaments and parliamentarians because it knows it will not be easy to alienate itself from Turkey. What do we stand to gain by putting ourselves in the position of a country that has estranged the entire world? Why had these zealous admirers of democracy and these socialist politicians, who pose as defenders of human rights, kept silent before 12 September when the terrorists were shedding blood? We wonder, do these petty politicians share the same views with the communist terrorists. Why hadn't the defenders of human rights felt the need to raise their voice when the separatist brigands were fearlessly shelling children at bus stops?

The situation is quite clear; there is no need for panic. The lie machines will continue to operate. After having poisoned the minds of tens of thousands of youths, these traitors who are now enjoying themselves in Munich and Paris, will continue to spill their spite. Their aim is to exasperate Turkey to the extent of saying: "We care neither for the Council of Europe nor for the European Parliament. They have no practical value." Then we would be torn away from the West completely, thus serving the aspirations of the traitors.

The only thing to do is to foil these attacks by wise counterattacks. All reports about Turkey are being communicated to the West in a distorted manner. The leader of the group of democrats, Ferguson, has eloquently stressed this in his address at the European Parliament. Therefore, no matter what country they come from, all delegations should be free to see everything. This is the only way to disprove the lie machines. Our diplomats abroad as well as our press organizations should work harder than ever before. Films, photographs, books and tapes reflecting the truth should be sent to all members of the institutions now debating Turkey. Efforts by the National Security Council to speed up the return to democracy must be brought to the knowledge of foreign countries in an up-to-date manner. These circles should be told about the peace which our fellow countrymen have been enjoying after 12 September.

More important than all of this should be the efforts to expose the real plans of those who, before 12 September, have trampled on "the right to live," which is the most inalienable right of human beings.

EVREN STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF OIL EXPLORATION

TA161206 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren today visited the Selmo-103 oil production area near Siirt's Batman district. Evren accorded prizes and success documents to the personnel employed at the Selmo-103 oil well in a ceremony today. In a speech during the ceremony, Evren noted that energy is very important in the development of the country. Pointing out that a large amount of foreign currency is spent in the import of oil, which is a significant source of energy, Evren explained that it is essential to increase local production.

Noting that the main reason for Turkey's current difficulties is the shortage of energy, the head of state said: The only reason that most of our factories are unable to produce at full capacity is that these factories cannot secure all the energy they need. It is with this in mind that from the first day we told the relevant persons to exert every effort to intensify oil explorations. In a short time, we saw that oil was struck in two places thanks to our patriotic and industrious engineers and workers. This greatly pleased us and we hope that this will be continued. Evren added that the oil exploration work conducted by Turkish workers and engineers makes us proud and the Turkish nation will remember this work with gratitude.

Evren then awarded prizes and letters of appreciation to personnel employed at the Selmo-103 oil well. The letter of appreciation reads as follows: It is a fact that we are forced to spend a major portion of our foreign currency reserves for the import of oil at a time when intense efforts are being exerted to overcome this problem. I believe that the great efforts you made to save our country from these difficulties and find new oil resources are being received with gratitude by our appreciative nation. I wish your success to continue and I extend to you my sincere love.

National Security Council members Air Force Commander Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya, Navy Commander Adm Nejat Tumer, Gendarmerie General Commander Gen Sedat Celasun, as well as Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu and Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol, accompanied Evren during his tour in the Selmo-103 oil well. The 2d Army Commander, Gen Bedrettin Demirel, 7th Army Commander Lt Gen Kemal Yamak, 2d Tactical Air Force Commander Lt Gen Necdet Volkan and Siirt Governor Musa Atik also attended the ceremony at the Selmo-103 well.

According to reports received from Necati Yagoi and Tevfik Fikret Dincer in the Turkish Radio and Television news center, Evren and the persons accompanying him then went to the regional directorate of the Turkish Petroleum Corporation [TPAO] in Batman. Evren was received with a military ceremony in Batman. Numerous citizens who participated in the welcoming ceremony cheered. Evren was briefed at the Batman regional directorate by the TPAO Director General, Selahattin Ozkan, about oil exploration. After the briefing, Evren and his delegation toured the Batman oil refinery.

In the afternoon, Evren will tour the Guney Dincer-1 and Guney Dincer-2 oil wells near Mardi's Nusaybin district. The head of state, the commanders and the prime minister will return to Ankara this evening.

ROMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER DEPARTS AFTER TALKS

TA171033 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 17 Apr 81

[Text] Romanian Minister of Foreign Affairs Stefan Andrei, who attended the talks between Turkey and Romania in Ankara, has left Turkey. After his Ankara visit, Andrei also toured Izmir and Istanbul.

TRADE MINISTER CANTURK LEAVES FOR TEHRAN VISIT

TA170750 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0700 GMT 17 Apr 81

[Text] Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk left for Tehran this morning to hold talks on increasing the volume of trade between Turkey and Iran. The problems arising in the implementation of previously signed agreements between the two countries will be discussed during Canturk's contacts in Tehran. The possibilities for Turkish contractors to take jobs in Iran and issues concerning highway and railway transportation will also be discussed.

A delegation comprised of representatives from various ministries and organizations is accompanying Canturk to Iran. The commerce minister and his delegation will return to Turkey on 22 April.

ARBITRATION COUNCIL RENEWS LABOUR CONTRACTS

TA141639 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1555 GMT 14 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 14 Apr (AA)--The Supreme Arbitration Board Tuesday began to review a contract covering 42,000 workers in the metal goods industry. It hoped to complete its review by the end of this week. The board will take up next another labor contract involving 23,000 textile workers on 68 job sites. The Supreme Arbitration Board renewed and put into effect Monday expired labor contracts covering employees of Middle East Technical University and the Eregli iron and steel works.

MARTIAL LAW AUTHORITY ON LAST MONTH'S OPERATIONS

TA161549 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1525 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 16 Apr (AA)--The Martial Law Coordination Office at General Staff Headquarters announced the monthly crime rate had gone down considerably from September 12, 1980 to April 11, 1981. According to the announcement, the monthly number of murders declined from 69 to 20, number of wounded from 151 to 29 and the number of crimes from 319 to 72 from September to April.

In operations last month 3,054 left-wing extremists, 795 right-wing extremists, 644 separatists and 2,677 persons of unidentified political views were apprehended by security forces. Some 2,804 detainees were arrested as the perpetrators of several crimes. On April 12, 1981, 5,188 persons were under custody for ideological crimes, 19,269 were under arrest and 1,205 were convicted and serving prison sentences.

Also 4,945 guns, 1,169 machine guns, 79,893 pistols, 558,704 bullets, 523 explosives, 424 sharp instruments and 4 walkie-talkies were seized in this month's operations. Moreover, 113 defendants who were involved in political murders and 57 defendants charged with armed assault were among those arrested during the past month.

ANNUAL INFLATION RATE REPORTED AT 40 PERCENT

TA161223 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] It has been announced that the price of wholesale goods dropped by 0.8 percent in March compared with February, and that this drop is the first in 5 years. The announcement by the Trade Ministry says the rate of inflation from March last year to March this year was 40 percent. The price index in Ankara and Istanbul in March this year rose by 0.5 and 0.7 percent, respectively. The price index rose by 40 percent in Ankara and by 42.6 percent in Istanbul in the past year.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 075 20 April 1981

CONTENTS

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Genscher Warns Against Anti-U.S. Sentiments J 1
Press Comments on U.S. Policy Inconsistencies J 1

FRANCE

Poll Shows Giscard Narrowly Leading Mitterrand K 1
Group Claims Responsibility for Ajaccio Attack K 1
Djibouti Efforts for Horn Settlement Supported [LE MONDE 16 Apr] K 1
LE MONDE Urges Aid, Mediation Effort in Lebanon [11 Apr] K 2

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Forlani Replies to Brezhnev's Detente Proposals L 1
PCI Members Polled on Poland, Afghanistan L 1
Government Orders Cutbacks in Public Spending L 2

UNITED KINGDOM

Romanian Prime Minister Tours UK Industries [AGERPRES] Q 1
Visits Oil Rig; Ends Visit [AGERPRES] Q 1

GREECE

Papers on Further Government, Opposition Exchanges S 1
Rallis Attacks Opposition [MESIMVRINI 17 Apr] S 1
Papandreou Response [ELEVTHEROTIPIA 18 Apr] S 1
Reactions Continue on Turkish Airspace Violations S 2
AKROPOLIS, 16 Apr S 2
MESIMVRINI, 17 Apr S 3
Foreign Ministry on Talks S 3
Allies Favor Continued North Cyprus Occupation [TO VIMA 19 Apr] S 4
Paper Criticizes Government for Weakening Defense [EXORMISIS 19 Apr] S 6

TURKEY

GUNAYDIN Reacts to Anti-Turkish BBC Program [14 Apr] T 1
Ulusu Attends Meeting on Workers' Problems Abroad T 1
Amnesty International Officials Arrive for Talks T 2
State Minister Leaves for Official Talks in Cyprus T 2
VOTCP: TCP Official Congratulates GDR's Honecker T 2

GENSCHER WARNS AGAINST ANTI-U.S. SENTIMENTS

LD181024 Hamburg DPA in German 0944 GMT 18 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 18 Apr (DPA)--FDP Chairman and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has strongly warned against provoking more anti-American sentiments in the Federal Republic. In an interview for BERLINER MORGENPOST (Sunday edition), when asked to assess anti-American currents in the Berlin SPD, he said that there are people, and not only in Berlin, "who are totally uncritical toward any Soviet initiative." Their political ambition is to produce anti-American sentiments in our country.

According to Genscher, central Europe is not being threatened by American medium-range missiles, which as yet do not even exist, but by Soviet medium-range missiles "targeted on us." He affirmed the need for negotiations to ensure equilibrium at as low an armament level as possible.

The interview was prereleased by the FDP.

PRESS COMMENTS ON U.S. POLICY INCONSISTENCIES

DW160921 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 16 Apr 81

[From the press review]

[Text] Commenting on the conditions cited by U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger under which Washington is prepared to negotiate with Moscow only if and when the Soviet Union considerably reduces its presence in Poland, STUTTGARTER NACHRICHTEN writes: Who is it, anyway, who determines the guidelines of U.S. foreign policy? If Pentagon boss Weinberger, for example, now introduces new preconditions for the East-West dialogue in matters of the medium-range missiles, then we should be allowed to ask to what extent this is congruent with the concept of the President.

So far, in any event, it appears that the SALT talks will be canceled only if the Soviets intervene in Poland. Just early this week, the U.S. secretary of state once again stated this in Bonn. Everything is different again since yesterday. The alliance partners, rather than the Soviets, now are irritated, and once the Kremlin becomes convinced that Washington is more interested in confrontation than in coexistence anyway, it will no longer have any reason whatsoever to spare Poland. Hence, Haig's moderate approach is the better course of action indeed. And besides, this course is an alliance decision.

The FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU editorial entitled "The Weinberger Risk" says: This not only brings up the question about Weinberger's seriousness, since Weinberger within a very short time has managed to nearly turn into a security risk, it also provides food for Western doubts as to whether Washington really is serious about both parts of the NATO decision on nuclear counterarming and negotiations on the limitation of that potential. Weinberger works directly into the hands of the hawks in the Kremlin, without any sense for European problems, obviously also without any interest in any resumption of arms control policy and devoid of any attitude of partnership toward the NATO partners. The alliance is heading for hard times with this U.S. politician. Therefore, the next U.S.-European clash at the NATO spring meeting in May probably already has been programmed.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG states: It is high time for the government chief to take hold of the reins of his cabinet which, by too frequent and contradictory utterances on daily policy issues and strategic questions, increasingly irritates the allies. The fact that the secretaries of state and defense do not pull on the same rope doesn't convey a good impression.

The German Federal Government felt compelled to issue a statement on the NATO dual decision which, purposely phrased in a spirit of partnership and loyalty to the alliance, represents a corresponding warning to Washington, which should be appropriately appreciated there. Some of the European alliance members have enough difficulty defending, to a reluctant public and against the resistance from the leftwings of the government parties, the offer of negotiations on the medium-range missiles to the Kremlin, which is linked with the decision on potential counterarming as an instrument of pressure. If U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger by his demand for a Soviet pullout from the promximity of Poland now raises a condition which had not been coordinated with the allies, he makes it harder for the European governments to pull along.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE notes: This will go on like this for quite a while: Secretary of State Haig underscored the U.S. readiness to talk with the Russians on the limitation of the nuclear weapons potentials, while Secretary of Defense Weinberger qualifies this again, most recently with the remark that the Russian concentration of troops around Poland must be halted first. With outrage, TASS immediately labels this the Weinberger doctrine, yet East and West will have to get used to such a demanding attitude. The incumbent administration is made of sterner stuff than was its predecessor. And Caspar Weinberger no doubt reflects its attitude toward the Soviet Union more precisely than Alexander Haig who by virtue of his office must abide by diplomatic considerations.

The KONSTANZ SUEDKURIER discusses Bonn's stance on the Weinberger utterances and states: The federal cabinet, chaired by Hans-Dietrich Genscher who substituted for the absent chancellor, emphasized the mitigation of tensions between East and West as the most urgent goal of German foreign policy. This establishes continuity. In a divided country in which at least one side endeavors for better human relations, this forms the precondition for any headway in the course embarked ipon. Yet any mitigation of tensions also requires that one side needn't be afraid of the military superiority of the other. This touches the problem of Western counterarming which proposes to restore balance so that arms limitation negotiations will have a realistic basis.

The new U.S. Government, which yet must endeavor to reach an integrated foreign policy course, is talking with different tongues. Rash utterances from Washington provide food for the anxieties that the equal rank of the will for negotiations on the one hand and counterarming on the other might be changed to the advantage of the latter. These utterances should not be overrated. But by the same token, we must hope that the common line of the Western alliance will be accepted in Washington as well because otherwise, the domestic tensions connected with the issue might increase above all in the Federal Republic.

POLL SHOWS GISCARD NARROWLY LEADING MITTERRAND

NC181359 Paris AFP in English 1354 GMT 18 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 18 Apr (AFP)--In extremely narrow survey results, French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing registered 50.5 per cent of voting intentions, Socialist Party rival Francois Mitterrand received 49.5 per cent in a poll Louis Harris France released today.

Today is the last day before the presidential elections that electoral polls can legally be published under French Law. The first round of the voting is April 26 and the second May 10. The two candidates showed similar results a week ago in a Harris poll for the magazine L'EXPRESS, with each scoring 50 per cent of the vote in a two-candidate contest.

In the poll today, commissioned by Radio Television Luxembourg, the incumbent candidate obtained 27 per cent of the votes in a first round, and the Socialist candidate 22.5 per cent. The respective figures a week ago were 28 and 24 per cent. Gaullist candidate Jacques Chirac and Communist candidate Georges Marchais in the latest poll each accounted for 18.5 per cent of the vote, progressing respectively by 1.5 and 0.5 percentage points in the polls. Ecologist candidate Brice Lalonde got 3.5 per cent of voting intentions, Gaullist Michel Debre 2.5 per cent, and minor candidates Marie-France Garaud, Arlette Laguiller and Huguette Bouchardeau each had two per cent.

The poll was undertaken April 16 and 17, drawing on a national sample of 1,000 people.

GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR AJACCIO ATTACK

NC180925 Paris AFP in English 1915 GMT 18 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 18 Apr (AFP)--A militant movement called Corsican Guerrillas and Partisans (CGP) today claimed responsibility for Thursday's bomb attack in Ajaccio on the French Mediterranean island, and confirmed it was a protest at French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's visit there.

A CGP communique sent to AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE said: "The presence of the French head of state on our soil is a provocation that met its response in Ajaccio.... The Pasquale Paoli unit struck on April 16 at 5:17 pm."

A private aircraft taking the president to Corsica for an election rally had just touched down at Ajaccio airport when a bomb planted in a left-luggage locker went off. Eight people were injured and one of them, a Swiss tourist, died in a hospital yesterday.

An incident at a Giscard d'Estaing election meeting in Marseilles on Wednesday, in which two smoke bombs were thrown, had been claimed by the "Pasquale Paoli group," which warned in a message to AFP: "Beware tomorrow."

The communique today said: "We, ex-fighters of the Corsican National Front (1940-45), decided to create the Corsican Guerrillas and Partisans and to take up arms. Only death or liberation of our homeland will make us lay them down."

DJIBOUTI EFFORTS FOR HORN SETTLEMENT SUPPORTED

LD161517 Paris LE MONDE in French 16 Apr 81 p 6

[Text] Somali Foreign Minister Jama Barre was to lunch this Wednesday, 15 April, with Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Olivier Stirn, who visited Djibouti and Addis Ababa last month. Somalia supports the French proposals made in 1978 for a regional conference on the Horn of Africa's problems.

The Quai d'Orsay indicates that there has been some change recently in the position held by Ethiopia, which hitherto showed no interest in such a proposal. Djibouti President Hassan Gouled, who has made efforts to secure a truce and a negotiated settlement of the conflict between Mogadishu and Addis Ababa and who is now on visit to Somalia, is to visit Khartoum soon. Paris indicates that France "wholeheartedly" supports President Hassan Gouled's initiatives.

LE MONDE URGES AID, MEDIATION EFFORT IN LEBANON

LD160913 Paris LE MONDE in French 11 Apr 81 p 1

[Editorial: "France and Lebanon"]

[Text] There would be no point in attributing France's action in the new Lebanese crisis to election considerations: The situation in that country is too serious and the Christian community's future too seriously threatened for French electioneering tricks to influence the situation. That is why we should welcome the efforts being made by the French authorities first to give humanitarian aid, however small, to the inhabitants of Zahlah--the only Christian "Thor" in the Syrian side.

Thanks to these efforts--notably the decision to send De Guiringaud to Damascus--and to those of other powers, the Syrian Army has finally partly lifted the siege on that city. But the truce is extremely fragile. That is why Paris rightly "deplores" the commando operation carried out by the Israeli Army in southern Lebanon on Thursday night and Friday morning. A repetition of this type of operation could only further aggravate the fate of this Lebanese Christian community about which Tel Aviv claims to be so concerned.

It is now up to Paris--but why not involve other European powers in this enterprise?--to make every effort to strengthen the truce and to establish adequate medical aid. This subject was the focal point of the talks which Francois-Poncet had on Thursday with the Lebanese and Syrian ambassadors. It is probable that the foreign minister also discussed the second aspect of France's action with his interlocutors, in other words, the establishment of a natural force responsible for separating Muslims and Christians in Beirut.

This idea, launched by Chirac a few weeks ago, has obviously been well received by the Christian community. On the other hand, Syria is hostile to the idea and it seems, to the Lebanese authorities' indecisiveness, if not apathy. In any event, this could only be a relatively long term project because it would have to be approved by the Security Council in which Moscow enjoys the right of veto.

Other projects, possibly easier to implement than the plan to send a French contingent, are in the air. For instance, Washington apparently is contemplating a multinational buffer force. The difficulty which the UN interim force in Lebanon is experiencing in the southern part of the country in controlling the warring factions suggests, in any case, that this type of solution cannot be regarded as a panacea.

While not underestimating Syrias vast responsibility, a great deal will now depend on the Israeli attitude. Indeed, there is a great temptation for the Tel Aviv leaders to exploit the situation for their own benefit on the pretext of aiding the Lebanese Christians. During his recent visit to Israel, General Haig apparently had the greatest difficulty in deterring them from doing that. The latest operation at Zahlah in southern Lebanon confirms this especially since Begin could hope to remedy his difficult political situation before the parliamentary election in June by some spectacular "exploit" outside the national territory.

FORLANI REPLIES TO BREZHNEV'S DETENTE PROPOSALS

AU181414 Rome ANSA in English 0845 GMT 18 Apr 81

[Text] Moscow, 18 Apr (ANSA)--The text of the Italian Premier Arnaldo Forlani's written reply to Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev March 9 proposal for a moratorium on missile installations in Europe and immediate negotations, was finally made public last night.

In the letter, Forlani reiterated the view that further progress must be made in terms of the European security and cooperation conference. Italy views the principles embodied in the Final Act of Helsinki as essential to peace and cooperation among peoples, Forlani stressed.

The letter also voiced concern over the situation in Poland. The missive said that Poland's sovereignty must be respected and that any failure to do so would spell grave consequences for inter-European and world relations.

After taking note of the Soviet declaration that it is not seeking military superiority, the letter reaffirmed the double track line with regard to long range nuclear forces, given the existing imbalance between the two alignments. Italy renewed its urgings to take advantage of the period up to 1983 (when NATO's modernized systems will be installed in Europe) to dismantle or substantially cut back the Soviet SS20 missiles. In this way NATO would be in a position to partially or totally cancel measures aimed at modernizing its forces, the letter continued. It was noted that NATO would not go ahead with any new installation of modernized missiles throughout the period needed to complete production of the first batch (in 1983). Negotiations would be facilitated if the USSR called a halt to the installations of the SS20s, the letter continued.

Next followed a rundown of Italy's actions on an international level to settle areas of crisis and hotbeds of tension. The letter also reiterated the Italian position in favor of withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan and respect for national sovereignty.

Recalling the European Economic Community's initiative with regard to the Arab-Israeli conflict, the letter said that the threats of armed clashes which loom over humanity must be combatted.

The letter concluded with a confirmation of the Italian position in favor of a constructive dialogue between East and West in the context of constructive negotiations.

The above letter came as a response to peace proposals forwarded last March by Brezhnev to several Western government leaders. Forlani's reply was delivered to the Soviet Foreign Ministry Friday.

PCI MEMBERS POLLED ON POLAND, AFGHANISTAN

AU171542 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 17 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 17 Apr (ANSA)--The Soviet stance over Poland and Moscow's explanations of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan enjoy very limited sympathy among rank-and-file militants of the Italian Communist Party, the largest in the West, according to an opinion poll carried out on behalf of the Rome news weekly, L'ESPRESSO.

The poll, which will appear in the weekly's upcoming number, showed that only 6.5 percent of Italian Communist Party (PCI) militants share the Soviet view that a "counterrevolutionary attempt" is underway in Poland.

Fifty percent of those questioned said that the movement in Poland was "genuinely popular", and ten percent said the PCI should break off relations with the Soviet Union if a Soviet invasion is the outcome of the situation.

As for the intervention in Afghanistan, only 16.5 percent voiced support for the Soviet position, but a full 45.3 percent said the Soviet Union was defending its "strategic interests". A further 27.5 percent said the Soviet intervention should be described as an "imperialist aggression".

Ranking deceased communist party leaders, the sample gave 64.6 of their preferences to Palmiro Togliatti, 7.1 percent to Marshall Josip Broz Tito, and lesser percenting to Joseph Stalin, Nikita Khrushchev, and Mao Zedong.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS CUTBACKS IN PUBLIC SPENDING

AU170851 Rome ANSA in English 0837 GMT 17 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 17 Apr (ANSA)--The Italian Government has ordered a five billion dollar cutback in public spending while injecting new funds for investments in crisis-afflicted industries and providing export incentives to boost the nation's economic growth.

Premier Arnaldo Forlani's ruling coalition refrained for the time being from raising the prices of oil products, basic foodstuffs and public utility rates in an apparent gesture to organized labor.

The unions asked the government to put off the hikes while they hammered out a plan to revise Italy's indexed wage system, whereby paychecks are automatically adjusted to keep in pace with inflationary trends on a periodic basis.

The measures launched last night go along with last month's moves to devalue the lira and tighten credit as part of an overall economic policy maneuver designed to curb inflation and create employment opportunities.

Phase-two, as the latest measures are called, was specifically designed to offset the recessive effects of the earlier moves.

A third phase will follow in early May, involving changes in the cost-of-living wage adjustment system, a move which will require the consent of organized labor.

The nation's three major labor organizations have failed so far to come up with a joint stand on the issue and all sides agreed to put the matter off until May 6, giving the unions a "pause for reflection."

The public spending cuts ordered Thursday were designed to trim the state budget deficit down to the 38 million dollar level prescribed by the government's three-year economic plan.

Export credits will be made possible through a 2.2 billion dollar grant to the "Mediocredito Centrale", the public credit bank which subsidizes foreign trade.

Other measures, likewise aimed at restoring balance to Italy's deficit-heavy trade account, will give export business access to easy-term credit.

ROMANIAN PRIME MINISTER TOURS UK INDUSTRIES

AU161118 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0900 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] London, 16 Apr (AGERPRES)--Premier Ilie Verdet continued his official visit to Great Britain on April 15. He saw round industrial entherprises that closely cooperate with similar enterprises of Romania.

At the plane manufacturing enterprise of Hurn of the "British Aerospace"--with which Romania builds the "BAC 1-11" passenger aircraft--the Romanian prime minister was warmly greeted by Allen Greenwood, deputy chairman of the company. During the talks held on the occasion stress was laid on the productive character of that collaboration that started after the visit President Nicolae Ceausescu and Elena Ceausescu paid Great Britain, just as on the two countries' wish to open to it ever broader prospects for their benefit. Several sections that contribute to the building of the "BAC 1-11" plane were then visited. Experts informed the guest of the most important stages of the assembly process. Thanking his hosts for the warm reception extended to him and for the interest they show in the cooperation with Romania, Ilie Verdet pointed out that further efforts were necessary for stimulating the actions of cooperation agreed upon by intensifying the barter deliveries in order to expand the collaboration between the two countries in aircraft production.

The Romanian prime minister was also guest to the town of Coventry. There he saw round the enterprise of ANSTY that belongs to the "Rolls Royce" company. Concrete aspects were approached on the occasion of the Romanian-British cooperation in the production of aircraft engines. The need was stressed for sustained efforts with a view to making best use of the industrial potential of the two countries.

Premier Ilie Verdet called at the town hall of Conventry, town united with Galati municipality. Lord Mayor Thomas McLatchie warmly greeted the Romanian prime minister on behalf of local administration and referred to the close relations existing for almost two decades between the municipalities of Coventry and Galati expressing his conviction that the current visit would contribute to the further development of the Romanian-British collaboration in all fields of joint interest.

The same day in the afternoon Ilie Verdet arrived in Aberdeen where a group of businessmen and representatives of the British National Oil Corporation gave a lunch in his honour. Aspects were discussed in a cordial atmosphere relating to the possibility of developing the Romanian-British cooperation in oil and gas exploration and drilling.

Visits Oil Rig; Ends Visit

AU162005 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1750 GMT 16 Apr 81

[Text] London, 16 Apr (AGERPRES)--On April 16 Romanian Premier Ilie Verdet concluded the official visit he paid to Great Britain at the invitation of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. The ceremony marking the conclusion of the visit was held at the London Heathrow Airport.

On his departure Ilie Verdet was saluted by Sir Donald Logan, chairman of the Great Britain-East Europe Center. Attending were Vasile Gliga, Romanian ambassador in London, Paul Cecil Holmer, British ambassador in Bucharest, other British officials.

The same day, in the morning, the Romanian premier visited the deep-sea oil rig "Forties Alpha," in the North Sea. The Romanian guest was presented the technical performance of the rig, the technologies used for the exploitation of the deposit. Mentioning the long-standing traditions existing in Romania in point of oil extraction, the successes scored by the Romanian oil workers and experts in the construction of deep-sea drill rigs and in drilling the Continental Shelf of the Black Sea, the Romanian prime minister stressed that real possibilities existed for materializing a wide cooperation between the Romanian and the British oil workers.

PAPERS ON FURTHER GOVERNMENT, OPPOSITION EXCHANGES

Rallis Attacks Opposition

NC171428 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 17 Apr 81 p 1

[By our correspondent, F. Yiangiozis]

[Excerpts] In Kozani yesterday the prime minister inaugurated a new phase of dynamic confronation of positions. The opposition, Rallis declared, will directly receive the proper replies at every given opportunity. The same tactics will be pursued by all government personalities from now on during the 8-month period remaining until the elections.

At the same time yesterday, Rallis also called upon the people--at this first stop of his 3-day tour--to enforce, through their own position, respect for a calm political climate. Specifically, the prime minister leveled heavy accusations against the opposition.

Rallis said the opposition abhors dialogue although it advertises itself as being democratic. He then stressed: "Our opponents have not learned the lesson that tension led the country to adventures--and this barely 15 years ago."

Kozani was the first stop of the prime minister's tour of western Macedonia. This afternoon he is scheduled to speak at Kastoria after first inaugurating the asbestos unit at Zidhanion [locality] near Servia. A large crowd enthusiastically welcomed Rallis in Niki square of Kozani with the predominant slogan: "You will be prime minister tomorrow as well."

Rallis did not limit himself to a presentation of the government's achievements but also severely criticized the opposition. "I will not leave," he said, "any point referred to by the opposition without an answer. This is because the opposition does not limit itself to criticism. It resorts to insults.

"You," the prime minister added, addressing the people of Kozani, "will judge whether calm or madness will dominate the elections." Rallis added that "democracy cannot function under mad fanaticism."

Referring to national issues the prime minister stressed:

--The opposition admitted the battle-worthiness of the armed forces.
--Those concerned over the progress of our national issues must understand that "we refuse to recognize that anyone has the right to consider themselves more patriotic than we are."
--The government remains vigilant on the protection of our national interests.

Papandreou Response

NC182102 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 18 Apr 81 pp 1, 8

[Excerpts] Shortly before midnight at the Hilton hotel last night, Mr Andreas Papandreou ended his address with a strong personal "recommendation to the prime minister," Mr Y. Rallis: "Rallis yesterday linked his election campaign with the name of the president of the republic. We warn him that he is putting himself into very dangerous waters and that he particularly shoulders great constitutional responsibilities."

In the passage immediately preceding the above statement (delivered without a written text) the PASOK chairman stressed: "Today in our fatherland there is a common awareness that there is no government. The failures that the New Democracy Party has amassed in all sectors (economy, education, the national and social problems) are leading to a progressive disintegration, literally to gangrene. Despite the general outcry, the government is insisting on remaining in power... until the end. As long as it insists, the Greek people's reply at the elections will be stronger."

On NATO: Very simply, PASOK has two positions: The association in NATO's political wing renders impossible the multifaceted foreign policy that Karamanlis declared when he was prime minister. Our association in NATO's military wing influences both the deployment and the armament of our armed forces. This is because the danger for NATO comes from the north while the only danger for the Greek people, the constant threat to our borders that continuously increases, comes from the east--Turkish expansionism. Rallis' government has hastened to return to NATO not only without even securing explicit guarantees for our country's defense but also without resolving questions (on the basis of the Rogers plan) over our sovereign rights in the Aegean airspace.

The Greek-Turkish issue: By insisting on the Greek-Turkish negotiations, the government has started a chain of concessions with the abolition of our air force's firing ranges as its recent climax. Despite the aggressive 8 April airspace violations that were not announced to our people, the government sat at the negotiating table with the Turks before receiving any answer to its protest. In its negotiations with the Turks, New Democracy's policy is one of continuously making concessions. We ask: What have we received in exchange? What right does the government have to negotiate our country's sovereign rights? Today we call on it to take a responsible position and not diminish our airspace from 10 to 6 miles. We must also not forget that "the great friendship" developing between Greece and Turkey and, particularly between the two countries' foreign ministers, is taking place with Cyprus as its victim, the Cyprus that we have surrendered to Turkish occupation.

The bases: The Americans are not in a hurry in the negotiations because the agreements that are already valid provide for a regime of capitulations. Now the United States is not even giving what it offered in 1977--and it does not even want to hear about an Aegean balance of power, border guarantees or the mythical significance of "the Greek administration" in the bases. Fearing the Greek people and the increasing popularity of PASOK, which questions all its defense moves, the government continuously postpones reaching an agreement in the negotiations, hoping for a miracle. We ask it: What right does it have to expose the country to a nuclear holocaust because of the nuclear warheads that already exist on the bases and discuss the installation of "Pershing 2" and "cruise" missiles? Why doesn't it prepare a plan for the removal of the U.S. bases?

REACTIONS CONTINUE ON TURKISH AIRSPACE PROVOCATIONS

AKROPOLIS, 16 Apr

NC171057 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 16 Apr 81 p 12

[Text] Reliable Foreign Ministry sources stressed yesterday that the Aegean firing range has not been abolished. At the same time, these sources also reiterated that: The incident in the Aegean the other day (that is, the provocative Turkish violations) was serious and gross. It added that the seriousness of the incident was determined by:

First, from the fact that it was a matter of massive violations. Second, because the violations took place inside 6 miles.

The Foreign Ministry sources also reiterated that the Greek Government will continue to react to the provocative attempt by Turkey to question our sovereign rights in the 10-mile national airspace. It will react with all the means at its disposal. Other sources have stressed that this has been made clear to Ankara, and that the dangers created in bilateral realtions by incidents similar to that of the 8 April have also been pointed out.

In connection with press reports on the Aegean firing range, the reliable Foreign Ministry sources have said that this was a matter within the framework of the negotiations on the Aegean airspace. It is a fact, they added, that some progress was made at the recent meeting of the two countries' Foreign Ministry general secretaries, Mr Roussos and Mr Gurun. The question has been raised, but there is no agreement.

As yet, there remains a great deal to be discussed and completed. And this is what is being done now with the talks between experts which may be concluded today. The same sources said in conclusion that as long as there is no agreement the firing range has not been abolished.

Finally, referring to what the PASOK chairman has said about the government wanting to conceal the violations, the same sources said there has never been any such intention. The sources added that, because of the seriousness of the affair, the government was waiting for the Turkish explanations to the severe protest it made to Ankara before proceeding with any statement.

MESIMVRINI, 17 Apr

NC172150 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 17 Apr 81 p 1

[Text] The Turkish side (delegation of experts) yesterday suddenly changed its attitude entirely and appeared clearly conciliatory during the discussions (for the third day) with the Greek expert at the Greek Foreign Ministry. Provided that there will be no new change in the Turkish attitude, it is now expected that it will probably be possible today (the last day of the talks) to prepare a joint draft agreement on certain technical--but of secondary importance--matters concerning Aegean airspace. At the time of their meeting in Rome in early May, this draft will be submitted to the foreign ministers of the two countries.

However, there was no discussion of the mutual abolition of the Aegean firing ranges during the experts' talks. The prerequisite for discussion of this question is the prior signing by the two sides of the draft agreement under preparation. On the basis of everything discussed yesterday, this draft agreement fully preserves the Greek side's control over the Athens Flight Information Region. On the other hand, Ankara will be briefed about the flights of aircraft not at the border point of the Athens and Istanbul FIR's but at some depth inside the Greek region of flight responsibility.

According to the same MESIMVRINI reports, the two major Turkish controversies (the question of the 6 instead of the 10 miles and the nonsubmission of flight plans in the case of flights within the international airspace of the Athens FIR) were not even submitted for discussion at the negotiations table.

Foreign Ministry on Talks

NC172020 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1700 GMT 17 Apr 81

[From the "Chronical of the Day" program]

[Text] The Foreign Ministry has announced that Greek and Turkish experts on airspace matters continued between 14 and 17 April examination of issues which remained unresolved during the last meeting of the secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries in Ankara. The experts' talks have concluded in a coincidence of views on certain of the issues discussed.

HANDLING OF SHIP REPAIR AGREEMENT CRITICIZED

NC171313 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 16 Apr 81 p 4

[From the "Comments" column: "Are We A Colony?"]

[Excerpts] Persistent reports from Washington say that the U.S. Government has been pressuring Greece to amend or even violate the agreements which it has signed with East European countries.

The strongest pressure is on the question of Neorion, Siros, where Washington demands that not even Soviet commerical vessels be repaired.

There is no doubt that this pressure is part of the official policy of the Reagan administration, which is a new version of the Theodore Roosevelt policy at the beginning of our century.

During the last few years, Greece is supposed to have inaugurated (as the various Karamanlis governments had declared) a multidimensional foreign policy, one basic part of which was peaceful coexistence, friendship and mutually beneficial cooperation with the countries of the East. This policy has been sealed and consolidated by Mr Karamanlis' successive visits to all the capitals of the Eastern countries in his capacity either as prime minister or president of the republic. Part of this multidimensional policy is the agreement with Moscow for the repair of Soviet vessels--auxiliary vessels of the Soviet fleet in the Mediterranean or of commerical vessels--at Neorion, Siros.

The first U.S. reaction--it is obvious that the Americans have never ceased to consider themselves as Greece's patrons--was to compel the Greek Government to partly pull out of the agreement. Suddenly one day it [the Greek Government] stated that no Soviet naval auxiliary vessels were to be repaired, despite the agreement that was recently concluded. All this occurred a few months ago. Today, with militarists of the Haig type in power, a fresh offensive is under way: They [the militarists] are asking for the violation of the remaining part of the agreement with the excuse that "all commercial vessels are part of the navy since they can be used for the supply of warships."

Well, according to this reasoning there is no U.S. commercial fleet since the Chris Craft of the Atlantic confederation are in a position--if asked by Mr Haig--to supply the aircraft carrier Enterprise with beans for the crew's mess. This is enough joking. It is obvious that with its policy Washington has been attempting to fully patronize our country, its first goal being Mr Karamanlis' multidimensional policy which is thus being blown up in the air.

Let the government clearly tell us: Is Greece a free and independent country? Does even its rightwing government have the right to define its activities within the framework of the doctrine "We belong to the West," or could it be that we are a perfect protectorate? This is so because with the turn and the dimensions of the Neorion question, the government's dignity is being tested right now, and all the Greek people are going to judge the outcome of the test.

ALLIES FAVOR CONTINUED NORTH CYPRUS OCCUPATION

NC191859 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 19 Apr 81 p 5

[Article by TO VIMA New York correspondent St. Evstathiadhis: "The Turkish Occupation of Cyprus Is an 'Allied Defense Project'--Peculiar NATO, Israeli and Washington 'Concern' Over the Elections"]

[Text] New York, 18 Apr--Cypriot political developments and the "danger" of more radical trends by the Cyprus Government after the coming elections are providing the excuse for certain countries in the area, particularly Israel, to express "concern over their security," thus fanning Washington's danger-mongering and providing new agruments for perpetuation of the Turkish military occupation of northern Cyprus.

This "concern" is also apparently shared by NATO Secretary General Luns, who is in Washington. Among the issues he and U.S. officials are discussing is the Cyprus issues, which is being examined under this very light according to assurances from well-informed diplomatic sources in Washington. Naturally, Luns is echoing widely disseminated views.

For example, a NATO official in Washington the other day talked with NATO military personalities from various member states of the alliance and attempted to explain that Turkey is "carrying out an allied defense requirement" by maintaining military forces in Cyprus.

In answering questions, the same official avoided placing himself in favor of legalization of the Turkish occupation, but he argued that Ankara, more or less, is making a sacrifice by maintaining military forces in Cyprus. He added that these forces are defending the rear of advanced allied positions in the Middle East and, specifically, in Israel.

Reports originating primarily from Congressional sources and the UN headquarters in New York, but also from Washington diplomats, mention that in recent weeks at least three Middle East governments discussed the latest Cyprus developments with U.S. diplomats and senior U.S. administration personalities and, in a way that demonstrates a certain more general coordination, "did stress for the benefit of the U.S. administration the dangers their countries would have to face as a result of a strengthened Soviet presence in Cyprus and in the eastern Mediterranean more generally." Particularly during a specific instance, which, according to all indications, was known to the Greek Government, on 2 April an Israeli official unprecedently requested a U.S. demarche in Nicosia and in Athens stressing the "severe opposition of the Middle East countries and the United States to any possible Soviet political bridgehead in Cyprus."

An Arab diplomat at the UN headquarters in New York talking to TO VIMA explained that Israel, and to a secondary degree Egypt and Saudi Arabia, "were recently encouraged by certain other countries to create a new pressure front around the Cyprus issue. Their interest is concentrated on finding a certain legalistic reason for continuing Turkey's military presence in northern Cyprus. According to Israel, the Turkish occupation army in Cyprus is the only way to stop Soviet expansionism in the eastern Mediterranean and increased Palestinian activities against Israel."

According to this Arab diplomat, Israel claims the responsibility for directing U.S. policy in this direction which, admittedly, helps Ankara's and NATO'S plans for perpetuating the Turkish occupation of northern Cyprus by Turkish forces. By contrast, Congressional sources that follow developments in the broader area of southern Europe and the eastern Mediterranean verify and confirm these moves by Israel as well as Washington's reaction. They believe that Washington is behind Israel's activities.

These same Congressional sources have also confirmed that for the time being the U.S. administration appears to be trying to make assurances to the other governments of the area that are "concerned" by stating that "it is following the political and other developments in Cyprus jointly with Athens."

At the same time, however, Pentagon personalities hinted recently that the Turkish military presence in Cyprus "is in the interest of peace in the Middle East and that in any eventuality it is a positive factor toward stopping Soviet expansionism in the eastern Mediterranean." Similar views, on general lines, were supported recently by Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen during his talks with U.S. officials in Washington.

A Greek source in Washington, however, has assured TO VIMA that he knows of no "joint" following of the Cyprus situation with the United States, but stressed that the U.S. administration most certainly is informed on and is interested in Cyprus developments.

PAPER CRITICIZES GOVERNMENT FOR WEAKENING DEFENSE

NC191920 Athens EXORMISIS in Greek 19 Apr 81 pp 1, 11

[Andonis Stratis editorial: "Atlantism Weakens National Defense]

[Excerpts] The British Government, contributing according to its capabilities to Turkey's overarmament, has decided to grant it military equipment worth 3.5 million sterling in the form of a "gift." This does not surprise us because it would have been strange if the Thatcher government had kept absent from the tray of donations for the "undeservedly suffering" Turkey of Evren.

What is noteworthy is that the announcement of the "gift" was followed by an assurance by the British secretary of state for defense, John Nott, to the House of Commons that this equipment "is not intended to be used in Cyprus or against the Greek people," A fact to which--as he said--"The Turkish Government has given clear assurances."

At that time, the Turkish junta's representative, Foreign Minister Turkmen, was visiting the United States and, hoping to rule out as unacceptable a possible Washington guarantee of the Greek-Turkish broders, invented the following pertinent statement: "It would be foolish for the United States to give a guarantee on one ally against other. The whole conception of an alliance is based on the fact that the allies do not fight each other."

Unquestionably, we expect neither NATO nor the United State to guarantee our national independence and sovereignty. The guarantee for us is the Greek people and its armed forces, combined with the exercising of a multifacted foreign policy and the searching for support from every direction and away from the Cold War blocs.

In order to complete the picture of Turkey's "propeace" intentions, we do not want to forget to refer to published information that a great armada of landing crafts is being gathered in Turkish ports and that it is uncertain whether it is intended for a possible invasion of the Soviet Union or somewhere else in the event of a general confrontation.

Under these conditions--to which we must also add the presence of Turkish occupation troops in Cyprus--one very rightly asks what were the "New Democracy" government's incentives for the reintegration in the Atlantic alliance, since the basic argument of ensuring our national integrity has proved to be unfounded. The easily derived conclusion that our national interests were not served but, on the contrary, were undermined by the policy of reintegration is not the result of opposition efforts. The government cannot at all use the argument that it has succeeded to any degree in "guaranteeing" our borders, not even when considering the legendary 7 to 10 formula for armaments aid.

The hard question that should be asked over the government's policy is, from the viewpoint of international support, what means of defense has it created for the country? It is now evident that the government has no true allies. Thus, the difficulties of a government that advocates change increase. It must start again from the beginning on a difficult and steep road, step by step, following a different concept to effectively support our national independence and our territorial integrity.

GUNAYDIN REACTS TO ANTI-TURKISH BBC PROGRAM

NC171132 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 14 Apr 81 p 4

[Bora Paran Report from London]

[Text] London--Reports that Turkey has been intensifying its efforts to achieve full membership in the Common Market have greatly alarmed the Common Market, which is known as "the club of the rich." This alarm is being displayed by examples we experience every day. These examples clearly indicate the existence of a sinister plan to drive Turkey away from the Common Market and Europe.

Following the resolution taken by the European Parliament last week envisaging the freezing of Turkish-Common Market relations, the BBC televised a program along similar lines. This program, which was rushed through channel 1, advocated that Turkey could not consider itself a European country, that Turks could not be Europeans, and that Turkey could not become one of the EEC members. It was obvious from this program that its intention was to condition British public opinion.

The program in question tried to convey this idea to British public opinion: Turkey has gone bankrupt; it is not worthy of EEC membership. Apart from pistachios, Turkey produces nothing that Common Market countries do not produce themselves. Only 1/40 of Turkish territory is in Europe; therefore, Turkey cannot be considered a European country. As labor is cheap, its industry is labor intensive. Although production costs are low, its quality is low. Turkey can enter the European industrial market if it develops modern technology. The Common Market cannot gamble on this. As is seen, this British television program bitterly denigrates Turkey. It is quite clear that the purpose of this program and the propaganda directed at Turkey from Europe is to drive Turkey away from Europe and to push it into economic chaos.

ULUSU ATTENDS MEETING ON WORKERS' PROBLEMS ABROAD

TA181444 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1415 GMT 18 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 18 Apr (AA)--Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu told a seminar on the problems of Turkish workers employed in foreign countries that his government was closely interested in all the problems of Turks earning their livings abroad. He appealed to Turkish expatriate workers to contribute to national efforts to create a strong and prosperous Turkey. The seminar, called "The second convention on the problems of expatriate workers," sponsored by an Istanbul newspaper, was inaugurated by the prime minister.

He called on Turkish workers to be always vigilant against subversive propaganda and against the plots of the enemies of Turkey, who strive to destroy Turkey and the Turkish nation. He said Turkey was now waging a war against these sinister forces.

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL OFFICIALS ARRIVE FOR TALKS

TA171623 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1610 GMT 17 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 17 Apr (AA)--Two represetatives of "Amnesty International" arrived in Ankara Friday afternoon for talks with government officials.

(Hanne Burley) of the Turkish desk and Ret Adm Becker of the Netherlands are expected to meet Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, Justice Minister Cevdet Mentes, Minister of State Ilhan Oztrak, and Deputy Chief of the General Staff Gen Necdet Oztorun while in Ankara. (Ms Burley) told reporters at Esenboga Airport they would report to their own organization, but added a representative of Amnesty International had been invited to address the Political Committee of the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly.

STATE MINISTER LEAVES FOR OFFICIAL TALKS IN CYPRUS

TA181658 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 18 Apr 81

[Text] State and Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Cyprus Coordination Council Zeyyat Baykara left for Lefkosa [Nicosia]today as the guest of the TFSC. In a statement at Ankara's Esenboga Airport before his departure, Baykara said that the measures necessary to ensure the smooth and orderly development of the TFSC economy will be determined together. Baykara noted that the fact that the Turkish Cypriot community, which has waged long struggles for independence and freedom as a healthly state, has internal and external problems in the social, political and economic fields should be seen as natural. From the beginning, the Turkish Republic has stood by our Cypriot kinsmen in solving these problems, supported them in every field with all its material and moral might and made contributions. We will continue this contribution and support in every field.

Pointing out that economic problems are the major concern of almost every country in the world--wealthy, developing or poor--Baykara continued: This is the case in the motherland and the same situation is valid for the TFSC. This is a normal condition. The question is being able to find solutions to the economic difficulties and to implement them. The state minister said that through the talks he will hold during this visit, all the formalities preventing the faster and easier functioning of the economic and commercial relations between Turkey and the TFSC will be eliminated and a sound and orderly economic give-and-take will thus be achieved.

Baykara was received at TFSC's Ercan [Tymbou] airport by TFSC President Rauf Denktas, Turkish Ambassador to Lefkosa Inal Batu, peace forces commander Lt Gen Dogan Kromors, Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay and the members of the Council of Ministers. In a statement at Ercan airport, Baykara said that during his 1 week-long visit in northern Cyprus, he will especially discuss the economic problems of the Federated State.

In his statement, Denktas expressed the belief that the visit of the Turkish delegation headed by Baykara will bring solutions to the economic problems of the Turkish Cypriot community. Baykara and his delegation will begin their official contacts on 20 April.

VOTCP: TCP OFFICIAL CONGRATULATES GDR'S HONECKER

TA180939 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 18 Apr 81

[Congratulatory message by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to GDR Socialist Unity Party Secretary General Erich Honecker on the latter's reelection to his post--read by announcer]

[Text] To Socialist Unity Party of Germany [SED] Secretary General Erich Honecker: Dear Comrade, on behalf of the Turkish Communisty Party [TCP] Central Committee and on my own behalf, I would like to congratulate you heartily on the occasion of your reelection to the responsible and important post of secretary general of the SED.

We, the Turkish Communists, consider you a distinguished Leninist fighter of the international communist and workers movement and appreciate your effective and skillful efforts for the advancement of the GDR on its path of developing an advanced socialist community.

I wish you renewed and great success in the implementation of the resolutions made at the 10th Congress of the SED and your future activities. With Communist greetings, [signed] I. Bilen, the TCP Central Committee Secretary General. 16 April 1981.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 076 21 April 1981

CONTENTS

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Survey Shows EC Erodes U.S. Embargo Against USSR [HANDELSBLATT 21 Apr] J 1
Schmidt, Genscher Set To Visit Britain 11 May J 1

FRANCE

Marchais Views Left Union, Communist Ministers [L'HUMANITE 13 Apr] K 1
Guinea Foreign Minister To Make Working Visit K 2

PORTUGAL

Prime Minister Comments on Visits to Gulf, Paris M 1

UNITED KINGDOM

Minister of State Discusses Thatcher's Saudi Visit Q 1

CYPRUS

Political Reasons Cited for General's Removal [I DHIMOKRATIKI 20 Apr] R 1
Kiprianou Warns Against Turkish Intransigence [CYPRUS MAIL 19 Apr] R 1
Denktas Says Kiprianou Does Not Want Agreement [Bayrak Radio] R 2
Foreign Minister Returns From Algiers 18 April R 2

GREECE

Foreign Minister Returns From Cairo Visit S 1
Mitsotakis Statement S 1
Ataturk Commemorative Plans Create Disagreements [NEWS 19 Apr] S 1

TURKEY

Technical Talks on Airspace Issue End in Athens T 1
Foreign Ministry Reacts to Athens Demonstrations T 1
Cultural Talks Held in Ankara With Egyptian Team T 1
Iranian Trade Delegation Seeks Economic Cooperation T 1
Bulgarian Foreign Minister Arrives for Visit T 1
Central Bank President Discusses Talks in Bulgaria T 2
Commanders Depart for Yugoslavia, U.S. Visits T 2
TERCUMAN on Ecevit's Accountability as Minister [16 Apr] T 2
TCP Head Bilen Sends Congratulations Messages [VOTCP] T 3
GDR Party Congress T 3
Turkish Labor Party T 5
Cuban Party Anniversary T 6
Palestine National Council T 7

SURVEY SHOWS EC ERODES U.S. EMBARGO AGAINST USSR

DW211043 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 21 Apr 81 p 3

[Article signed DF.: "Embargo Has Been Eroded by Europe"]

[Text] Duesseldorf, 20 Apr--The results of an HWWA [Hamburg World Economic Archive] Institute for Economic Research survey show that the U.S. embargo policy on grain and technology imposed on the Soviet Union caused trade between the United States and the USSR to shrink severely. This embargo, however, was then eroded by the Europeans, last but not least by the Federal Republic.

While the United States in 1979 delivered agricultural products worth $2.9 billion and industrial goods worth $750 million to the USSR, the corresponding figures in 1980 came to a mere $1.1 billion and $360 million respectively. Without the embargo, the United States definitely would not have dropped from number two to number seven on the list of the Soviet Union's world trade partners. The Soviet Union would have covered its grain requirements from U.S. deliveries above the 8 million tons specified in the long-term contract which runs through 1981. The USSR also would have brought from the Americans urgently technical equipment, such as drilling equipment, to a greater extent. This development of trade with the East was a considerable sacrifice for U.S. agriculture and many industrial sectors.

German exports to the Soviet Union, in contrast, reached DM7,943,000,000 in 1980, an increase of 19.9 percent over 1979. Nominally, this is the highest result ever scored and thus also surpasses the previous export high achieved in 1975. The HWWA Institute believes, however, that an increase of DM1 billion in a period of 5 years does not yet constitute a very great rate.

Granted, German imports valued at DM7,411,000,000 in 1980 increased a mere 0.4 percent over 1979, yet compared with 1975 they more than doubled. Basically, the 2.3 percent share which trade with the East has in Germany's total exports has not entailed any shift in weight during the past few years.

Thus, there is hardly any call for talking about exploitation of market opportunities owing to U.S. embargo behavior. "It is true, however, that the Federal Republic as well as the other European countries by far have not participated in the embargo as strictly as the United States."

In the case of agricultural products, however, the U.S. embargo clearly has eroded by the Europeans. Several EC countries, including the Federal Republic, obviously profited from the limitation of U.S. agricultural deliveries to the Soviet Union.

Thus, in the case of the Federal Republic, the share of food-stuffs in the total exports to the USSR increased from about 3 percent (1979) to 9 percent (1980). It is this increase which essentially explains the 19.9 percent increase in German exports to the Soviet Union. The traditional EC deliveries of agricultural produce to the USSR have been greatly exceeded, including those of grain. The ineffectiveness of the EC grain embargo of January 1980 can probably no longer be contested. In this connection, the HWWA wonders how long it will still be possible to operate against the United States in policies on trade with East.

SCHMIDT, GENSCHER SET TO VISIT BRITAIN 11 MAY

LD211102 Hamburg DPA in German 1043 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is to fly to Great Britain on 11 May for 2 days of talks as part of the regular twice-yearly German-British consultations. This was announced by the Federal Press Office in Bonn today. The talks will be held at Chequers near London at the invitation of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. The chancellor will be accompanied by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and other federal ministers. Details of the program will be given at a later date.

MARCHAIS VIEWS LEFT UNION, COMMUNIST MINISTERS

LD210951 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 13 Apr 81 p 4

[Report on Marseilles speech by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais under general heading "You Want a Socialist-Communist Government? Vote in Millions for G. Marchais!"--date not given]

[Excerpt] "To succeed it is necessary to assemble great forces. It is necessary to bring about a vast popular union, a majority. It is necessary to build a clear, firm and lasting union of the left.

"Every man and woman of you will understand, I am sure, that in this city of Marseilles, I put particular emphasis on this problem of union. I do this with the seriousness, the weight that this great question demands.

"We Communists do not pretend to believe that we alone can ensure change. In France, no party can govern alone. That is why I propose to form, on the basis of a rallying of the people, a Socialist-Communist union government capable of implementing the new policy. It is absolutely essential for this government to include Communist ministers. Otherwise, the right would hold the power and change would be impossible.

"There have been Communist ministers only once in France's history. That was at the time of the liberation, from 1944 through 1947.

"To recall this in Marseilles, I need mention only one name: Francois Billoux. He held several ministerial posts. For instance, as minister of health, he laid the foundations for a modern system of care geared to preventing illness. At the same time, another Communist minister, Ambroise Croizat, set up the social security system and the mutual insurance code, as well as the joint production committees.

"In his memoirs, Francois Billoux noted that the Communist ministers' loyalty to their commitments, their political loyalty toward the working class and the people, their patriotism their respect for democracy and their sense of effectiveness. Yes, the Communist ministers were a good opportunity for the working people and for France.

"On the other hand, think about all the combinations, all the coalitions, and all the systems our country has known since that day in 1947 when the Communist ministers were driven out. Think where these solutions without Communists led our country.

"A government with Communist ministers is the only new solution, the only one that can lead our country out of the crisis."

All the same, Georges Marchais stressed that there is an obstacle in the path of union.

"This obstacle," he recalled, "is the orientation of Francois Mitterrand. Just last Wednesday [9 April], on France Inter, he refused to commit himself to the working people's claims and remained hazy on the means of acting. He confirmed that he would not accept Communist ministers after the presidential election. So everyone can verify the existence and importance of this obstacle.

"This is confirmed by [Socialist Mayor of Marseilles] Gaston Defferre's latest revelations.

"On 24 March, addressing 'young captains of industry,' Gaston Defferre stated: 'If elected, Francois Mitterrand will be the prisoner of nobody, not even his own party.' That, unfortunately, tells us much about the Socialist candidate's desire to make no commitment.

"It was also Gaston Defferre who made it known from the first that there would be no government of union with Communist ministers. But in that case, with whom will Francois Mitterrand govern? On 3 April, a journalist asked Gaston Defferre: 'Will there be conversions, will rightwing deputies become leftwing deputies.' Listen to his answer: 'That will be the case.' The mayor of Marseilles said: 'If Giscard is beaten, the UDF will break into a thousand fragments.' Then, he added, there will be many 'realignments' with the socialist group.

"On 8 April, Gaston Defferre reaffirmed this prediction in an editorial in Francois Mitterrand's official newspaper: 'Even if the socialist group,' he wrote, 'isn't in a majority in the National Assembly, it will not be far off, and realignments from all directions are more than likely.'

"It is, of course, illusory to claim that the PS will have a quasi-majority on its own. This prediction has the same worth as the one Gaston Defferre made in 1977 when he claimed 35-40 percent for the PS. At that time, Gaston Defferre used that argument to prepare for the breaking of the union of the left. Today, he is continuing along the same path. On the one hand, he hopes to avoid including Communists in the parliamentary majority in the government after obtaining their votes to elect Socialist deputies. On the other hand, he spreads the myth of a 'quasi-socialist' government strengthened by Giscardian defectors.

"Consider it well, realistically, all this can mean only one thing: Since the PS cannot govern alone, Gaston Defferre is in effect announcing a government coalition between the Socialists and the right. France has seen this before. It is an impasse."

Georges Marchais showed that in these conditions "it takes a powerful push to change things despite the obstacles. It is necessary for all who want change to give themselves the means to conquer by asserting their numbers, displaying their will and throwing all their weight into the balance. There is only one such means: vote Communist in the first round."

GUINEA FOREIGN MINISTER TO MAKE WORKING VISIT

AB171544 Paris AFP in French 1242 GMT 17 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Paris, 17 Apr (AFP)--It was learned on Friday at the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs that Guinean Foreign Minister Abdoulaye Toure will undertake an official working visit to France at the beginning of next week to prepare for the visit of Guinean head of state President Sekou Toure.

He will be received on Monday evening by French Minister of Foreign Affairs Jean-Francois Poncet. Their talks will be held in Garonne, where the minister will be holding election meetings during the Easter recess. Toure will be received in Paris on Wednesday by Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Oliver Stirn, and he will leave France in the evening for Morocco.

According to the Quai d'Orsay, these talks fall within the framework of a future meeting between the French and Guinean heads of state. They also will be on the situation in Africa, especially on the crises in Chad, Namibia and in the Horn of Africa, as well as the conflict between Iran and Iraq.

President Sekou Toure is chairman of the Islamic Peace Commission mediating between Iran and Iraq. It will be recalled that Guinea also plays an active role in the Nonaligned Movement.

It is the first time that Abdoulaye Toure officially has visited France since the reconciliation between Paris and Conakry, marked by President Giscard d'Estaing's visit to the Guinean capital in 1978.

PRIME MINISTER COMMENTS ON VISITS TO GULF, PARIS

LD192142 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1830 GMT 19 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao arrived in Lisbon this afternoon after a 6-day visit to the United Arab Emirates, the Sultanate of Oman and France.

The prime minister cited the doubling of our oil imports from Abu Dhabi and the major prospects opened up for our economy and trade as positive results of the trip. The rapprochement between the Portuguese and Arab peoples--a fruit of our common cultural roots--was another important aspect of this trip highlighted by the prime minister at the very beginning of the statement he made on his arrival:

[Begin recording] This trip represents a coming together again between Portugal and the Arab world--the Gulf countries in particular. This has been the first visit by a top level Portuguese delegation to that part of the world--a very important part of the world, as you know--for at least 300 years. [end recording]

During the talks held in the United Arab Emirates, it was agreed that, starting in 1982, Portugal will receive double the amount of oil it presently imports from that country. Pinto Balsemao also stressed that both in Abu Dhabi and Oman, important trade prospects have been opened up by this visit, and it is now up to private enterprise to come forward and play its role:

[Begin recording] Great opportunities have been opened up in the commercial sphere. Suffice it to say that Oman alone intends to spend 230 billion escudos a year in the framework of its 5-year development plan. This should give an idea of the scope for business this opens up to our country. The Omani minister of trade will be visiting us soon. Among the matters he will discuss are projects for the construction of dams, public works and, most importantly, the fishing industry--both from the standpoint of equipment built in our country and also, in this course, of a fisheries agreement [words indistinct].

In Abu Dhabi, we also found great interest in a more active trade relationship with Portugal. [end recording]

Pinto Balsemao stressed that these results would not have been achieved but for the cultural links that exist between the Portuguese and the peoples of the Gulf. Various agreements will be signed in the near future in the sphere of cultural cooperation as a result of the talks of the last few days; they will envisage historical research, the restoration of monuments, the organization of archives and also exchanges in the sphere of journalistic training.

Finally, speaking of his talks in Paris during the first stage of his trip, the prime minister said he had once more received assurances that France will impose no restrictions on the permanence of Portuguese workers in France. With regard to Portugal's entry into the EEC--another topic raised during Pinto Balsemao's meetings with the French president and his counterpart Raymond Barre--the Portuguese prime minister expressed satisfaction at the assurances received from the French leaders.

MINISTER OF STATE DISCUSSES THATCHER'S SAUDI VISIT

LD191010 Riyadh SPA in Arabic 0830 GMT 19 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Riyadh, 19 Apr (SPA)--The British minister of state for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Douglas Hurd, made a statement to the newspaper AL-MADINA AL-MUNAWARAH which it published today.

Referring to Mrs Thatcher's visit to the Saudi Arabian Kingdom, which begins today, Hurd said that the British prime minister wishes to exchange views with the Saudi leaders, acquaint herself with the problems of the region and listen to the views of officials.

Among the most important issues Mrs Thatcher wishes to discuss, Hurd said, are Palestine, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and how best it can be dealt with, cooperation between the kingdom and Britain in the political fields, including the European initiative, economic and technical cooperation and the international economic situation.

Hurd warned that the Middle East situation [words indistinct] and that no settlement can be reached without the participation of the Palestinians. He added that there are certain aspects in Israeli policy which should be changed before any reasonable signs for peace in the area can be attained. These aspects, he said, include matters such as its policy on settlements and Israeli policy in southern Lebanon.

The British minister of state expressed his country's understanding of the views of the Saudi Kingdom on the question of Palestine and the importance it attaches to this question which constitutes a principal part of Arab thinking.

Hurd said that the Europeans will, at some later date this year and during Britain's chairmanship of the EEC, work for the development and crystalization of the European initiative, after Mrs Thatcher has completed her visualization of a settlement.

He said that the chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers, Van der Klaauw, will be submitting a report to the forthcoming meeting of the EEC foreign ministers on the matter after he completes his contacts and visits to a number of countries in the region.

Hurd stressed the importance of the American role in reaching a settlement within this important framework. He also affirmed his country's rejection of Israeli policy on settlements and in southern Lebanon.

Hurd praised the establishment of the Gulf cooperation council, which he described as a major step of great importance. He said that the establishment of the council is the best news Britain has received from the Middle East for some time. He also expressed his belief that cooperation among the Gulf countries is the best way to safeguard stability in the region, adding that such cooperation is better than interference by the big powers in the region. He also affirmed that the establishment of unity among the Gulf countries is the best guarantee for the future of the region.

POLITICAL REASONS CHARGED FOR GENERAL'S REMOVAL

NC201825 Nicosia I DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek 20 Apr 81 p 1

[Excerpt] Specific Cyprus circles operating in Athens have at least managed to "eliminate" the commander of the National Guard, General Kimninos, who has been recalled and is due to depart in early May.

There are extremely clear indications, and the government is fully aware of the details, that the recall of General Komninos, who is esteemed both within and outside the National Guard, is essentially political specifically because the general:

1. Managed to keep himself above parties and this was not to the interest of certain personalities.

2. Refused to be drawn into unacceptable actions that would have left both the general and the National Guard exposed.

The same circles had managed to engineer the arbitrary appointment of General Markopoulos (well known "active" ultrarightist) to replace General Komninos. This created an immediate reaction from Nicosia which was not even consulted on the matter.

In the end, however, the Greek National Defense Ministry canceled the appointment and it was not an issue since Markopoulos was not being considered. A "third solution" is now being sought among retired lieutenant generals but, as an appropriate authority told us yesterday:

On the basis of prevailing practice the choice must be made with a joint understanding between Nicosia and Athens, and the Cyprus Government must have the last word in order to avoid misunderstandings similar to those of the recent and murky past.

The same source expressed the hope there will be no unilateral attempt to select any one personality.

Government Statement

NC201830 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Text] Answering a question, the government spokesman said that the appointment of General Komninos to the National Guard is terminated and that a statement on the time of his departure and on his replacement will be issued as soon as possible.

KIPRIANOU WARNS AGAINST TURKISH INTRANSIGENCE

NC190635 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 19 Apr 81 p 1

[Excerpts] President Kiprianou has warned that the failure of the Turkish side to present concrete proposals on territory would make problematic the continuation of the intercommunal talks.

The president was speaking at a gathering at Ypsonas village in Limassol district as part of his plan to be in touch with all the sections of the population, urban and rural.

Referring to the intercommunal talks, President Kiprianou reiterated Greek Cypriot good will but, he said, because of Turkish intransigence there has been absolutely no progress.

Noting that the Turkish Cypriot side has not yet submitted any proposals that could be considered constructive and none on the territorial aspect, the president said:

"Unless the Turkish side submits proposals on territory, reasonable proposals, continuation of the dialogue would be problematic".

He repeated that according to converging information the Turks may submit proposals in June but, he said, such reports are treated with the utmost caution because of past experience.

"We shall continue until all limits are exhausted so that if the dialogue collapses, responsibility shall lie squarely on the Turkish side", Mr Kiprianou stated.

The president clarified that the Government and the Greek Cypriot side accept biregional federation as the structure of the new state but firmly reject any form of confederation or separate states or any solution that leads directly or indirectly to partition.

"We shall not subscribe to a solution that would mean abandonment of the right of the refugees to return to their ancestral homes", he declared. We are seeking an honourable solution and we shall continue to knock at every door, not to beg but to demand freedom and justice, he said.

The president expressed the hope that the talks will be successful in the end but if there is no result steps will be taken for the further internationalisation of the problem including the furtherance of the proposal for an international conference on Cyprus.

Once more he said that the Cyprus problem must be approached from its national angle, aside from any party political exploitation or concessions.

DENKTAS SAYS KIPRIANOU DOES NOT WANT AGREEMENT

TA201028 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that through his recent statement on bizonality [last word in English], Greek Cypriot leader Spiros Kiprianou has again shown that he does not wish to reach an agreement with the Turkish Cypriot side on the Cyprus issue.

In a statement yesterday, Kiprianou said neither he nor Makarios have ever accepted bizonality. Denktas today replied to reporters' questions on Kiprianou's statement and said: Either Kiprianou is merely trying to deceive his people because of the elections or he does not wish to reach an agreement and conciliation with the Turkish Cypriot side. The responsibility for this belongs to him. I do not want to say anything further on this subject.

FOREIGN MINISTER RETURNS FROM ALGIERS 18 APRIL

NC181143 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 18 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis, who led the Cypriot delegation to the Nonaligned Conference on Namibia in Algiers, returned to Cyprus a short while ago. While in Algiers, Mr Rolandhis met with foreign ministers of various countries. Yesterday, Mr Rolandhis and the other members of the Cypriot delegation, attended a luncheon given by Algerian President Chadli in honor of the delegates to the Namibia conference.

FOREIGN MINISTER RETURNS FROM CAIRO VISIT

NC202013 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Foreign Minister Mitsotakis returned from Cairo at noon. He completed a 5-day official visit and signed two agreements which settled many issues that faced the two countries, namely, compensations, facilities for Greeks in Egypt, the clearing system and so forth.

Mitsotakis Statement

NC211036 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0400 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Excerpt] The outcome of Foreign Minister Mitsotakis' visit to Egypt surpassed all expectations. The minister, who returned to Athens yesterday, stated that the Greek-Egyptian talks were very useful and mutually beneficial and that they speeded the resolution of problems that had been pending for a dangerously long time. Among other things, the foreign minister said that three basic agreements were signed and that the two sides exchanged 26 letters to settle pending issues. Most significant is the agreement that provides for referring the issue over the Awqaf [Islamic religious affairs] to the international court or to international arbitration. The other agreements provide for the following: The continuation of the compensation payments to Greek Egyptians, with the first payment of $900,000 to be paid to those entitled immediately after the settling of the clearing issue; and the settlement of the issues over Egyptians working in Greece and Greeks working in Egypt.

Mitsotakis also said that once again the Greek-Egyptian clearing issue is being reactivated and that it represents $12 million in assets in favor of Greece. In addition, the issue of providing Greek nationality to Greeks residing in Egypt, at the rate of 200 cases the first year and 50 cases each year for the next 4 years, is being negotiated. At the same time, the issue of the Sinai monastery, which was in danger of closing owing to the lack of monks, was settled. Now, in the future, 50 men and 15 women will be allowed to go to their respective monasteries. Lastly, it was agreed that Egyptian seamen will be allowed to work on Greek commercial ships.

ATATURK COMMEMORATIVE PLANS CREATE DISAGREEMENTS

NC191538 Athens NEWS in English 19 Apr 81 p 4

[Text] Disagreements have reportedly arisen inside the government over the Mitsotakis-Turkmen arrangement for Greek participation in the commemorative festivities for Ataturk's birthday, political sources said. According to the arrangement, a Greek cabinet member would attend the festive manifestations in Salonica and the Greek TV would give the event full and prominent coverage.

But the two ministers--Mitsotakis and Turkmen--it seems had not counted on the internal difficulties their arangement would cause in Greece: specifically, that there might not be any Greek Government member of cabinet rank willing to participate. Indeed, this is exactly what happened during the last full cabinet meeting, when Minister of Culture and Sciences Andhrianopoulos brought the subject up for discussion: no minister wanted to go, and when it was suggested that Minister for Northern Greece Martis should be the one, he reportedly categorically refused, saying emphatically "Who--me? I'm not going." Finally, the sources said, the thought prevailed to pass the hot potato off to the nomarch of Thesalloniki. But even the latter's participation is not assured, reportedly because of his fears that the people of Salonica might object.

Late Saturday, the government announced that "a government decision relative to Greek participation in the commemorative events for Ataturk's birth has in fact been made, and that press reports about "intergovernmental disagreements" on the subject "are inaccurate."

TECHNICAL TALKS ON AIRSPACE ISSUE END IN ATHENS

TA201346 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1300 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Text] Technical talks on issues connected with the Turkish and Greek airspace were concluded in Athens. An agreement has been reached on the subject of information to be exchanged between the civil air authorities of the two countries. A statement by the Foreign Ministry information office says that in addition to all technical matters connected with the airspace, other problems which could not be solved in talks between the general secretaries of the foreign ministries of the two countries were also taken up during the talks. Conclusions reached at the Athens technical talks will be submitted to the foreign ministries of the two countries were also taken up during the talks. Conclusions reached at the Athens technical talks will be submitted to the foreign ministers of the two countries during their meeting on the occasion of the NATO ministerial meetings to be held in Rome during the first week of May.

FOREIGN MINISTRY REACTS TO ATHENS DEMONSTRATIONS

TA201331 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1300 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Text] It has been announced that the necessary representations will be made with the Greek Government because of the demonstrations held in Athens against Turkey. In a statement replying to journalists' questions concerning these demonstrations, Foreign Ministry spokesman Oktay Iscen said: The issue has been taken up and it is being seriously discussed. The necessary representations will be made with the Greek Government.

CULTURAL TALKS HELD IN ANKARA WITH EGYPTIAN TEAM

TA201636 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1515 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 20 Apr, (AA)--Turkish and Egyptain teams led by diplomats met in Ankara Monday to work out a two-year cultural exchange program between the two countries. The talks, led by the director generals for cultural affairs from the two foreign ministers, will last through Thursday, 23 April.

IRANIAN TRADE DELEGATION SEEKS ECONOMIC COOPERATION

TA201635 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1510 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Text] Istanbul, 20 Apr (AA)--A 10-man Iranian trade mission, in Turkey to explore possibilities of importing more goods from Turkey, met with businessmen at the Istanbul Chamber of Industry Monday.

President of the Chamber of Industry Savan Cavusoglu said the two countries, with major responsibilities for the same region, could well cooperate in joint ventures and exchange of data as well as in increased trade. Head of the visiting team, Ali Reza Shabani of the Iranian Trade Ministry noted the industrialized countries always got the better of trade with developing countries. Iran could well increase its trade with Turkey, a "reformist state," he said.

BULGARIAN FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR VISIT

TA211107 Ankara Domestic Service in Trukish 1000 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Bulgarian Foreign Minister Petur Mladenov arrived in Ankara today for an official visit. The Bulgarian delegation headed by Foreign Minister Mladenov was received at Esenboga Airport by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen as well as other officials of the ministry and the Bulgarian ambassador to Ankara.

In a statement at the airport, Turkmen said the talks to be held in Ankara would make a constructive contribution to relations between the two countries. Turkmen recalled that the visiting minister made valuable contributions to the good-neighborly relations between Turkey and Bulgaria.

In his statement, Mladenov said that good-neighborly and friendly relations between Turkey and his country were developing well. Noting that there were great opportunities to further promote these relations, Mladenov said that his government would do its best to this end.

The Bulgarian foreign minister will be received this afternoon by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren and Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu and will have talks with the Turkish foreign minister. Official talks between the two delegations will begin in Ankara tomorrow.

CENTRAL BANK PRESIDENT DISCUSSES TALKS IN BULGARIA

TA171650 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1625 GMT 17 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 17 Apr (AA)--President Osman Siklar of the Central Bank said trade will improve and economic cooperation will be strengthened between Turkey and Bulgaria. He also announced the president of the Bulgarian Central Bank will come to Turkey in September. He made the announcement in commenting upon his recent visit to Bulgaria. The Turkish Central Bank and Bulgarian Foreign Trade Bank will have accounts with one another in order to speed up transactions.

COMMANDERS DEPART FOR YUGOSLAVIA, U.S. VISITS

TA201718 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1600 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Gen Nurettin Ersin, National Security Council member and commander of the Ground Forces departed for Yugoslavia today, and Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya, the Air Force commander and also a member of the Council, left for Canada, the United States and Belgium.

General Ersin, who is the guest of the Yugoslav chief of staff, Vice Admiral Branko Mamula, will visit Yugoslavia as the personal representative of Head of State Gen Kenan Evren.

TERCUMAN ON ECEVIT'S ACCOUNTABILITY AS MINISTER

NC201856 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 16 Apr 81 p 3

[Editorial by Guneri Civaoglu: "Ecevit and Permission"]

[Excerpts] [Former Prime Minister Bulent] Ecevit has not been allowed to go abroad on grounds that this might lead to speculation. But we cannot help thinking that the event itself is speculation. By asking permission to go abroad in order to attend the "socialist international" conference, he has created a doubled-edged sword. Had he been allowed to go, a series of events such as welcoming demonstrations and speeches would be organized. We believe that "refusal to grant his request" will provide propaganda material for the known circles and cause repercussions in world opinion.

Speculation lies in the essence of the request itself. Ecevit should not have made such a request. Under the present critical circumstances, he should refrain from acts that ae likely to retard or make difficult a return to democracy. He should particularly refrain from personal caprices.

Hilmi Isguzar is being tried before the Supreme Court on some shameful charges. Former Customs and Monopolies Minister Tuncay Mataraci is also being tried before the same court for collaborating with the Turkish mafia and for facilitating smuggling by using his political influence for personal gain. Former Minister of Public Works Serafettin Elci will be tried, too, under similar charges.

In whose administration did these people serve as ministers? Is there not such a thing as joint responsibility for administering the country? Should not the prime minister of that administration appear before the Supreme Court together with his ministers to clear himself?

We do not think that spectacular attempts to make things difficult for the administration, at a time when efforts are being made both at the European Parliament and the Council of Europe to surmount a critical period, would facilitate or expedite our return to democracy. No one should think that such behavior can revive exhausted hopes.

It is not difficult to guess what Ecevit would say if he were allowed to go abroad. He has exhausted himself by what he has already said. He would probably exhaust himself completely by what he might want to say.

TCP HEAD BILEN SENDS CONGRATULATIONS MESSAGES

GDR Party Congress

TA151422 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Message from Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to the 10th Congress of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany--read by announcer]

[Text] Dear comrades, on behalf of the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee, on behalf of the Turkish working class and all the Turkish toilers, I greet the 10th Congress of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany [SED] with the most sincere feelings. The deep-rooted ties of struggle brotherhood between the Turkish and German Communists go back to the years of (?Spartacus) unity. The rich revolutionary experiences of the German working class and German Communists carry great value for the national and social liberation struggle of the Turkish working class and people.

The 10th congress constitutes a new milestone in the construction of the developed Socialist community in the GDR. The basic conditions of the step-by-step transition to communism are being created at this stage. Under the Marxist-Leninist guidance of the SED, the toilers of the GDR are increasing the productivity of the economy with their creative labor and with the most progressive gains of science and technology. They are bringing to life the slogan of "Everything for the happiness of the people." They walk along the tested path which states that to establish the unity of the economic and social policies is the most basic duty. These (?undeniable) gains prove the historical supremacy of Socialism in the motherland of Marx and Engels, in Germany. They show the increasing role of the working class, the society's leading force, and the fact that the party, the working class and all the people are tied to each other with unbreakable ties.

The report submitted to the 10th Congress by the SED Central Committee secretary general, Comrade Erich Honecker, is the mirror of these praiseworthy developments. The Turkish Communists and progressive forces are proud of these big gains.

The multilateral strengthening of the socialist GDR contributes greatly to the increased effectiveness of the community of socialist countries of which it is an inalienable part. This strengthens the struggle of the forces for social development, peace and detente in the entire world. The close ties of brotherhood between the GDR, the Soviet Union and the deep loyalty of the SED to proletarian international plays a decisive role in that.

Dear comrades, the most aggressive circles of imperialism, especially U.S. imperialism, are pursuing a policy of confrontation with the socialist countries. They are stepping up the arms race. They are intensifying their efforts to establish military supremacy. They are trying to drag the world into a cold war period once again. The new U.S. administration is increasing its pressures on Western European countries to deploy nuclear missiles there.

The most imperialist circles are provoking the counterrevolutionary elements in Poland. They are undermining peace and security in Europe. They want to expand NATO's old region toward the Middle East and establish new military blocs in this region. The increasing military cooperation of the Beijing administration with imperialism further endangers peace. In the face of several peoples' national social liberation wars, the aggressive imperialist circles are resorting to armed intervention in those countries' domestic affairs.

The echoes of the CPSU's 26th Congress continue to be felt in the international field with all their effectiveness. The 26th Congress was a new leap which supplied strong support for the world peoples' peace struggle. The new realistic and constructive peace proposals of CPSU Central Committee Secretary General Comrade Brezhnev and the peace program and the 1980s constitute new proof of the Soviet Union's Leninist and persistent peace policy.

The peace proposals of the 26th Congress of the CPSU carry great importance for our country as well. They objectively raise Turkey's possibilities of opposing imperialist impositions. The TCP believes that the further strengthening of the unity of the international communist movement and the meeting of all the communist parties for an exchange of views will further increase the effectiveness of the struggle for peace.

The GDR which is a stable fortress of peace and security in the middle of Europe--which has a decisive importance for the question of war or peace--at the meeting point of the imperialist and socialist systems, plays an effective role, with the other socialist countries, with its active and peaceful foreign policy and with its continuous efforts to protect and develop detente.

It is very important for Turkey to develop friendly relations with all the socialist countries, including the GDR. The TCP exerts active efforts for the multilateral development of relations based on mutual interest between the two countries and the two peoples.

Dear Comrades, Turkey's dependence on imperialism and the giant military expenditures impossed by NATO have dragged our country into a long-lasting, deep-rooted economic, social and political crisis. U.S. imperialism is using the deep-rooted crisis and the military regime conditions to further increase its pressures and impositions on our country. The measures taken by the military regime in Turkey have limited the activities of leftist terrorism and, to a certain extent, of the neofascist party. However, the parties and organizations of the working class, the democratic forces and the Kurdish national movement are being subjected to intense pressure. The progressive forces, mainly the class unionists, are being subjected to the most intensive arrests and massive tortures and pressures in recent years.

Objectively, this oppression and the fact that the main rights and freedoms have been removed, strengthen the positions of the most reactionary forces. Today, these forces are intensifying their efforts and the reactionary press is carrying out an intensive anticommunist campaign. This situation brings with it the dangers of being dragged into imperialist adventures externally and, internally, of crushing the people even more mercilessly than before for a handful of collaborationist monopolies, of making the economy more closely dependent on the imperialist monopolies or of the reemergence of the neofascist forces.

It is possible to save our country from backwardness and from the crisis and to improve the people's living and labor conditions only by putting an end to dominance by imperialism, collaborationist monopolies and big landlords dominance in the economic and political life. The TCP maintains that the most basic condition for putting an end to the pressures and heavy burdens imposed on our country by imperialism is to withdraw from NATO, to eliminate the U.S. bases in our country and to tear up the bilateral slavery agreements.

The TCP calls on all the national democratic forces of our country to unite in order to weaken imperialism's and domestic reaction's positions, to put an end to the junta administration's antidemocratic pressures, and to move toward democracy.

Dear comrades, we believe that the brotherly ties between the SED and the TCP--ties which exist on a basis of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism--will further strenghten and develop in the future. The TCP wishes great success to the 10th Congress of the SED. We thank you sincerely for giving us the opportunity to participate in the congress, for enabling us to observe such a forum and for your heartfelt hospitality. Long live the brotherly SED! Long live the socialist GDR! Long live Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism!

Turkish Labor Party

TA190826 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish COmmunist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 19 Apr 81

[Text] Dear listeners, Turkish Labor Party [TLP] leader Behice Boran replied with a letter of thanks to the congratulatory message sent by Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee Secretary General Bilen on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of the foundation of the TLP. In his message to the leadership of the TLP, Comrade Bilen said: Dear friends, on behalf of the TCP, I most warmly commemorate the 20th anniversary of the foundation of the TLP and extend my struggle greetings. The TLP--which came into being within the working movement--has played a significant role in our people's struggle for peace, independence, democracy and socialism.

After recalling the TLP's contribution to the cause of democracy, independence and peace as well as its activities--exploring all legal means--for the promotion of class unionism, Bilen added: From the day the TLP was founded, the TCP has supported the TLP's anti-imperialist and democratic efforts. Our common and lofty cause, for which we have fought, is still today our greatest source of power in surmounting all difficulties standing in the way of strengthening the link between the two parties. The message points out the great personal contributions of Boran to the cause of the unity of the working class, and expresses the TCP's solidarity with Boran and the TLP against pressures being exerted against them.

After noting that the responsibility of ensuring the unity of the widest democratic forces had first and foremost to be shouldered by the parties of workers, the message concludes as follows: Friends, I greet you with the warmest communist greetings on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of your party. Long live the unity of the working class.

In her reply, TLP leader Boran says: Dear friends, I would like to thank you all wholeheartedly for your message on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of the founding of our party, which contains most friendly expressions and feelings for our party as well as myself.

After noting the difficult struggle waged by the TLP for the cause of socialism exploiting all legal means, Boran says that the struggle is now (?continuing) under the new circumstances [created by the 12 September coup] and continues: To bring the struggle for the sake of national independence, democracy and socialism to its highest and most effective level, all democratic, progressive and leftist forces--struggling in different ways for the same objective must unite. And as you have also pointed out, this task is first and foremost the responsibility of the workers' parties.

In her letter, Behice Boran calls for a stand consistent with the principles of the cause for the fulfillment of this task and expresses her conviction that through difficult efforts and trials the unity of struggle of the democratic, progressive and leftist forces will be realized. Boran's letter ends with these words: with our best wishes and friendly greetings.

Cuban Party Anniversary

TA171113 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 17 Apr 81

[Message by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to the Communist Party of Cuba on the occasion of the latter's 20th anniversary]

[Text] Dear Comrades: On behalf of the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee, all Turkish Communists and our country's working class and toilers, I sincerely congratulate you on the 20th anniversary of the brotherly Communist party of Cuba [PCC] and extend my revolutionary struggle greetings.

The PCC is perpetuating the loftiest and most fervent traditions of the struggle waged by Cuban revolutionaries and patriots for national independence and the welfare of the people. It is perpetuating the ideals of the likes of Jose Marti, (Julio Antonio Bella) and the brave revolutionaries, who raided the Moncada barracks and overthrew the Batista regime, in the struggle for the continual increase of the political, economic and military strength of socialist Cuba, which is next door to U.S. imperialism. The Second Congress of the PCC, which convened a short time ago, has again shown that the unique achievements of the Cuban people in the construction of a socialist society are closely connected with the leadership of their Marxist-Leninist party. The TCP wishes the Cuban Communists great success in implementing all the decisions made during the Second Congress of the brotherly PCC.

Comrades: The fact that the most reactionary and aggressive sectors of imperialism have turned from the policy of detente toward a policy of confrontation with socialist countries and the multifaceted attacks by these imperialist sectors against the world revolutionary process present all the nations in the world with burning issues. The peace proposals that were directed from the 26th Congress of the CPSU to the entire world show the most realistic and concrete way to avert the threat of war and maintain peace and progress. These proposals are also vitally important for our country which is faced with imperialist pressures. The U.S. administration and the ringleaders of NATO are intensifying their pressure on our country to induce it to play an active role in their aggressive and adventurist plans. They wish to (?increase) this pressure by inciting the internal reactionaries. The TCP is struggling under difficult conditions to secure a unified front of all the national democratic forces against imperialist pressure, dependence on NATO, the sovereignty and exploitation of the monopolies, the internal reactionaries and the pressure by the military dictatorship on progressive and democratic persons.

The TCP has fraternal ties with the PCC based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. All progressive forces in Turkey are in solidarity with the Cuban people on the path of defending the gains of socialism in Cuba against imperialism. We hope that the 20th anniversary of the PCC will be a year of progress in the struggle for peace, democracy, national independence and social progress for all Cuban Communists, the brotherly Cuban people, the people in the region and all the peoples in the world.

[Signed] With communist greetings, TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen, 16 April 1981.

Palestine National Council

TA180937 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 18 Apr 81

[Message by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to the 15th convention of the Palestine National Council--read by announcer]

[Text] Dear friends, on behalf of all Turkish Communists, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee extends its revolutionary struggle greetings to the 15th convention of the Palestine National Council [PNC] and expresses its solidarity with the just struggle being waged by the brotherly Palestinian people against the forces of imperialism, Zionism and reaction.

The 15th convention of the PNC is being held at a time when the U.S. administration and the NATO ringleaders are exerting efforts to strain international relations, to escalate the arms race and to engage in a multifaceted aggression against the world revolutionary process.

The legitimate rights of the Palestinian people and their sole legal representative, the PLO, are the main victims of the U.S. imperialist and Zionist aggression in the Middle East and Near East.

Dear friends, the U.S. imperialists and the NATO ringleaders are intensifying their pressure on our country. Taking advantage of the military dictatorship reigning in the country and supported by the most reactionary and pro-American forces within and outside the military junta, they are striving to transform Turkey into a base for their imperialist adventures. Despite the difficult circumstances, the TCP is waging a struggle for national independence, the restoration of all workers' rights and the establishment of the united front of all the national democratic forces against the impositions of the imperialists, the dependence on NATO, the exploitation of the monopolies and the antidemocratic pressures of the military junta.

The imperialist and reactionary forces in our country are trying to portray the class trade unions and patriots as terrorists and to cover up the bloody murders of the fascist terror gangs. They are also trying to brand as terrorist the PLO in a bid to cover up the slaughter of the Palestinian people by imperialists, Zionists, and [name indistinct] gangs. The Turkish Communists, and all progressive and democratic forces as well as our people denounce these efforts to slander the PLO, and heartily support the brotherly Palestinian people in their national liberation struggle against imperialism and Zionism.

The TCP believes that for the realization of real peace in the region, Israel must withdraw from all Arab territories it occupied in 1967, all the legal rights of the Palestinian people including their right to establish an independent and sovereign state must be recognized and the rights of all the countries and peoples in the region must be respected. The TCP also favors participation with equal rights in all meetings connected with the region of the PLO as the sole and legal representative of the Palestinian people.

We wish great success to the 15th convention of the PNC. Long live the PLO, the sole and legal representative of the Palestinian people. Long live the brotherhood and solidarity of the peoples fighting against imperialism, Zionism and reaction.

[Signed] I. Bilen, the TCP Central Committee secretary general, 15 April 1981.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 077

22 April 1981

CONTENTS

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Saudi Papers Interview Schmidt on Arms Policy — J 1
Spain's Prime Minister Arrives for Official Talks — J 2
DGB Youth Statement on Disarmament, Peace Policies — J 2
[FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU 22 Apr]

FRANCE

Mitterrand Urges Withdrawal of Soviet SS-20's — K 1
Mitterrand Attacks Giscard's 'Nonpartisan' Remarks [LE MONDE 15 Apr] — K 1
Georges Marchais 13 April TV Election Speech [L'HUMANITE 14 Apr] — K 2
Francois-Poncet Meets Guinean Foreign Minister — K 3
PCF Delegation Attends Palestine Council Session [L'HUMANITE 11 Apr] — K 3

PORTUGAL

Arab League Secretary Arrives for 2-Day Visit — M 1
Meets With Leaders — M 1
Concludes Visit — M 1

CYPRUS

O FILELEVTHEROS Quotes Mitsotakis on Cyprus Issue [22 Apr] — R 1
Soviet Attache Makes Statement on Cyprus Issue — R 1
Baykara Confers With Turkish Cypriot Officials — R 1
Briefs: Economic Report — R 1

GREECE

I KATHIMERINI: Mitsotakis, Haig To Review Talks [21 Apr] — S 1
Armenians Stage Anti-Turkey Rally in Athens [NEWS 21 Apr] — S 1
Armenian Church Support [HURRIYET 19 Apr] — S 2
Turkish Protest Note — S 2

TURKEY

Government Protests Anti-Turkey Activities in Athens — T 1
Bulgarian Foreign Minister Continues Official Visit — T 1
Meets With Evren — T 1
Turkmen Hosts Dinner — T 1
Talks Begin — T 2
Death of Turkish Worker in Libya Confirmed — T 2
Delegation to Investigate — T 3
Mitsotakis Sees Progress in Mutual Talks [MILLIYET 17 Apr] — T 3
Amnesty International Visitors Meet Ecevit, Oztrak — T 4
Terrorism Victim Released From Copehagen Hospital — T 4
Military Command Lifts Ban on MILLI GAZETE — T 4
Trial of Erbakan, Other NSP Officials To Begin — T 4
Senior Police Superintendant Commits Suicide — T 4
VOTCP Urges Soldiers To Oppose-Imperialism — T 5

SAUDI PAPERS INTERVIEW SCHMIDT ON ARMS POLICY

LD200830 Riyadh SPA in Arabic 0640 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Text] Riyadh, 20 Apr (SPA)--West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt described the Saudi Arabian Kingdom as a leading element of stability for all the Middle East countries and said that West Germany has great respect for the kingdom as a partner because of the moderate and wise policy it pursues.

Schmidt was speaking in an interview with the Saudi papers AR-RIYAD, AL-YAWM and AL-MADINA AL-MUNAWARAH, which was published here today. His visit to the kingdom next week, he said, will cover the international situation, the two superpowers' policies in the Middle East, the Gulf and southwest Asia as well as the situation in Europe and economic conditions in general.

Schmidt affirmed that the discussions also will cover the development of bilateral economic relations between the two countries, particularly since the two countries last year concluded an agreement for scientific and technological cooperation.

Speaking on the economic relations between the two countries, Schmidt said that the kingdom was the second most important trade partner for West Germany after the United States. Schmidt said that oil imports from Saudi Arabia cover one quarter of Germany's oil needs.

The West German chancellor also spoke of the reported Saudi Arabian desire to purchase military equipment from Germany and the factors governing Germany's attitude toward the sale of arms. He said: The kingdom hasn't yet raised the question in a definite manner, though the press has touched on it more than the two governments concerned.

The FRG, he said, exports arms in accordance with strict laws and regulations and does so under a short term policy. Thus, its export of arms is extremely limited, he said, adding that, consequently, Germany exports arms only to NATO countries and even in this respect, each case is dealt with on its own merit.

Schmidt said that his country's policy on arms exports presently is based on:

1. Continuation of the exportation of conventional arms and equipment because Germany doesn't wish to get involved in international conflicts.

2. Germany's policy on arms exports is determined at all times by its own national interests and nothing else.

Schmidt said that his country will not permit any third party to influence its arms exportation policy.

With regard to the Palestine question, Schmidt's statements contain nothing new. He confined himself to affirming Europe's readiness to contribute effectively to finding a peaceful solution for the Middle East conflict in consultations with the United States.

Without specifying anybody, Schmidt called for "the abandonment of force or the threat of force and for the creation of a large measure of solidarity among the Arab states in respect of the peace operation."

SPAIN'S PRIME MINISTER ARRIVES FOR OFFICIAL TALKS

LD221052 Hamburg DPA in German 0954 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] Hamburg, 22 Apr (DPA)--Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo arrived in Hamburg this morning on a 2-day official visit to the FRG. It is his first foreign visit. At Fuhlsbuettel airport, Calvo-Sotelo, who is accompanied by Foreign Minister Jose Perez Llorca, was welcomed by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. The Spanish prime minister took office on 26 February, a few days after the failed military putsch.

The exchange of views with Schmidt and Genscher is expected to focus on Spain's desire to enter the EEC, and it is expected that the Federal Government will reaffirm its support for Spain's entry. A further topic for discussion is likely to be Spain's possible entry into NATO, which the United States wants but which so far Bonn has referred to with great reservation.

DGB YOUTH STATEMENT ON DISARMAMENT, PEACE POLICIES

DW221115 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 22 Apr 81 p 2

[Statement by the Federal Youth Committee of the German Trade Union Federation, DGB, on disarmament, detente and peace policies]

[Text] The DGB [German Trade Union Federation] youth call on the Federal Government and all responsible political forces in our country to muster all their strength to safeguard peace in Europe and in the world. A policy for peace must have priority over all other political tasks. NATO membership in this connection must not be understood to mean that the Federal Republic of Germany must submit to the world policy of a leadership power and adopt its security ideology. The Federal Republic of Germany and the Federal Government rather are obligated to defend themselves in the Western alliance against any policy which would lead to constantly greater arms efforts and intensified confrontation between East and West. It is their task, in contrast, to show alternatives and to help a worldwide policy of peace make a breakthrough.

The DGB youth see the only chance for a policy of peace at the moment in the continuation of detente policy and in negotiations. This is why they demand that the Soviet Union's latest proposals are carefully examined and taken as a cause for further considerations along the lines of arms limitations and arms reduction. It is our opinion that a flat rejection of these proposals constitutes an additional burden on the detente policy pursued thus far and we demand the opening of talks without any preconditions.

Beyond that, a policy of peace is possible only under conditions of full respect for the territorial integrity and national sovereignty of the states. Hence, the trade union youth affirm their condemnation of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The Soviet Union, too, must tolerate being measured not only by its words but also, and in particular, by its deeds.

Peace has not become any safer with the presidential elections in the United States. On the contrary, the plans for an international rapid deployment force for making raw material resources in foreign states secure have obviously progressed far.

As far as some American politicians are concerned, there are, obviously, some things that are more important than peace. For them, the further armament of the European NATO partners with nuclear weapons is an established fact. This causes the negotiating offer in NATO's dual decision of December 1979 to lack credibility.

The political preparations for lifting the ban on the production of the neutron bomb have commenced. What consequences will the construction of this weapon have, as it essentially aggravates the danger of localized nuclear war even in the view of military experts?

The trade union youth expect all politically responsible people to clarify these questions publicly and to refuse to submit to a policy of that nature. In the European Community, it is necessary to develop a policy independent of the two superpowers and adapted to European interests also in the field of disarmament, detente and safeguarding peace. The development of an independent EC position toward developments in the Middle East shows that this is possible.

The trade union will wield its weight on all levels to see that detente policy is continued and further developed, and that it will be prevented from deteriorating into a policy of controlled armament. At the same time, it demands a consistent reduction in arms exports, because the export of arms is incompatible with a policy of safeguarding peace.

The trade union rejects considerations directed toward introducing civil defense instruction into general schools with the same strictness as it has always condemned defense instruction in the GDR. Remarks by politicians on too much "pacifism among the youth," moreover, indicate an objectionable tendency. It is particularly the working youth which must oppose this tendency.

Preparatory to the trade union youth's antiwar statements on 1 September 1981, a variety of actions will be carried out in the coming months so as to make the following demands heard:

Immediate opening of negotiations on army limitation in Europe without any preconditions, aimed at not allowing any further deployment of nuclear weapons in East and West.

Immediate ratification of SALT II.

Preparation of concrete disarmament measures in East and West, aimed at creating a denuclearized zone in Europe.

No deployment of the neutron bomb in Europe.

No participation of the Bundeswehr in an international rapid deployment force.

No participation of the Federal Republic of Germany in the development of new weapons systems.

Consistent reduction of arms exports with the goal of a ban.

Preparation and testing of alternatives to arms production in the companies affected, with the participation of the trade unions.

Establishment of an office for disarmament and of a corresponding Bundestag committee having far-reaching control options especially over arms production, arms exports, observance of concretely agreed disarmament steps and equipping of the Bundeswehr.

Parallel to this, the gradual reduction of the defense budget and a redistribution to development aid and social and peace services.

Enhancement of peace research and introduction of the subject of "peace education" in general schools.

MITTERAND URGES WITHDRAWAL OF SOVIET SS-20's

LD211452 Hamburg DPA in German 1339 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Hamburg, 21 Apr (DPA)--Francois Mitterrand,the French Socialist presidential candidate, has called on the Soviet Union to withdraw its SS-20 medium-range missiles. In an interview with STERN to be published on Thursday, he said that it is not a question of freezing these missiles at the present level, since the 150 missiles already in position are enough "to destroy everything."

The Socialist leader stated that an approximate military balance exists on a worldwide basis between the United States and the Soviet Union. This would change, however, if the Americans deployed their Pershing II missiles in Europe, since these weapons would reach their targets in the Soviet Union quicker than the USSR could hit the United States with its intercontinental missiles. "Because peace depends on a worldwide balance, however, I do not regard the deployment of Pershing II missiles as necessary, despite the threat to Europe, provided, of course, that the Soviets withdraw their SS-20 missiles."

Regarding U.S.-USSR relations, Mitterrandsaid that Ronald Reagan and Leonid Brezhnev seem to him to be like two boxers flexing their muscles before they enter the ring. "The only difference is that they do not intend to fight." He said that disarmament talks will be resumed some day. "For the moment, each one is first accumulating guarantees."

Mitterrand called emphatically for Europe to have an independent role within the Atlantic alliance. "Europe must keep the alliance and at the same time seek a way to its independence," Mitterrand said.

In response to a question on whether the relations between a president Mitterrand and the federal chancellor would be as close as those between Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Helmut Schmidt, the candidate said: "I am mainly interested in relations between the Federal Republic and France. I would like them to be close and friendly."

MITTERRAND ATTACKS GISCARD'S 'NONPARTISAN' REMARKS

LD211159 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Apr 81 p 10

[Louis Thoral dispatch: "At Bourges: Outgoing President Does not Have a Monopoly on France"]

[Text] Bourges--On the evening of 13 April in Bourges, Francois Mitterrand gave a lively response to the comments made the day before on Europe 1 by Valery Giscard d'Estaing, regarding the "nonpartisan initiatives" he might undertake if he is reelected.

Would it be a case of putting a "nonpartisan" foreign policy into operation? The Socialist candidate replied: "In short, he would have liked to have taken me to Warsaw; he would have liked me to have been by his side in Jordan when he was viewing Israel through his binoculars; he would have liked me to have been in Francois-Poncet's suitcase when he gave up El Salvador to Reagan at I know not what price; he would have liked me to have put my signature to the contract for the sale of tanks to Pinochet's Chile."

"A nonpartisan policy from that quarter is not for me," he added, specifying: "If it consists of taking tea and cakes, it is of no great interest to me.... With the outgoing president, protocol has taken the place of foreign policy."

Asserting that "Giscard d'Estaing's inclination is to please not only Brezhnev but everyone," the Socialist candidate continued: "The homeland's defense cannot be reduced to the small change of an election policy." Describing as "turgid" the tone of the president of the republic who, he said, "believes that when he is under attack it is France and the French who are being attacked." Mitterrand observed: "Giscard d'Estaing doesn't have a monopoly on France, after all."

Focusing his attacks against the outgoing president of the republic, Mitterrand said ironically: "When you were hunting with Bokassa, it wasn't France killing antelopes and elephants and it wasn't France which detained [Bokassa aide] Delpey on the strength of a 'royal decree.' France isn't selling arms to Latin American dictators--it is you, Giscard d'Estaing.'

Mitterrand also said that Giscard d'Estaing is reiterating a large number of the Socialist candidate's proposals: "What are we to think of an outgoing president who condemns my proposals one day and repeats them as his own the next?"

Finally, a member of the audience asked him: "And the PCF, what are you doing about it?" Mitterrand then reaffirmed his desire to gather together again "all those men and women" who had undertaken "that long march." He said in conclusion: "Some dawdled and are now returning from their excursion.... We Socialists have always been there."

The Socialist candidate earlier stopped at Montsauche in Nievre (of which he is general councillor). "If you want a good understanding of France," he stated, "you should go there--the roots are deep."

GEORGES MARCHAIS 13 APRIL TV ELECTION SPEECH

LD220855 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 14 Apr 81 p 1

[PCF presidential candidate Georges Marchais 13 April speech on French television: "The Key To Change? You Have It in Your Hands"]

[Text] Good evening, my objective and the aim of my candidacy in the presidential election is to beat Giscard d'Estaing and to bring change, real change.

It is significant, moreover, that when we drew lots, I was named the first candidate to speak to you this evening.

Of course, you know the results of Giscard's policy and of his term in office. That is why, during my television broadcasts, I do not intend to dwell on this.

I believe, in effect, that the unemployed for example need no one to tell them that unemployment is a catastrophe for themselves, for their families and for the nation. Big families, who find it difficult to live and to balance their budget at the end of the month, need no one to tell them that it is hard to deny oneself, to deny one's children.

Therefore, I intend to devote myself to what is essential. That is: can we get the country out of the crisis? Can we end unemployment? Can we ensure social progress? Can we resolve the big problems facing our people, whether in the sphere of health, schools or housing? Can we satisfy the needs and aspirations of the laboring peasantry?

My reply is: Yes. There are three ways to attain these objectives.

The first method: We need clear, definite and precise choices. In other words, we need objectives which correspond to the interests and aspirations of French men and women--objectives, but also the means to attain them. This is what I have outlined in my 131 propositions which have been widely distributed throughout the country.

The second method: We need a broad, majority, people's movement, a people's movement finding its continuation in the union of the left and then a Socialist-Communist government. That is what we want. And we Communists are ready to take up all our responsibilities in managing the country's affairs.

The third method: We must fight. You know this from experience--the bourgeoisie and the employers have never granted you any advantages except when you have forced them to by fighting. Those who promise to bring you happiness on a silver platter, those who say: "Vote for me and I will do the rest," are demagogues. On the other hand, I tell you: In a word, it is you who have the key to change in your hands.

So it is to these three methods that I intend to devote my explanations. Why? Because I want all French men and women on 26 April in the first round to be able to decide and to choose in full knowledge when they go into the booth. That is why it is necessary to have a big democratic debate. I already have spoken to over 600,000 people at my meetings. On television I intend to speak to you with the same frankness and honesty.

In a word, yes, it is on you that everything depends. Your future and the future of France are in your hands.

This indicates the huge importance of this presidential election, which could launch the change which you need and to which you aspire.

FRANCOIS-PONCET MEETS GUINEAN FOREIGN MINISTER

AB211929 Paris AFP in French 1800 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 21 Apr (AFP)--The situation in Africa's hot spots, particularly the Horn, Chad, western Sahara and Namibia, was at the center of discussions held on Tuesday between French Minister of Foreign Affairs Jean-Francois Poncet and his Guinean counterpart Abdoulaye Toure, who is on an official visit to France.

According to the Quai d'Orsay, the two men held talks which lasted an hour, followed by an official dinner in Garonne in the southwest of France, where Francois-Poncet held election campaign meetings during the Easter recess. The French Ministry of Foreign Affairs adds that the two parties held similar views on all these issues.

Toure, who arrived in France on Monday evening, on Wednesday will meet with the French secretary of state for foreign affairs, Olivier Stirn. He will be received on Thursday by President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

The same source emphasizes the cordial atmosphere in which these preliminary talks were held. It is the first time that the Guinean minister has visited France officially since the normalization of relations between the two countries in 1975.

PCF DELEGATION ATTENDS PALESTINE COUNCIL SESSION

LD211123 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 11 Apr 81 p 9

[Text] A PCF delegation comprising Roger Leclerc, member of the central committee, and Alain Gresh of the foreign policy section arrived in Damascus yesterday to attend the 15th Palestine National Council, which opens today in the Syrian capital.

ARAB LEAGUE SECRETARY ARRIVES FOR 2-DAY VISIT

LD202042 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe-1900 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Excerpts] The secretary general of the Arab League, Chedli Klibi, arrived in Lisbon today on an official 2-day visit to Portugal. He will be holding talks with Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao and with Foreign Affairs Minister Goncalves Pereira. Our reporter recorded his statements on arrival:

[Begin recording in French with superimposed Portuguese translation] The Arab world was very impressed by Portugal's success in carrying out its revolution and in resolving the problems arising from it, as well as by the speedy process of decolonization that was achieved and the efforts carried out for the attainment of democracy.

I intend to discuss with Portuguese leaders appropriate ways of strengthening Arab-Portuguese cooperation and friendship, and also the contribution that Portugal can make toward the reestablishment of security and the preservation of peace in the Middle East, that is to say, to a definitive resolution of the Palestinian problem.

I must take this opportunity to express my anxiety at Israel's acts of aggression against Lebanon. The Easter day massacre of dozens of Lebanese civilians in Sidon, perpetrated by the artillery of Lebanese dissidents at the service of Israel, and the consequences that it may entail, have seriously jeopardized security and peace in the region.

Meets With Leaders

LD220022 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Excerpts] The secretary general of the Arab League, Chedli Klibi, was received in audience today by President Ramalho Eanes. He also had a meeting with Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao.

This morning, Chedli Klibi met representatives of the country's two main employers' organizations at the initiative of the Portuguese-Arab Chamber of Commerce.

In the afternoon, Chedli Klibi visited the Gulbenkian Foundation and held a news conference. This evening he will be dining with the secretary of state for foreign affairs, Dr Leonardo Mathias.

Concludes Visit

LD220350 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Excerpt] At the end of a 2-day visit to our country, the secretary general of the Arab League, Chedli Klibi, held a news conference today in which he dealt with external and internal aspects of the international situation [as heard], particularly problems pertaining to the Arab world and to Portugal's bilateral relations with the Arab countries.

On this latter aspect, Chedli Klibi said that the view taken by Portuguese authorities on the Middle East problem is, on all essential points, convergent with, or very similar to, his own. What we ask Portugal, he added, is what we ask of all the EEC countries: That they should understand, collaborate and cooperate in the search for a just and equitable solution to the Palestinian problem.

Declaring himself convinced that Portugal's trade and cultural relations with the Arab world can be intensified, the secretary general of the Arab League stressed that he did not come to Portugal to make concrete proposals but rather to exchange views on a number of problems, adding the view that, after the April 1974 revolution, Portugal is now in a privileged situation to maintain relations with the Third World.

O FILELEVTHEROS QUOTES MITSOTAKIS ON CYPRUS ISSUE

NC220937 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 22 Apr 81 p 12

[Text] Foreign Minister Mitsotakis has stressed that the main concern of the Greek Government always has been, and remains, the speedy and just solution of the Cyprus national issue. In a statement to a radio correspondent, Mitsotakis further said: "In all our international contacts, and particularly at our various meetings with the Turks, both at the secretaries general and ministerial levels, we always place the Cypriot issue as the first and most substantive topic in our discussions.

"At the forthcoming meeting in Rome with U.S. Secretary of State Haig and my Turkish counterpart Turkmen, the first issue that I will raise will be the submission by the Turkish side of a map on the territorial issue so that there may be continuity in the intercommunal dialogue."

SOVIET ATTACHE MAKES STATEMENT ON CYPRUS ISSUE

NC211142 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Speaking at a press conference on Lenin's 111th birth anniversary, Sharov, the press attache of the Soviet Embassy in Nicosia, stated that the Soviet Union follows a consistent and principled policy on the Cyprus problem. Sharov added that his country is in favor of an independent, sovereign, territorially integral and nonaligned Cyprus. He also said that relations between the Soviet Union and Cyprus are developing successfully. He added that his country is ready to develop them even more and in all fields.

BAYKARA CONFERS WITH TURKISH CYPRIOT OFFICIALS

TA211745 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1545 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Lefkosa, 21 Apr (AA)--Turkey's deputy prime minister and chairman of the Coordination Committee for Cyprus, Zeyyat Baykara, conferred with Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay and minister of the Turkish Federated State during his current visit to Cyprus. Prime Minister Cagatay told reporters after their first session with Baykara Monday that they had informed Baykara about the economic problems of the Turkish Cypriot community and the relations of the Turkish Federated State with third countries.

Among specific topics discussed were the need for a Turkish Cypriot Central Bank, increased capital investment and loans by Turkey to the Federated State and the formulation of a long-term trade policy.

BRIEFS

ECONOMIC REPORT--The development of Cyprus' economy during 1980 was quite satisfactory despite the worsening energy crisis, the acceleration of inflation and the general world economic decline. A report by the statistics department says that the gross national product in firm prices is estimated to have increased 4.3 percent. The 1979 increase was 7.5 percent. Satisfactory development was noticed in the sectors of conversion and services. In 1980 inflation increased by 13.5 percent. Unemployment showed a small increase and reached 2 percent of the financially active population. The import of goods increased considerably and reached 424 million pounds, while the number of exports was lower resulting in a widening of the commercial exchange deficit, which reached 236 million pounds. The exchange deposits showed a decline and at the end of 1980 was 157 million pounds. [Text] [Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 28 Apr 81 NC]

I KATHIMERINI: MITSOTAKIS, HAIG TO REVIEW TALKS

NC211606 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 21 Apr 81 pp 1,3

[Text] The Greek side has not accepted the new U.S. replies--the third--to the political and military proposals which had defined the terms for the operation of U.S. bases in our country and had sought to secure guarantees for avoiding any use of force in the area.

In Friday's meeting between Foreign Ministry Secretary General St Roussos and U.S. Ambassador in Athens R. McCloskey, the new replies were delivered. The Greek side did not accept them because they did not satisfy our country's demands. After the new abortive effort for a rapprochement on substantive issues of the two sides' positions, the United States believes that some solution can be found at the political level, at the meeting which Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis will have with U.S. Secretary of State Haig in Rome, within the framework of the NATO Ministerial Council. The new U.S. replies essentially reiterate the rejection of any commitment for the maintenance of a 7:10 ratio in aid to Greece and Turkey. The reasoning for this is that, while affirming that aid to our country will continue--except for unforeseen reasons--in accordance with U.S. laws and constitutional provisions within the framework of the needs of states in the area, they claim that before giving any aid, the economic situation of the recipient country must also be taken into consideration. This means that the balance can be upset easily by citing Turkey's economic crisis every time. As yet they have not accepted:

A) The Greek demand that the government be able to suspend the bases' operation in extraordinary situations linked with internal critical events;

B) The contents of the Kissinger-Bitsios aide-memoire through which the U.S. side had committed itself to hwart ("will oppose") any use of violence with intent to upset the balance of power;

C) The size of the lump sum in aid ($250 million).

Of course, the issue of settling the "military and support activities" of the U.S. bases remains in abeyance, given the fact that the U.S. side insists on the possibility of expanding this activity beyond the goals envisaged for the operation of the bases within the NATO framework.

Finally, another substantive difference, which concerns the command of the bases, remains in suspense due to the persistence of the U.S. side on having two commanders (one U.S. and one Greek), with the Greek command not having any access to certain designated areas (classified areas). [last two words in English]

As a result of this latest failure to ameliorate the two sides' viewpoints, a new meeting will be held between Roussos and McCloskey--and probably consultations in Washington by Greek Ambassador Tzounis--in preparation for a Mitsotakis-Haig meeting on agreements in principle. However, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis has the responsibility for the final decision as to when and under what conditions, the Greek-U.S. agreement will be signed.

ARMENIANS STAGE ANTI-TURKEY RALLY IN ATHENS

NC211801 Athens NEWS in English 21 Apr 81 p 12

[Text] More than 1,000 Armenians marched through central Athens Sunday to mark the anniversary of Armenian massacres in Turkey in 1915. "We call for the return of our homeland, and we shall go on fighting until we achieve our aim," said (Keghan Khachaturian), a spokesman for the Armenian National Committee, at a later rally. "We want Turkey to recognize that genocide was committed in 1915," he said.

Other speakers condemned international bodies like the United Nations for their unwillingness to help Armenian exiles, and said some militants had resorted to violence because of international indifference to their cause--an apparent reference to political killings of Turkish diplomats claimed by the Armenian secret army. One of the speakers stressed the Armenians were not after revenge for their 1.5 million brethren slaughtered by the Turks in 1915. Rather, the Armenians want their homeland back, he said.

Armenian Church Support

NC211225 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 19 Apr 81 pp 1, 9

[Cem Basar report from Athens]

[Excerpt] Today, the Armenians in Athens will be staging mass demonstrations. Anti-Turkish Greek politicians, rightist and leftist organizations as well as Palestinian Arabs will participate in these demonstrations, which will begin at the Orfe'a Cinema where anti-Turkish speeches will be delivered. Afterward the Armenians and their friends in Athens wll march in the streets of Athens to the accompaniment of the city band. The march will include placing a wreath and observing silence in honor of the unknown soldier in front of the Greek Parliament. Later a religious ceremony is to be held in front of the Armenian memorial at the "New Izmir" [Nea Smirn]] quarter where the Armenians reside.

While Armenians in Athens are busy writing such slogans as "We will suck the blood of the Turks," security measures are being increased in areas where Turkish diplomats have their residence.

Meanwhile, Greek Cypriot Archbishop Khrisostomos, who aspires to become a new Makarios, has been providing the Armenians with large sums of money from church funds to enable them to increase their anti-Turkish activities. This priest, who tries to pose as a savior destined to retrieve Cyprus from the Turks, has established contact with the Armenians through an organization which he has set up within the structure of the Greek and the Greek Cypriot churches. He also provides the Armenians with various other facilities. Some leading clergymen in Athens seem to be in close touch with the Armenians. Similarly, certain Greek Cypriots known to be members of the Greek Cypriot Intelligence Service have been seen in close contact with anti-Turkish Armenian and other organizations.

According to information received from various European cities, the Greek Orthodox churches in Paris, Marseilles, Munich, Geneva and London are in close collaboration with the Armenians there, meeting their needs through Athens and the Greek Cypriot sector. Also it is reported that they supply the Armenians in Beirut with arms as well.

Turkish Protest Note

NC211900 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1845 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] A short while ago we received from the Foreign Ministry the following communique:

Today the Turkish Government made a demarche to the Greek Government, through the Turkish Embassy counselor here to the competent director of the Foreign Ministry and through the Turkish Foreign Ministry director general to the Greek ambassador in Ankara, protesting the demonstrations staged by Armenian organizations in Athens in recent days. The Greek Government is studying the contents of these demarches and will reply through diplomatic channels.

According to press reports in connection with this question, a conference was held this evening at the Foreign Ministry under Prime Minister Rallis' chairmanship with the participation of Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and other officials.

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS ANTI-TURKISH ACTIVITIES IN ATHENS

TA211214 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1200 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Turkey has handed a note to the Greek Government in connection with the recent anti-Turkish activities in Athens. The Foreign Ministry spokesman, Ambassador Oktay Iscen, said in reply to a question by correspondents on this subject that Foreign Ministry General Secretary Ambassador Kamuran Gurun handed the Turkish Government's note to the Greek Ambassador in Ankara, Yeorvios Papoulias.

The note draws the Greek Government's attention to the incidents in question and asks for efficient measures to be taken immediately for the prevention of their recurrence. The note also asks that the use of Greek cities for hostile activities against Turkey not be allowed.

BULGARIAN FOREIGN MINISTER CONTINUES OFFICIAL VISIT

Meets With Evren

TA211655 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Bulgarian Foreign Minister Petur Mladenov, who arrived in Ankara today to hold official talks, has begun his contacts. Head of State Gen Kenan Evren received Mladenov at the Cankaya Mansion at 1700. At the meeting, Mladenov presented General Evren a message from Chairman of the Bulgarian State Council Todor Zhivkov. Zhivkov's message noted that Bulgaria attaches great importance to the good relations and cooperation between Bulgaria and Turkey and expressed the wish to further develop these relations and cooperation. Zhivkov also invited General Evren to visit Bulgaria.

General Evren said that relations with Bulgaria are improving with each passing day and that Turkey is determined to develop these relations. Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, the Bulgarian ambassador to Ankara and the Turkish ambassador to Sofia were also present at the meeting.

Mladenov was earlier received by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu. Turkmen also attended the meeting. In a statement before the meeting, Ulusu expressed his pleasure at having Mladenov in Ankara. He also expressed the wish that the visiting minister's contacts be beneficial. Mladenov also called on Turkmen today. The talks between the Turkish and Bulgarian delegations will begin tomorrow morning.

Turkmen Hosts Dinner

TA212045 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has said that Turkish-Bulgarian cooperation has made positive contributions to developing friendly relations in the Balkans, which has been the source of many disputes and clashes throughout history.

Turkmen gave a dinner in honor of Bulgarian Foreign Minister Petur Mladenov, who is on an official visit in Ankara. Speaking at the dinner, Turkmen said that the basic principles of the final Helsinki accord are sovereign in the relations between Turkey and Bulgaria which have different social and economic systems. Noting that the two countries are continuing their friendly relations within the framework of the principles of mutual respect for their sovereignty, noninterference in domestic affairs and no threat or recourse to force in the solution of international problems, Turkmen added that if all world countries abide by these principles international peace and security will develop. Noting that one of the problems affecting the world is international terrorism, Turkmen said that the most effective struggle against this universal clamity, which is destroying social institutions, can be waged through cooperation among governments.

Noting that Turkey will exert every effort to develop cooperation with Bulgaria, Turkmen added that care is being taken to continue those contacts that have proved beneficial. He concluded by saying that Turkey, which is situated in one of the most sensitive regions in the world, favors the support of disarmament efforts, provided this does not reduce the security of any country.

Mladenov said that the principle of establishing good relations with neighboring countries has always had a special place in Bulgarian foreign policy. Referring to the tranquillity in the Balkans despite international tension, Mladenov said that progress through good relations among Balkan countries raised new hopes for the future. Noting that Bulgaria considered one of the major duties of its foreign policy efforts directed toward developing the detente process and stopping the arms race, Mladenov added that every step in the field was received with satisfaction by Bulgaria. Referring to the Cyprus question, Mladenov said that Bulgaria favors a peaceful and just solution in the interests of both communities based on the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and nonalignment of Cyprus. Pointing out that such visits among Turkish and Bulgarian Government officials create new possibilities for developing relations, Mladenov expressed the view that cooperation in every field will serve the interests of the region and the two countries.

Talks Begin

TA220922 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0900 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] The official talks between Turkey and Bulgaria have started in Ankara. The Turkish delegation at the talks is being headed by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen and the Bulgarian delegation by Bulgarian Foreign Minister Petur Mladenov.

In a speech before the talks, Turkmen said Turkish-Bulgarian relations will be discussed in detail. He noted that an exchange of views will also be conducted on international issues.

In his statement, Mladenov said that his contacts yesterday were conducted in a positive and constructive atmosphere and expressed the belief that this atmosphere will continue in future talks as well. Mladenov added that his delegation is ready to discuss any subject the Turkish side considers necessary.

The talks will continue in the afternoon as well. The visiting foreign minister will also be received today by Minister of State and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal.

DEATH OF TURKISH WORKER IN LIBYA CONFIRMED

TA211728 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1535 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 21 Apr (AA)--The Libyan People's Bureau in Ankara confirmed a Turkish worker had died and two others injured in a clash with Libyan policemen in the town of Sabhah. The statement from the people's bureau said the incidents had started when a group of Turkish workers made certain extra demands from the employing firm beyond their contract.

Attempts at mediation by the (?controlling) [words indistinct] and Turkish diplomats, who were alerted, were to no avail, the statement said.

Libyan police took measures to protect the Turkish representatives of management when the workers threatened them. One worker was killed and two were injured when police had to resort to force against the workers who refused to disperse and threatened Libyan police as well. The Turkish Embassy was informed in detail of the course of the incident, the statement from the people's bureau in Ankara added.

Delegation to Investigate

TA211850 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] A Turkish delegation headed by Labor Ministry Deputy Under Secretary Salahattin Erkap will leave for Libya tomorrow in connection with the incidents that occurred in Sabhah resulting in the death of a Turkish worker and the wounding of two others. According to a statement issued by the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General, workers employed by a Turkish firm in Sabhah staged a strike and Turhan Yildirim, a worker, was killed as a result of police intervention in the incident. Noting that two more workers were wounded in the incident, the statement added that the labor attache's office in Tripoli showed interest in the incident and contacted the workers. The statement further noted that contacts in connection with the issue are continuing in Ankara and Tripoli and that the reasons that led to the incident and the way it happened will be clarified following the investigation to be carried out by the delegation that will leave for Libya. The statement added that the necessary measures and steps will be taken in accordance with the information to be obtained.

MITSOTAKIS SEES PROGRESS POSSIBLE IN MUTUAL TALKS

NC211302 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 17 Apr 81 pp 1, 3

[Text] Ankara (AA)--Commenting on future developments in Turkish-Greek relations, Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis has said: "I am confident that when I meet the honorable Turkish Foreign Minister, Ilter Turkmen, during the NATO meetings in Rome in the first week of May, we shall take another step forward. Our sole goal is to solve all our outstanding problems."

The following is a summary of the answers Mr Mitsotakis gave in an interview he granted to the "From Home and From Abroad" program of the TRT television network: "I can say that we are advancing in small but substantial steps toward the improvement of relations between our two neighborly and friendly countries. As you have put it, it is true that these steps do not look very impressive. However, I wish to tell you, and through you the Turkish public, that it is the general belief in Greece that important efforts are being made toward preparing favorable ground for the improvement of relations between our two countries. Neither side should forget the starting point of these relations--they were extremely strained. We have since been engaged in discussing important issues on which we differ and we are advancing in stages toward their solution. We have now reached an auspicious point.

"The Greek people believe in the need for and usefulness of the Turkish-Greek friendship to both sides. However, I believe that Turkish public opinion should not exaggerate or misunderstand certain adverse reactions of the Greek people to certain events of the recent past--reactions that should be considered natural. The Greek people truly believe in the need for this friendship, which serves the interests of both countries, particularly in view of all the dangers facing us and in view of the extremely complicated situation in this part of the world where fate has chosen to place us together. I also believe that the Turkish people, too, cherish the same belief. I am of the opinion that this is a belief as well as a true necessity."

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL VISITORS MEET ECEVIT, OZTRAK

TA211746 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1550 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 21 Apr (AA)--Two representatives of Amnesty International (Anne Burly) and retired Admiral (Dan Backer) met Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen Monday and former RPP leader Bulent Ecevit Tuesday. They will be leaving Turkey Wednesday after an interview with Minister of State Ilhan Oztrak.

TERRORISM VICTIM RELEASED FROM COPENHAGEN HOSPITAL

TA211519 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Cavit Demir, the labor adviser at the Turkish Embassy in Copenhagen who was seriously wounded in an armed attack by Armenian terrorists, today left the (Richt) hospital in which he was being treated for some 3 weeks. Officials from the Turkish Embassy in Denmark said that Demir's health is very good and that he will be able to start working after having rested for a time. Six bullets were removed from Demir's body in a series of operations that continued for 16 hours after he was seriously wounded by armed Armenian terrorists on entering his house in Copenhagen on 2 April.

MILITARY COMMAND LIFTS BAN ON MILLI GAZETE

TA211827 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] The Army IV Corps and Ankara, Cankiri and Kastamonu Martial Law Command has lifted the ban on the publication, circulation and distribution of MILLI GAZETE [pro-Islamic daily favoring the National Salvation Party] within the command region. The ban was imposed by the martial law command on 10 April.

TRIAL OF ERBAKAN, OTHER NSP OFFICIALS TO BEGIN

TA211744 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1605 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 21 Apr (AA)--The trial of 34 National Salvation Party [NSP] officers, including party leader Necmettin Erbakan, is scheduled to start in Ankara Friday, 24 April. In his indictment, the military prosecutor will be charging Erbakan and his friends with setting up an association and conducting propaganda for the purpose of establishing a theocratic state by "basing the social, economic, political and legal rules for the state entirely on religious (?foundations)", in violation of the constitutional principle of secularism.

He is demanding a prison term of 14 to 36 years for Erbakan and from 2 to 17 years for other NSP officers and ex-deputies, including Deputy Chairmen Suleyman Arif Emqe, Fehmi Cumalioglu, Recai Kutan, Sevket Kazan, Secretary General Oguzhan Asilturk, party whip in the National Assembly Sener Battal, and former deputies and ex-ministers Korkut Ozal, Fehim Adak, and Hasan Aksay. The NSP officers are further charged with contempt of the memory and principles of Ataturk, with quotations included in the indictment from speeches made at outdoor rallies sponsored by NSP at Konya, Bursa, Izmit, Yozgat and Sivas from 1978 to 1980.

SENIOR POLICE SUPERINTENDENT COMMITS SUICIDE

TA211659 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1615 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 21 Apr (AA)--Senior Superintendent of Police Mustafa Cakmak committed suicide in his office at Bahcelievler police station in Ankara Monday afternoon. Police sources said they were inquiring into why Cakmak shot himself with his own pistol.

VOTCP URGES SOLDIERS TO OPPOSE-IMPERIALISM

TA220941 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Feature of slogans and appeals]

[Excerpts] The place of patriotic soldiers, noncommissioned officers and officers is by the side of our toiling people. At a time when a military dictatorship is controlling the fate of our country, the role of the patriotic soldiers, noncommissioned officers and officers within the army is more important than ever. U.S. imperialist efforts to include Turkey in its adventurist plans in the Middle East are evident. The junta ratified the bilateral slavery agreements signed with the U.S. imperialists under the name of a defense cooperation agreement. These agreements further tighten the U.S. imperialist chains around our people's necks. Our national independence is being sold out to the imperialists under the guise of receiving aid and loans.

There are U.S. and NATO bases on our soil that are equipped with nuclear weapons. Neither the Turkish Government nor the army has any control rights over these bases. The future of our country has been completely abandoned to the hands of U.S. generals. The double key system is merely a deception concocted to deceive the Turkish Army. The plan of U.S. imperialists and NATO ringleaders under a so-called Soviet threat is evident. The plan consists of using our country for their own hegemonist interests in the Middle East. We ask you: Is it an honor to die for the interests of the United States?

On the May Day of 1981 as well, the communists and the Turkish Communist Party say that Turkey should abandon NATO; and the U.S. bases and nuclear weapons on our soil should be dismantled and the bilateral slavery agreements torn up. This is the wish of all the Turkish people and it is necessary for our national interests.

Patriotic soldiers, noncommissioned officers and officers: Oppose the plans to drag the army into imperialist adventures. The army should be taken out of the command of NATO.

Those who, through their foreign policy, are dragging our country into the adventurist policies of U.S. imperialists and NATO are unleashing the army against our own toiling people. Hunger and poverty are being imposed on our working class and our toiling people through the force of the bayonet. Those who yesterday erected the soldier's bayonet against the strikes of the working class are now directly threatening all the toilers and democratic forces through the use of the bayonet. Their own sons, clad in soldiers uniforms, are being unleashed against the workers, and the toilers and laborers in the villages and cities.

Patriotic soldiers, noncommissioned officers and officers: Do not oppose your toiling mother, father or brother, support them in all their just demands. Defend the status of being only the army of the nation and of our people and serving only their interests. Oppose being humiliated and beaten in the barracks.

Patriotic soldiers, noncommissioned officers and officers within the army: Oppose the bans on May Day. Unite with our working class--the leading force in our struggle for independence, democracy and social progress. May Day is the day of unity, solidarity and struggle of all anti-imperialist forces.

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 078

23 April 1981

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Schmidt Rejects Spheres of Influence in Gulf Area J 1
Paper Assesses Schmidt Tactics on Saudi Arms Aid J 2
[SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG 22 Apr]
Chancellor Assures Calvo-Sotelo of FRG Support J 2
SPD Organ Lists Bahr as 'Responsible Publisher' J 3
[FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE 22 Apr]
Paper Inveighs Bahr Approach to Brezhnev Proposal J 3
[FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE 23 Apr]
Company Announces Sale of Leopard Tanks to Greece J 4
Briefs: Visits to East Berlin J 4

FRANCE

Francois Mitterrand Discusses Foreign Policy K 1
New Ambassadors Appointed to Guinea, Lesotho [LE MONDE 12-13 Apr] K 3

SPAIN

Basque Leader Views Political Situation [EL PAIS 9 Apr] N 1
Alternates for Ministerial Position Cited N 4
Briefs: Guardsmen Pardoned N 4

CYPRUS

Bomb Damages Commerce Ministry Official's Car R 1
Agreement Reached on Missing Persons Committee R 1
Turks Report First Meeting R 1
Briefs: Minister to Yugoslavia R 1

GREECE

Government Answers Protest on Anti-Turkey Rally S 1
Newspapers Comment S 1
RIZOSPASTIS Opposes Installation of Missiles [21 Apr] S 2
PASOK's Papandreou To Visit Bulgaria, Romania S 2

TURKEY

Government Receives Greece's Reply to Protest Note T 1
Government Views on Cyprus Missing Persons Issue T 1
Bulgarian Foreign Minister Concludes Official Talks T 1

SCHMIDT REJECTS SPHERES OF INFLUENCE IN GULF AREA

LD221458 Hamburg DPA in German 1340 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 22 Apr (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt rejects all interference by third parties in future German arms exports, absolutely excludes participation by German soldiers in a Western deployment force in the Gulf region and approves of close political cooperation between the FRG and Saudi Arabia. He stated this in an interview given to Saudi editors in chief, which was published by the Federal Press Office in Bonn today, 5 days before Schmidt's visit to Riyadh.

Schmidt said that German arms supplies to Saudi Arabia are not a crucial matter at present. "This question has so far not been presented to us in specific form by the Saudi Government." The chancellor outlined the state of Bonn's deliberations on a possible change in German arms export policy: "In this connection, the government has issued instructions to a number of ministries. I don't believe that these instructions will lead to quick results."

However, according to Schmidt, two facts are already known. "First, in the future, arms exports... will be dealt with in an extremely restrictive way in order to avoid being drawn into foreign conflicts. Second, our policy on issues of weapons and arms exports will be determined solely by our own national interests. Under no circumstances will we allow any third state to influence our arms export policy."

On the concept of a "deployment force" in the Gulf region, which is being discussed in the West and which has been rejected by Riyadh and other Gulf states, Schmidt said that he agrees in principle with Western countries' concern about the region's stability. "However, one must take care that such concern does not include the formation and mutual delimination of spheres of influence. The desire of the peoples and states of the region to preserve their own independence and nonalignment and to not be prevented from this by a super power must remain the decisive factor," he said.

In the interview, Schmidt described Saudi Arabia as "a stabilizing factor of outstanding importance for the whole region." He added: "For us the Saudi Government, on account of its moderation and farsightedness, is respected quite especially as a partner." He stressed Riyadh's importance as a trading partner, oil supplier and supplier of credits for the Federal Republic, and he also stressed the great interest in Saudi orders for the German economy and in increased exports to eliminate the large balance of trade deficit, which in 1980 amounted to DM5.7 billion.

Schmidt said that the focal points of his talks with King Khalid and Crown Prince Fahd will be the world political situation, the policies of the two great powers, the Middle East question, the security policy situation around the Gulf and in southwest Asia, world economic developments, the situation of the developing countries and bilateral economic cooperation. He encouraged the Arab oil countries to have a "cautious, predictable oil price policy," in order to guarantee the stable development of the world economy. This is also in the interests of safeguarding the real income of the oil countries. The chancellor expressed his "grateful appreciation to the Saudi leaders for their role in shaping OPEC policy."

The chancellor also urged that the Arabs, in the interests of a Mideast peace settlement, should achieve the greatest possible cohesion. "We ourselves... refrain from doing anything that could deepen the rifts between our Arab friends," Schmidt said. Pointing to the Nazi crimes against the Jews, he described Bonn's present relations with Israel as normal.

At its meeting today, the federal cabinet stressed the "great importance" of the chancellor's visit. Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who chaired the cabinet meeting, said, according to Government Spokesman Kurt Becker, that the way in which the visit is publicly treated in the Federal Republic doesn't always do justice to it because the topic of "arms export" has come too much to the fore. Genscher made it plain that the chancellor is going to Riyadh without any decisions having been made on this by the cabinet and the Federal Security Council.

PAPER ASSESSES SCHMIDT TACTICS ON SAUDI ARMS AID

DW221158 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 22 Apr 81 p 4

[Article signed MES: "On Winding Paths"]

[Text] The art of leadership in politics requires a variety of abilities. By no means does it always suffice to advocate a cause considered to be a right caluse in a determined way or, as is demanded by beer hall patrons, to pound one's fist on the table once in a while. Federal chancellors also know from experience that they sometimes achieve their objectives faster on winding paths than by hurried sprinting. Helmut Schmidt presently is utilizing this experience in the field of arms aid for Saudi Arabia.

Surprisingly enough, the chancellor only rarely has joined in the discussion on this, which has been underway for several months now. It is surprising because Schmidt is keenly interested in reaching long term economic coopeation with the Saudis, now in the offing, and because he knows that arms aid must constitute part of such an agreement. Granted, the Arabs never let these officially become linked, but the chancellor proceeds realistically from the premise that it exists in practice. The purpose of his restraint is to prevent the coalition parties, above all the SPD faction, from increasing their criticism of arms exports to the Middle East through additional protests. After all, it isn't lightweights with whom he has to deal, but influential fellow party members such as Herbert Wehner, Egon Bahr and Annemarie Renger.

One week prior to his Saudi Arabia trip, Schmidt has now taken up the point about the Federal Republic's security interest, which--apparently without his help--evolved from the discussion. He has, thereby, come closer to the objective, because he will get the support of his friends only when he is in a position to convince them that security of the nation in this particular case is to be understood in the economic respect. In his view, economic prospects for the future could justify approval of arms exports, even more so since they, provided one is not mistaken, need not necessarily exercise influence on foreign policy interests in the Middle East.

CHANCELLOR ASSURES CALVO-SOTELO OF FRG SUPPORT

LD221702 Hamburg DPA in German 1457 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] Hamburg, 22 Apr (DPA)--The Federal Government will continue to support Spain's wish to join the EEC and also speak in favor of the country's admission into NATO, should Madrid wish it. This was stated by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to the press in Hamburg following talks lasting around 3 hours with Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo on Wednesday.

Schmidt emphasized that he is in favor of Spanish entry into the EEC in spite of the difficulties in reshaping the Community's financial and agricultural policy. In his view, these problems will certainly not ease the entry negotiations. The negotiations should not, however, be postponed for that reason. Calvo-Sotelo said that there is no firm schedule for Spain's entry into the Community. However, he is reckoning on "speedy negotiations and a long transition period."

On the question of possible Spanish membership in NATO, Schmidt emphasized that this is "first and foremost a Spanish decision." "Should Spain express the wish to become a member of the North Atlantic alliance, then we Germans, as one of the many members of this alliance, will speak in its favor," the chancellor said.

Schmidt went on to say that the Federal Republic, in view of the unequivocal way in which King Juan Carlos and the government came out in support of democracy following the failed military coup on 23 February, will support the democratic process in Spain. The German people are following this process with "a great deal of sympathy."

According to Schmidt, there is a "general motivation" for the German approach to the question of Spain's admission into the EEC and NATO. Because of its culture and history, Spain is "one of Europe's heartlands." "Spain is one of us," the chancellor stressed. The Spanish prime minister stated that his government will continue the European, Western and Atlantic foreign policy line of his predecessor, Adolfo Suarez. The admission of Spain into NATO has become even more necessary following the events of 23 February. He said that Madrid will intensively continue the democratization process. The help of the Federal Republic and other European countries is necessary for this.

Calvo-Sotelo, on his first foreign visit since he took up his office around 8 weeks ago, arrived in Hamburg on Wednesday for a 2-day official visit to the Federal Republic. Apart from the two government leaders, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Spanish counterpart, Jose Perez-Llorca also took part in the talks in the guest house of the Hamburg Senate. The talks, according to Calvo-Sotelo, took place in a "friendly atmosphere." The situation concerning the Spanish economy, bilateral problems and questions of East-West relations also were discussed.

In the afternoon, the Spanish guests visited Hamburg Mayor Hans-Ulrich Klose and entered their names in the golden book of the Hansa city. A tour of the harbor followed. In the evening, the prime minister of his entourage intend to meet Spanish guest workers and representatives of the Spanish colony in Hamburg at the guest house. Calvo-Sotelo is expected on Thursday morning in Bonn where he will meet Federal President Karl Carstens.

SPD ORGAN LISTS BAHR AS 'RESPONSIBLE PUBLISHER'

DW221004 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 22 Apr 81 p 4

[Report signed HLS]

[Text] Bonn, 21 Apr--Egon Bahr, the former federal manager of the SPD, has an achievement apart from being his party's disarmament expert. In the latest issue of VORWAERTS, he is listed as the sole responsible publisher. Up to now, listed as copublishers were the (SPD's) late treasurer Droescher and his predecessor Nau. The new chief editor is Hirschfeld, who up to now was responsible for the party members' magazine SOZIALDEMOKRAT MAGAZIN. Former provisional chief editor Walter, who held this office for 2 years, is again deputy chief editor. In the past few years, VORWAERTS frequently was a bone of contention within the SPD leadership, and like other SPD papers also has been affected by financial problems and economy measures.

PAPER INVEIGHS BAHR APPROACH TO BREZHNEV PROPOSAL

DW231217 FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 23 Apr 81 p 12

[Article signed R.H.: "An Abstruse Idea"]

[Text] Surprisingly, Egon Bahr, of all people, has become the disarmament expert of the SPD--in the Bundestag, too.

Whereas all those, including even Japan, who have to deal with the Soviet Union hold the view that Moscow considerably cheated its negotiating partners in the seventies, Egon Bahr, prior to the forthcoming talks on Eurostrategic weapons, now endorses Brezhnev's demands that these negotiations must include all those U.S. nuclear weapons carriers ("forward based systems," such as medium-range bombers) which are targeted on the Soviet Union in and around Europe--and on top of that, the French and British medium-range weapons also. Bahr, who like other spokesmen of his party who urge haste which, in international respects must be described as overhaste, paradoxically enough causes confusion with his proposal which, in turn, has a delaying effect. How many years would it cost were one to reconcile in addition to the Soviet-American negotiations the two West European nuclear powers? Granted, the government may state in parliament that it doesn't agree with the Soviet proposal, but shouldn't the SPD know by now what it actually wants--the counter-arming decision or the erosion of the decision?

COMPANY ANNOUNCES SALE OF LEOPARD TANKS TO GREECE

LD230958 Hamburg DPA in German 0924 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Text] Munich, 23 Apr (DPA)--Greece will purchase 106 Leopard I tanks and 4 tank recovery vehicles. The Krauss-Maffei Company announced today that the contract, which will be fulfilled between February 1983 and April 1984, is worth DM300 million. Seventy-three tanks are to be manufactured by Krauss-Maffei in Munich. The remaining 33 tanks and the 4 tank recovery vehicles will be built by Krupp Mak in Kiel.

According to the manufacturers, the Leopard I has so far been introduced into the armed forces of nine countries on three continents. The fulfillment of the Greek contract will bring the total number of tanks supplied to 4,744.

BRIEFS

VISITS TO EAST BERLIN--Berlin, 21 Apr (DPA)--A good 6 months after the increase in the minimum amount of currency that must be exchanged by visitors to the GDR and East Berlin, considerably fewer West Berliners visited East Berlin over the Easter period this year than in previous years. In the 2 weeks from 6 April to 20 April, there wre, according to information supplied by Senat Deputy Spokesman Joerg Henschel today, 59,196 applications for day visas, which represents a drop of 38 percent from last year, when 95,135 applications were received over the equivalent period. In 1979, there were 109,698 applications by West Berliners to visit friends and relatives in the GDR or East Berlin over the Easter period. [Text] [Hamburg DPA in German 1446 GMT 21 Apr 81 LD]

FRANCOIS MITTERRAND DISCUSSES FOREIGN POLICY

LD221904 Paris Domestic Service in French 1130 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Talk by Socialist party candidate Francois Mitterrand in the program "Campaign for the Election of the President of the Republic"--live or recorded]

[Excerpts] I am going to talk to you today about French foreign policy.

First, I will place myself in relation to the two superpowers, which are, as you know, the United States and the Soviet Union. Everything that is decided in the world in particular as regards the balance of power, depends on these two powers. Not entirely unnaturally, the others also have something to say. However, it is necessary to know how France, led by a new president of the republic, would undertake talks in the long term, that is, how the next 20 years would be envisaged in relation to the United States and the Soviet Union.

Regarding the United States, we are, as you know, among the members of an alliance, that is, the Atlantic alliance. It is the result of events in World War II and the particular relations of friendship and cooperation, mutual aid and military alliance which arose between the United States and France. Since then. obviously. a certain number of things have changed, but the alliance remains. What are we going to do with this alliance?

On the one hand, there is the Atlantic alliance, that is, the West. On the other, there is the Warsaw Pact, that is the East, or in other words, the grouping of a certain number of East European countries around the Soviet Union. The Warsaw Pact continues to exist. It has even strengthened its powers. It is impossible to ignore the need for an alliance, that is (?obvious), I would say. Although I am completely hostile to the existence of these military blocs, I must take account of reality. Thus, the alliance must remain in existence, at least until the day the superpowers and the European countries manage to bring about a different international situation.

Today, in relation to the United States, and within that alliance, we still have a certain number of questions to ask, particularly concerning the real nature of the Atlantic alliance. Time has passed and some things have disappeared; links have been stretched. We have seen most countries which make up this alliance adopting different attitudes according to circumstances in the great modern confrontations of recent years. Thus, we must know what the mutual obligations between the various partners in the alliance mean, exactly. This applies to the obligations of the United States, as I have said, but also to those of West Europe.

At the same time, we are in competition with the United States, which is a powerful country whose economic power is considerable and which naturally tends to establish that power militarily and at the same time by penetrating our markets. For example, the United States dislikes the existence of the agricultural common market, and would like its own products, in particular its agricultural products--I am thinking of soybeans in particular--to be able to gradually invade a market which has been formed by definition precisely to resist such an invasion. We must be able to talk to the United States without weakness, so that it does not eventually dominate the European Common Market.

Then there are other aspects. I will take the example of El Salvador. El Salvador is a small country in Central America which is experiencing great upheaval and where a financial oligarchy of large landowners who have established a dictatorship are in power, and a revolt, a people's revolt, is developing against this dictatorship. It is often said that this is a communist revolt. That is not correct.

The chairman of the revolutionary forces is Guillermo Ungo Revelo, a Social Democrat, whom I know personally and who is a friend of all democrats, all socialists and all labor supporters in Europe. This is a typical case of people's revolt against the excessive domination of the power of wealth and political dictatorship. Thus, the United States, which is fairly near El Salvador, should not wish to secure its power and authority in Central America at the cost of the people's interests.

France can give good advice to its U.S. allies and at the same time make it known that it will not associate itself either politically or, naturally, on any other plane, with measures attempting to break the popular upsurge in El Salvador. Moreover, I hope that France, firmly placed in a Europe which can contribute to this effort, will provide food aid to El Salvador. This would be a way of saying that we have an independent policy in the good sense of the word.

The same applies to the Soviet Union. I want relations of friendship and cooperation to develop. This is necessary, our two countries are at the two ends of Europe. We have a traditional friendship despite the difference in political and economic systems and, I would even say, despite the differences in philosophical explanations on the future of our societies. The Soviet Union is a very large coungry, a country to be reckoned with. It has massive armaments and it has installed on the German border a number of missiles which threatened the existence of the Western military apparatus from northern Norway to southern Italy. We must get an assurance from the Soviet Union that it will pull back its weapons, that it will take them a good distance from its border. These missiles can reach 4,500 kms, so we must be outside their range. These are negotiations to be conducted, naturally, within the general framework, with the United States and with the other European countries, but it is of particular concern to us.

When the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan, what should have been our reaction? My reaction was to protest because the peoples' right to self-determination is the very foundation of international law, and anybody who violates it threatens security and peace in the rest of the world. Thus, we must see that this is not allowed, that it is not swept under the carpet. Afghanistan must regain its freedom, and this needs to be said.

In the same way, we must remain vigilant over Poland so that, first, the trade union rights and, quite simply, the freedoms of the Polish people are preserved. We know the threats hanging over them.

However, the problem which remains in my mind and on which I intend to act is the organization of collective security through discussion. The United States, naturally, must join in this discussion, but the countries of Europe must organize, without any further time being lost, wide-ranging discussion with the Soviet Union, going much further than what is being done in Madrid at the moment, so that collective security can be ensured on the basis of the certain neutralization of territories, on the basis of new disarmament agreements, so that we can together guarantee peace.

It will be said that these are pious wishes. Certainly if the Soviet Union is not interested, we cannot achieve much except to affirm our capacity for independence and the strength of our alliances. Concerning our own military force, we will have one as long as we maintain it, naturally, in such a condition that it is a deterrent, that it is sufficiently fearsome so that no one dare attack us. However, I prefer talks, debate, sitting at a table, starting up a dialogue, saying things as they are, never hesitating to express one's own thoughts, rather than looking oneself up in a sort of frightening silence which will end in tearing the veil of peace, leading to war.

There is a third force. This force is the existence of Europe, of West Europe, around its Common Market, which is above all an agricultural common market and at the same time an economic community with common customs tariffs, with a customs union of preferential tariffs. We are an entity, a unity which is trying to defend itself commercially against the other powers which are trying to overcome us and snatch our markets.

I have great belief in Europe, on condition that it is organized differently, that is, on condition that all national competitions are not allowed to continue without real control, without true unity, between Germany, France, Britain, Italy and the others. Certainly, we must have a good understanding with Germany. I am among those who developed the theme of reconciliation with Germany right from the end of World War II.

But a Paris-Bonn axis must not be a substitute for the development of a Europe which remains lame because France and the governments of Giscard d'Estaing have lacked precision of mind, courage of mind, the will to act, and have often been negligent, negligent in the defense of farmers, in the defense of fishermen, in the defense of vinegrowers. Europe isn't what it should be because Europe hasn't found political enthusiasm, which the outgoing candidate was incapable of providing.

I also would like to mention Israel, Israel which is situated among many Arab countries, a small country, courageous, strong, but which cannot live forever in a climate of latent war. Israel's right to exist must be ensured. It must be given the means, which is why I was the only politican representing a large French party to approve the Camp David agreements. I said that when two peoples make war, they must be able to make peace without being reproached for it, and I greatly admired President as-Sadat, the Egyptian president's gesture in stretching out his hand to Israel. His hand must be grasped respectfully by Israel, and there must be a search to provide the Palestinians with the means to a homeland, that is the right of any people in the world.

I want to develop these fundamental ideas for you in the direction of the great independence of France, independence of action, independence of diplomacy, so that we have our own choices, so that we know how to organize them in the interests of peace and the world, and that is how France again will take up the great tradition that made it the country we serve and love.

NEW AMBASSADORS APPOINTED TO GUINEA, LESOTHO

LD160845 Paris LE MONDE in French 12-13 Apr 81 p 16

[Text] Claude Soubeste was appointed French ambassador to Equatorial Guinea on Friday, 10 April. He will replace Hubert Cornet.

Bernard Boyer has been appointed ambassador to Lesotho. He will replace Paul Blanc, whom he had already replaced last March as ambassador to Mozambique (the two posts go together).

BASQUE LEADER VIEWS POLITICAL SITUATION

LD221357 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 9 Apr 81 p 20

[Havier Angulo interview in Bilbao with Basque Nationalist Party (PNV) leader Xabier Arzallus; date not specified]

[Text] Question: What is your analysis of the current political situation in the Basque country following the 23 February attempted coup and the latest escalation of Basque Fatherland and Liberty [ETA] attacks?

Answer: We have the impression that we are the scapegoat for the coup; that is, we have the impression that when there is talk of the autonomies and of terrorism, everybody is referring to the Basque country. That is, we are the major justification for a possible coup. Of course, this is an unpleasant situation. This means falling again into the trite cliche that the Basque country is ETA, whereas in fact it has been demonstrated here electorally and in the political process that ETA is a very small part of the Basque country. That would be rather like identifying the First of October Armed Revolutionary Group [GRAPO] with Spain, which nobody accepts. There have been many times when GRAPO has also occupied political attention, and nobody has identified it with Spain.

So we believe that there is either a great injustice or a great manipulation here; especially by seeking in ETA the pretext and justification for a coup, for a change of structures and accusing the democratic system, and specifically the incipient Basque autonomy system, of having been unable to tackle or resolve the problem. This is not only unjust but manipulatory. Here, which is where we most directly suffer from the problem of terrorism, we know very well that this is a very longstanding phenomenon. We have experienced many states of emergency and many situations in which a dictatorial state power has attacked the phenomenon of ETA with all its might, even with a totally controlled press, and yet it did not end it.

Question: What is your opinion of the Basque bishops' controversial pastoral letter?

Answer: The matter took me by surprise. I was in Rome, and I learned through your newspaper of the existence of the pastoral letter and of the commotion which it caused. I read it and reread it, and the fact is that it seemed to me to be very opportune. It seemed to me that it pinpointed a political and social phenomenon which has been occurring since 23 February. In my opinion, I believe that the aspect causing annoyance has been seized on, as always happens. Nobody has paid attention to the forthright condemnation of ETA, which is no mere condemnation but means involving it in a people's fate and its responsibility for that fate. The bishops have said what the politicians have not dared to say.

Question: You recently stated publicly that in the present situation, the PNV will not show the white flag. What was the significance of that assertion?

Answer: I said that the PNV will never show the white flag under any coercion. The PNV and the people in general are obviously the target for coercion by conflicting forces. Not only do the putschists justify their action by the Basque country's problems; it is also clear on the part of ETA that the coercion is directed especially against us. Both would clearly like us on their side, and this is why both call us ambiguous. Obviously, the fact is that we have our own viewpoints and our own path, which clearly does not conform to that of ETA or that of other sectors which may be putschist or close to them.

Question: There are currently broad sectors which when referring to the political situation experienced in the Basque country tend to cast the blame on or to demand responsibilities and solutions almost exclusively on the part of the PNV. How do you assess this opinion?

Answer: This is an old story in this country. In politics, we have seen how the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, the Communist Party and other parties blame the Union of the Democratic Center for the economic crisis, the autonomy disaster and other issues. Here, as I was saying earlier, the Basque country polarizes the--we would say--critical issue of violence and even of the putschist justification, and the scapegoat is the PNV. The party is the one which holds the key to defeating ETA. This is nonsense. People remember Saint Barbara when it thunders [St Barbara's father was killed by lightning].

The PNV has been putting forward its theses for 4 years. The phenomenon of violence or terrorism (whatever you wish to call it, because the names do not matter to me), is something very longstanding. We have always said that the origins are political and therefore the solution must also be basically political.

What is being contended for by everybody here is the Basque people. If the Basque people do in fact have a trauma and political dissatisfaction, that is where a start should be made, where progress should be made and where--we would say--a number of violent trends, whose greatest danger is their having popular support, must be defused. So what is being contended for here is popular support. The PNV has always said and will continue to say that enhancement of autonomy and political progress are the key to resolving violence and terrorism. If this is forgotten, and it is being forgotten, police solutions alone lead nowhere.

I ask: What does combating ETA mean? Some people believe that combating ETA means eliminating commandos, and what this shows is that it is not even known exactly how the system works, that new people emerge and that there will always be people who wish to stir up this situation in the Basque country and support a certain action.

Question: Are you afraid that the Basque statute will undergo cutbacks in the situation created by the attempted coup? Couldn't the laws on state powers and harmonization of the autonomies run in that direction?

Answer: This is an issue for the future. The proposal of harmonizations in itself seems to me to be logical, because this should be an initiative on everybody's part. Each cannot go his own way, because that could indeed prove to be chaotic. What I don't believe is that the harmonization can be effected by means of legislation from Madrid, especially if those of us concerned do not take part. I draw a distinction between a harmonization from the viewpoint of a central government and central forces, on the basis of their own approach, without taking the others into account, and what a harmonization with the participation of all those concerned should be. It is of interest to all of us that matters be coordinated. If the consultation is an imposition of cutbacks in which an attempt is made to arrange a statute which for some people is a minimum and for others rather excessive with parrallel laws emanating from the center, then that obviously is not only anticonstitutional but a frustration of the people's hope. If the political circumstances are difficult, we are not afraid to delay matters, provided that we have a perspective of where Basque autonomy is heading. We are in no hurry. What we would not accept is, of course, cutbacks--watering it down.

"ETA Is a Regressive Force"

Question: Do you believe that the implementation of Basque autonomy could perhaps be preserved in return for the PNV and the Basque government being, so to speak, more flexible about the use of some symbols and the use of some words, such as "Spain," "nation" and "constitution," and resolutely supporting the measures recently approved by the governments?

Answer: I believe that there is a great deal of demagoguery in the matter of symbols and the use of words. All those issues were discussed when the constitution and the statute were being negotiated. The word "nation" did not enter the statute, the word "nationality" entered it, and we accept this. With respect to the symbols--flags and so forth--we accept the rules which were announced concerning their use. So what cannot be said is that there has been no acceptance on our part. The fact that on the one hand there is an excessive use of the symbols--which I also deem improper--and on the other hand there is scant use, can be explained by a whole set of reservations and mutual suspicions.

We can also say for our part that there are people who absolutely refuse to use the word "Euskadi" [the Basque country], to see the Ikurrina [Basque flag] or to fly it. I have not yet seen the ikurrina in our autonomous region at any establishment under the authority of the state. We know that legally they have no obligation to do so, but they haven't made any gesture of acceptance of our symbols. So it is perhaps natural that there should be a kind of reluctance on the part of the people to use other symbols.

I believe that time will gradually ease many of these things, if there really is a desire for understanding on both sides.

Question: How do you assess the armed forces' presence in the Basque country within the context of the government's new measures against terrorism?

Answer: I believe that this is a presence confined to the borders and ports under civilian command. From this viewpoint, I believe that there can be nothing unlawful in this. This is also a matter of political prudence. For the present, I believe that yes, indeed, the intention has been to release certain police forces, so that they can devote themselves more fully to their task; since we are in a special situation, that could be justifiable. My fear lies in the fact that these methods would have a dangerous dynamic, and I am not certain that it is even good for the armed forces to become involved in this issue.

But in any event, this is not our province, since the use of the armed forces is not an autonomy matter. I would say that it is the future which must determine who is right, although I greatly fear that it was not a wise move.

Question: [Socialist Party of Euzkadi Secretary General] Benegas and virtually all the leaders of the Basque parties, except the Basque left, have asked the PNV and the Basque government to cooperate with the national police until there is an autonomous police force.

Answer: We believe that the problem is not whether the PNV cooperates with the police, because there is a Basque government. The problem is how to cooperate. Mr Benegas, among others, knows very well that cooperation on the part of the people with the police will not occur just like that, because there is a lengthy history behind this. That is the trouble: That there is a considerable section of the Basque people who have their historic memory and who have their traumas and their own image of the public order forces.

That is why we have always asserted the need for an autonomous police force; not merely because an autonomous community must have its own police force, but because there are reasons, which are indeed historical, of very turbulent relations with certain police forces to which the people relate. And neither Txiki Benegas nor the PNV will succeed in surmounting that state of affairs if that people are not convinced of something. What I would have asked of Mr Benegas and others is to have made a greater effort at the right time to secure an autonomous police force and not so much time would have been wasted. The security council has remained unformed for a year. So there is cause for our being in the situation in which we find ourselves.

Question: How do your judge the current strategy of ETA's Military Front?

Answer: It is difficult to judge it because we do not know exactly what is happening within it. Unfortunately, we have very little information about ETA's internal situation. On the basis of this situation, its external actions, and more specifically the murders of military personnel at such a crucial time--following an attempted coup and the social commotion which this was caused--when viewed from outside, can only be judged as clear attempts at destablization and regression.

In this sense, ETA is not only an organization which uses the weapons of terror but is also a regressive force. In this sense, naturally, for all those of us who unhesitatingly are pursuing a political and institutional path of dialogue, ETA is becoming a danger of enormous magnitude, because it is ruining our entire alternative.

Question: How is ETA's conduct viewed today among PNV members?

Answer: I would say that the PNV members have always been opposed to ETA, for the simple reason that party membership means accepting an option, and the party's option has always been radically opposed to that of ETA. Insofar as, obviously, there are things which ETA upholds and which PNV people and others also uphold, it can be said that there are things which are shared, but it cannot be said in any way that there is any concomitance with ETA.

Question: What is your opinion of the sending of letters supposedly signed by ETA, with threats against PNV elected officials?

Answer: I believe that the document is false. If it were geniune, I repeat what was said on another occasion: If this is a challenge from ETA, let them know that we accept it with all its consequences.

ALTERNATES FOR MINISTERIAL POSITION CITED

LD221056 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] The official state gazette today published a royal decree providing for the prime minister's functions to be assumed in his absence by Pio Cabanillas Gallas, minister at the prime minister's office.

Another royal decree from the office of the head of state provides for the foreign minister's portfolio to be taken over during his absence by Defense Minister Alberto Oliart.

BRIEFS

GUARDSMEN PARDONED--The captain-general of the 1st Military Region of Madrid has lifted the arrest charge on 51 NCOs and guardsmen of the Civil Guard who took part in the assault of the Congress of Deputies by granting them the traditional pardons which are made in the military class on Easter. [Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 18 Apr 81 LD]

BOMB DAMAGES COMMERCE MINISTRY OFFICIAL'S CAR

NC222014 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] Shortly before 2000 today in Nicosia a bomb exploded under the automobile of Mr Erotokritou, director general of the Ministry of Commerce, while the vehicle was parked in a Ministry of Commerce garage. The automobile was extensively damaged by the explosion. The police are investigating.

AGREEMENT REACHED ON MISSING PERSONS COMMITTEE

NC222021 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] It was simultaneously announced in Nicosia, New York and Geneva that agreement has been reached on the terms of reference for the establishment of a committee on missing persons. In Nicosia, the agreement was announced by UN Special Envoy in Cyprus Gobbi in the presence of representatives of the Government of the Republic, the Turkish Cypriot community, the pan-Cypriot committee of relatives of undeclared prisoners and missing persons, the Turkish Cypriot Committee of Relatives of Missing Persons and UN officials.

Mr Gobbi did not disclose anything about the terms of reference, but he said that the committee on missing persons to be established will hold its first meeting in the near future, on a date to be fixed soon. He said that during this meeting the contents of the agreement will be revealed.

Mr Gobbi also said that the conclusion of the agreement is a very important step forward. He expressed the hope that the efforts of the committee for missing persons will strengthen the spirit of cooperation and the joint effort undertaken within the framework of the intercommunal talks.

Turks Report First Meeting

TA221740 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Excerpt] The tripartite committee set up to investigate the issue of the persons claimed to be missing in Cyprus began its work in Lefkosa [Nicosia] today. According to the Turkish Radio Television [TRT] Cyprus bureau report, the Turkish and Greek Cypriot members of the committee held their first meeting at Ledra Palace in Lefkosa. In a statement at the meeting, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Hugo Gobbi, said that the agreement reached on forming the committee is an important step toward the solution of the missing persons issue, which has been pending for a long time. Replying to reporters' questions later, Gobbi said that the Red Cross representative, who is the third member of the committee, will be appointed within a few days by the UN secretary general. The date for the committee's next meeting will be determined after the appointment of the Red Cross representative. The committee will look into files on persons claimed to be missing by both communities and will reach conclusions. The committee's decisions will be reached through a consensus of views.

BRIEFS

MINISTER TO YUGOSLAVIA--Communications Minister Khatzikostas left this afternoon for Yugoslavia to attend the ninth roundtable conference of the developing countries that will be held in Zagres between 21 and 23 April 1981. The conference will deal with transportation and communications matters in the developing countries and the contemporary world in general. In Yugoslavia, Khatzikostas will have contacts with his Yugoslav counterpart and other countries' ministers who will attend the conference. He will discuss with them matters of common interest. [Text] [Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1755 GMT 19 Apr 81 NC]

GOVERNMENT ANSWERS PROTEST ON ANTI-TURKEY RALLY

NC221910 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] According to an official announcement, the Greek Government has delivered, simultaneously in Athens and Ankara, its answer to the Turkish Government's demarche over the Armenian demonstrations in Athens.

Newspapers Comment

NC222154 [Editorial Report] Athens Greek-language dailies on 22 April report on the Turkish note to Greece protesting the demonstrations staged recently in Athens by Armenian organizations, almost unanimously describing the note as a "provocative, unacceptable demarche." Only two papers carry a factual report without any comment or remarks: the progovernment I KATHIMERINI and the KKE paper RIZOSPASTIS, with the latter carrying a very brief report on page 9.

The progovernment morning paper, AKROPOLIS, in its reportage on pages 1 and 9, says: "The Greek Government will react immediately and resolutely to the provocative and insolent Ankara demarche in connection with the recent demonstrations by Armenian organizations in Athens. Within the day, the Turkish Government will be given a reply that will reject Turkey's demarche." The paper adds that the Greek side "will describe the demarche as unjustified. It will point out that the Armenian organizations hold such demonstrations every year, and not only in Greece."

The paper carries views by political and diplomatic observers on the demarche, and says that these observers have pointed out the following:

"1. Ankara should know that Greece is a free, democratic country and its citizens are free to peacefully demonstrate their views and beliefs.

"2. The Greek-Armenians are among the best elements of the country. They are honest, hard-working, peaceful and law-abiding citizens. They have never given cause to the police for any illegal activities.

"3. No one has the right to prevent Greek deputies from attending a peaceful demonstration, and all the Armenian demonstrations in Greece were peaceful.

"4. Ankara is the last party that can direct any Greek Government 'to immediately take strict measures' and to ban anti-Turkish demonstrations. It would be preferable and wiser if it were more careful with its treatment of minorities living in Turkey. The September 1955 events are still fresh... and the 2,000 'missing persons' as a result of the invasion of Cyprus are still missing." The observers also noted that "yesterday's provocative demarche must also be placed within the policy of methodical provocations which, according to authoritative sources, has recently been escalated."

In a frontpage report, the progovernment afternoon paper MESIMVRINI says that "according to reports, the Greek reply to yesterday's Turkish protest against the Armenian demonstration-memorial service held in Athens on Sunday will categorically reject Turkey's protest and will probably be strongly worded." The paper adds that, according to observers in Athens, "it is obvious that the Turks have been looking for such an opportunity to 'counterbalance' the climate created by Athens' strong protests over the violation of Greek airspace by Turkish aircraft, and to hold the Greek side responsible for the Armenian demonstrations."

The morning liberal opposition paper TO VIMA says on its back page: "Yesterday there was fresh deterioration in Greek-Turkish relations--following the recent violations of Greek airspace over the Aegean by Turkish aircraft--because of the unacceptable Turkish demarche protesting the Armenian demonstrations in Athens.

Reporting on an extraordinary conference at the Greek Foreign Ministry last night, the paper says that "this conference will be continued today and, according to reports, the Greek side's policy will be defined in view of recent provocative Turkish activities, particularly in view of the forthcoming meetings of the foreign ministers of the two countries in Rome on 3 May and of the secretaries general scheduled for 30 April."

The mouthpiece of the KKE-Interior, I AVYI, says in a report on page 1 that the Turkish Government yesterday gave the Greek Government "a strong demarche of provocative content because of 'the recent anti-Turkey demonstrations which were held in Athens,' as Ankara cals the demonstrations recently held in various Armenian organizations. Yesterday's demarche, which comes immediately after the intentional and numerous violations of Greek airspace by Turkish Air Force aircraft, is adding new dimensions to the policy of provocations which, according to all indications, is now being promoted by Ankara against Greece."

The leftwing afternoon paper ELEVTHEROTIPIA says on page 16 that "in clearly provocative language, Ankara yesterday warned Greece that 'the use of Greek territory for activities hostile toward Turkey is not permissible' and it demanded that immediate measures be taken to prevent future demonstrations like that of last Sunday."

The extreme rightwing morning paper ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS carries on pages 1 and 10 extensive reportage covering the Turkish protest, the visit to Ankara of a NATO assembly delegation under Van der Stool [south region subcommittee chairman], the forthcoming Mitsotakis-Turkmen meeting and Turkish press reports on the Armenian demonstrations in Athens.

The independent afternoon AVRIANI carries on page 10 a long Ankara report under the headline: "This Is How Far the Contradictory New Democracy Attitude Has Gone in the Case of Foreign Affairs; Provocative 'Protest' by the Turkish Junta Because of the Armenian Demonstrations."

RIZOSPASTIS OPPOSES INSTALLATION OF MISSILES

NC211438 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 21 Apr 81 p 2

[From the "Radical" column: "Guilty Silence"]

[Text] Despite popularly expressed opposition, the rightwing government is proceeding with the study of the military-technical aspects of installing Pershing II and cruise nuclear missiles in Greece.

The government has already assigned military experts the task of adapting our country to the conditions of the new U.S. nuclear strategy. Despite the continuing demonstrations of protest, the government has been observing a guilty silence, hoping that in this way it can "silently" create a "fait accompli" of the installation of Pershing II and cruise missiles. In doing so it would enjoy at least the acquiescence of the bourgeois press, which has adopted a very strange attitude, acting as if the missile issue, which has aroused popular indignation not only in Greece but also in all NATO countries, is something insignificant. The Greek people are determined to foil, through their militant cooperation and struggle, the disastrous plans for the installation of murderous missiles and to free our country from the threatening danger of nuclear destruction.

PASOK'S PAPANDREOU TO VISIT BULGARIA, ROMANIA

NC221922 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1810 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] In response to a personal invitation from Bulgarian President Zhivkov, the leader of the majority opposition party and PASOK chairman, Mr Papandreou, will visit Sofia 27-28 April. Also responding to a personal invitation from Romanian President Ceausescu, Mr Papandreou will visit Bucharest 5-7 May.

GOVERNMENT RECEIVES GREECE'S REPLY TO PROTEST NOTE

TA231209 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Text] The Greek Government has replied to the Turkish note delivered on 21 April. The Greek note says that it is out of the question for permission to be granted for Greek territory to be used for activities hostile to Turkey.

Replying to questions by reporters on this subject, Foreign Ministry spokesman Ambassador Oktay Iscen said that the Greek Government's note says that the demonstrations held by Armenians in Athens on 19 April have in no way exceeded those held on such occasions in the past. Iscen added that the note said permission was granted for a group to meet in the movie theater and to lay a wreath at the monument of the unknown soldier, because such activities are not banned by Greek laws. On the participation of a New Democracy party deputy in the demonstrations, the note said that he had participated on his own behalf. The note also points out that the report on the demonstration was not broadcast by Greek radio or television stations. The Greek note concludes by saying that demonstrations against Turkey are not approved.

GOVERNMENT VIEWS ON CYPRUS MISSING PERSONS ISSUE

TA221740 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Excerpt] It has been announced that Turkey accepts as a positive and constructive development the establishment of a tripartite committee to investigate the issue of the Turkish and Greek Cypriots claimed to be missing in Cyprus since 1963. The Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General issued a statement today following questions by news officials concerning the missing persons committee. The statement recalled that both the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus and the Turkish Government have always supported the view that the missing persons issue, which is a humanitarian one, should be solved through agreement and cooperation between the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities. Noting that the International Red Cross had officially announced that all the prisoners captured during the Turkish peace operation had been returned, the statement added that, despite this fact, the issue is being exploited for propaganda purposes against Turkey and the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. The statement noted that the issue has been presented to the world as an issue involving Greek Cypriots missing as a result of the Turkish peace operation despite the fact that there have been Turkish Cypriots missing since the intercommunal clashes which occurred after 1963 and Greek Cypriots who disappeared during the 15 July 1974 Greek Cypriot coup and the first ensuing clashes.

The statement continued that, as a result of the intense contacts and meetings held by the UN representatives in Cyprus with the two sides, an agreement was reached to establish a tripartite committee on the missing persons issue and to begin activities. The statement added: The establishment of the committee is a positive and constructive development. Our government hopes that this development, which it welcomes, will be a concrete sign for the desire and intention of the two communities to cooperate with one another and to reach an agreement. We hope that the committee will definitely solve this issue, which has been exploited for political purposes for many years, by carrying out its work in a manner devoid of any political thoughts and influences, and we believe that such a result will make a significant contribution to the intercommunal talks that are in progress.

BULGARIAN FOREIGN MINISTER CONCLUDES OFFICIAL TALKS

TA221949 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] The official talks between Turkey and Bulgaria have ended. A joint communique on the talks is expected to be issued tomorrow. The Bulgarian delegation headed by Foreign Minister Petur Maladenov, who arrived in Ankara yesterday, will leave for Antalya tomorrow morning and will leave Turkey tomorrow evening.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 079

24 April 1981

CONTENTS

AUSTRIA

Poland Reduces, USSR Discontinues Coal Deliveries [WIENER ZEITUNG 17 Apr] E 1
USSR, CSSR Cancel Participation in Festival E 1
Voest-Alpine To Supply Libyan Training Workshop E 1
Foreign Minister To Visit Hungary 27-29 April [WIENER ZEITUNG 23 Apr] E 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Leaders Meet With British Foreign Secretary J 1
Schmidt Meeting in Hamburg J 1
Genscher Talks in Bonn J 1
Carrington Remarks J 2
Final Session J 2
Brezhnev Visit Not Expected Before September J 3
DIE ZEIT Writer Views Eurostrategic Weapons Issue [24 Apr] J 3
CDU/CSU Spokesman on Arms Sales to Middle East J 7

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Court Subpoenas Reagan on 'Explosives' Case L 1
PCI Offers To Talk to Socialists on New Government [L'UNITA 18 Apr] L 1

SPAIN

Prime Minister on Admission Into EEC, NATO N 1
Congress Approves New State of Emergency Law N 1
Basque Government Ready To Combat Terrorism N 1

GREECE

Greece Seeks 'Common Answer' With EEC to Brezhnev [NEWS 23 Apr] S 1
Government Rejects Turkey's Note on Armenian Rally [NEWS 23 Apr] S 1
Averof Interviewed by THA; Papandreou Replies [NEWS 23 Apr] S 1
Greek Role in NATO-Israel Relations Criticized [RIZOSPASTIS 22 Apr] S 2
Briefs: Television Relay Station S 2

TURKEY

Tehran Embassy Attacked by Armenian Demonstrators T 1
Two Soldiers, Iranian Killed Near Iran Border T 1
Joint Communique Issued on Bulgarian Mladenov's Visit T 1
NATO Assembly Delegation Arrives for Visit T 2
Begins Contacts T 2
Ecevit Discusses Personel Freedom after Release [ARAYIS 18 Apr] T 2

POLAND REDUCES, USSR DISCONTINUES COAL DELIVERIES

AU170734 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 17 Apr 81 p 7

[Summary] Although Poland will cut coal deliveries to Austria less drastically than those to other Western and even some CEMA countries, Austria this year will get only 600,000 tons of Polish coal as against 1.1 million tons in 1980. This cut will mainly affect industrial coal, especially supplies to the Voest-Alpine Steel Corporation. To offset the decline in Polish coal deliveries for household coal, Austria will import an additional 20,000 tons from the Saar and 30,000 tons from the Ruhr areas. The Voest-Alpine plans to make up for the Polish coal quota cut by additional imports from West Europe, from overseas and partly by shipments from its own coal mine in the United States.

What affects the Voest-Alpine company more seriously than the cut in Polish coal deliveries is the fact that--despite intensive Austrian endeavors that were also continued during the recent visit to Austria of USSR Premier Tikhonov--the USSR will no longer supply any coking coal to the company as of this year. Over the past 25 years, the company got 700,000 tons of coking coal annually from the USSR for its blast furnaces.

USSR, CSSR CANCEL PARTICIPATION IN FESTIVAL

AU231110 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1000 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Text] According to a release of the Vienna city hall press service, the diplomatic representatives of the CSSR and the USSR have informed the management of the Vienna Festival Week that artists of their countries will not participate in any 1981 Vienna Festival Week events. Although agreements had been concluded earlier on such guest performances, they have now been canceled on the grounds that premiers are scheduled [in Vienna] which are not in line with the interests of Moscow and Prague. The premier of the play "Mountain Hotel" by CSSR author Vaclav Havel is scheduled for 23 May and the musical, "Every Good Boy Deserves Favor," in which the authors Tom Stoppard and Andre Previn take issue with the situation of critics of the regime in the Soviet Union, is scheduled for 5 July.

VOEST-ALPINE TO SUPPLY LIBYAN TRAINING WORKSHOP

AU221157 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1058 GMT 21 Apr 81

[Text] Voest-Alpine Steel Corporation has received a 120-million schilling order from Libya to supply a vocational training workshop. Moreover, 46 Libyans are to be given vocational training at the Voest-Alpine Corporation in Linz.

FOREIGN MINISTER TO VISIT HUNGARY 27-29 APRIL

AU230728 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 23 Apr 81 p 2

[Text] At the invitation of Hungarian Foreign Minister Frigyes Puja, Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr will pay an official visit to Hungary from 27 to 29 April 1981.

LEADERS MEET WITH BRITISH FOREIGN SECRETARY

Schmidt Meeting in Hamburg

LD231416 Hamburg DPA in German 1330 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 23 Apr (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington today "welcomed" the "close and continual consultations" between the European Community and the Reagan administration. Lord Carrington was received by Schmidt in Hamburg for a 2-hour political talk at the beginning of Carrington's visit to the Federal Republic. A government spokesman in Bonn said that European Community affairs were the focus of the talk in addition to world political questions.

Schmidt and Carrington both stressed the importance of forming foreign policy opinions among the partners in the Community, but also noted the need for adaptations of [anpassungen der] the "expenditure structure" so that the Community can undertake its future tasks.

The meeting also served as preparation for the next routine round of German-British consultations for which Schmidt and Genscher will fly to Britain on 11 May. Speculation that Schmidt and Carrington also discussed possible British arms exports to Saudi Arabia were not confirmed by the spokesman.

Genscher Talks in Bonn

LD231752 Hamburg DPA in German 1629 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 23 Apr (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher found "very close agreement in evaluating the international situation once more confirmed" on Thursday in his first, almost 2-and-1/2-hour talk with his British counterpart Lord Carrington. The British foreign minister, who took part in a long series of consultations while in the Federal Republic on his first "official visit," discussed questions relating to the alliance with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Hamburg this morning.

The Foreign Ministry emphasized on Thursday that both ministers regard the forthcoming NATO spring meeting as particularly important. The meeting must produce a clear confirmation of the unity of Western alliance policy with the U.S. secretary of state, who will be taking part for the first time.

In comprehensive and wide-ranging talks, among the items discussed were the situation in Poland, the state of the followup CSCE conference, the prospects for a European disarmament conference and the realization of the NATO double decision of December 1979. Also of current significance was a discussion of the Gulf region, following the visit of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher who wants to satisfy the Saudi Arabians' arms wishes.

The political talks, which took place in the traditional "warm and friendly atmosphere," will be continued on Friday at the Foreign Ministry. Genscher and Lord Carrington want to discuss European questions and efforts for a solution to the Namibia problem.

The French proposal for a conference on disarmament in Europe, which "should discuss militarily significant, politically binding and verifiable confidence-building measures in the whole of Europe, "was again supported by Foreign Minister Genscher in Bonn on Thursday. At a dinner in honor of his British counterpart, Lord Carrington, Genscher described the Soviet willingness to extend confidence-building measures to the entire European area as a "step in the right direction."

In his speech, Genscher called the NATO double decision "the classic expression of our peace policy." In this connection, the meeting of NATO ministers in Rome at the beginning of May is particularly important. What is necessary there is a "clear and convincing confirmation" of alliance policy, together for the first time with the U.S. secretary of state. On the situation in Poland, Genscher emphasized the policy of noninterference decided by the Federal Republic, which is "also expected from all others taking part in the CSCE."

Genscher, who stressed the good German-British relations, recalled the disunity at the EEC summit at Maastricht and called for "new initiatives." He referred in particular to the fishery problem and agricultural policy.

Carrington Remarks

LD232208 Hamburg DPA in German 2121 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 23 Apr (DPA)--British and German security interests are inseparable, British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington said today at a dinner given by his German counterpart, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, at the Godesberg Redoute.

The British foreign secretary underlined the "enormous areas in which our interests meet" in all other questions. "British defense policy is built on the assessment that our security interests are inseparable from those of the Federal Republic of Germany," Carrington said, and emphasized the parallelism of his political and personal friendship with Genscher. Carrington called for a "realistic basis" for the disarmament negotiations with the East, while at the same time, maintaining military equilibrium.

Carrington will visit Stuttgart on Friday and Saturday. "The capital of Baden-Wuerttemberg is one of the flourishing centers of the German economic miracle," the foreign secretary said. Turning to Genscher, he added, "Unfortunately, a place which is politically foreign to you, as I have been told."

Final Session

LD241210 Hamburg DPA in German 1054 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 24 Apr (DPA)--Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington and his German counterpart, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, agreed that at their forthcoming spring meeting in Rome at the beginning of May, the NATO countries should formulate as clear an attitude as possible concerning the NATO twin decision. The British foreign secretary said today that the NATO discussions should be followed as soon as possible by arms control talks with Moscow. There were no differences of views in this respect between the two men.

This unambiguous British statement was welcomed in German diplomatic quarters since Britain maintains a traditional, special relationship with the United States and since the new U.S. administration hasn't yet taken any decisions concerning talks with Moscow and is to explain its attitude for the first time at the NATO meeting in Rome.

Lord Carrington, who was received by Chancellor Schmidt in Hamburg yesterday, today declared himself "very satisfied with the large measure of agreement" embracing all aspects of foreign policy. The Federal Republic is of "absolutely central importance" for British policy, and this importance is still growing.

At their final meeting today, the two ministers discussed the Namibia problem, EEC questions, the situation in Poland and East-West relations. Genscher said that the question of arms deliveries to Arab countries had not been broached.

Lord Carrington later was received by Federal President Carstens for a brief talk and then went on for an official visit to Stuttgart.

Federal President Carstens thanked Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington for Britain's contribution to the common defense through the presence of the British Army on the Rhine in the Federal Republic. At the end of their talk, a spokesman in the president's office said that the federal president also paid tribute to Britain's attitude on all questions concerning Berlin. Apart from East-West relations, their discussion also covered the situation on the Indian subcontinent, which both politicians recently visited.

The British foreign secretary said that it is particularly important that the USSR continue to be pressured to negotiate. In a speech at a dinner in Stuttgart today, he emphasized the importance for Europeans of negotiations with the Soviets "on the reduction of nuclear medium-range missiles." He also called for "fresh political impulses" for closer cooperation within the EEC, where a more equitable distribution of burdens is urgently needed.

BREZHNEV VISIT NOT EXPECTED BEFORE SEPTEMBER

LD241108 Hamburg DPA in German 1028 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 24 Apr (DPA)--Soviet state and party head Leonid Brezhnev is not expected to visit Bonn before September. This was made clear by Federal Government Spokesman Becker at a news conference today. The exact date, he said, is still uncertain.

Becker said that the Federal Republic has two requirements for Brezhnev's visit, which will be in return for Chancellor Schmidt's visit to Moscow last June: It should take place soon and under "particularly favorable" conditions. These include a high degree of prior coordination of Western policy for the future. Regarding this coordination, Becker mentioned Chancellor Schmidt's visit to Washington on 20 May and the Western summit in Ottawa on 20-21 July. August is largely precluded for visits of this kind because it is a month for vacations.

The government spokesman again confirmed that the Federal Government sees no connection between the proposed talks by Brezhnev in Bonn and a summit meeting between U.S. President Reagan and Brezhnev. Both the U.S. and the Soviet sides agree that such a meeting requires careful preparation, which would certainly take many more months. There are no U.S. reservations about Brezhnev's visit to Bonn. In a telephone conversation which Schmidt had with the President before the attempt on his life, Reagan had, in fact, expressly welcomed the proposed visit. The same is true of President Giscard d'Estaing.

DIE ZEIT WRITER VIEWS EUROSTRATEGIC WEAPONS ISSUE

DW231202 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 24 Apr 81 p 3

[Theo Sommer article: "The Euro-equation"]

[Text] (DIE ZEIT editorial note: Everything in this article may be wrong or erroneously understood. If this is the case, the pertinent people should put the real figures on the table.)

Ascertaining the strategic nuclear power ratio between the superpowers is child's play compared to registering the "Eurostrategic" or "continental strategic" means of nuclear weapons delivery which determine the nuclear balance or imbalance in Europe.

Enough studies have been available on the issue for quite some time. None of them is uncontroversial, not even the list of the renowned London International Institute for Strategic Studies. In this connection, the Federal Defense Ministry remarked with slight mockery a year ago: "The appropriate classification of the nuclear weapons systems of NATO and the Warsaw Pact as part of the strategic nuclear potential in Europe requires knowledge which generally is subject to secrecy." True. Yet all their masterly knowledge notwithstanding, even the experts at Hardthoehe were unable to prevent their own lists from being accused of having faults and of using arbitrary criteria. And besides, the need for military secrecy must be weighed against the open discussion necessary in a democracy when it comes to security policy, especially its nuclear aspects. Everybody then must try to obtain his own picture to the best of his ability.

Judgment difficulties are obvious. What matters are not just figures and facts of today, but also and simultaneously, trend analyses. What matters, moreover, are perceptions and feelings. Depending on the lens through which the observer views the Eurostrategic tableau, he will recognize rough parity or a gaping deterrence gap and will be half-heartedly for counterarming or half-heartedly against it.

What is the continental strategic power ratio really like?

For 2 decades now NATO has been living with the fact that the Soviets are exposing West Europe to a special threat through their SS-4 and SS-5 medium-range missiles, of which they possessed about 760 in 1967. The NATO arsenal has contained nothing comparable since Kennedy had the Thor and Jupiter U.S. medium-range missiles removed, which were deployed at the time in Great Britain, Italy and Turkey. The threat directed particularly at West Europe was supposed to be compensated for by the central strategic nuclear systems of the United States. At the time, nobody came up with the idea that a Eurostrategic balance would have to exist.

This changed only when the Soviets, in the second half of the sixties, caught up with the Americans in the nuclear field and SALT fixed the strategic nuclear balance between the two great powers by agreement. When the Soviets began to deploy their new SS-20 medium-range missile in 1976 the Federal Republic especially was alarmed. It was in late October 1977 that Chancellor Schmidt voiced alarm in a speech to an audience of experts in London. He demanded an effort to reduce the "disparities" existing in Europe parallel to the SALT negotiations and added: "As long as this has not been done we must adhere to the balance of all components of deterrence strategy," meaning "mustering adequate and appropriate means for the valid strategy."

As early as in 1977 the two parts of the subsequent NATO dual decision of December 1979 had taken shape in Helmut Schmidt's mind: restoration of parity either through disarmament negotiations or by means of Western counterarming in Europe. The more SS-20 missiles the Russians commissioned, the more Backfire bombers left the production sites, the more urgent became the demand to create a technological counterweight of arms in West Europe. Regional strategic thinking was rampant; the old--and reasonable--overall strategic premise was lost in a fit of panic.

The panic was understandable although not pardonable. The Soviets irresistibly carried out an arms program which multiplied the threat to West Europe.

Granted, in the late sixties it had relocated a good part of the old SS-4 and SS-5 missiles to the area on the Chinese border (where most of them were dismantled and scrapped in the course of time), and they also dismantled some more in European Russia, yet as many as 390 still remained targeted on West Europe up to the spring of 1981; dismantling only recently began again.

But at the same time the Soviets relentlessly turned out Backfire bombers, 30 units a year. Their range is 4,200 kilometers; they carry four bombs each, with each bomb having an explosive force of 250 kilotons. Not counting the Backfire bombers of the Soviet Naval Air Force, about 70 of them were ready for use on a worldwide basis in early 1981, including 40 in the European region.

What was much more menacing, however, was the "growth" of SS-20 missiles. They have a range of 4,400 kilometers and carry three warheads with an explosive force of between 150 and 180 kilotons each. The launchers can apparently be reloaded once, perhaps twice, and are land mobile. For years, five launching platforms and seven to eight missiles have been leaving the Soviet arms factories month by month. By March 1981 American satellites had located 24 positions ready for action. Another nine were under construction.

Of this total of 33 positions, 22 are located in European Russia: eleven in Belorussia, three in the area of Kiev, five west of the Ural mountains; all of them targeted on NATO Europe. Five positions are located east of the Ural mountains in the Ob River triangle; the missiles stationed there can reach both Asian and European targets. Six SS-20 positions targeted exclusively on China or Japan are located in the Transbaykal region. Each position harbors nine launchers; two or even three missiles are available per launcher; each missile has three warheads that can be directed to different targets independently.

But there are some uncertainties there as to the accuracy of the findings. One of them involves the geographic distribution: How many SS-20 missiles are targeted on Asia, how many on Europe--and which parts of Europe can they reach? NATO's rule of thumb is this: Two-thirds of the SS-20 missiles are targeted or targetable on West Europe, but official data of the alliance authorities do not always correspond to this rule of thumb.

Another difficulty is connected with the assessment of the reloading capability. It is known that it exists; but so far it has been a subject of speculation whether the "reload mass" is already available. The chancellor already mentioned "two to four" missiles per launching platforms when he spoke in parliament; NATO's counting experts proceed from the premise of a one-time reload capability; just recently the federal cabinet based a decision on the assumption that only one SS-20 missile is available per launcher.

At times confusion also prevailed about the number of mirvs carried by each SS-20 missile. The report that it was four made the rounds only once, but there has never been any confirmation of it. The tests on the central Soviet missile practice grounds at Kapustin Yar, to the extent that they were observed by the five NATO stations in Turkey, added up to a trial pattern of three warheads per missile. Thus, in keeping with the SALT principle "counted as tested," NATO proceeds from three warheads; meanwhile, it may well be that some SS-20 missiles accommodate fewer but heavier explosive charges in their warheads.

In answer to the question of whether balance or imbalance exists in the Eurostrategic field, such computations count considerably, indeed. Twenty SS-20 positions with nine launchers each are targeted on West Europe. If we count one missile per launcher and three warheads per missile, this adds up to 540 warheads; in the case of two missiles it comes to 1,080 warheads and in the case of three missiles it even adds up to 1,620. In addition, there are the seven positions under construction suited for use against West European targets, meaning another 189 or 378 or 567 warheads.

This is not all by far that the Soviet Union can muster against its western front. After all, 350 SS-4 and 50 SS-5 missiles are still targeted on West Europe, and in addition so are several SS-11 and SS-19 missiles; finally there are 70 missiles on submarines in the Baltic Sea; moreover there are 350 older vintage bombers. But has the balance really been hopelessly upset?

The West is not at all empty-handed. The forward-based systems (FBS), the advanced systems of the United States which have been a thorn in Moscow's side for many years, are still doing their duty: 30 carrier planes of the U.S. 6th Fleet in the Mediterranean; 156 U.S. F-111 fighter bombers in Great Britain; about 120 Starfighters of various European NATO countries; and finally five U.S. missile-carrying submarines with 40 Poseidon missiles each and 10 warheads apiece which are subordinated to the Supreme Allied Commander in Europe (SACEUR)

Granted, they have already been included in the SALT calculation, and their assignment to SACEUR is only temporary and their use within the framework of the SACEUR Scheduled Program (SSP) limited to automatic triggering of general nuclear war and not intended for isolated use; nevertheless, it makes sense that the Soviets regard them as a direct threat.

There is no overall count that would be uncontested. The figures shown in the diagrams on this page relate to the main elements of the continental strategic balance. They could be amplified for both sides by certain types of airplanes, yet their configurations, flying profiles and arms loads do not allow any conclusions as to their combat missions and ranges of action.

The rough estimate proves this: NATO is not in that bad a shape. At best there are 548 launchers against 690, 1,546 warheads against 1,210--this would be no reason for a feeling of doom. And yet, the more probable case--548 against 870 launching facilities, 1,546 against 1,750 warheads--and the worst case--548 against 1,050 launching platforms, 1,546 against 2,290 warheads--justify the counterarming decision of NATO of December 1979. Under the modernization decision it is planned to deploy 572 U.S. LRTNF (long-range theater nuclear forces, meaning medium-range missiles) in West Europe from late 1983 to 1988: 108 Pershing II-XR (range 2,000 kilometers, one nuclear warhead, no reloading capability) in West Germany which are to replace the obsolete model Pershing IA, and 464 ground-based cruise missiles (GLCM's)--160 in Great Britain, 112 in Italy, 96 in the Federal Republic, 48 each in Belgium and Holland (range 2,000 kilometers, one nuclear warhead). At the moment the total costs of this modernization program are estimated at $6 billion, of which the United States, in whose custody the weapons will remain, will put up nine-tenths. The 572 LRTNF warheads, besides, are not intended to increase the arsenal of U.S. nuclear weapons in Europe, which had been reduced by 1,000 nuclear warheads in 1980 (from roughly 7,000 to 6,000), but are supposed to be stocked within the framework of the reduced inventory.

The arms control offer consisted of an offer to the Soviets to negotiate on the nuclear medium-range weapons of both pact systems in Europe within the framework of the U.S.-Soviet SALT talks. The objective of the negotiations is a limitation of these systems on both sides, or more sepcifically, a limitation of the American and Soviet ground-based LRTNF missile systems. The NATO Council of Ministers announced that success in the negotiations might "influence the extent of the TNF requirement of NATO...the TNF requirement will be reviewed in the light of concrete negotiation results." This means that if the Soviets display a readiness for concessions, NATO will deploy fewer than the 572 envisaged medium-range missiles; if the Kremlin remains stubborn, the whole program will be carried out; but if the Russians continue their SS-20 armament wihtout any limitation, NATO might perhaps have to raise the ceiling of 572 LRTNF weapons.

No doubt about it, the SS-20, about which nobody in the West knows for sure how many are still to be commissioned, by its accuracy and overground mobility is a threat that needs to be taken far more seriously in qualitative terms than were its predecessors. This is not fiction, even if NATO has so far not published a single photograph nor disseminated any deployment map--which is, by the way, a completely incomprehensible way of behaving. If the people in the NATO states are supposed to help support the counterarming decision, the threat ought to be made evident to them graphically. Yet, there is not a single photograph of the SS-20 missile that has been released for publication, even though NATO Supreme Commander Rogers proudly declared: "I could show you the photographs of each indivicual SS-20 position." In truth this secretiveness of the Western military people only serves to camouflage Soviet armament.

The counterarming program cannot be rejected in toto, but much of it invites criticism regarding the specific type of counterarming. The deployment of Pershing II and cruise missiles on the European continent is a dubious solution; it would have been better to deploy the cruise missiles at sea, just as the chancellor recommended.

Various arguments were advanced against this idea: the poor accuracy, the costs, above all the argument that it is possible to determine the origin of a missiles launched at sea, meaning that the Europeans would not share the risk. Nothing of that will survive if and when the Americans go to the water with their MX missiles.

What remains open aside from this are, above all, questions concerning strategy and the doctrine of use. What targets have been envisaged for the new Pershings and for the cruise missiles? Which weapons cover the targets of the old Pershings? Are the counterarming weapons intended for selective use (why so many then?) or for general nuclear retaliation (why, then, so many in Europe?)? Is it logical to argue, as did Henry Kissinger, that the nuclear protective umbrella of the United States no longer covers Europe, but that the U.S. President would use U.S. nuclear weapons sooner if they were stationed in Europe--as if the Soviets would reliably reply to the destruction of Minsk only with the destruction of Munich and not, simultaneously, with the destruction of Minneapolis?

And what has also remained unanswered to this day is the negotiating tactics of the West--in the event negotiations on Eurostrategic weapons are held. What minimum of modernized weapons would be absolutely necessary in West Europe? What maximum of SS-20 missiles in the Soviet Union would be bearable at best?

So far the military people as well as their opponents, the nuclear pacifists, have not even touched the actual issues. The smugness of both will yet experience many a jolt.

CDU/CSU SPOKESMAN ON ARMS SALES TO MIDDLE EAST

LD231712 Hamburg DPA in German 1611 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Text] Ludwigshafen, 23 Apr (DPA)--According to Alois Mertes, CDU/CSU foreign policy spokesman, exports of arms from the Federal Republic to Saudi Arabia should only take place within the framework of an overall Western strategic concept and should take full account of Israeli security interests.

Mertes stated to the Ludwigshafen newspaper RHEINLANDPFALZ (Friday edition) that he stands fully behind the fundamental decision of the union, which demands a restrictive armaments policy from Bonn. At the same time he stressed that the term "area of tension," as used up to now, no longer accords with modern reality, otherwise almost the whole world would have to be declared an area of tension. In addition, arms exports to the Near East must be agreed on, in particular with the United States.

COURT SUBPOENAS REAGAN ON 'EXPLOSIVES' CASE

NC231438 Paris AFP in English 1431 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Text] Trieste, Italy, 23 Apr (AFP)--United States President Ronald Reagan has been subpoenaed to testify before a court here in connection with an explosion at a power plant in which five people were killed in October 1979.

The owners of the plant, located at Tauriano in northeastern Italy, claim the U.S. administration is responsible for the blast which, they say, was caused by defective ammunition bought from a U.S. base in Wiesbaden, West Germany.

Attorneys representing the owners have consequently subpoenaed President Reagan to appear in court here on January 12 next year.

PCI OFFERS TO TALK TO SOCIALISTS ON NEW GOVERNMENT

LD231455 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 18 Apr 81 pp 1, 20

[Apparent text of PCI Directorate 17 April resolution]

[Text] The country's economic situation has deteriorated dramatically in recent months. Social tensions have been exacerbated. Corporative thrusts and demands threaten to paralyze decisive sectors and services of national life. Inflation has continued to grow, partly in the wake of the measures adopted by the government in March, while the beginnings of a recession in production activity are already under way, and no proper start has yet been made on the task of reconstructing Naples and the quake-struck southern regions. Even the measures adopted by the government yesterday, which are characterized by criteria of social injustice, are entirely inadequate for a thorough anti-inflation action and demonstrate once again the government's inability to define a new economic policy.

The country has been brought to this worrying state of crisis by the errors in assessing the gravity of the economic situation made by those who, both in the past and most recently, have regarded the emergency as resolved; by governments' ineptitude and carelessness: by the absence of an economic policy designed to tackle the most deep-rooted caused of inflation; and by the vacillations and concessions of recent months in the face of pressures from various groups and sectors.

The PCI clearly confirms that the priority requirement for surmounting the present crisis is a rigorous commitment and consistent effort to control and reduce inflation. To this end it is necessary to promote, at least, responsible and effective policies in the energy and health fields, for the reform and development of decisive sectors of industry, for a new boost to construction and for the development of research. At the same time, the necessary reforms of the state structures and responsible action to combat corruption must be set in motion. It is also essential to overcome any further delaying maneuvers in the definition of a policy and the instruments for the reconstruction of the quake-struck areas.

A stringent budgetary policy and a major revision of both fiscal policy and public expenditure are essential preconditions for the financing and real development of the polocy of structural reform on which the lowering of the inflation rate depends. In the short term, proceeding from rigorous criteria of social equity and priority for southern Italy, there must be a containment of public expenditure and a transfer of resources from personal consumption to social investments and consumption, especially in connection with health and welfare, while always defending the less prosperous sectors and pensioners. One essential ingredient of the overall anti-inflation maneuver are measures to contain prices and charges and also measures to protect the real value of the workers' and middle classes' savings.

The attempt to place the principal blame for inflation on labor costs and indexed wages--an attempt again made from various quarters--has been and still is entirely wrong. It does not correspond to the real facts. This is confirmed by the more responsible Italian and international analyses and by trends over the past 2 years in real earnings, productivity, labor costs per unit product and inflation.

The maneuvers that stemmed from the indexing issue have manifested themselves in an attack on the trade unions' independence and have brought about a disturbing rift in unitary relations among the trade union confederations. The indexing system is one of the working class' essential gains and is a decisive tool in the defense of the workers' purchasing power. The problems of salary structures and cost-of-living allowances are connected with both the anti-inflation struggle and the solution of the occurrences of excessive downward leveling of pay differentials, but they can only be tackled after a change has been introduced into economic policy. Be that as it may, nobody must believe that problems of such importance to Italian workers can be decided without the broadest and democratic consultations with and the consensus of the workers.

In view of the conflicts and tensions that have emerged within the trade union movement, the PCI reasserts the extreme importance for the workers movement and for the entire country of the principles of trade union autonomy, unity and democracy. It confirms the validity of this option both now and for the future and it hopes--and intends to work to this end--that the trade unions will, fully independent of employers, parties and governments, surmount difficulties and divergences and make a united commitment to the struggle for a change in economic and social policy.

A major effort, strong democratic consensus and confidence and impetus on the part of the people's masses are needed to implement an anti-inflation policy of economic and social reform and regeneration effectively and with chances of incisive results.

The PCI believes that the present government lacks the clarity of ideas and aims, unity of approach, authority and political prestige needed for such a change in the nation's life and therefore confirms the need for a democratic alternative in the political leadership and a change in the government's plans, character, structure and composition.

What is certain is that no democratic force can evade the need to indicate what kind of government Italy needs at such a difficult time. Nobody must consider any further postponement of a response to this need, which is now acknowledged by groups and individuals within the majority itself and has become pressing.

More intensive and positive political relations between the PCI and PSI are essential for future leftwing unity and for a real change in the country's political leadership.

The PCI hopes that the Socialist comrades, who will meet in Palermo next week for their 42d congress, will carefully assess the results of the policy pursued under the banner of governability; that they will discuss without prejudice the proposal put forward by the PCI for a democratic alternative; and that in any case, they will not stand still in the stubborn defense of this government and its policy.

The PCI confirms that it is willing to talk with the PSI and other democratic forces, not only to seek understandings on the substance of guidelines and plans for economic policy, institutional reforms and a commitment to detente and disarmament, but also in connection with the formation of a new government which, at such a difficult and dangerous moment, will be able to guarantee correct and positive relations with the trade union movement, with Parliament and with the political forces.

PRIME MINISTER ON ADMISSION INTO EEC, NATO

LD232932 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Shortly after 1630 today, Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo returned from West Germany, ending his first official visit abroad.

Calvo-Sotelo said here that his next visit could be to Lisbon and that he would like to go to Paris. In reply to a question about newspaper reports that his government wants Spain to enter NATO before it enters the EEC, Calvo-Sotelo made the following statement:

[Begin recording] As far as the EEC is concerned, our position is the same as it was a year ago. We are awaiting the commission's report and the French elections. As for NATO, our position is as I outlined it during my investiture speech. We intend, and I hope to accomplish this during the summer, to talk with the parliamentary groups before initiating the necessary steps for entry into the treaty. [end recording]

For his part, Spanish Foreign Minister Perez-Llorca, who accompanied the prime minister on his trip to Hamburg and Bonn, denied that there have been discussions on the purchase of German arms by Spain, although he predicted that there would soon be new developments concerning comprehensive cooperation between Spain and Germany in the struggle against terrorism.

CONGRESS APPROVES NEW STATE OF EMERGENCY LAW

LD232304 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Excerpt] After 3 days of debate, the plenum of the Cortes has approved the organic law regulating states of alarm, emergency and siege. Following the negotiations last Tuesday between representatives of the Union of the Democratic Center and the Socialist Party, the law concerning the state of siege has been turned around by 180 degrees. Whereas earlier the law stated that after the declaration of a state of siege, the army would assume the powers held by the civil authority in states of emergency and alarm, now it says that the government, which directs military and defense policy, will assume all the special powers laid down in this law. In sum, it remains quite clear that the civil sector retains the authority whatever the situation. This section of the law received almost unanimous support, and the provisions on the state of siege were approved with only 1 vote against and 10 abstentions.

The state of siege, as approved this evening, can be proposed by the government whenever there is a threat of or actual insurrection or act of force against the sovereignty or independence of Spain, its territorial integrity or constitutional order, as long as it cannot be resolved by other means. However, the declaration of a state of siege will have to be approved by Cortes.

BASQUE GOVERNMENT READY TO COMBAT TERRORISM

LD170932 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2022 GMT 15 Apr 81

[Text] The Basque government has announced it is ready to assume effective police command in the autonomous community if the state parties effectively support this readiness on the part of the Vitoria executive. With this declaration, the government led by Garaikoetxea forestalls accusations leveled by some state parties that the Basque government lacks determination in the antiterrorist struggle. Consequently, says the note issued in Vitoria, the state parties should now speak if they really want the Basque government to assume genuine responsibility in the antiterrorist struggle.

GREECE SEEKS 'COMMON ANSWER' WITH EEC TO BREZHNEV

NC231712 Athens NEWS in English 23 Apr 81 p 4

[Text] According to sources, the Greek answer to President Brezhnev's proposals for disarmament will include demands for the balance of armaments to be set at the lowest possible, to be international, not local, and valid both for conventional and nuclear weapons. President Brezhnev has sent all West European political leaders the same personal letter concerning disarmament.

The Greek answer, which has already been composed, will first be given to the governments of the EEC countries in an effort to give a common answer to President Brezhnev on behalf of the Community. This common answer will be discussed by EEC foreign affairs ministers in Amsterdam May 9 and 10 during the so-called 'weekend' meeting--nonofficial work meeting--in which Greek Foreign Affairs Minister Mitsotakis will also participate.

GOVERNMENT REJECTS TURKEY'S NOTE ON ARMENIAN RALLY

NC231414 Athens NEWS in English 23 Apr 81 p 4

[Text] The Greek answer to the Turkish protest concerning the rally of Armenians in Athens was given yesterday in Athens and Ankara at the same time. In Athens the answer was given to the Turkish ambassador, and in Ankara to the secretary general of the Turkish Foreign Affairs Ministry through the Greek ambassador, Mr Papoulias.

Reliable sources said that the Greek answer rejected Turkish claims and characterized Turkish demands as unjustified. It was added that Greece is a democratic country with a legal constitution which allows Greek nationals to move freely. This year's event by Armenians, it was stressed, was similar to those which have been taking place every year and was much smaller than those organized in other European countries.

The Greek Government, however, did not participate in the event and the mass media did not announce it either. As regards the terroristic activities on behalf of the Armenians against the Turks, the announcement concluded, the Greek position is well known concerning all forms of terroristic activities.

AVEROF INTERVIEWED BY THA; PAPANDREOU REPLIES

NC231940 Athens NEWS in English 23 Apr 81 p 4

[Text] In an interview with the TURKISH NEWS SERVICE (THA) Defense Minister Averof said that the Greco-Turkish dialogue was not at an impasse. On the contrary, he said, in some areas there has been progress, while at other points the positions of the two countries are still apart.

Regarding strengthening of defense ties between the two nations, the defense minister said that this could be achieved in the context of NATO.

Closer defensive ties between the two are inevitable, the defense minister said, in that both nations are members of NATO and are participating in joint defense planning, strategy and exercises. Some "small" problems--such as airspace--would remain, but it does not appear likely that they will put the basic defense cooperation between the two countries in jeopardy.

Mr Averof also told the Turkish interviewer that he could not visualize the possibility of NATO's acting outside its jurisdiction.

About the Turkish political situation: "I'm a confirmed democrat," Averof said, "and I never failed to defend democracy against the powers of reaction." But, the defense minister added, he firmly believed that democracy had the right to self-defense, and what is happening in Turkey is just that--defense of democracy--because in a country where 5,000 people died each year for political reasons it cannot be said that there is democracy.

General Evren--a wise man--has repeatedly stated that democracy will be restored as soon as conditions permit, Mr Averof said. Turkey, he concluded, is enjoying more democracy now.

Main opposition leader and chairman of PASOK, Mr Papandreou, yesterday made the following announcement:

"It is internationally known that the Turkish junta is one of the cruellest all over the world. The dimensions of torture and mass executions remind one of Pinochet's Chile and the genocide in that country. It is therefore a serious impropriety for a minister of a parliamentary government, which is still healing its wounds from a seven-year-old dictatorship, to praise the representative of the Turkish junta."

"Mr Averof's remaining in the government and especially in the Defense Ministry is a provocation for the democratic Greek people. The prime minister should discharge him."

GREEK ROLE IN NATO-ISRAEL RELATIONS CRITICIZED

NC222036 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 22 Apr 81 p 10

[Brussels correspondent's 21 April dispatch]

[Excerpts] Greece is considered a "bridge" in the escalating efforts to expand NATO activities in the Middle East and Southwest Asia and particularly to work out Israel's future association with NATO. This issue has been strongly brought up in the Belgian capital by the United States and FRG.

According to Western military circles in Brussels, NATO officials link this target both with the recent visit to Israel of Greek Agriculture Minister Kanellopoulos and with Israel maneuvers held in the Aegean a year ago. These circles have also observed that Greece's geographical position is a favorable element in realizing this aim provided, however, that Greece's diplomatic relations with Israel are improved and close military cooperation between the two countries is promoted.

In the meantime, on the basis of a draft resolution submitted by British Conservatives, the political committee of the European Council is discussing in Brussels today the "need for Greece's diplomatic recognition of Israel."

As is known, the EEC has recently intensified its pressure on the Greek Government (despite the hasty denials by European Committee Chairman Gaston Thorn) for the restoration of Greek-Israeli relations. Thus, the imperialist tactics in this specific case destine Greece to play a significant role in the aggressive imperialist plans in the Middle East, a fact that is fraught with huge dangers for our country and people.

BRIEFS

TELEVISION RELAY STATION--A 10-watt Armed Forces Information Service relay station has been installed at the site of the Monastiri Panayias (Zakros), enabling better reception of television programs in the Xanthis and Rodhopis areas as of today. [Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 2000 GMT 19 Mar 81 NC]

TEHRAN EMBASSY ATTACKED BY ARMENIAN DEMONSTRATORS

TA231930 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Text] An anti-Turkish demonstration was held by Armenians in Tehran today. A group of 500 persons among the demonstrators who gathered in front of the Turkish Embassy in Tehran crossed the police barricade and entered the embassy garden. Security forces fired into the air and used teargas in order to break up the demonstration.

According to information received from the Foreign Ministry Information General Directorate, a mass was held at the Armenian church at 1000. Later, a group of some 10,000 people went to the U.S. Embassy and demonstrated against the United States and Turkey. The demonstrators gathered in small groups 200 meters from the Turkish Embassy. The demonstrators, who chanted various anti-Turkish slogans in front of the Turkish Embassy, could not be controlled by the police in the necessary manner. Meanwhile, some of the demonstrators entered the garden of the embassy and stoned the windows of the building. The Revolutionary Guards and police, who came as reinforcements to break up the demonstration, were forced to fire into the air and to use teargas in order to end the incident, which lasted almost 4 hours. The demonstration ended at 1630.

The Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General statement notes: All the members of the embassy and their families are in good health. The responsibility and coolheadedness displayed by all the embassy officials played an important role in preventing the incident from turning into a more serious adventure.

TWO SOLDIERS, IRANIAN KILLED NEAR IRAN BORDER

TA221408 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1400 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] Diyarbakir, southeastern Turkey, 22 Apr (AA)--Martial law commander for southeastern Turkish provinces announced Tuesday two Turkish soldiers and an Iranian sheep smuggler died in a shootout in Van Province. The military unit involved was trying to prevent a group of Iranian smugglers who had entered Turkish soil illegally and were trying to take a herd they had stolen from nearby Askale two days ago across the border to Iran. An inquiry is underway into the incident.

COMMUNIQUE ISSUED ON BULGARIAN MLADENOV'S VISIT

TA231657 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Text] It has been announced that the talks between Turkey and Bulgaria held in Ankara yesterday were concluded in a beneficial and constructive manner.

A joint communique on the official Turkish-Bulgarian talks has been issued. The joint communique notes that the foreign ministers of the two countries discussed in detail bilateral relations and felt satisfied with the developments in this field. The communique, which points out the benefit of continuing the talks between government officials of the two countries in the future as well, states that the further development of the existing cooperation between Turkey and Bulgaria in various fields would assist the development of good-neighborly relations in the Balkans.

The communique also says that the two foreign ministers stressed the necessity to pursue a policy of peace and cooperation in a bid to eliminate existing world tensions.

The Turkish-Bulgarian joint communique notes that Bulgarian Minister of Foreign Affairs Petur Mladenov invited Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen to his country, and that Turkmen accepted this invitation.

NATO ASSEMBLY DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR VISIT

TA222041 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] A North Atlantic Assembly delegation headed by the south region subcommittee chairmen, Van der Stoel, has arrived in Turkey. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport, Van der Stoel said that the assembly is aware that the Turkish administration is sincere in its wish to return to a democratic system in a short time. Problems concerning NATO's southern flank will be discussed at meetings to be held between the delegation and the assembly's Turkish members. The delegation will also meet with the deputy chief of the General Staff, Gen Necdet Oztorun, and Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, and will be received by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu.

Begins Contacts

TA231642 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1600 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 23 Apr (AA)--President of the North Atlantic Assembly Subcommittee on the Southeastern Flank Van der Stoel and committee rapporteur Mona Rokke arrived in Ankara last night "to learn the opinion of the Turkish [word indistinct] about the political future of the country." They would elaborate a report at the end of their visit to be discussed, first at the Political Committee meeting in Venice next month and later, in its full text, at the Plenary Assembly meeting in Munich in October.

In an arrival statement, Van der Stoel, a Dutch parliamentarian, said the report would consist of their findings and impressions. "We have not come with pre-conceived ideas," he stressed. The Assembly is expected to discuss the developments in Turkey at the May meeting. The future of the Turkish delegation to the Assembly will be dealt with during the October meeting.

Van der Stoel said Turkey should be closely related to Europe, adding that Europe had realized Turkey's importance. The European Parliament resolution about possible suspension of Turkey's relations with EEC did not amount to much, he stressed, adding: "What counts is the decision to be adopted by the ministerial committee."

He also stressed the need for friendly relations between Turkey and Greece, two NATO members. Van der Stoel started his contacts today with visits to Deputy Chief of Staff General Necdet Oztorun and Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen.

ECEVIT DISCUSSES PERSONAL FREEDOM AFTER RELEASE

NC230647 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 18 Apr 81 p 5

[Text] Bulent Evevit has made the following disclosure in connection with an erroneous impression created by some publications:

"Certain circles have created the impression that at Gelibolu or on my return to Ankara from Gelibolu [where Ecevit and Demirel were interned after the military takeover], I signed an agreement not to make any statements and not to express my opinion on any topic. I have reached this conclusion from certain writings. I wish to state that this did not happen. However, I was officially told what I could and what I could not do. When I returned to Ankara I was given a copy of this official notification which I had to acknowledge with my signature.

"The official notification was addressed to me as a party leader connected with the ban on political parties activities. However, a short time after I had been served with this notification, I relinquished my duties as a leader and retired from active political life. Now I am, whthin my sense of responsibility, availing myself of all the freedom which any other fellow countryman, journalist or writer seems to me to enjoy."

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 080 27 April 1981

CONTENTS

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Schmidt Interviewed on Talks With Lord Carrington J 1
Chancellor Discusses Relations With Saudi Arabia J 2
Comments on Arms Supplies J 2
Departs for Riyadh J 3
Kohl Asks Favorable Examination of Saudi Interests J 3
Expert Views Mideast Vis-a-vis Saudi Tank Deal J 3
[DIE WELT 24 Apr]
Genscher Calls for Support on NATO Decisions J 6
FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Discusses Brezhnev Visit [24 Apr] J 6
Schmidt Notes Willingness To Negotiate With GDR J 7
Turkish Citizens in FRG March in West Berlin J 7

FRANCE

Bonnet Announces Giscard, Mitterrand Victories K 1
Updated Results K 1
Giscard Thanks Voters, Proposes Two TV Debates K 2
Mitterrand Expresses Gratitude to Voters, Friends K 2
Chirac Offers No Comment on Election Results K 3
Marchais Discusses Election, Cooperation K 3
Presidential Candidates' Recorded Campaign Talks K 5
Mitterrand on Unity of Left K 5
Marchais Call for Change K 6
Chirac Message K 7
Giscard: Candidate of Unity K 7
Pre-Election Polls Give Contradictory Results K 8
[LE MONDE 17 Apr]
Ministry Comments on U.S. Lifting of Soviet Embargo K 9
Anti-Nazi Group Fires Shots at Paris Bookshop K 9

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Romania's Enache Addresses Socialist Congress [AGERPRES] L 1
Conveys Ceausescu Greetings [AGERPRES] L 1
Talk With PCI's Pajetta [AGERPRES] L 1

PORTUGAL

President's Speech Commemorates 1974 Revolution M 1

SPAIN

Saudi Arabia's Yamani Arrives for Oil Conference N 1
Prime Minister on FRG Visit, Coup Consequences N 1
'Supervised Democracy' Denied N 2
ETA/PM Issues Communique Ratifying Cease-Fire N 2

UNITED KINGDOM

USSR Ambassador Emphasizes Detente to Carrington Q 1
[DAILY TELEGRAPH 24 Apr]
Prime Minister Thatcher Tours Middle East Q 1
[cross-reference]

CYPRUS

Defense Minister Denies Turkish Claim on Armaments [NEWS 25 Apr] R 1
Greek Counterclaim [AKROPOLIS 24 Apr] R 1
O FILELEVTHEROS Report [25 Apr] R 2
Greek Cypriots Support Armenian Demonstrations [MILLIYET 21 Apr] R 2
Finance Minister Departs for Havana Visit R 2
Kiprianou Reassures Turkish Cypriots in Message R 3
[CYPRUS MAIL 25 Apr]
Baykara Pledges Support for Turkish Cypriots R 3

GREECE

Group Claims Responsibility for Athens Bombing S 1
Armenian Union Raps Turkish Demarche on Rally [NEWS 24 Apr] S 1
I KATHIMERINI Editorial on Turkey, U.S. Relations [25 Apr] S 1

TURKEY

Authorities Stop French Nationals' Entry Into Iran T 1
North Atlantic Assembly Delegation Ends Visit T 1
Ground Forces Commander Returns From Yugoslavia T 1
Commerce Minister Canturk Returns From Iran Visit T 1
British Deputy Foreign Secretary Arrives for Visit T 1
Romanian Chief of Staff Arrives for Talks T 2
Trial of Erbakan, NSP Officials Begins in Ankara T 2
TCP Supports NSP [Our Radio] T 3
Ozal Says Inflation Rate Currently 40 Percent T 3

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON TALKS WITH LORD CARRINGTON

DW241316 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1600 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Reporter Schroeter interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Hamburg; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] You met with British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington. Prior to the talks hardly anything was known about what would be discussed. What were the subjects of the talks?

[Answer] Lord Carrington currently is making an official visit to the FRG. Right now, he is on his way to Bonn after a stopover here in Hamburg where I am vacationing. To begin with, I should say that Carrington and I are very close friends. Ten or 12 years ago, we were both defense ministers in the North Atlantic alliance. Today, we discussed all the topical issues of world politics and European policy.

[Question] About European policy, you will travel to Chequers on 5 and 6 May to meet the British prime minister. Did Lord Carrington deliver any message from Margaret Thatcher?

[Answer] No, there was actually no reason to. You are quite right that we, the British and the German Governments, will be meeting soon within the framework of our regular meetings. No, our exchange of views dealt with general issues and not with issues related to the mutual German-British relationship, which as a matter of fact is in rather good shape. What needs to be discussed are certain areas of the European Community's policy where certain differences of interests find their expression and need to be settled. This isn't the case with regard to general issues of foreign and world or security policy of the West.

[Question] Margaret Thatcher has been in Riyadh. You yourself will go to Riyadh. Has there been any message from over there?

[Answer] No, there was no message, but, of course, there have been very interesting reports on the talks the British prime minister had in Riyadh, in Saudi Arabia, as well as in the Arab Emirates and in Abu Dhabi.

[Question] Unlike you, Margaret Thatcher has stated quite plainly that she will deliver weapons to Saudi Arabia. Will there be any change in your point of view?

[Answer] As a matter of fact, I repeated once again only a few days ago what everybody knows anyway, namely, that the restraint exercised by our country up to now regarding the export of weapons and other military goods will also be valid in the future, to be sure. I also have restated in public that the Federal Government is now, after 10 years, in the process of reexamining the rules on this, that is to say, the experiences we have gained with the rules on arms exports, rules which we made for ourselves early in the past decade. This surely will not lead to our giving up our restraint on principle. The British prime minister finds herself in a completely different situation in this respect. England never imposed this restraint on itself nor did France. In Saudi Arabia, the British Government not only expressed its readiness to make arms deliveries, but also its interest in such deliveries.

[Question] In the event that British arms deliveries take place, arms will be delivered which are also produced in Germany. Will there be any conflict?

[Answer] Well, the term conflict goes much too far, but if the question arises, it will become necessary to discuss this in detail with one another. This would not be something new. We have experienced this before with regard to arms systems developed and produced jointly with France.

CHANCELLOR DISCUSSES RELATIONS WITH SAUDI ARABIA

LD251450 Hamburg DPA in German 1332 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Hamburg, 25 Apr (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has emphasized that the issue of possible arms exports to Saudi Arabia is not at the center of his trip to that country. In an interview for BILD AM SONNTAG, the chancellor also said that the Federal Government's policy concerning this question will continue to be governed by great circumspection. "The Saudi leadership knows that we have always exercised great reticence in this area," Schmidt said. The principles of the arms export policy are currently being examined, a process in which national interests are the sole guidelines, he said.

The chancellor emphasized Saudi Arabia's importance for the FRG: "Saudi Arabia is outside Europe and, after the United States, is today our most important partner." The objective is to secure for German industry an important, long term share in Saudi Arabia's development. Schmidt said that considerable importance is attached to the Saudis' "moderate and moderating" policy among the oil states. According to Schmidt, close economic and political cooperation is the best safeguard for the FRG oil supply.

Comments on Arms Supplies

LD261306 Hamburg DPA in German 1158 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 26 Apr (DPA)--On the eve of his visit to Riyadh, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt once again underlined that there is "at present" no intention to supply Leopold II tanks to Saudi Arabia. In an interview on ZDF Television, Schmidt nevertheless refused to forecast the development over the next few years or decades. The reassessment of German arms export policy would "continue for a few months yet," the chancellor said. But in any case, the Federal Republic would also, in the future, exercise the greatest restraint in the question of arms supplies.

Schmidt expressed the view that the Saudi leadership would not turn the question of German arms supplies into the central issue of the talks. He expected a very detailed exchange of views on international, world economic and bilateral questions. The chancellor pointed out in the ZDF interview that, during the past few years, Saudi Arabia has become the Federal Republic's most important political and economic partner outside NATO. He rejected the suggestion that the Federal Republic is in the process of becoming economically too dependent on Saudi Arabia, which provides more than one quarter of German oil imports and which is Bonn's biggest creditor and most important trading partner in the Arab region.

Schmidt underlined in the ZDF interview that the Middle East conflict is, for Arabs and Israelis, "much more urgent than the fear that the Soviet Union might advance in that region." Europe and the United States should not underestimate the Arab-Israeli conflict and the need to bring about permanent peace. "Only when that has been established is there any hope to stop the advance of Soviet influence in that region."

Regarding a Western rapid deployment force in the Gulf region, the chancellor said in an interview for DEUTSCHE WELLE today that the West should not do anything "which might impair the freedom of decision by the nonaligned states around the Arab gulf." He stressed: "The right of the Arab states to determine and decide on their own fate must not even seem to be obscured."

Departs for Riyadh

LD270904 Hamburg DPA in German 0803 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 27 Apr (DPA)--Against the backdrop of a continuing debate at home about Saudi Arabia's arms wishes and the future German arms export policy, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt left Monday for a 2-day visit to Riyadh, the Saudi Arabian capital. In his talks with King Khalid, Crown Prince Fahd and important members of the government, Schmidt will discuss, apart from the development of economic cooperation, a broad range of world political and economic problems.

The chancellor is undertaking his visit with the expectation that the leadership of Bonn's most important partner outside NATO will not make its arms wishes the central theme of the talks. Saudi Arabia is the largest oil supplier and creditor of the Federal Republic, as well as the most important German trade partner in the Arab region. Schmidt is accompanied by, among others, Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff and Guenther van Well, state secretary at the Foreign Ministry. On Wednesday, the chancellor will visit the United Arab Emirates.

KOHL ASKS FAVORABLE EXAMINATION OF SAUDI REQUESTS

LD251144 Hamburg DPA in German 1101 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 25 Apr (DPA)--CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl asked that possible Saudi requests for FRG arms be examined "very carefully and favorably" in view of Saudi Arabia's important role in maintaining the stability of the Gulf region.

In an interview for BERLINER MORGENPOST (Sunday edition), Kohl nevertheless qualified this by stressing that this requires coordination with the United States as well as talks with Israel and Egypt.

EXPERT VIEWS MIDEAST VIS-A-VIS SAUDI TANK DEAL

DW241222 Bonn DIE WELT in German 24 Apr 81 p 5

[C. von Brockdorff article: "Will Schmidt Offer the Saudis Gepards instead of Leos?"]

[Text] It isn't to be expected that the Soviet Union will set out for new campaigns of conquest in southwest Asia by force of arms. Its course of action in Afghanistan entailed political and military measures of the West which make it appear doubtful whether Moscow would run the risk of a military conflict between the superpowers.

A Western deterrence, albeit still in the process of being set up, is having its effects in the region. It is imperfect and harbors risks, as does everything in that particular region. Only the West must know where it can cope with the risks--and where they become incalculable for the West. An assessment of the situation must first of all take military factors into account.

Western deterrence mainly is based on the constant presence of strong U.S. aircraft carrier combat units in the Indian Ocean. In case of emergency, Washington intends to guarantee the inviolability of the area by using nuclear weapons. Here already the gap in deterrence becomes evident: The credibility of this thesis is being influenced by the lack of presence of strong ground forces. They are standing by in the United States as a rapid deployment force. Covering space and time in their case entails disadvantages vis-a-vis the Soviet Union which operates on shorter lines. Present amphibious forces of the U.S. Marine Corps would, however, be capable of building a bridgehead fast.

The stability of the region is inalienable to the NATO states. On this stability depend the economic strength of the Western industrial nations and their capability of waging war. If this capability were lost, deterrence would collapse--with all the consequences that would result for the Western democracies.

Hence, it is necessary also to take a look at Turkey's role in this region. The country is located in the deep flank of a Soviet advance toward the Gulf. Its armed forces are present along the 2,000-km border with the Soviet Union, Iran, Iraq and Syria. But the armament of the Turkish 2d and 3d Armies in Anatolia is hopelessly obsolete and can no longer be compensated for by the exemplary training and discipline of the Turkish Armed Forces. It is necessary to modernize these armies. In this respect, the West should resist the foolish temptation to obligate Turkey to take any action in the event of any Soviet action in this region.

The improvement in Turkish arms would have the indirect effect of enhancing the Soviet risk without plunging Turkey into any undesired confrontation with the Soviet Union. In effect, this would be tantamount to an expansion of the flexible response without the dangers that would be concimitant with a new definition of the automatic duty of the alliance to help.

But it would be an illusion to assume that the Soviet dream of unhindered access to the world seas would be destroyed solely by military deterrence on the part of the West. The region is unstable. What force will replace the integrating figure of Khomeyni after his demise? Will Moscow then reach the Gulf via indirect methods?

U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig sees this possibility. Washington's policy is aimed at promoting the region's stability, politically and militarily, with the worldwide Soviet interventionism (a verbatim utterance by Haig) necessitating priority over the Middle East conflict between Arabs and Israelis in the choice of the means. The strength and survival capability of Israel is in the U.S. national interest. This was nearly equivalent to a guarantee statement for Israel. Actually, it would have been unnecessary. The convincing force of the argument for strategic reasons applies to the West as a whole, leaving moral considerations aside.

Haig's most important step toward the stabilization of the region is the delivery of five AWACS and seven strategic refueling planes to Saudi Arabia. He termed it inalienable. This will increase many times over the combat power, attainable some day, of 60 Saudi combat planes of the U.S. F-15 type.

The options resultant from AWACS raise the armament of a state to a strategic dimension. Egypt's President as-Sadat saw that immediately, and he now also wants this system. Yet, Israeli protests against the delivery of the early warning system to Saudi Arabia failed to convince Haig. What is taking place before Israel's eyes is a quanity leap in Arab arms. In the future, Israel's air raid forces will be exposed to the Saudi air defense.

The change won't happen in one day. Some 10 to 12 years will pass. But on principle, the following is transpiring: As a result of the enhancement of the Arab air defense, Israel's air raiding strength will be weakened. Indirectly, this strengthens the Arab offensive capacity. The power ratio will shift. What comes like a bombshell in this situation is the Saudi Arabian desire for arms deliveries from the Federal Republic of Germany--a desire whose consequences thus far have been looked into only superficially.

Allegedly, the Saudis want delivery of 200 combat tanks of the German type, Leopard II. Since this is an offensive weapon, people hesitate, suggesting instead that Saudi Arabia be given Gepard antiaircraft tanks. This is a purely defensive weapon, they say. At first glance, these definitions are acceptable, but they disregard the power ratio in the region involved. It would completely change if the Germans would deliver the Gepard, hitherto the world's most modern antiaircraft tank.

No other army has anything comparable, barring The Netherlands. The United States still is in the process of developing a similar system, and the Soviet ZSU-23/4 which inflicted such great losses on the Israelis in the Yom Kippur war isn't nearly as efficient.

It goes without saying that the Leopard II also is an advanced weapons system, so advanced in fact that the Bundeswehr as the first user has found that it requires "complete rethinking." Commanders and gunners can only be soldiers with extended service periods who--this mustn't be forgotten--are recruited from a technically oriented society. Such men alone cannot only master the complicated technology of the Leopard II but also--a fact which often is overlooked--exploit the tactical options inherent in the system in combat.

It is the latter point by which the strategic effect of a potential German Leopard II delivery must be measured. The Arab armies never were able to handle tanks. They drove them, but this is only a means to an end. Hardly any other weapons system of the ground forces requires such a great deal of tactical knowledge, readiness to make decisions and dynamics as does the combat tank.

The German Army has learned how to handle tanks. In this respect, it is looking back on a tradition. The Israelis also are mastering the combat tank. The day after the outbreak of the Yom Kippur war when the world was under the impact of the Egyptian tank advance on the Sinai, the prediction was made (DIE WELT reported it) that the Egyptians would be unable to force a decision with their tanks. The course of events confirmed this picture: It was only the intervention of the superpowers which saved Egypt's Armed Forces from total destruction.

Israel's potential main antagonists--Syria, Jordan and Saudi Arabia--have more than 5,000 combat tanks, all told. Israel has but 3,000. The Israeli argument that the delivery of the Leopard II to the Saudis would increase the caliber of the main armored weapon in the Middle East to 120 (from the present 105) doesn't hold water. Saudi Arabia could obtain tanks of such caliber in England or in the United States, the main weapon of the U.S. Abrams tank, strangely enough, being a German Rheinmetall gun produced under license. In November 1979, Jordan ordered as many as 278 British Shir I tanks, an improved version of the Chieftain. The caliber: 120mm. Syria already has 120 Soviet T-72 tanks and is expecting more. The caliber: 125 mm.

The Leopard II in the hands of the Saudis indeed would enhance the aura of this state, but hardly anything would change in the power ratio with Israel. The Arabian numerical superiority in armor is suffocating anyway. If another war were to break out, Israel would have to cope with these tanks in a battle of combined arms. The battle with combined arms requires great dexterity of leadership. Israel is the only country in the region that has that dexterity.

It is inconceivable without the capability of the Israeli Air Force, one of the world's best, to prevail. In the hour of need, it would have to foil the Arab attack. It did so in 1973, but before it did, it had to crash into the Egyptian air defense with considerable losses.

The Israeli capability to halt an Arab attack would be seriously impaired if Gepard antiaircraft tanks delivered from Germany would advance along with the spearhead of attack. They are best suited for that purpose. Their effectiveness could even be enhanced by AWACS. With 50 such antiaircraft tanks, it is possible to put up a successful defense against an attack on a front 100 km in width. The existence of Israel's Air Force would be threatened by the Gepard with its computer-controlled 35-mm machine guns. The decline of the Israeli Air Force, however, would be bound to pull the state of Israel to its doom.

The Federal Government shouldn't venture any step in this respect without close strategic consultation with the United States. It is a fundamental interest of the West to build the stability of the region and to consolidate it so as to thereby serve a higher strategy. If it fails to attain this, the consequence might be its own decline. It cannot, however, be in the interest of the West to make its own risks in the region incalculable by the thoughtless delivery of an antiaircraft system.

GENSCHER CALLS FOR SUPPORT ON NATO DECISIONS

LD251112 Hamburg DPA in German 0927 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 25 Apr (DPA)--Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, chairman of the FDP, is convinced that the policy pursued by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and himself will continue to receive the unconditional support of the SPD-FDP government coalition. In an interview on South German radio today, the vice chancellor warned members and officials of both parties against deviating from the government program.

In response to a question, Genscher also commented on those SPD forces which apparently are no longer prepared to give their full support to the Federal Government's policy on a number of issues. He said that anyone who believes that it is no longer necessary following the 1980 general election to stand by statements made before the elections will jeopardize not only the government, but could, in addition, create a crisis of confidence within the parliamentarian democracy." Therefore, as far as he is concerned, the consistent realization of the government program is, "for my own party, but also for the government coalition," a question of political credibility. Genscher emphasized that the chancellor fully shares his view concerning this issue.

Genscher made a point of including in the question of credibility the approval by the "entire German Bundestag" of the dual NATO decisions on missile counterarming and simultaneous offers of negotiations to the Soviets. This is a fundamental issue of confidence for our democratic state. "It is an issue of the stability of the Federal Government, but also concerns the stability of the Western alliance," the FDP chairman said. The dual decision is "irreversible in both parts." It is now up to the Soviet Union to open the way toward equilibrium at as low an armament level as possible through a constructive policy and through its willingness to dismantle its highly threatening arsenal of medium-range missiles.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE DISCUSSES BREZHNEV VISIT

DW241244 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 24 Apr 81 p 1

[Article signed C.G.: "Brezhnev Visit to Bonn Only in the Fall?"]

[Text] Bonn, 28 Apr--Bonn expects Soviet chief of party and state Brezhnev to visit only after the summit meeting of the heads of state and government of the Federal Republic, the United States, Great Britain, Italy, Canada and Japan, scheduled for 20 and 21 July in Ottawa. Reportedly, U.S. President Reagan in contacts with Chancellor Schmidt has approved a Schmidt-Brezhnev meeting even prior to a U.S.-Soviet meeting, but pointing out that this Schmidt-Brezhnev meeting should not take place before the conference of the leading Western politicians in Canada. This is why Bonn assumes now that, even though no date has been agreed on, Brezhnev will come to the Federal Republic in early August or in September.

Probably of primary importance during the Brezhnev visit are the forthcoming U.S.-Soviet talks on the limitation of medium-range weapons. In Bonn, the domestic debate is planned by the contradiction between the Federal Government and Social Democratic disarmament spokesman Bahr.

CDU/CSU Deputy Jenninger on Thursday called on Chancellor Schmidt and Foreign Minister Genscher to "establish clarity in their parties" with respect to this issue. Jenninger referred to Bahr's remarks made in support of the Soviet demand for the inclusion of the Western weapons of the "forward based systems" on submarines. Jenninger said that "Bahr's statement weakens the position of the Federal Government, undermines the position of the Western alliance and encourages and supports the Soviet Union in its demands."

Following a Moscow visit by a delegation of the Young Socialists, JUSO Chairman Piecyk once again reaffirmed his intention in Bonn on Thursday to advocate the termination of the NATO counterarming decision by the Federal Republic at the SPD federal level party congress in early 1982. In this connection, Piecyk termed the counterarming decision, which emerged as a consequence of the Soviet advance armament, as a mere "armament decision." The deployment of new nuclear missiles in the Federal Republic demanded by NATO would "create insecurity," the Young Socialists believe. Piecyk cited as a result of the Young Socialists' Moscow visit the impression that people in the Soviet Union are convinced that the incumbent U.S. Government isn't seriously interested in negotiations on strategic weapons and medium-range missiles.

SCHMIDT NOTES WILLINGNESS TO NEGOTIATE WITH GDR

LD251632 Hamburg DPA in German 1518 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Text] Berlin, (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has declared the Federal Republic's willingness to take part in new negotiations with the GDR without preconditions. The same is to be expected from the other side, Schmidt said in an interview with the Berlin SPD election newspaper ZEITUNG AM SONNTAG. It is a question of securing the results of the treaty policy and, as far as possible, of further developing them. The people of Berlin may be sure, Schmidt stated, that improvement in their day-to-day life will again be in the foreground. Among other things, the hoped-for revival of the city railway is something which the Berliners want. He described a correction to the rise in the minimum exchange requirements as a "justified concern" in particular of the people of Berlin.

Schmidt welcomed the readiness for talks expressed by SED leader Erich Honecker at the latest SED party congress, but stressed: "We cannot, however, make ourselves dependent on the development of the overall political climate."

TURKISH CITIZENS IN FRG MARCH IN WEST BERLIN

TA261744 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Summary] The march "from exile to homeland and greetings and loyalty to the glorious Turkish Army" organized by Turkish citizens in the FRG was held today in West Berlin.

According to the Turkish radio and television correspondent in West Berlin, tens of thousands of Turks, who came from various cities in the FRG, gathered in West Berlin. A group of about 250 persons tried to obstruct the march. However, the marchers did not respond to the provocations. The march started at 1500 Turkish time as originally planned. A large portrait of Ataturk and the Bursa military band headed the 2.5-km long line of marchers. The march ended at the Turkish Consulate General in West Berlin. A speech was delivered here on behalf of the organizing committee in which the Turkish Army was lauded for restoring tranquillity in Turkey after the 12 September operation.

BONNET ANNOUNCES GISCARD, MITTERRAND VICTORIES

LD262224 Paris Domestic Service in French 2111 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Statement by Interior Minister Christian Bonnet--live]

[Text] Here are the results of the first round of the presidential election as they stand at 2300. These results are only partial, of course. They do not contain results from the Paris region nor those from the overseas departments or territories. However, it seems to me that the figures still to come aren't likely to change in any significant way those which I am going to give you in percentages. I remind you that the results will not be official until they have been verified and proclaimed by the Constitutional Council within the next few days. The turnout, although slightly less than 3 points below that in the first round of the 1974 election, remains high at more than 82 percent. This shows the vitality of our democracy. It is the proof of the French people's attachment to the election of the president of the republic through universal suffrage.

Valery Giscard d'Estaing obtained 5,362,303 votes or 28.85 percent;
Francois Mitterrand: 4,876,655 or 26.24 percent;
Jacques Chirac: 3,270,870 or 17.60 percent;
Georges Marchais: 2,813,262 or 15.13 percent;
Brice Lalonde: 686,909 or 3.69 percent;
Arlette Laguiller: 450,213 or 2.42 percent;
Crepeau: 389,963 or 2.09 percent;
Michel Debre: 307,644 or 1.65 percent;
Marie-France Garaud: 234,879 or 1.26 percent;
Bouchardeau: 188,985 or 1.01 percent.

I repeat that these are partial results based on 23,066,466 registered electors, 18,899,625 voters and 18,581,683 votes cast, but I repeat that the figures which are still awaited aren't likely to change in any significant way the percentages which I have just related.

Any comparison of these results with those of 1974 appears difficult if only because the three candidates of the main opposition parties who put themselves forward this time were represented last time by one candidate only, Francois Mitterrand.

In accordance with the constitution, the only two who will be present in the second round are Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand. Each of them proposes a profoundly different type of society from the other: The French men and women will have to choose between them on 10 May.

Updated Results

LD270030 [Editorial Report] Paris Domestic Service at 0000 GMT on 27 April reports that the final results of the first ballot are still not known, but that the latest figures from the Interior Ministry concern 27,275,000 votes. It adds that the remaining votes to be reported will change only very slightly the following percentages:

Giscard d'Estaing	28.02 percent	Laguiller	2.34
Mitterrand	26.15	Crepeau	2.23
Chirac	17.95	Debre	1.67
Marchais	15.29	Garaud	1.32
Lalonde	3.88	Bouchardeau	1.14

GISCARD THANKS VOTERS, PROPOSES TWO TV DEBATES

LD262118 Paris Domestic Service in French 2025 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Statement by President Giscard d'Estaing at his election campaign headquarters--live]

[Text] In today's voting, the French people have placed me at the top of the list of the 10 candidates to the presidency of the republic. I am deeply touched and happy at this show of confidence. I thank all those who voted for me.

On 10 May, both of the candidates who will stand will have votes which will not necessarily have been cast for them in the first ballot. Basically, Mr Mitterrand needs Communist votes. I will represent--while respecting personalities without being self-opinionated or bearing malice, as I said last Friday--the other democratic groupings: that is to say, all those which reject bureaucracy and Marxism. I will do this while taking into account the anxieties which have been expressed in recent weeks. Tomorrow evening in Dijon, I will begin to expound on the themes in the second ballot: a society of freedom and responsibility; a more just and united society; a strong and peaceful nation; a society of hope for France.

The rule of the second ballot must be that of clarity. Each individual must be able to make his decision in full knowledge of the facts while weighing the consequences of his vote.

I am also ready to meet Mr Mitterrand in television debates in order to give the public the necessary information and food for thought. Because of the importance of the subjects, two debates seem necessary to me--one on economic and social problems and the other on French foreign policy and security.

Thank you once again, all of you whose show of confidence has deeply touched me. Now our ideas are going to win, because these are the only ones which can ensure France's future and happiness. [applause]

MITTERRAND EXPRESSES GRATITUDE TO VOTERS, FRIENDS

LD262142 Paris Domestic Service in French 2106 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Correspondent's interview with Francois Mitterrand at Chateau-Chinon--live]

[Text] [Mitterrand] From the bottom of my heart, I thank the 7 million and more French people who have expressed their confidence in me on this important day for France and the republic. And you will understand the special expression of my gratitude which I make to my friends the Socialists. But the struggle continues. We must now rally in a great national surge all those who have chosen change as against the policy of unemployment, social injustice and inequality. They are the majority. Let no one relax his effort, and 10 May will be the day of victory for the forces of youth, renewal and progress. [applause]

[Question] Francois Mitterrand, the surprise of the poll is the low vote for Georges Marchais. What do you think about this?

[Answer] Well, I believe that...you are asking me a question, but I don't want to follow that line. Many of my friends are taking part at the moment in debates in television studios. They know perfectly well what they have to say. And I myself will [words indistinct] to continue this conversation.

[Question] No more tonight?

[Answer] Tonight I wanted to talk to the French people.

CHIRAC OFFERS NO COMMENT ON ELECTION RESULTS

NC262243 Paris AFP in English 2240 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Paris, 26 Apr (AFP)--Neo-Gaullist French presidential candidate Jacques Chirac, after gathering a projected 18 per cent of the vote in the first round of the presidential elections today, said he would make his "personal position" known tomorrow on the final 10 May round.

Observers said that the phrasing of his statement this evening suggested clearly that he would not attempt to directly instruct his supporters to vote for a particular candidate in the second round.

The Paris mayor apparently did not gain enough votes to set himself up as a political king-maker for the incumbent president during the second round, and Gaullist figures stressed that the practice of standing down in favor of another candidate is not an option for an office-seeker eliminated in the first round. But Mr Giscard d'Estaing indirectly acknowledged that he will need the votes of those who supported Mr Chirac in the first round.

MARCHAIS DISCUSSES ELECTION, COOPERATION

LD262305 Paris Domestic Service in French 1941 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Interview with PCF Secretary General George Marchais at PCF headquarters in Paris by Pierre Mougeotte for Europe 1 and Jean-Pierre Elkabbach for Channel 2--live]

[Excerpts] [Marchais] First of all, I want to thank all the voters, nearly 5 million, who by voting for the Communist candidate have clearly shown their desire for a real change. From the beginning of this election campaign, we ourselves have underscored that by its very nature the presidential election constitutes a particularly difficult battle for the Communist candidate. This difficulty has been considerably aggravated because of the concerted action of all the other candidates in evading the real conditions of change, in preventing the French people from choosing freely a new policy, in restricting the vote to a choice between two candidates.

These joint efforts of the right and the Socialist Party have thus resulted in the fact that some voters who want change voted already in the first round for the candidate who has been presented to them as the only one capable of beating Giscard d'Estaing. In these tough conditions, the determination of which the Communist voters have just given proof must be appreciated all the more. By voting for the Communist candidate, they have clearly spoken in favor of a new policy comprising the improvements expected by working men and women as well as profound anticapitalist reforms without which these objectives cannot be attained. They have spoken out for a union government of unity capable of acting effectively to implement this new policy. They have expressed their desire to act themselves for change. They have done well. They have made the best possible choice for change and union. For the second round, the Communists will not continue this same struggle which they have undertaken since the beginning of this campaign. Our party's central committee will meet on Tuesday to make the necessary decisions to this effect.

[Question] Mr Marchais, may we ask you what your conditions for a union government are?

[Answer] As far as we are concerned, I have just told you that the Communists will continue their struggle, the same struggle which they have undertaken since the beginning of the campaign. In other words, the 51 [figure as heard] proposals which I have presented to the French people on behalf of my party and the formation of a union government containing Socialist and Communist ministers remain the very conditions of change.

[Question] You say that you are going to pursue the struggle. Can you tell us tonight if you wish to meet with the leaders of the Socialist Party, and if you personally are disappointed with these results?

[Answer] I obviously would have wished for a better result: I have fought for this but, you know, the Communists have a strong backbone, and when you have nearly 5 million supporting you, nearly 5 million with an extremely high degree of consciousness, then you can look to the future with confidence.

Giscard d'Estaing has himself chosen his privileged opponent for the second round in the person of Francois Mitterrand, and Francois Mitterrand has hit the ball back into his court. This is a table tennis party. Didn't he say only last Friday in Toulouse: Why are there six Socialist candidates when one would be sufficient? This is Francois Mitterrand's view of democracy.

I have the courage to say things clearly, and my opponents of the right and the Socialist Party have all dodged the issues. What discussion, what democratic debate has there been? Nobody wanted to face me on television in front of the French people to clarify basic issues. And in these conditions, the voters, including those who give us their trust, have intended to vote usefully, vote usefully, vote usefully already in the first round, without giving a thought to what is going to happen tomorrow.

I say that I understand this, I understand but obviously I regret it, but I am certain that the electors who trust the party--I had many expressions of this during my campaign--have thought that it was better and right to vote usefully in the first round to get rid of Giscard and then we will see what follows. Well, they will have their experiences. Believe me, I and my party will help them in the struggle so that this experience will not be too tough for them.

[Question] With 16 percent, how can you set conditions for Francois Mitterrand to win your votes and to be sure that what you ask will be honored?

[Answer] Mr Mougeotte, I set conditions for no one. First, I tell you that the party, the central committee, will meet on Tuesday and will make a decision.

[Question] It hasn't yet been made?

[Answer] Absolutely not! But what I know is that it is totally out of the question that the Communist Party could fight for a policy other than that which it is following, that is, the policy of its 22d and 23d congresses. It is totally out of the question that the Communist Party should fight for a policy different from that which I have advocated in my 131 [figure as heard] proposals to change things. It is out of the question. [passage indistinct] It is totally out of the question that we should change our policy. But we don't set conditions. It was Mitterrand who said: No discussion between the first and second round, no Communist ministers. The French know what is going to happen tomorrow.

[Question] Can the PCF transfer its votes to Francois Mitterrand if there are to be Communist ministers in a future government of Francois Mitterrand?

[Answer] I tell you, one thing is certain: It is out of the question for the PCF to support a government that contains no Communist ministers. This is certain. But regarding the decision we shall make for the second round, the central committee will make it democratically. And I say very calmly and very sincerely that obviously the party will make its assessment of the position.

I have fought an honest contest, I have said what ought to be done and what I believe in profoundly. I was not followed as I wished, by people who trust us. I am sure of this trust even if they did not vote for me today. They look and they can look into my eyes honestly and openly, I will continue to trust them. They can count on me and the party. And experience will show them that we were right.

I have listened tonight to some dreamers who foresee the PCF's decline. Well, believe me, I have several good surprises in store for them.

[Question] The Socialist Party leaders have said that they didn't want to meet with you before the first round. But what about you, do you wish to meet with them now for a discussion?

[Answer] I would have wished to have 1.5-2 million more votes tonight, but I don't have them. Now, as far as a meeting with the Socialist Party is concerned, the matter falls into the same perspective. You can always express a desire, but it has to be admitted that two sides are needed for a meeting. Mitterrand has said: No meeting with the Communists, no negotiations with the Communists, no program with the Communists, no Communist minister. So maybe now those who have voted tonight have to face up to this situation. I can do nothing about it.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES' RECORDED CAMPAIGN TALKS

Mitterrand on Unity of Left

LD242042 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Presidential election program: Campaign speech by PS candidate Francois Mitterrand: date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] This evening, some words will be said by all the candidates, but it will no longer be the political leaders who will have anything to say--it will be yourselves. What you will decide on Sunday will weigh very heavily on the final choice on 10 May.

I want to tell you very simply what I think of it. As the Socialists' candidate, I am also--and you are well aware of it--the only candidate of the left capable of winning. The votes dispersed over other candidates, however respectable they may be, will jeopardize this victory. The stronger I am in the first round of voting, the greater will be my chances of being elected in order to lead the change.

This is why I ask all those of you men and women who want a change, another policy, another president, to give me the means here and now. I am the only one, I repeat, capable of representing the popular forces against Mr Giscard d'Estaing; I shall fight in your name provided that next Sunday you gather around me.

Throughout this campaign, I have developed my proposals. They are precise, they are ambitious, they are capable of being realized. Around me, advisers and experts chosen from among the best have been working for years in each field, assessing the desirable and the possible, without ever forgetting the behind the figures, behind the statistics, there are women, there are men, who today live a daily drama; and I am thinking of unemployment, the high cost of living, inequalities, the anxieties of the young, the loneliness of the aged.

But let them be reassured. New teams are there, and their relief is ready. Yes, we are ready to govern. With your support, with your aid, I shall pull France out of its crisis.

You shortly will be hearing from the two men principally responsible for the situation in which the country is suffering, they will speak to you of changes, of security, and even of hope. But how could they do tomorrow what they were incapable of doing over a period of more than 7 years? After so many failures, so many pledges unfulfilled, they have lost even the right to make promises. Send them back to their past and let us prepare the future together.

Our people possess immense and formidable capacities of creative intelligence, initiative, renewal. We have a lot of possibilities. Let us put France on its feet once again.

For more than 15 years, I have been fighting to enable the popular gathering--that is my heartfelt wish--to take charge of the renaissance of the country. I have united the Socialists, I have united the left too, and I hope that it may soon find a way to find itself once again.

As president of the republic, I shall gather the French together, and without disowning any of my convictions, I shall cement national unity. But the time has come when the forces of youth, the forces of labor, will assume the responsibility of power which has so long been refused them. They are worthy of it. They are the deep reality of France. Freedom inspires them together with the determination to rebuild a great country.

So, my dear fellow citizens, this is the moment to decide.

Marchais Call for Change

LD242052 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Presidential election program: Campaign speech by PCF Chairman Georges Marchais; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] As I have promised you during my first broadcast, I have given you the views of the Communists on the causes of your difficulties, the country's difficulties. I have put before you the solutions we advocate and the means to bring about change. If I had to sum it up, I would say: The cause of the crisis is the law of profit.

In 1979, the companies reached 47,000 billion old francs in profits. In this country, 520,000 persons enjoy a monthly income, every month, of 7.7 million old francs. You know the result. It is unemployment, it is a high cost of living, it is social injustice. Well, you see, all this must be changed. And if one does it, then it is possible to ensure full employment for the French people. It is possible to ensure the manual and intellectual workers, for peasants, women, to the young a better life and better working conditions. It is possible to put an end to a policy which does so much harm to France.

To this end, obviously, Giscard d'Estaing must be beaten, and the necessary forces must be mustered to overcome the obstacles so that one progresses toward the constitution of a government of alliance containing Socialist and Communists ministers to implement the new policy.

I have summed up things simply, but here is the crux of the problem. During the whole of the election campaign, I told you frankly what I was thinking, how to get on with things, how to bring it off. You know that you can rely on me. But now everything depends on you. It is up to you to decide. And nobody, and I say nobody, can assume this big responsibility aside from you.

On Sunday, when you are in the polling booth, away from every pressure, in full freedom, think it over carefully, think it over carefully because, you see, it will be on Sunday that everything will be decided. Say what is on your mind, say that you want change, real change. Say that you want the rally of all popular forces, say that you want a government of Socialist-Communist union, say it outloud, very loud on Sunday.

The more numerous we are, the more it is my profound conviction that we shall be able to progress toward change in an alliance. So until Sunday.

Chirac Message

LD242128 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Presidential election program: Campaign speech by Jacques Chirac, RPR chairman and mayor of Paris, date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] Dear compatriots from the metropolis and overseas, here we are at the end of an election campaign during which I have visited all the regions of our country. My first words are to express thanks to you--my thanks for the courtesy, and often the enthusiasm of your welcome; my thanks too, as a candidate for the attention you have paid to a campaign which was of a high standard. You know, it is a privilege to live in a democracy, to be able to express oneself freely in this way.

On Sunday, we are going to vote and decide for 7 years, that is to say a long period, on the future of our country. And on Sunday, we shall have three solutions. The first is to continue with a policy which, it is true, has not lived up to the expectations of the French. The second is to opt for a radical change in society which would include, whether we want it or not, the advent of the Communists in power, the Communist Party, and this is serious.

The third is the one I propose to you. This is to ensure a necessary change in our country for political stability. This supposes another way of governing--with greater firmness when essential things are at stake. This is to say the principal tasks of the state--concerning foreign policy, defense policy, the security of people and property, justice. It also includes greater freedom, greater responsibility for French women and men, for the workers of our country, for business, to increase production--as I proposed by defining the means to effectively fight unemployment, which is an unbearable scourge. This is what we should do. We must do it with more dialogue, more concerted action, with more solidarity, more fraternity between the generations, between the groups which make up our nation.

To do this, I think that we now need new people. This is why I am a candidate, this is why I propose renewal to you. This is why I called on all the French, whatever their origins may be, and who want stable change, to rally for this effort of renewal which is indispensable to our society.

During this campaign, I have said what I considered I had to say. It is up to you, it will be up to you on Sunday, to decide whether I should continue this effort to its conclusion--that is, if I should be present at the second ballot. But because it depends on you, because I have heard you, I am confident. I am confident in the future of our country. I have said what I thought to be good and right so that tomorrow French women and men can be happy and proud to belong to France. It is now up to you, in your confidence, on Sunday, to decide and to do so for 7 years.

Giscard: Candidate of Unity

LD242002 Paris Domestic Service in French 1844 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Presidential election program: Campaign speech by President Valery Giscard d'Estaing; date, place not given--recorded]

[Text] French women and men, my friends, the campaign for the first round is closing. This is the moment of truth. I have been drawn as the last speaker to address you. During this campaign, you have heard the accusers who are misleading you in order to win your votes. They are telling you that France is weak. They are deceiving you. France is strong. France has become the third military power in the world and this guarantees your security. They tell you that France has given up in the face of crisis. They are deceiving you. France has faced up with courage its situation is better this year than that of the powerful FRG.

We are gaining every day in our independence in the energy field. These accusers tell you that France doesn't seek justice. They are deceiving you. The French people have accomplished an effort of exceptional solidarity toward the aged, families, women living alone, the handicapped and manual workers. They all bear witness to this. This effort is going to continue.

Those who mislead you cannot conduct our country's destiny. Common sense leads to a simple conclusion: The one who has laid the foundation is best qualified to finish building the house.

Here are my objectives: Employment: ensure by priority employment or training for all young people who come on the labor market. I have detailed and expressed in figures the ways and means for this.

Peace: Maintain peace for France, despite the tensions and rivalries throughout the world. I shall continue to fight for peace.

Freedom: I have preserved freedom in France. I shall continue to make France an exemplary country of freedom.

And hope: We shall put France, we together, into the team of the world's leading countries: the United States, Japan and France. We have been capable of this in the military and nuclear fields, and we are capable of it in other fields.

In this campaign, I have remained above rivalries and the machinations of politics. I had the duty to do so. In 1974, you placed our country's fate into my hands, I had to respect your aspirations for dignity in political debate and for France's unity.

Every one of the other candidates represents a party or a trend. I am the only candidate of unity, the only one whose election would not be the victory of one faction over another. The others see France cut into two or three, or four. I see it as one.

To pursue France's progress, I need the cooperation of every one of you, with none barred and no hard feelings. France is above us, above our ambitions and our quarrels. It is looking at us like a mother who is waiting for a sign of affection. On Sunday, let us make, all together, at the first round already, the same gesture, the same voice, the same vote for France.

Long live the republic and good luck to France.

PRE-ELECTION POLLS GIVE CONTRADICTORY RESULTS

LD231127 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Apr 81 p 36

[Excerpt] Paris MATCH for 24 April publishes a poll carried out by Public S.A. from 6 through 10 April on a representative national sample of 5,000 people aged 18 or over. According to this poll, Giscard d'Estaing will win in the second round with 50.5 percent of the vote (instead of the 52 percent in the previous Public S.A. poll published in LE MONDE 10 April) as against 49.5 percent (instead of 48 percent) for Mitterrand.

The latter, if facing Chirac, would win with 53 percent. In the first round, the present head of state is credited with 27 percent of voting intentions (down 2.5 points); Mitterrand has 23.5 percent (down 0.5); Chirac has 18.5 (up 2 points); Marchais 19 percent (up 0.5); Lalonde 3 percent (up 0.5); Miss Laguiller 2 percent (up 0.5) and Debre 2 percent (down 0.5). Support for Garaud (2 percent), Bouchardeau (1 percent) and Crepeau (1 percent) remains stable.

LE QUOTIDIEN of Paris for 16 April publishes a poll carried out by Indice Opinion from 8 through 13 April on a representative sample of 2,046 people aged 18 or over.

Voting intentions for the second round give the advantage to Mitterrand with 54 percent (that is, a 4 points more than at the time of the previous Indice Opinion poll, carried out between 23 and 26 March, on a sample of 1.035 people). Giscard d'Estaing gets 46 percent (4 points less). In the first round, the Socialist candidate takes the lead, with 26 percent (in the previous poll, he had between 21 and 24.5 percent, depending on the circumstances). The present head of state gains 24.5 percent (as against 25.5-27 percent previously). Chirac has 20.5 percent (as against 19.5-21 percent). Marchais has 17.5 percent (as against 16.5-17.5 percent). Laguiller and Lalonde have 3 percent each; Debre, 2 percent; Garaud and Crepeau, 1.5 percent each and Bouchardeau, 1 percent.

For Michel Pinton, UDF general representative, the results given by Indice Opinion are "once again surprising, indeed suspect." Pinton, who recalls that the institute has been the traget of "serious criticism" from the Polling Commission, believes that "this poll, published only a few days before the closing date for the publication of opinion polls, cannot fail to attract doubt and, indeed, suspicion to the extent that some people could use it--as has happened recently--for a campaign to misinform the French people."

MINISTRY COMMENTS ON U.S. LIFTING OF SOVIET EMBARGO

LD251102 Paris Domestic Service in Fench 1000 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Text] The Quai d'Orsay has reacted to the U.S. decision to lift the embargo on wheat exports to the Soviet Union. A communique just released by the Foreign Ministry states that the U.S. decision makes void France's commitment not to replace U.S. deliveries with its own wheat deliveries. The Quai d'Orsay adds, however, that France's attitude regarding Soviet intervention in Afghanistan remains unchanged.

ANTI-NAZI GROUP FIRES SHOTS AT PARIS BOOKSHOP

NC261021 Paris AFP in English 1004 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 26 Apr (AFP)--A Jewish anti-Nazi group called "Pessah" (Passover) today claimed it fired two retaliatory shots during the night at a Paris bookshop which specialises in extreme rightist publications.

A spokesman for "Pessah", in a telephone call to AFP, said the shots were fired in retaliation for the profanation of 80 graves in the Jewish cemetery at Bagneux, a Paris suburb.

The spokesman said "Pessah" also planned to put bombs at neo-Nazi centres in Paris this morning. Pessah is not known to the police.

At the Bagneux cemetery, the right-wing "New French Nazi Front" (NFNF) had scrawled its initials in black paint on graves, with slogans like "Nuremburg will soon be revenged," "Yes to a pure Europe" and "Death to Israel."

The tombs of Jews who died after being deported to Nazi German camps in World War II were especially picked out for the hate graffiti.

ROMANIA'S ENACHE ADDRESSES SOCIALIST CONGRESS

AU240920 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0805 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 24 Apr (AGERPRES)--The Romanian Communist Party, the working people in Romania, the message of salute Petru Enache, alternate member of the Executive Political Committee, secretary of the CC of the RCP, head of the RCP delegation, conveyed to the participants in the congress of the Italian Socialist Party shows, follow with keen interest the activity of the Italian Socialist Party devoted to the promotion and strengthening of the unity of action of national revolutionary, workers' and democratic forces. Expressing satisfaction at the relations of friendship and collaboration existing between the RCP and PSI, the message of salute stresses that these relations continued to expand and diversify on the basis of mutual esteem and respect, contributing to the development of the traditional relations between Romania and Italy in the political, economic, technical, cultural and other domains, to the intensification of their cooperation internationally.

After setting forth the stand of the RCP and the Romanian state on European security and disarmament questions, the message of salute reads: In conditions of a deteriorating international situation, of economic crisis and general crisis of the capitalist society, the struggle must be intensified against the imperialist policy, against fascism and all forms of diversion and enslavement of peoples. The RCP develops collaboration and solidarity with the communist and workers' parties, strengthens cooperation with the socialist and social democratic parties, with the national liberation movements on the basis of fully equal rights, respect for each party's sacred right to independently set its political line, its tactics and strategy, with the advanced, anti-imperialist forces everywhere, starting from the necessity of intensifying the efforts of the masses of people, on a national and international plane, in the struggle for renewing transformation in societal life, for peace, detente, national independence and cooperation among peoples.

Conveys Ceausescu Greetings

AU240930 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 0810 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 24 Apr (AGERPRES)--Bettino Craxi, secretary general of the Italian Socialist Party, received Petru Enache, alternate member of the Executive Political Committee, secretary of the CC of the RCP. During the interview, which occasioned an exchange of greetings between Nicolae Ceausescu and Bettino Craxi, satisfaction was expressed at the productive meetings between Nicolae Ceausescu and Bettino Craxi which marked essential moments in the steady development of the relations of friendship and collaboration between the two parties, as well as the wish to further expand those relations. Questions relating to current concerns of the two parties and aspects of the international life were also approached, especially those regarding the course of the Madrid conference, stress being laid on the fact that it should conclude with positive results.

Talk With PCI's Pajetta

AU241852 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1817 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 24 Apr (AGERPRES)--Petru Enache, alternate member of the Executive Political Committee, secretary of the CC of the RCP, had an interview with Giancarlo Pajetta, member of the Directorate of the Italian Communist Party, head of the Department of International Affairs of the CC of that party.

The two sides were highly appreciative of the relations of friendship and collaboration between the two parties which have witnessed a steady development expressing their wish to amplify and diversify them in the spirit of mutual esteem and respect.

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH COMMEMORATES 1974 REVOLUTION

LD261030 Lisbon in Portuguese 1633 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Speech by President Antonio dos Santos Ramalho Eanes, at 25 April session of the Assembly of the Republic, to mark the anniversary of the 25 April 1974 revolution--live]

[Excerpts] Mr Speaker of the Assembly of the Republic, Mr Prime Minister, chief of the armed forces' general staff, president of the supreme court, councillors of the revolution, ministers, honorable members, Portuguese men and women.

To commemorate April as we are doing here today, in the responsible and conscious presence of the legitimate representatives of our people, is not a routine ceremony imposed by the calendar or suggested by the still very vivid memory of recent historic events.

To commemorate April as we are doing here today is a political act that symbolically links us with and relates us to other periods in the history of Portugal when power was held by the people, when the legitimacy for exercising that power was entrusted by the free decision of the Portuguese, when judgment on political decisions was given in freedom and in acknowledgement of a collectively accepted and respected legality.

To commemorate April is also consciously to declare our pledge to reject all models and proposals of authoritarianism, all antidemocratic forms of exercising political power, all deviations from the demands of direct and universal suffrage.

To commemorate April continues to be to understand the exact value of the political mechanisms which have enabled us to maintain and defend solutions based on equilibrium, as a successful experiment and as future guidance, in order to deprive of pretexts those who seek--or may come to seek--to challenge our democratic course.

In spite of everything, and contrary to the fears and forecasts of many, it has been possible to defend the vitality of our democracy. The military institution has proved faithful to its pledge to return the power it temporarily held, fully and without artifices, to those elected by the people.

The crises that we have overcome, some of them very difficult indeed, provide the best evidence of the vitality of our democracy and fully prove that irreparable political mistakes cannot be made if trust is placed in the people's political maturity. We can thus draw from our exacting political experiences the firm conclusion that the defense and affirmation of democratic pluralism--which must include the full expression of decentralization and regional autonomy--is a value that cannot ever be questioned if we wish to celebrate the April anniversary as an assertion of the hopes it has raised in our spirits.

From the political parties we expect the essential democratic contribution of setting down their political concepts and programs, of defending the specific social interests they represent, of justifying the alternatives that make for political dynamism and democratic vitality, of offering solutions to crises and of providing electoral competition. The political parties are the foundations of democracy, [words indistinct] exercise of political freedom, instruments to raise the awareness of the citizens, components of the government in power, or of the opposition. The parties affirm themselves through their differences, through the willingness to negotiate and through their capacity for formulating alternatives. However, the political parties are also dutybound to seek an essential consensus, a democratic solidarity in defense of freedom, legality, pluralism and the independence of the Portuguese people. This essential consensus is indispensable to the continuation of the April revolution.

On another level, the existence and organized manifestation of social interests, independent of the parties and the organs of sovereignty, ensures that the social forces may legally pursue the specific goals of broad groups identifiable in labor relations, professional activities or in their position in the fabric of society.

This diversity of organs of sovereignty, political parties and social organizations, interconnected by the same basic commitment to pluralist democracy and to respect for legality, contains the meaning of the hope born in April 1974.

The future depends on us all and not on the authoritarian imposition of any singular will which regards itself as outside the boundaries of democratic pluralism and the judgment of all the Portuguese people--a judgment against which there is no appeal insofar as it is passed in freedom.

We now know that extremist or utopian attitudes are not the most effective way of uniting the Portuguese people and guiding them in the necessary tasks of modernization and development. We have unequivocally learned from experience that we can only face our collective challenges if we display realism and have a detailed knowledge of our society--its defects and its virtues, the way it operates, its potentialities, the best way of fostering a spirit of initiative and innovation.

We also know that the traditional models [words indistinct] the way they portray the complex relationships of modern society, are in crisis. For all these reasons, political action--understood as the providing of guidance to the collectivity and the solving of its problems--can only have a truly democratic meaning if it is exercised in the context of justice and balance and in a spirit of solidarity, for only thus may it aspire to political stability and to the social acceptance of decisions.

Rejection of dogmatism in any form is an attitude that must be adopted by all those capable of acting with a responsible degree of flexibility and of speaking the truth without demagogy. This is the context in which the basic and inseparable values of pluralist democracy, freedom, social solidarity, justice, human dignity and defense of the national identity acquire the utmost importance and take the form of immediate realities.

Such is the framework within which the major political goals of our immediate future are located. And it is important, first and foremost, to organize the necessary means and conditions for realizing our creative capacity by developing the spheres of activity that remain open to the expression of the interests and developments of the Portuguese people. We shall not achieve this--or rather we shall not achieve this rapidly and efficiently--if we fail to foster and uphold realism in the adoption of political steps and if we fail to adapt them to the human and social realities of our country, to the motivations and incentives of our people.

For the same reason it will be necessary to inform the Portuguese people with truth and quality, an essential condition for the creation of a motivated public opinion which reflects the generally held belief that the distortion of information will sooner or later be doomed to failure.

In every circumstance, to strive for political consensus on basic issues is a demand that is part and parcel of democratic responsibility in conditions of a fully exercised pluralism.

As for the revision of the constitution, all the Portuguese people expect that--as has happened at other times of major political significance--realism will prevail, and that the revised constitution may become--as always must be the case--the strongest link uniting all democrats, all the Portuguese people. With the coming revision of the constitution we shall finally have given full meaning to the action of those who, being soldiers, made democracy possible and contributed to its consolidation and, being patriots and democrats, krew how to return to their silent but determined task of safeguarding our sovereignty. Thus shall we be capable of responding in the political sphere to the demands imposed by the capacity of our people who, on countless occasions, have proved unequaled in their understanding and exercise of democracy, their acceptance of sacrifice in times of crisis, and their redoubling of efforts in the tasks of recovery and development.

Thus, we shall build a future to justify the present and signify our past. Such was, and remains, the hope of April, a hope that must be realized. [applause]

SAUDI ARABIA'S YAMANI ARRIVES FOR OIL CONFERENCE

LD261956 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Hector Arenas report from Barajas Airport]

[Excerpts] Saudi Minister of Petroleum Shaykh Ahmad Zaki Yamani has arrived in Madrid to attend a conference on problems affecting the oil industry and their effect on the present world economy. Shaykh Yamani--who a few days ago announced in Washington that his country is pressing for a reduction of oil prices on the international market--made a short statement on his arrival here at Barajas.

The Saudi minister, who was met by the Spanish industry minister, recalled that his country and the Arab world in general have always had strong and special relations with Spain. He said this continues to be the case.

According to people accompanying Shaykh Yamani, Saudi Arabia proposes reducing oil prices by 15 percent and it hopes that this figure will be understood and followed by the rest of the OPEC countries at the meeting to be held in Geneva in May.

PRIME MINISTER ON FRG VISIT, COUP CONSEQUENCES

LD242238 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Excerpts] At the moment, Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo is holding a press conference with newsmen to brief them on the contents of today's cabinet meeting and to explain the results of his recent trip to West Germany. This was what the Spanish prime minister said at the beginning of his press conference:

[Begin recording] Among the highlights of my 24-hour trip to Hamburg and Bonn, which I concluded yesterday at noon, I should like to mention the 3 hours of talks with Chancellor Schmidt held in the presence of the ministers of foreign affairs of the two countries. Among other subjects, the conversation basically revolved around what I have called on other occasions "the West European and Atlantic vocation of Spain." That is, the talks focused on the negotiations for Spanish entry into the EEC and on the possible entry of Spain into NATO. As far as the EEC is concerned, I expressed to Herr Schmidt our desire to speed up the negotiations from the second half of this year, that is, after the report of the commission to the Council of Ministers on the Community's problems in agriculture and on the budget, and also, of course, after the French elections.

As for NATO, I repeated to Chancellor Schmidt the government's intention, as I announced during my investiture speech and which I will remind you of by quoting, as I did to Chancellor Schmidt, directly from the text of the speech: The government I aspire to head,--I would like to remind you that the date of the speech was 29 February --reaffirms its Atlantic vocation and proposes to begin consultations with the parliamentary groups in order to come to a majority view, to decide upon the timing and to define the conditions and ways in which Spain would be prepared to participate in the NATO alliance. I also told Chancellor Schmidt what I had already said previously in Spain, that my intention was to hold these consultations with the parliamentary groups before the summer. And I expressed our intention, the intention of the government, to take the steps necessary for entry into NATO as a natural culmination of our European policy rather than as the result of our bilateral agreements with the United States. You will see that there is little that is new in our position regarding the two subjects, the EEC and NATO, and that there is neither impatience on Spain's part with regard to NATO, nor patience with regard to the EEC. There is a consistent approach in the framework of a European and Atlantic foreign policy. [end recording]

'Supervised Democracy' Denied

LD250846 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Following this afternoon's cabinet meeting in the Moncloa Palace, Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo held a news conference. Pedro Fernandez Cespedes reports:

The prime minister's replies can be grouped into three categories: Spain's entry into NATO, following his recent visit to the FRG; the policy of concertedness [referring to government policy of achieving harmony with the opposition on the issue of regional autonomy]; and the consequences of the 23 February events in the Congress of Deputies--the abortive coup d'etat. With regard to the latter, some national and foreign media have described our political situation in recent weeks as a supervised democracy. Calvo-Sotelo denied that we are living in a supervised democracy. On 24 February we were in an abnormal situation, today our situation is normal.

[Begin Calvo-Sotelo recording] Civil power is absolutely established. The army is in its place. The government is determined to prevent a repetition of the circumstances which put those who were allegedly or actually responsible for the events of 23 February into a position or status which was outside their competence. [end recording]

ETA/PM ISSUES COMMUNIQUES RATIFYING CEASE-FIRE

LD241630 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Text] Basque Fatherland and Liberty-Political-Military Front [ETA/PM], which is held responsible for the kidnapping of Valencia industrialist Luis Sunyer who was released after a ransom of several hundred million pesetas was paid, has issued a communique in which it ratifies its cease-fire position.

At the same time, it says that it will not abandon this position because of regressive provocations by the present political regime, but as a result of an overall political analysis. The organization adds that prospects in making agreements with the political forces are being created.

USSR AMBASSADOR EMPHASIZES DETENTE TO CARRINGTON

LD241131 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 24 Apr 81 p 4

[Diplomatic correspondent David Adamson report]

[Text] The Soviet Union launched an early morning diplomatic offensive at Northolt airport yesterday as Lord Carrington's aircraft was warming up to take him on a visit to West Germany.

Mr Victor Popov, the Russian ambassador, arrived at 7:30 for a hurriedly arranged meeting that lasted for less than half an hour.

He had been instructed by the Kremlin to speak to the foreign secretary personally to deliver an oral demarche on the theme of Mr Brezhnev's speech to the Communist Party Congress in Moscow on Feb 23, the speech has already been the subject of communications with Mrs Thatcher and other Western leaders.

The main subjects were the Soviet proposals for a freeze on nuclear missiles located in the European theatre and aimed at European targets, and the deadlocked Madrid conference on European security.

Foreign Office sources said that Mr Popov's remarks did not appear to break new ground but there were what were described as "nuances," and these were still being examined.

The timing of this unusually early start to the diplomatic round appears to have been dictated by a desire to emphasise the continued Soviet interest in detente so that it would be fresh in Lord Carrington's mind when he arrived in Bonn.

He is spending two days in Chancellor Schmidt and Herr Genscher, for foreign minister, yesterday. [sentence as published]

Other events the Kremlin probably had in mind were the NATO foreign minister's meeting in Rome on May 4 and 5, adjourned Madrid talks on May 5. [sentence as published]

NATO officials meet in Brussels next week to discuss policy at Madrid. The most important item on the agenda of the security conference, so far as the Soviet Union is concerned, is the proposal for a conference.

Mr Brezhnev has accepted a NATO proposal that the area in which troop movements would be subject to surveillance and notification should be extended to the Urals, but he has left it unclear what he wants in return.

One possibility is that he wants a quid pro quo covering the movement of warships, including nuclear submarines, in the eastern Atlantic.

The question of European-targeted missiles, known as theatre nuclear forces, is being dealt with in bilateral talks between the Americans and the Russians.

The West has turned down Mr Brezhnev's proposal for a freeze that would prevent the planned deployment of the American cruise and Pershing 2 missiles from the end of 1983 onwards.

The Allied view is that the Soviet Union has already deployed so many of its own advanced SS20 missiles that a freeze would merely guarantee its superiority in this field.

PRIME MINISTER THATCHER TOURS MIDDLE EAST

For reportage on Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's tour of the Arabian Peninsula, including a Riyadh report on her 21 April press conference concerning her visit to Saudi Arabia, see the Arabian Peninsula section of the 22 April Middle East and Africa DAILY REPORT and subsequent issues.

DEFENSE MINISTER DENIES TURKISH CLAIM ON ARMAMENTS

NC251643 Athens NEWS in English 25 Apr 81 p 4

[Text] Cypriot Minister of National Defense and the Interior, Mr Veniamin, yesterday firmly denied allegations made by the Turkish daily HURRIYET that Greece is stepping up military capability on Cyprus.

The paper reported, under a headline reading "Greece Is Arming Cyprus," that the Greek Government had moved the 5th Army Division from Crete to Cyprus, and had stationed on Crete a squadron of A-7 fighters recently purchased from the United States. The HURRIYET article, based on reports from its correspondents in Nicosia and Ankara, also alleged that the Greek Cypriot Government had also received recently from Syria, T-54 and T-55 Soviet-made tanks, carrying the most modern equipment.

Greek Counterclaim

NC251644 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 24 Apr 81 pp 1,9

[Excerpts] While the Turks are strengthening their forces in Cyprus, with tanks in particular, they are trying in a suspicious manner to claim that Greece is sending forces to the Megalonisos [Cyprus]. This revelation about the strengthening of the Turkish occupation troops in Cyprus is made in an exclusive statement to AKROPOLIS by Cypriot Defense Minister Veniamin.

At the same time, both Mr Veniamin and sources of the National Defense Ministry in Athens have categorically denied the suspicious Turkish allegations about Greek reinforcements to Cyprus.

On the other hand, Turkish newspapersin Ankara carry threatening comments against Greece because of the Armenian demonstration in Athens last Sunday. Thus, this Turkish activity--the specific aims at this unprecedented distortion of reality are not known--is added to the heavy atmosphere that has recently been prevailing in Greek-Turkish relations.

Mr Veniamin's disclosure about the Turkish reinforcements was made because of Ankara press reports alleging that a Greek division has been sent to Cyprus from Crete and that the Megalonisos has been supplied with war materiel from Britain, France, Syria and Bulgaria.

Mr Veniamin's exclusive statement to AKROPOLIS, as it was reported last evening by our Nicosia correspondent A. Likavyis, is as follows:

In an exclusive statement to AKROPOLIS, Cyprus Interior and Defense Minister Khristodhoulos Veniamin has said that "the Turkish allegations about the dispatch of Greek troops to Cyprus and importation of heavy armaments are absolutely false and unfounded."

He went on: "On the contrary, we have information that Turkey has recently been reinforcing its troops, particularly with tanks. Therefore, the allegations of the Turkish circles that have recently been peaking are suspicious."

Sources of the National Defense Ministry have also described all these Turkish press reports as imaginary, stressing that there has not been any movement of Greek forces whatsoever, nor is it true that the Corsair fighter bombers have been flown to Cyrpus.

On the contrary, a section of the force with these aircraft, that has been stationed in Crete for the past 2 years, has already been transferred to an airport in mainland Greece to serve other defense purposes.

O FILELEVTHEROS Report

NC251905 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 25 Apr 81 p 12

[Text] Commenting on the report in the Turkish newspaper HURRIYET of a so-called "overarmament" of Cyprus by Greece and other countries, political observers in Nicosia have stated that this is an expression of a well-prepared plan behind which Ankara is hiding to get rid of the tight collar in which its intransigent stand on the Cypriot issue has imprisoned it.

The political observers add that the controlled and biased Turkish press has undertaken the work of misleading world public opinion aiming at justifying Ankara's stand on the Cyprus issue, the continued stationing of the Turkish troops on Cyprus and the supporting of its demands for fresh economic and military aid.

The political observers do not preclude that the HURRIYET article was aimed at paving the way for fresh Turkish actions for further faits accomplis on the island.

It appears that Cyprus' activities in the international arena are bearing fruit and, despite the Turkish reaction, the Cypriot problem has been portrayed everywhere as an issue of Turkish invasion and occupation of Cypriot territory. In its efforts to react and extricate itself from the tight situation that it is in with its continuing occupation of Cypriot territories, Ankara aimed at creating a myth about the "overarmament" of the Greek Cypriots and thus justifying the presence of the Turkish troops on the island as a necessary protection of the Turkish Cypriots.

The political circles indicate that both President Makarios and President Kiprianou have many times declared, from international and other arenas, that they are in favor of the island's total demilitarization and the solving of the Cyprus issue in a peaceful way within the framework of the UN resolutions and summit agreements. Ankara has given no response to these declarations.

GREEK CYPRIOTS SUPPORT ARMENIAN DEMONSTRATIONS

NC271137 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 21 Apr 81 p 3

[Text] Nicosia, ANKA--Armenians are going to stage demonstrations in the Greek Cypriot sector of Cyprus on Friday. Anti-Turkish slogans will be chanted and anti-Turkish placards will be displayed during the demonstrations, which enjoy the support of the Greek Cypriots.

It is reported that shops will be kept closed during the Armenian demonstrations, which will be staged in Nicosia, Larnaca and Limassol, where they will also donate blood to hospitals. Later they will hold a meeting at the municipal theater in Nicosia.

The Greek Cypriot newspapers, which pretend ignorance of the Armenian attacks on the lives of Turkish diplomats, allow large space for the Armenian allegations. The TO VIMA newspaper recently devoted an entire page to the "Armenian affair."

FINANCE MINISTER DEPARTS FOR HAVANA VISIT

NC250646 Nicosia Domestic Service in English 0530 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Text] Minister of Finance Avxendiou has left for Havana to represent Cyprus at the nonaligned finance ministers' conference opening there tomorrow. The main subjects to be discussed at the conference will be the international financial crisis and its repercussions on the Third World.

KIPRIANOU REASSURES TURKISH CYPRIOTS IN MESSAGE

NC205731 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 25 Apr 81 p 1

[Text] President Kiprianou, in his Easter Day message to the people, reassures Turkish Cypriots that there is no animosity towards them and that the Greek Cypriot side will do all it can in a spirit of goodwill for the promotion of a viable solution to the Cyprus problem.

"In our struggle for the shaping of a better future for the Cypriot people we are not guided by feelings of bigotry or animosity towards any one. This assurance I give again to the Turkish Cypriots. It is our firm belief that, if there is to be progress and prosperity in Cyprus, all its citizens without exception, regardless of religion or race, must partake in it", the president declares.

The president refers to the significance of resurrection day as a day of hope and expresses confidence in ultimate vindication of the national struggle.

However, vindication does not come of itself. It requires patience and preseverence, endurance and courage and determination and these qualities should never be missed if the struggle for national and physical survival is to succeed, the president says in his message and calls for solid unity.

Pledging continued goodwill in the search for a fair solution, the president said: "As far as it depends on us, we are making every possible effort for the creation of a climate of goodwill and the promotion of a viable solution of the Cyprus problem".

President Kiprianou regretted the absence of a spirit of cooperation from the other side and said: "They are behaving arrogantly and provocatively because they feel they have superior material power, the mechanical power of the aggressive forces of invasion and occupation". However, he expressed confidence that the power of justice is always superior to force and he concluded with sending good wishes to the people under conditions of enclavement, the relatives of the missing and the refugees and assured that the government will do all it can to ease the hardship.

"We shall observe with consistence and deference all that the late Archbishop Makarios had bequeathed to us as a sermon and a legacy", the president said.

"We look forward, we long for and strive for this country to be a land of brotherhood, justice, peace, freedom and happiness for all the citizens".

BAYKARA PLEDGES SUPPORT FOR TURKISH CYPRIOTS

TA251900 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Text] Minister of state, deputy prime minister and chairman of the Coordination Committee for Cyprus, Zeyyat Baykara, has said that new aid is to be extended to the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus in a bid to help it solve its economic problems. Baykara, who is on an official visit in the Federated State, made a statement before his departure from the island for Turkey. Baykara noted that especially economic issues were discussed at the talks. Noting that some 14,500 tons of wheat worth about 220 million liras will be donated to the Federated State in 1981, Baykara added that steps will be taken to ensure that goods needed by the Turkish Cypriot community will be primarily imported from Turkey. Baykara said: A bicommunal, bizonal, independent, nonaligned solution that will guarantee the equal partnership rights of the Turkish Cypriot community will be a realistic and viable one. Turkey will continue to support the patient efforts exerted by the Federated State to this direction. Baykara and those accompanying him will return to Turkey this evening.

GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR ATHENS BOMBING

NC241227 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Text] A homemade bomb exploded early this morning at an electrical appliance shop on Dhragatsaniou St [in Athens] causing slight damage to the shop's show window. Two other homemade bombs had been planted outside another shop on Dhragatsaniou St, but were defused in time by police explosive experts. All three shops are selling West German electrical products.

Through a phone call made to Athens papers by an unknown person, an organization known as the Revolutionary People's Army has claimed responsibility for planting these bombs. The unidentified person said, the terrorist activities were carried out to protest the recent death, following a hunger strike, of West German anarchist Sigurd Debus.

ARMENIAN UNION RAPS TURKISH DEMARCHE ON RALLY

NC241543 Athens NEWS in English 24 Apr 81 p 4

[Text] After Turkish protests over events which took place in Athens on the anniversary of the Armenians' genocide by the Turks, the Panhellenic Ioan of Orthodox Armenians "Saint Gregorios" announced the following:

"Every year Armenians all over the world organize similar events. This year also, on May 3, at 1030 in Gloria Theater, a commemorative celebration in the memory of the Armenians slaughtered by the Turks in 1915 will be organized. About two million Armenians were slaughtered by the Turks and many of the victims have living relatives all over the world. What one would expect from the Turks would be disapproval of the genocide and not rejection of a fact which has been recognized and condemned by all the people."

I KATHIMERINI EDITORIAL ON TURKEY, U.S. RELATIONS

NC251941 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 25 Apr 81 p 5

[Editorial: "Vital Questions"]

[Text] Our country's foreign relations are going through a delicate phase. The crisis in our relations with Turkey has recently reflected a certain tension, and the deadlock in negotiations with the United States on the signing of a Greek-U.S. defense agreement has been confirmed. This agreement would be based upon the status and limits of operation--geographic and "qualitative"--of foreign bases in our country.

At first glance these two issues seem unrelated. They are, however, closely related. The state of our relations with Turkey and, specifically, public Turkish claims to Greek territory, decisively influence the position of Greece on the question of foreign bases and, more specifically, its requests for preservation of the Aegean balance of power and for guarantees of its eastern frontiers by the United States--and in the same way it influences the list of priorities in the country's defense problems.

The U.S. position on these requests and on the bases issue more generally is expressed through a well-known and traditionally open position toward Turkey and the entire situation in the eastern Mediterranean which in no way turns Ankara's views on Greek territory aside.

We will become slightly more specific on this last point. The United States refuses to accept Greek requests for guaranteeing the Aegean balance of power by maintaining the 7 to 10 ratio in granting U.S. military aid to Greece and Turkey and for guaranteeing our country's frontiers with the obligation of dynamic intervention in case of an aggressive act. This refusal is accompanied by allegations about the "psychosis" of the Greeks against the Turks, with strong "recommendations" that we should stop giving priority to the Turkish threat and so forth.

The heightening of Turkish provocativeness toward Greece--with the well-known violations of Greek airspace and the demand for its limitation to 6 miles and the unacceptable stir over the Armenians--comes to actively deny these U.S. "positions." The Americans, however, continue to insist on them and they broadcast them in every direction and to everyone imagining, obviously, that in this way they are exerting pressure upon the Greek Government. These positions also appeared recently in an article by the usually well-informed U.S. writer Sulzberger.

The most important point in this article was the allegation that Washington would be prepared to guarantee its own reaction toward any possible military move against Greek territory from the east if Greece agreed to demilitarize the east Aegean islands. The origin of this "recommendation" is obvious. They ask us to discard the actual and basic guarantee inherent in the defensive arming of the islands in exchange for a "piece of paper" which would only have a theoretical value as experience and practice to date demonstrate.

It is also here that we have a basic question: Why is it that the United States recommends the demilitarization of the Greek islands of the east Aegean? We could, to a certain extent, explain the grant of vast amounts in economic and military aid to Turkey if the United States has reconsidered Turkey's value after the known recent developments in central and western Asia. In what way and how, however, would the demilitarization of the Greek islands, in other words their placement at Turkey's disposal, contribute to the supposed role of Turkey as "a protector" and so on? On the contrary, a rift with Greece would completely dissolve the southeast wing of NATO and would, in fact, weaken Turkey itself.

What is then the purpose of the recommendation? What does the United States have to gain from the demilitarization of the Greek islands and--primarily--from the possible consequences of such an action? Could this provide, possibly, a purely "moral" and political satisfaction to Ankara for internal consumption reasons? Such a "satisfaction" however is not necessary because Turkey's position generally and toward the United States specifically does not depend on any such "satisfaction."

Then what is it? How is it that on the one hand they talks to us of a "psychosis," and they recommend that we should not fear a Turkish invasion, while on the other hand they recommend to us an action which would further expose us to such an incursion?

These are vital questions. They could indicate undercurrents and intentions whic we wish to believe they do not indicate. It must be admitted, however, that all this and the unalterable position of Ankara strengthen and justify Greece's insistence on certain requests and certain specific priorities.

AUTHORITIES STOP FRENCH NATIONALS' ENTRY INTO IRAN

NC231420 Paris AFP in English 1406 GMT 23 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 23 Apr (AFP)--Turkish authorities Tuesday arrested a doctor and a nurse working for the French organization Medecins Sans Frontieres (Physicians Without Borders) as they were preparing to enter Iran, French Foreign Ministry officials said here today. The two reportedly were planning a trip to a clandestine Kurdish hospital in Iranian territory, sources said. The Kurds have for several years been conducting guerrilla operations against Iran to obtain their indpendence. The doctor, who was not named, and the nurse, identified only as Miss Tavernier, were with Iranian guides when they were arrested, the Foreign Ministry officials said. They were held briefly, then released, but arrested again after Turkish authorities found pro-Kurdish leaflets on the Iranian guides. The doctor and nurse were being held at Van, in eastern Turkey, the officials said, adding that the French Embassy in Ankara has opened talks to obtain their release. A Medecins Sans Frontieres official also went to Ankara to negotiate with authorities, it was learned.

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY DELEGATION ENDS VISIT

TA251745 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Text] The North Atlantic Assembly delegation headed by the president of the Subcommittee on the Southeastern Flank, Van der Stoel, has left Turkey. Problems concerning NATO's southern region were discussed during the contacts held by the delegation in Turkey.

The delegation members were received by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren, Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu, Deputy Chief of the General Staff Gen Necdet Oztorun, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen and Labor Minister Tufan Esener.

GROUND FORCES COMMANDER RETURNS FROM YUGOSLAVIA

TA242044 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Text] National Seucrity Council member and Ground Forces Commander Gen Nurettin Ersin returned to Ankara today after concluding his visit to Yugoslavia as the official guest of the Yugoslav chief of staff, Vice Admiral Branko Mamula, and as the personal representative of Head of State Gen Kenan Evren. During his stay in Yugoslavia, General Ersin studied subjects of mutual interest to the armed forces of both countries.

COMMERCE MINISTER CANTURK RETURNS FROM IRAN VISIT

TA221945 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk, who concluded his visit to Iran, has returned to Turkey. In a statement at Istanbul Yesilkoy Airport, Canturk said that Iran agreed to increase the amount of oil it would supply to Turkey. He added that $200 million of the $300 million oil debt that Turkey had to pay Iran this year has been postponed. Canturk noted that Turkey will export to Iran wheat, mutton, beef and cereal in accordance with the trade cooperation agreement reached between the two countries. He concluded by saying that significant progress has been made on the issue of establishing a joint international highway transport enterprise.

BRITISH DEPUTY FOREIGN SECRETARY ARRIVES FOR VISIT

TA261738 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Text] British Deputy Foreign Secretary Sir Ian Gilmore today arrived on an official visit to Ankara. Gilmore was received at Ankara's Esenboga Airport by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, other Foreign Ministry officials and the British ambassador to Ankara.

In a statement at the airport, Turkmen said that an exchange of views will be conducted with Gilmore on bilateral relations and international issues. Turkmen expressed the belief that the talks will contribute to the good relations between the two countries. Gilmore expressed pleasure over being invited to Turkey, as well as the hope that a positive atmosphere will prevail during his visit. Gilmore will begin his official contacts tomorrow.

ROMANIAN CHIEF OF STAFF ARRIVES FOR TALKS

TA241740 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Text] The Romanian chief of the General Staff, Maj Gen Vasile Milea, arrived in Turkey today as the official guest of the Turkish General Staff. The Romanian chief of the General Staff was received at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport by senior officers.

Major General Milea visited today 1st Army Commander Gen Necdet Urug as well as War Academies Commander Gen Halil Sozer. After visiting the tourist and historic sites of Istanbul, the visiting chief of the General Staff will depart for Ankara. He is expected to visit Antalya as well.

During his stay in Turkey, the Romanian chief of the General Staff will study subjects of interest to the armed forces of the two countries and will leave Turkey on 1 May.

TRIAL OF ERBAKAN, NSP OFFICIALS BEGINS IN ANKARA

TA241739 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Excerpts] The trial of NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan and 33 administrators and members of this party has begun at the 1st Military Court of the Ankara Martial Law Command. A prison sentence of 14 to 36 years was demanded for Erbakan for various crimes.

The hearing at the 1st Military Court of the Ankara Martial Law Command this morning started with the identification of Erbakan and the other suspects of the case. Then, the indictment was read out. In his indictment, the military prosecutor said that the suspects used the NSP at every opportunity in order to establish a theocratic state based on Islamic rule. He explained that Erbakan and his colleagues exerted efforts through various statements and slogans to entrench the goal of an Islamic theocratic state in the minds and hearts [of the people] even in an indirect manner. The military prosecutor said: The thoughts revealed in the placards and posters carried in meetings held since the NSP was established; in its activities resumed on various dates and under various names, attended by Erbakan as leader of the party and by other administrators; in the slogans chanted in these meetings; in the specially chosen attire of the persons participating in these meetings; and in the Arabic writing--described as old print--on certain posters, expose these extensive efforts and work.

Noting that the principle of secularism is one of the most important characteristics of the Turkish Republic, the military prosecutor said that this principle--which is acknowledged by a great majority of the nation--was initiated by Ataturk.

After the indictment was read out, the judge began interrogating the suspects. During today's session, Erbakan was interrogated.

In his statement, Erbakan denies all the claims about him. Pointing out that the administrators did not govern the party in contradiction to secularism, Erbakan also noted that he rejects the evidence in the case file. Erbakan also rejects the contents of the tapes in the case file in connection with his speeches delivered in certain meetings. Erbakan said that he did not mention in any of his speeches the rule of Islamic law. The trial was postponed to 1 May.

TCP Supports NSP

TA251010 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Commentary: "Is the NSP the Source of Reactionism?"]

[Summary] "The trial of the NSP is becoming a current issue. There are undoubtedly many things to be (?learned) from this case. There is no doubt that the NSP administration has pursued a policy of taking advantage of the citizens' religious beliefs and dragging them into the archaic path of Islamic rule. This policy is and has been harmful. However, there are also other important aspects that should be pointed out and stressed. Especially in recent years, anti-imperialist and antimonopolist tendencies have started to become pronounced in the grassroots of the NSP in connection with both internal and external developments. This tendency originated from the fact that in general the people s social problems cannot be solved without a struggle against the monopolies and imperialist (?dependence), and this was becoming increasingly stronger.

"It is necessary to view the NSP from these aspects as well. Although the NSP is following a path based on the rule of religious law, it does not provoke the religious fanatics, cause bloodshed among the people, organize mass massacres to attain its goal or commit political murders. Therefore, the NSP is not the center of reactionism. The center of reactionism is the NAP and JP." It was the NAP that incited the bloody Kahramanmaras and Corum incidents through lies that the communists and Alevis were burning down the mosques. The leader of the JP supported these cruel massacres by the NAP. "This is why the JP and the NAP are the real centers of reactionism." Adopting a stand against the NSP and judging it is not tantamount to opposing or judging reactionism.

"Both the JP and the NAP have attempted to exploit the religious beliefs of the people at least as much as the NSP. Moreover, they have done this through bloody methods. The NAP has also attacked the members of the NSP who were opposed to these bloody methods." It was again the leaders of the JP who instigated enmity toward Ataturk.

In view of all these facts, why are there attempts to protect the bloody NAP, which has been opposed to secularism, and the leaders of the JP, "Undoubtedly, the moves by collaborationist circles, that are alarmed by the anti-imperialist and antimonopolist tendency among the NSP grassroots, play a basic role in this."

"The fact that those who turned a blind eye to the NSP policy based on Islamic fundamentalism and opposed to securlarism and formed national front governments with the NSP created an outcry only when the anti-imperialist and antimonopolist tendencies of the NSP grassroots emerged reveals their real nature."

OZAL SAYS INFLATION RATE CURRENTLY 40 PERCENT

TA251741 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Minister of State and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal has said that the inflation rate during the last 3 months has been around 40 percent [annually] and that this rate is expected to decrease further in the coming months.

Speaking at the expanded Mediterranean and southeastern regional meeting organized by the Turkish Union of Chambers in Iskenderun, Ozal said that the high rate of inflation caused the middle class to diminish and that the rate should further be reduced to prevent this. Ozal noted that the newly enacted taxes aim at realizing social justice and increasing the standard of living. Pointing out that exports barely met oil expenditures, Ozal concluded by saying that exports should be increased.

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 081

28 April 1981

AUSTRIA

Officials Discuss Bilateral Issues in Hungary [WIENER ZEITUNG 26 Apr] E 1
Border Cooperation Talks [WIENER ZEITUNG 26 Apr] E 1
Company Spokesman Denies Tank Deal With Saudis E 1
Vice Chancellor Sinowatz Arrives in Beijing [WIENER ZEITUNG 24 Apr] E 2
Meets CCP's Li Xiannian [ARBEITER-ZEITUNG 27 Apr] E 2

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Schmidt Views Riyadh Visit, Energy Dependency J 1
Genscher Notes Agreement Between FRG, Berlin Senat J 2
Berlin Senat Officials Report on Talks With GDR J 3
Gaus Remarks on GDR Ties, Disarmament Criticized J 3
Gaus Rejects Criticism J 4
Bonn 'Irked' Over U.S. Ambassadorial Vacancy [DIE WELT 24 Apr] J 5

FRANCE

Interior Ministry Announces Election Results K 1
Chirac Says 'I Can Only Vote for Giscard' K 1
Giscard: Mitterrand Seeks Impossible Alliance K 1
LE MONDE Comments on Lifting of U.S. Grain Embargo [26-27 Apr] K 2
L'HUMANITE Notes Military Use of U.S. Program [14 Apr] K 3

ITALY & THE VATICAN

L'UNITA Sees 'Frightening Image' in Space Shuttle [18 Apr] L 1
Women Petition President Pertini Against Mafia L 1
Foreign Minister Comments on Ethiopian Visit L 2
Defense Minister on PRAVDA Charges, Brezhnev Note [L'UNITA 22 Apr] L 3
PCI Issues Communique on Berlinguer-Forlani Talks [L'UNITA 22 Apr] L 3
Socialists Reelect Craxi at Congress Session L 4

SPAIN

Saudi Oil Minister Sees No Fall in Price of Crude N 1
Government Releases Thirteen Coup Participants N 1
Defense Minister Discusses Coup, Basque Situation [LA VANGUARDIA 14 Apr] N 2

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

Jorgensen Replies to Brezhnev's Call For Dialogue [HUFVUDSTADSBLADET 21 Apr] P 1
Defense Minister on TNF, Disarmament Issues [SVENSKA DAGBLADET 21 Apr] P 1

FINLAND

Communist Party Delegation To Leave for Moscow P 2

NORWAY

Ambassador on LOS Prospects, Need to Pressure U.S. [AFTENPOSTEN 22 Apr] P 2

UNITED KINGDOM

Lord Carrington Favors Tornado Sales to Saudis Q 1
TELEGRAPH: West Has Little Choice but To Arm Arabs [DAILY TELEGRAPH 24 Apr] Q 1
SUNDAY TELEGRAPH Assesses Thatcher's Gulf Tour [26 Apr] Q 1
DAILY TELEGRAPH Urges U.S. Condemnation of IRA [25 Apr] Q 2

CYPRUS

Turkish Paper Claims Greece 'Rearming' Cyprus [HURRIYET 21 Apr] R 1
Denktas To Be Candidate in Coming North Elections [Bayrak Radio] R 1

GREECE

I KATHIMERINI Sees Ankara Increasing Pressures [25 Apr] S 1
MILLIYET: Greek Leaders Attend Armenian Meeting [20 Apr] S 1
PASOK Chairman Papandreou Leaves for Sofia Visit S 2
KKE Central Committee Issues May Day Proclamation [RIZOSPASTIS 23 Apr] S 3

TURKEY

UK Deputy Foreign Secretary Meets Officials T 1
Commerce Minister Canturk Departs for Bulgaria T 1
MILLIYET Urges Loosening of Political Restrictions [20 Apr] T 1
OECD Issues Annual Report on Turkish Economy T 2
IMF Approves $120 Million Loan for Turkey T 2
VOTCP Calls on Kurds To Strengthen Working Class T 2
Former Prime Minister Ecevit Answers Critics [ARAYIS 18 Apr] T 3

OFFICIALS DISCUSS BILATERAL ISSUES IN HUNGARY

AU271202 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 26 Apr 81 p 7

[Summary] On Saturday, Trade Minister Staribacher attended the opening in Hungary of a gambling casino established with Austrian expertise--the first institution of what kind in the East Bloc. On Monday, Staribacher will have various talks in Budapest on economic issues. Austrian construction firms are currently building six hotels in Budapest and border crossing installations at Hegyeshalom. Next week, talks on the opening of a new border crossing point in the Deutschkreutz-Kophaza region will be held in Eisenstadt and Sopron.

Current issues in Austrian-Hungarian economic relations include the brown coal mining in Torony at the Burgenland border where the price question and some environmental problems connected with the powerplant project on the Austrian side of the border are still unresolved and an extension of the Austrian-Hungarian power exchange agreement until 1983. At present, there are about 100 joint venture projects between Austrian and Hungarian firms. In the past 3 years, Hungary has reduced its deficit in trade with Austria from 2.7 billion schillings in 1978 to 0.57 billion schillings in 1980. In the first 2 months of this year, Austria's imports from Hungary were 39.5 percent higher than during the corresponding 1980 period, while exports to Hungary did not expand. "Hungary has assured us in this context that its policy of import restrictions is not a long term trend but merely a necessity in view of the current balance of payments situation."

Border Cooperation Talks

AU271141 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 26 Apr 81 p 3

[Summary] On Monday, Foreign Minister Pahr will leave for a 3-day official visit to Budapest, where he will discuss bilateral and multilateral problems with his counterpart Frigyes Puja. He is also scheduled to be received by President Pal Losonczi and Premier Gyorgy Lazar.

In his talks with Puja, Pahr will reportedly discuss cooperation between the two countries in the border region, the problem of discrimination against Hungarian exports to Austria as compared with commodities from EFTA and EC countries, humanitarian questions, ways to continue the policy of detente and, in this context, the difficulties encountered by the Madrid CSCE follow-up conference.

Pahr will be accompanied by Ambassador Friedrich Bauer, head of the Foreign Ministry's political division; Ambassador Karl Fischer, head of the minister's Secretariat; and by Minister Gregor Woschnagg, head of the Foreign Ministry's Press and Information Department.

COMPANY SPOKESMAN DENIES TANK DEAL WITH SAUDIS

AU271218 [Editorial report] Vienna Domestic Service in German at 1026 GMT on 27 April 1981 carries a 4-minute report by Helmut Glezander about alleged exports of Austrian "Cuirassier" tanks to Saudi Arabia. The author quotes a Steyr-Daimler-Puch Corporation spokesman as denying that any such tank deal has been concluded or is being negotiated with Saudi Arabia. According to Glezander, the spokesman admitted that the company is looking for buyers of the 108 tanks. The Austrian Government banned their export to Chile in August last year. Although there are contacts with Saudi Arabia on this matter--"just as with many other countries"--the talks, however, have not passed the very initial, general stage, he said.

Glezander also notes the spokesman's refusal to comment on reports that the Austrian tank has already been tested under desert conditions for the benefit of Saudi experts, and adds: "However, perhaps the statements by the Steyr-Daimler-Puch Corporation about transactions with Saudi Arabia will soon be overtaken by events: From 5 to 7 May, Chancellor Kreisky will visit Riyadh, Saudi Arabia's capital, and it has been learned that his delegation--as on earlier occasions--will again include a representative of the Steyr-Daimler-Puch Corporation, presumable Director General Malzacher himself"

VICE CHANCELLOR SINOWATZ ARRIVES IN BEIJING

AU241354 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 24 Apr 81 p 2

[Text] Vice Chancellor Fred Sinowatz, who has been in the PRC as head of a friendship delegation of the Austrian-Chinese Society, yesterday arrived in Beijing. The delegation, which includes several Nationalrat deputies, both of the government party and the opposition parties, has so far visited Guangzhou Kunming, Chengdu and Xian. In the Chinese capital, Sinowatz will presumably meet with one of the highest PRC leaders.

In Xishuangbanna, in the south Chinese province of Yunnan, the vice chancellor and education minister and his entourage visited the national minorities living there and attended the traditional water festival of the Dai people. According to the official news agency XINHUA, Sinowatz expressed his satisfaction over the harmonious coexistence of the various ethnic groups. Every minority has the opportunity to foster its language and traditional customs, Sinowatz said.

Meets CCP's Li Xiannian

AU270854 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 27 Apr 81 p 2

[Bruno Aigner dispatch from Beijing on Vice Chancellor Fred Sinowatz talk with CCP Deputy Chairman Li Xiannian]

[Text] The source of the current crisis in the world lies with the superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States, with the most dangerous spring of war undoubtedly gushing from Moscow. This was stated by CCP Deputy Chairman Li Xiannian last weekend in Beijing during a 1-hour talk with Vice Chancellor Sinowatz who has toured the PRC for 3 weeks with a delegation.

Li Xiannian described as the main goals of Chinese foreign policy the preservation of peace in the world, pointing out that the PRC respects the equality, equal rights and independence of all countries. In his talk with Vice Chancellor Sinowatz, in the Hall of the People, Li Xiannian also referred to the still existing danger of USSR intervention in Poland.

The CCP deputy chairman also stressed that the PRC did not want any military conflict and supported all endeavors to preserve peace in the world, but that it was not begging for peace. All countries of the world have to struggle for peace, Li Xiannian said. He charged the Soviet Union with seeking to attack Europe via the Middle and Far East, considering that the USSR's main interest is still focused on Europe. Thus Iran and Pakistan could become the USSR's next victims following Afghanistan, he said.

Vice Chancellor Sinowatz declared that the Austrian people want to stick to their permanent neutrality which, through the state treaty, has become firmly rooted in the Austrians' awareness. Despite worldwide tensions, Austria continues to be ready to make its contribution toward the policy of detente, because the only alternative to this policy is war. That is why Austria will continue to the best of its ability to promote and support the convening of international meetings. In the past 2 years, the vice chancellor said, there have been great political setbacks in the world which have also been reflected in worldwide economic setbacks. Only the genuine desire for peace on the part of all countries can help overcome these political mistakes, Sinowatz declared.

The Austrian delegation will fly back to Vienna today, Monday, following a visit to Beijing University.

SCHMIDT VIEWS RIYADH VISIT, ENERGY DEPENDENCY

DW271117 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1710 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Hans-Joachim Reiche interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Chancellor, you propose to place German-Saudi economic cooperation at the center of your talks in Riyadh rather than the German arms exports. But doesn't the Saudi side advocate the view that both elements are linked, that they are even interdependent, and will you be inclined to see things their way?

[Answer] It isn't my impression that this is the concept of the Saudi side nor will we talk about economic affairs exclusively. It is, after all, not the first time that we will have talked with them. The Saudi king visited us last year. I made a previous visit to the Saudi capital. The Saudi crown prince, who practically exercises the office of prime minister, visited us in Bonn twice. Thus, there is a very close exchange of opinions about questions concerning world politics, political issues of the Middle East region and of southwest Asia, of course, but also about economic affairs, about world economic issues as well as bilateral matters. The Germans, if I may put it this way, Mr Reiche, aren't quite aware that Saudi Arabia during the past few years has become politically and economically our most important partner outside the North Atlantic alliance.

[Question] Our restrictive arms export policy, Mr Chancellor, may be disadvantageous to us economically. Others might take charge of that field which we would leave to them, for instance France, or England; just consider the recent Thatcher visit to Riyadh.

[Answer] This is true. This is nothing new. This has been true all the time. Of the world's industrial states, we have so far exercised the greatest reserve in exporting arms and other military equipment. This will remain unchanged in the future.

[Question] Is it primarily the regard for, and obligation to, Israel which causes us to apply this in the specific case of Saudi Arabia?

[Answer] No, we don't let any other state or the government of any other state tell us what to do and what not to do. The consideration 10 years ago, when we forged these considerations into principles of the Federal Government, was that this is the best way to prevent us from being dragged into foreign conflicts. This was the concept of that time, at any rate. Right now, the Federal Government is about to draw up a balance sheet --it will take a few months, and similar efforts are being made in the Bundestag--showing what these principles gained us in the past few years in the way of experience; whether they need to be amended, expanded or remain as they are.

[Question] Could the concept "area of tensions" perhaps be replaced by national interest, as a point of orientation?

[Answer] This, I think, is a journalist's exaggeration, Mr Reiche, which doesn't live up to the complexity of the considerations.

[Question] Is the idea of our delivering Leopard II tanks to Saudi Arabia outside the realm of possibility, Mr Chancellor?

[Answer] This isn't our intention at the moment. I refuse to make any predictions as to what developments in this respect will be in the course of years or decades. I can only repeat: This definitely will not be at the center of our exchange of views.

[Question] The German economy anticipates large orders from Saudi Arabia. We hope for more Saudi investments in our country. We have contracted large credits from Saudi Arabia. We obtain more than 25 percent of our crude oil from Saudi Arabia. Will we end up too greatly dependent on that country, Mr Chancellor?

[Answer] No, we cannot say that. In any event, as far as oil is concerned, the dependency on Saudi Arabia is much more to my liking t an are some other dependencies on other energy suppliers outside the Federal Republic of Germany. After all, we are dependent everywhere, even in the case of nuclear power stations with respect to nuclear fuels. In the case of natural gas, too, we are dependent on the Soviet Union and on Algeria, and in the case of oil, not only on Saudi Arabia but also on Libya, to list just one of the most important crude oil extracting countries. It is important that we distribute our dependencies. We cannot make ourselves entirely independent. We are independent only in domestic hard and soft coals. But we don't have enough coal. Nor could we expand this to the necessary degree. Consequently, we need to rely on as many diffe t energy sources as possible so that, if something tends to become unsure in one direction, we can step up our procurements somewhat in the other direction. Risk distribution is perhaps a good term for it.

[Question] The West, Mr Chancellor, plans to prevent the Soviet Union from advancing further toward the oilfields of the Near and Middle East in its urge for expansion--and you share this stance. What role does Saudi Arabia play in your comtemplations of the issue?

[Answer] Saudi Arabia plays a highly important role. It is a state which excels in its very moderate, carefully considered political judgment and international behavior. It is necessary, however, to see quite clearly what is often overlooked in Europe and in the United States. Our Arab partners and friends, just as our Israeli friends, consider the Israeli-Arab antagonism much more pressing than the worry that the Soviet Union might gain ground there. We must take great care that Europe and the United States not underrate the Israeli-Arab conflicts, the need for achieving lasting peace. Only if this can be achieved will we have reason to hope that the advance of the Soviet influence in that region can be halted.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, is this intended to mean that you thereby wish to indicate the possibility of pronouncing a recognition of the PLO?

[Answer] In that respect, we are tied to the joint Near and Middle East policy of the European Community. It cannot be up to the European states and peoples to rule by whom the Palestinian people wish to be represented. This must be up to the Palestinians. We advocate the Palestinians' right to self-determination. We advocate the evacuation of the occupied territories. But by the same token, we advocate the view that all states, and this particularly means Israel, are entitled to the recognition of their borders, their secure borders. If the PLO recognizes this some day, then there would surely be no objection to considering the PLO the representative of the Palestinians if the Palestinians themselves so desire through making use of their right to self-determination. It needs to be seen clearly that the more hostile the West behaves toward the Palestinians and its representation, the stronger the latter are automatically pushed in the direction of the Soviet Union.

GENSCHER NOTES AGREEMENT BETWEEN FRG, BERLIN SENAT

LD271204 Hamburg DPA in German 1103 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Berlin, 27 Apr (DPA)--According to Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and governing Mayor Hans-Joechen Vogel, a consistent continuation of "the policy of cooperation and detente" has "untold significance" for the viability of Berlin. In a statement following talks in the Schoeneberg town hall today, the two stressed that "the total agreement" between the Federal Government and the Senat represents a "decisive factor." In the interest of the city, this must remain so.

Vogel and Genscher, who is in Berlin for the meeting of the FDP Federal Executive, also defended the presence of the allies in Berlin. For the freedom and viability of the city, "the unrestricted presence of the protective powers and a comprehensive execution of their tasks is and remains essential." The Federal Government and the Senat "will not be moved on these fundamental points."

Both politicians emphasized "the significance of continuing the dialogue with the GDR." An important aim in this area is and remains "a correction to the raising and extension of the minimum exchange requirement."

BERLIN SENAT OFFICIALS REPORT ON TALKS WITH GDR

LD272116 Hamburg DPA in German 1625 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Text] Berlin, 27 Apr (DPA)--The Berlin Senat again has called upon the GDR, through its authorized representative Gerhard Kunze, to rescind the increase and extension of the minimum compulsory exchange amounts for visitors to the GDR. Senat spokesman Sepp Binder said that after a meeting between Kunze and Walter Mueller, his GDR partner in East Berlin talks, that Mueller had rejected the Senat's demand. He had said it was an internal GDR affair which could not be the subject of negotiations with the Senat.

In reply, Kunze pointed to an average 54 percent drop in the number of visitors since the increase in the minimum exchange amount. He said that GDR's move contradicts the spirit of understanding, the objectives of the Helsinki CSCE Final Act and the assumptions upon which the agreement on travel and visitors between the two German states are based.

At the talks, held at the GDR's request, Kunze also called upon the GDR to work out a satisfactory solution for those people refused entry permits. Binder also said that the Senat isn't satisfied with the GDR's statements, and together with the Federal Government, it will unswervingly continue its efforts to obtain an adjustment to the minimum exchange amounts and improvements in the regulations on tourists and visitors.

Deputy Senat spokesman Joerg Henschel, replying to a question, confirmed that the GDR representative also had touched on the issues of the S-Bahn [urban railway], the Staaken border crossing point, environmental protection and energy supplies. Kunze then pointed out that he could not negotiate on such questions because these were not topics that could be discussed at the Senat-GDR level. Regarding the content of today's "offers" which the GDR made the Berlin Senat on the future of the S-Bahn--the GDR news agency ADN has reported on this--the spokesman made no comment. ADN, also gave no details.

In agreement with the responsible allies, the Berlin Senat is making efforts to find a concept to include the GDR-run S-Bahn in the West Berlin local traffic system.

GAUS REMARKS ON GDR TIES, DISARMAMENT CRITICIZED

LD271742 Hamburg DPA in German 1453 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Text] Berlin/Bonn, 27 Apr (DPA)--Statements by Gunter Gaus, former FRG representative in East Berlin and present Berlin senator for science, on issues of inter-German relations and disarmament have been met with reservation from the Federal Government and with sharp criticism from the CDU/CSU Bundestag group.

At the Berlin Young Socialist congress, "Berlin on Intravenous Feeding," over the weekend, Gaus called for a new definition of the NATO alliance, among other things. He said he is not of the opinion that "U.S. interests are served by the policy of submission pursued by the Federal Government."

Gaus also spoke in favor of consultations with the GDR on arms and disarmament issues without the public being informed about them. He also called Western criticism of the GDR "intolerable arrogance" and a "capitalist class standpoint." The key parts of Gaus' statements were published this morning by DIE WELT in a version authorized by Gaus in the form of a "nine-point statement."

Government spokesman Lothar Ruehl said that "negotiations" between the two governments on disarmament or security are "completely out of the question." It is inconceivable that the FRG or the GDR could conduct such negotiations or would want to do so.

The FRG's distancing of itself from Gaus' proposal also was expressed in Ruehl's remark that there is no reason for the Federal Government to comment on suggestions from Berlin senators on the Federal Government's foreign policy.

Regarding the suggestion for a new definition of the alliance policy, Ruehl said that security policy in the alliance is determined and conducted by the alliance. The basis for European security is the balance between the alliances in the East and West. And, therefore, security policy and military questions--as far as the West is concerned--is dealt with by NATO. There will be no future change in the Federal Government's firm allegiance to NATO.

According to Peter Lorenz, CDU/CSU Bundestag group spokesman on German policy, Gaus' thoughts on the German policy could truly put Berlin "on intravenous feeding." Lorenz particularly criticized the statements on the alliance and the German question. He said that "secret negotiations between the FRG and the GDR on arms and disarmament issues" likely would sow mistrust in the Western defense alliance and thus undermine an important element of the security of free Berlin.

The FDP Federal Executive today stated its support for NATO's twin decision. Federal Manager Guenter Verheugen said outside an executive meeting in Berlin that the decision with regard to NATO arming coupled with an offer on negotiations with the Soviet Union is indivisible. It cannot be disturbed through a lack of readiness either for counterarming, or for negotiations.

SPD Federal Manager Peter Glotz reaffirmed his party's opposition to the initiators of the "Krefeld appeal" against Western arming with medium-range nuclear missiles. He explained the SPD's attitude in a letter to former Bundewehr General Gert Bastian, which was published today, in which he pointed to the DKP's role in the appeal and the biased nature of the appeal.

Gaus Rejects Criticism

LD272358 Hamburg DPA in German 1630 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Text] Berlin/Bonn, 27 Apr (DPA)--Gaus has rejected criticism by the CDU/CSU Bundestag group, stating at the same time that he cannot understand remarks made by the government spokesman. In a press release, Gaus stressed that the basic treaty between the two German states provides for consultations on political questions. Over the years, there had been such talks between the Bonn Foreign Office and the GDR on questions of disarmament in central Europe, and also consultations in the GDR Foreign Ministry on CSCE questions, the latter having been conducted when he was Bonn's permanent representative in East Berlin.

Moreover, almost all Western states have held talks with the GDR on wide-ranging political questions. He said that "as is axionmatic," nothing was ever published about the content of these talks, but that doesn't mean that they can be termed "secret negotiations." Gaus pointed out that the call for inter-German talks can in no way be described as "a solo security policy effort by the Federal Government." He said that "on the whole, not only more courage for conceptual thinking is obviously needed, but also stronger nerve if the difficult foreign political situation is to be faced with something other than objections that are without substantiation or are self-complacent."

Gaus particularly reproached the CDU/CSU, saying that not one of the assertions mentioned by Lorenz had been made by him--Gaus--in the way that Lorenz had interpreted them. Even in an election campaign [forthcoming Berlin Senat elections], there is a level below which discussion is no longer possible and which only harms the issue.

BONN 'IRKED' OVER U.S. AMBASSADORIAL VACANCY

DW241430 Bonn DIE WELT in German 24 Apr 81 p 1

[Friedhelm Kemna analysis: "Displeasure After 100 Days"]

[Text] The last day of April closes the first 100 days in office of the 40th President of the United States. Granted, the attempt on Ronald Reagan's life interrupted his beginning phase. Yet, America's columnists have declared the end of the "exhibition season" as senior [columnist] James Reston called the first 3 months of Reagan's presidential term.

All told, the President has scored good marks, especially in the sphere of the radiating force of his personality on preparations for political decisions. The United States and Europe came together in admiration for the manner in which he overcame the shock of his injury. In Bonn, too, critical notations are sparse.

What clearly comes to the surface, however, is the displeasure with the personnel policy of the administration: After nearly 100 days of vacancy, Bonn misses the U.S. interlocutor on the spot. The ambassadorial post on the Rhine, which became deserted after Walter Stoessel, is still open. Names such as Vest, Burns and Nitze are passed around in rumors.

There is nothing to them officially nor is any appointment is sight, officially. The trouble isn't Bonn's alone, however. More than 40 ambassadorial posts throughout the world are still vacant. You can use the fingers of one hand to count the chiefs of mission who by now can present the credentials of their President.

Bonn considers the background of these delays even more consequential and irksome than the vacancy. The Senate's right of confirmation is being usurped by the arch-Republican Senator Jesse Helms. Helms is worried about the ability of the candidates to interepret the President's course in an unadulterated way and impressively enough. His mistrust concentrates on State Department career officials who played a role in the entourage of Henry Kissinger.

Thus, designated Under Secretaries Lawrence Eagleburger (Europe), Nicholas Velliotes (Middle East) and Chester Crocker (Africa) recently have been traveling on important missions without being able to present the governments visited with their bona fides. For months, they and others have been working in key U.S. foreign policy positions. The Senate, however, will be able to start confirmation procedures in May at best.

The mistrust of the Reagan team and of many a Republican dignitary toward the Haig team has now influenced the German desires for the proper Reagan representative to Bonn as well. Can an excellent career diplomat like George Vest be a good interlocutor, for instance, if his line to the White House will not work? Thus, the hope rather goes to a "political" appointment for the ambassadorial chair on the Rhine, a nomination which will not be controversial in the hallways of power on the Potomac River and, in particular, in the Senate and White House.

As far as the governments of Europe are concerned, American interlocutors available at any time and enjoying the confidence and ear of the President are indispensable for the political management of the next, probably still more complicated 100 days on the international scene. The confidence of Alexander Haig alone doesn't necessarily seem to be sufficient.

INTERIOR MINISTRY ANNOUNCES ELECTION RESULTS

NC271021 Paris AFP in English 1012 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Paris, 27 Apr (AFP)--Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand today returned to the electoral trail in a bid to win every possible vote for the second round in May, while the losers worked out who they will support.

With 28,878,857 votes counted, the Ministry of the Interior announced Mr Giscard d'Estaing had won 28.21 percent of the vote, Mr Mitterrand 25.9 percent, the Gaullist Jacques Chirac 17.95 percent and Communist leader Georges Marchais 15.43 percent.

Candidates of the right took a total of 49.15 percent of the vote and the left 46.97. With a mere 2.18 percent difference and the 3.88 percent to the nonpolitical ecologists still to share out, the scene is set for a battle as tight as 1974, when some 400,000 votes separated Mr Giscard d'Estaing from Mr Mitterrand.

That time Mr Giscard d'Estaing came out on top, but this time no one was prepared to predict the outcome. Much will depend on the line the minor candidates take.

CHIRAC SAYS 'I CAN ONLY VOTE FOR GISCARD'

LD271402 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Statement by Rally for the Republic Chairman Jacques Chirac at his headquarters on Rue de Tilsitt in Paris--live or recorded]

[Text] Whatever his intentions may be, Mr Mitterrand, with an economic program which has been a failure everywhere it has been applied, and the political alliances from which he did not seek to break free, are hardly propitious for success. Indeed, I cannot ignore the consequences that would follow for France from Communist Party participation in the government.

There remains Mr Giscard d'Estaing. Can he succeed, he who as outgoing president has scarcely managed to draw to his name a little more than 1/4 of the votes cast? He will have to make a thorough renewal of his policies and methods, to take the necessary steps to expand production to reduce unemployment, to cut down on the demands of the state on the nation, to carry out foreign and defense policies that are firm and clear thinking. Nothing can be accomplished if it is not based as much on reason as on sentiment. Nothing will be accomplished unless mutual respect and dialogue are restored.

Regarding the presidential election, where only two candidates will face each other in the second round, there is no case for standing down. On 10 May each person will have to vote according to his conscience. [applause] Personally, in the spirit to which I have just referred and following the line of political action which I have always pursued in favor of a certain kind of society, I can only vote for Mr Giscard d'Estaing. Henceforth, it is up to the French people to express themselves.

GISCARD: MITTERRAND SEEKS IMPOSSIBLE ALLIANCE

LD272238 Paris Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Text] The campaign for the second round of the presidential election began for candidate Giscard this afternoon. His first meeting was at Dole in the Jura. Another is taking place at this moment in Dijon.

Candidate Giscard has gone over to the offensive without delay. He is accusing his opponent, Francois Mitterrand, of being a hostage of the Communists.

[Begin Giscard d'Estaing recording] With whom does Mr Mitterrand want to govern? The French people have a right to know this, because they have the right to know everything before they make a choice. The fact that Mr Mitterrand has still not given a clear reply is a challenge to the intelligence and the patience of the French people.

Since he has not done so, I am going to reply on his behalf. Mr Mitterrand will, like me, govern with those who have elected him. Who will elect Mr Mitterrand? The Communists, without whom he cannot be elected. So why doesn't Mr Mitterrand reply frankly to Mr Marchais when the latter asks for his share of ministers in the government? It is because he wants to lure the anticommunist votes of the center. It is because he wants both the votes of the Communists and those of the anticommunists--because he wants to seek an impossible alliance of water and fire. [end recording]

LE MONDE COMMENTS ON LIFTING OF U.S. GRAIN EMBARGO

LD271355 Paris LE MONDE in French 26-27 Apr 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Rather Ineffective Sanctions"]

[Text] By deciding, at the first U.S. Cabinet meeting chaired in person since the 30 March attack, to completely lift the restrictions on grain exports to the USSR decreed by his predecessor as a reprisal for the invasion of Afghanistan, Ronald Reagan has taken a radical step. His aides and heads of department were very divided on the appropriateness of this measure.

Reagan was anxious to make his position clear. The Soviets should not interpret his gesture as a sign of any weakening of his determination to counter their action. "The United States, like the vast majority of nations, has condemned and remains opposed to the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan," the President stated when he announced his decision. He added a clear warning on Poland by stating that Washington "will react strongly to any act of aggression whereever it takes place."

Furthermore, the Soviet leaders know where they stand and have closely followed the actions of the various U.S. protagonists in this affair, the middle west farmers, their powerful lobbies, their representatives and senators, their minister John Block who advocated the immediate lifting of restrictions as soon as he took office. Reagan essentially has followed domestic policy motives in annulling Carter's memorandum banning grain sales to the USSR above the quantities agreed in previous contracts. The main aim is to lose no more of the grain states representatives' votes during the tricky budget debate which has opened in Congress and during which some people already have defected. It was also for domestic policy reasons that Reagan opposed the partial embargo decided on by Carter when the former was only a candidate for the White House.

Reagan has only been able to keep his pledge, with a 3-month delay, by putting his Cabinet's unity to a severe test. Even though the notion of government solidarity is less crucial in Washington than in Paris, the reservations openly expressed by Secretary of State Haig about the decision taken by his "boss" bode ill for the consistency of the "teamwork" which the government chief promised his fellow citizens.

The results of this partial embargo are difficult to establish. The TASS agency only sees the "serious damage" caused to the United States, and the U.S. farmers readily exaggerate the amount they have lost. Aside from quarrels over figures or Paris' wrangle with the Brussels Commission over the export of 600,000 tons of French wheat, there is reason to doubt the efficacy of such "sanctions." They clearly have no effect when they are intended to halt the trade in products with a very broad distribution.

Even if the embargo had been universally applied--which was not the case since Canada in particular hasn't been observing it since last year--it would probably have produced the unusual trafficking which only benefits the middlemen.

In the United States, it is this realistic view of the difficulties of the enterprise which has prevailed at the cost of another loss of prestige for a secretary of state whose mission has certainly started badly.

L'HUMANITE NOTES MILITARY USE OF U.S. PROGRAM

LD270807 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 14 Apr 81 p 14

[R.P. article: "Facts and Anxieties"]

[Text] The punctual and impeccable launch of the Space Shuttle is a technical success which must not be underestimated. For the first time, solid-propellant rockets have been used to boost a craft which is not a ballistic missile. For the first time, liquid hydrogen and oxygen engines have been used right from takeoff, at ground level, for a real launch--an operation judged difficult by specialists.

For the first time too, a manned craft has been launched without any of its constituent parts having been tested on a real flight. Only gliding tests have been carried out, with the shuttle itself (the orbiter) descending from an altitude of 6,000 meters.

These are all indisputable "firsts" which attest to the abilities of the NASA technicians and of the manufacturing companies, for which Columbia opens up new doors of "big business."

The United States, whose astronauts had been absent from the space scene for 6 years, also needed this reusable craft to make up its considerable lag in scientific and technical space research behind the Soviets, whose orbital station Salyut-6--an enormous 100-cubic-meter laboratory--has been orbiting the earth for 3 years, manned almost permanently by two cosmonauts in shirt sleeves and reprovisioned inflight.

The study of new metals, new crystals for the electronics industry, new drugs and so forth has been commonplace on board the Salyut, but is a field where the United States has been conspicuous by its absence. On board the shuttle, this will not be the world "first" that some Western commentators make out. Columbia and its sisters will merely be additional temporary laboratories in space. Their presence in this field cannot fail to please research lovers.

Less pleasing is the proposed use of this fantastic tool for purposes that have nothing to do with the peaceful exploitation of space. It is common knowledge that President Reagan and Secretary Haig see the shuttle primarily as a laboratory in the service of the army.... Moreover, 1/3 of the flights will be reserved for the military, which is building its own launch base.

Along with what you might find in any laboratory but whose results will be kept strictly for the Pentagon's benefit, the program includes, for example, the testing of guidance, sighting and destroyer lasers.

As for 1983, the "Talon Gold" project envisages work with sighting and tracking lasers. It will be followed by the "Teal Ruby" project, another experiment on a new system of infrared detection allegedly capable of detecting strategic bombers and cruise missiles at very low altitude. And many other projects exist in the Pentagon dossiers.

It seems that 6 years have been long enough for the U.S. Government to wipe out the spirit of peaceful cooperation which in 1975 prompted that other astonishing technical success--the joint U.S.-Soviet Apollo-Soyuz flight.

L'UNITA SEES 'FRIGHTENING IMAGE' IN SPACE SHUTTLE

LD241451 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 18 Apr 81 p 8

[Giorgio Bracchi article: "The 10 Tons That Every Shuttle Will Carry into Space"]

[Excerpt] Probably in a year's time it will be possible to assess the actual rate at which enterprises with the new space vehicle will be undertaken. The plans could be influenced by two entirely opposite thrusts. The declared intention to cut research spending--one of the points stressed in the plans announced by President Reagan--could delay them starting with the very next flight, scheduled for September.

Pressure in the opposite direction could be exerted by the unquestionable military interest of this new vehicle--an interest which has already materialized in the fact that part, if not all, the costs will be met by the U.S. Defense Department.

Indeed, the shuttle, or rather a small fleet of orbital spacecraft of this kind, could constitute a new and very important factor, an "offensive" weapon capable of firing missiles (we could call them "orbit-to-earth" missiles) at any point on the globe at any time. And these missiles could carry nuclear warheads.

Once in orbit, a shuttle can easily change orbit and make itself practically untraceable from earth. It took an astronomic telescope of considerable size to photograph Columbia, even knowing its position and orbit perfectly. To spot an orbiting vehicle as big as a shuttle, that as, the size of an average passenger aircraft, takes an extremely powerful optical instrument; in fact it has to be identified from a distance of no less than 200 km. Without prior knowledge of orbit and position it is practically impossible.

Without going as far as the frightening image of a shuttle bombarding targets on earth with nuclear missiles from an unknown orbit, it is enough to imagine it busy watching and photographing day and night, with films sensitive to both normal and infrared light. We are sure that this will soon be a reality. For years there have been several "spy-satellites" in orbit, designed to carry out surveys of this kind and to transmit the pictures that they have taken to earth. But a satellite cannot change orbit so easily; nor can it easily modify its work program. An orbiting spacecraft, however, can change orbit with the utmost ease, and its crew can make much clearer, more accurate and more useful photographic and infrared surveys.

Anyone with a fleet of shuttles will soon be in the position occupied 30-40 years ago by a power with exclusive access to bombers and reconnaissance aircraft. Moreover, in the event of hostilities, or even within the context of a "space sabotage" action, the space fleet could easily put out of action the telecommunications satellites, navigation checkpoint satellites, meteorological and other satellites now essential to normal everyday activities. In a sense, it could "blind" the adversary and cut off his means of communication.

Let us hope that the "positive" tendencies will prevail and that the shuttle will be used mainly for scientific research, though it will certainly at least be used as an "orbital mobile observatory" for military purposes.

WOMEN PETITION PRESIDENT PERTINI AGAINST MAFIA

NC221305 Paris AFP in English 1238 GMT 22 Apr 81

[Text] Palermo, Sicily, 22 Apr (AFP)--Thirty thousand determined Italian women, in an unprecedented move, today declared war against the Mafia.

They have all signed a petition to President Sandro Pertini protesting Mafia crime in Sicily and Calabria, the barren "toe" of Italy. In Calabria the local Mafia is called "Mdranghet".

The petition if being delivered by the widows of the Mafia's three most prominent recent victims--Rita Costa, whose husband Vito, a state prosecutor, was assassinated last August, Giovanna Giaconia whose husband Cesare was killed in Palermo in September 1979, and Caterina Mancuso, whose husband Bartelemeo was a senior police officer, killed with Terranova.

The petition was organised by various leftist women's organisations.

It is believed to be the first time that Italian women have shown such massive organised action against the Mafia.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON ETHIOPIAN VISIT

LD261544 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 0600 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Text] The visit of Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo to Ethiopia has ended. The delegation is now back in Rome. Here now is an interview with Alberto Ginocchi [member of the press corp, accompanying the delegation] on the results of the visit:

On the long flight from Addis Ababa to Rome we made a technical stopover in Cairo. So we took the opportunity to discuss with Minister Colombo the substance of his visit to Ethiopia. For some time that country has been somewhat isolated from Europe, at least in political terms. Mr Colombo, sir, what do you have to say about your visit to Addis Ababa?

[Begin Colombo recording] I would say that, above all this visit has a bilateral significance. Ethiopia is a country with which we have traditional ties and we also have a strong Italian community there. Therefore, the aim of the visit was to strengthen and maintain this tradition. Then, it is clear there is an Italian interest in relations with Ethiopia on account of the solution of the problems in the Horn of Africa. Relations are not easy because the political positions, both as regards domestic and foreign polices, are different. We are a European country, a country belonging to NATO, while Ethiopia ia a nonaligned country with a considerable presence of the East European countries, including the USSR. But there are problems to which the West cannot remain aloof, and these are the problem of relations with the whole of Africa and of the solution of [word indistinct] crises which exist now in Africa.

Hence the need for relations, above all between Italy and Ethiopia, and then, through Italy, there could be relations between Europe and Ethiopia within the framework of more ample relations linking Europe to (?the entire world).

[Question] Has the Ethiopian leader, Mengistu, in his talks with you, insisted on the concepts of sovereignty, autonomy and noninterference?

[Answer] But from his position, as a head of state who is playing host to the Soviets, Cubans and East Germans, can he be credible when he speaks of autonomous choices? It is a traditional feature of these countries, of the countries belonging to the [word indistinct] world, to claim their own sovereignty and their own autonomy. Making these claims under the circumstances I mentioned before can have a significance, but of what quality and to what extent, I am in no position to define. [end recording]

DEFENSE MINISTER ON PRAVDA CHARGES, BREZHNEV NOTE

LD271235 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 22 Apr 81 p 15

[Text] Milan--Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio has replied, with an article in RELAZIONI INTERNAZIONALI, to the articles in which PRAVDA accused our country of militarism. Lagorio dismisses these charges, asserting that "we prefer disarmament."

"It will be possible to achieve some results," the defense minister adds, "if we keep the following four aspects of our peace policy united: a correct balance of forces, the discussions that take place when a balance of forces exists, the detente which reemerges when deterrence functions, and the disarmament which in the long term becomes the necessary result of detente."

Next the minister refers to Brezhnev's letter to Western government leaders--to which Forlani has already replied, though, we believe in a different tone--pointing out that "it deserves attention and patience." "From an initial reading," he adds, "it appears that the Soviet Government wants broad negotiations with the West, but the starting points offered to us by Mr Brezhnev seem insufficient.

"The proposal of a moratorium is of interest," he continues, "but the Soviet Government would make its smiling offensive more convincing if the USSR were to show that it is willing to hold prior talks on a reduction of the nuclear weapons that have recently been lined up against Europe."

It is on this point that there seems to be a difference of tone with respect to Forlani's reply to Brezhnev. Indeed, the prime minister does not mention "prior talks" on Soviet missiles and rules out any preconditions, calling instead for a unilateral gesture (the freezing of the SS-20s,) giving assurances that such a move would create opportunities for success in the Euromissiles negotiations.

PCI ISSUES COMMUNIQUE ON BERLINGUER-FORLANI TALKS

LD241021 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 17 Apr 81 p 1

[Text] Rome--At the prime minister's invitation, Comrade Enrico Berlinguer had a 2-hour conversion at the Chigi Palace yesterday morning. A communique released by the PCI press bureau states that "the prime minister decided to brief the PCI secretary general on the Italian Government's talks and international contacts over the past few weeks.

"During the meeting," the communique continues, "there was also discussion of current problems of domestic policy, particularly economic ones. The PCI secretary general confirmed to the prime minister the Communists' open criticism of and clear opposition to the government's economic and social policy, inasmuch as it has demonstrated and is still demonstrating its inability to wage an anti-inflation struggle inspired by equitable criteria, which will deal an effective blow to the causes and roots of inflation. The government's general economic policy inclines to unload the consequences of the crisis and of the growing inflation onto the workers and less prosperous strata of the population.

"In view of this situaton," the note concludes, "Comrade Enrico Berlinguer confirmed the PCI's stance whereby in the interests of the workers and the country the government must be replaced by a new one, with different political and policy aims, methods, conduct, structure and composition."

SOCIALISTS REELECT CRAXI AT CONGRESS SESSION

AU271543 Rome ANSA in English 1537 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 27 Apr (ANSA)--Italian Socialist Party Secretary Bettino Craxi's reelection as party leader with an overwhelming majority closed the PSI congress at dawn today in Palermo. The reelection came after an all-night session of meetings, counter-meetings, arguments and heated verbal clashes among the delegates.

The battle between Carxi's majority faction and the minority groups opposing Craxi's focused on the majority's bid to change voting rules so that the congress itself would directly elect the party secretary into office. The minority factions, whose three foremost leaders are veteran socialists Riccardo Lombardi, Francesco de Martino and Giacomo Mancini, viewed the proposal as a means of gaining absolute power for Craxi's leadership. The opponents of the change--previously the secretary was elected by the Central Committee--carried out a tough battle for hours. Giving vent to the anger and frustrations they had accumulated in the four days of congressional debate. In the end, however, the majority prevailed and the delegates reelected Craxi.

The results of the vote were: 397 votes, Craxi 267, blank ballots 5, other 11. 114 delegates, members of the minority factions, did not vote.

The congress, which has monopolized political debate in the last week, highlighted one fact in particular: Craxi, whose party is one of the members in the government coalition with the Christian Democrats, Social Democrats and Republicans, can now play all his cards with the Christian Democrats and opposition Communists and still hold his party in a firm grasp. This in fact was the immediate goal Craxi wanted to achieve with the congress--a solemn investiture as unchallenged leader of the party. This helps to explain the unusual caution of his keynote address Wednesday and closing remarks Sunday and the absence of "novelties" on which Italian political observers had been speculating for months. Craxi limited himself to confirming his party's allegiance to the incumbent coalition, but indicated he is ready to let it fall if it takes a direction not to the PSI's liking, urging in generalized terms a "democratic dialogue" with the leftist parties, upholding--but without much impetus--the need for a "physiological" turnover in the leadership of the executive--putting an end to the Christian Democrats' 35-year-long monopoly on the premiership, and reiterating his call for constitutional reform--on which everyone basically agress, from the Christian Democrats to the Communists.

But while there was no "turning point" in the party's political platform, there has been a considerable change in intra-party power relations.

For the first time in the party's long history, the PSI has rallied around a leader who has created his own charisma, shelving red flags and the sacred texts of Marxism, with an eye more to West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt than to one of the PSI's founders, Filippo Turati.

SAUDI OIL MINISTER SEES NO FALL IN PRICE OF CRUDE

LD271330 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1130 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Saudi Arabian Minister of Petroleum Shaykh Yamani, said at a press conference held at the Ministry of Industry and Energy in Madrid, where a symposium on energy and the economy began today, that there will not be any problems in the supply of oil for the remainder of this century if the Arab-Israeli conflict is satisfactorily resolved. Yamani, who began with a speech to the participants, reviewed the changes which have taken place in the demand and supply of crude, and made an appraisal of the changes which are likely to occur between now and the end of the century. In Yamani's opinion, these changes place an obligation upon the free world to dedicate itself to building additional (?oil refining installations) in order to avoid scarcity of supplies in the long term.

During his address, he also made it clear he had not requested a fall in the price of oil—despite reports in certain circles of an anticipated decrease of 15 percent. Yamani said that at the next OPEC conference, the price of a barrel of oil will not be reduced from the present level of $32, but the market forces which advise his country, Saudi Arabia, were against raising the price of Saudi crude above $36.

GOVERNMENT RELEASES THIRTEEN COUP PARTICIPANTS

NC251705 Paris AFP in English 1505 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Text] Madrid, 25 Apr (AFP)--The government decided today to free 13 Civil Guards, the last still detained of the 290 who participated in the abortive coup of February 23.

The Civil Guards who fired submachine guns in the Spanish congress chamber to intimidate assembled parliamentarians were among those released today. Three of the 13 are corporals.

Of the 290 guards arrested immediately after the coup collapsed, 64 were ordered detained for two months. However, 51 of them were pardoned on April 16.

Seventeen Civil Guard and 29 military officers, including four generals and a navy captain, are still being detained. Of that group, 10 Civil Guard and 18 military officers have been formally charged with rebellion by General Manuel Garcia Escudero, who is charged with prosecuting the authors of the coup.

Only one civilian, Juan Garcia Carres, a former fascist unionist who is linked to the extreme right, has been named as an accessory to the military rebellion. He is being detained.

Most of the para-military Civil Guards who participated in the attempted putsch at the legislature were cleared of responsibility by the government soon after the event.

Officials said that the guards had acted under the orders of Lieutenant Colonel Antonio Tejero and were unaware of the real reasons for their deployment.

The inquiry into the attempted coup is still continuing and two more officers were arrested earlier this month.

A military source said that the investigation could go on for more than a year. General Garcia has heard more than 100 witnesses since February 25.

Defense Minister Alberto Oliart was informed on March 18 that 23 civilians were under investigation in connection with the plot but none has since been arrested.

Confidential reports on the views of officers of the Brunete Armored Division, which was stationed outside of Madrid in February and was involved in the coup, showed that many were uneasy over the sentences faced by their comrades, who openly participated in the putsch.

The officers urged that the sentences be as light as possible and consider those charged in the plot to be "true patriots and honorable men," according to the reports.

However, Premier Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo insisted at a press conference here yesterday that his government had decided to show "firmness" in dealing with the plotters and that the top ranks of the military understood that position.

Meanwhile, several commentators here charged that an effort is being made to shift all responsibility for the coup attempt onto Colonel Tejero and to "whitewash" the other participants, especially those with the highest rank.

The extreme right is conducting a major propaganda campaign extolling Colonel Tejero's example. No other officers' name is being mentioned in the publicity drive.

The colonel is being held in a military prison in northern Spain. He has been visited by numerous admirers and the daily newspaper ABC has published a long article he wrote in which he sought to justify his actions.

Meanwhile, the newspaper DIARIO DE VALENCIA reported today that Lieutenant Colonel Joaquin Pacheco had been removed from his post on the staff of the Third Military District in eastern Spain.

The colonel has twice been questioned in connection with the attempted coup.

Meanwhile the financial backers of the attempt to take over power remain as mysterious as ever.

DEFENSE MINISTER DISCUSSES COUP, BASQUE SITUATION

LD271251 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 14 Apr 81 p 12

[Unattributed report on interview granted to Italian magazine PANORAMA journalist Bruno Crimi by Spanish Defense Minister Alberto Oliart--date and place of interview not specified]

[Text] Madrid, 13 Apr--How does the government intend to keep the armed forces within the framework assigned to them by the constitution? This is the basic question which must be answered in order to attempt to understand what the country's future could be. And this is the question which, for the first time since 23 February, Defense Minister Alberto Oliart, of the Calvo-Sotelo government, attempts to give a thorough answer to in response to questions from Bruno Crimi of the Italian magazine PANORAMA.

[Question] What is your plan for the Spanish Army?

[Answer] To speak of a plan seems to me to be presumptuous. I would like to continue the work which has been done in this ministry and help make the armed forces a modern and more professional instrument, in accordance with the requirements of democracy, closer to the reality of present-day Spain and equal to the needs resulting from the defense of the West.

Tiny Section of Armed Forces

[Question] In Spain, and even abroad, hypotheses are put forward about your country's army in which some people say that it is 50 percent putschist and others say 30 percent. What do you believe?

[Answer] It seem to be very frivolous to estimate percentages concerning the officers who would be in favor of an anticonstitutional change in the Spanish political situation. All that I can say with certainty is that only 0.50 percent of the army and Civil Guard officers took part in the 23 February attempted coup, while 99.50 percent remained loyal to the established order.

[Question] That is a simple observation. I would like to know whether any fear for the future is hidden behind your words.

[Answer] That kind of fear can't and shouldn't interest me.

[Question] Is it not dangerous that the senior army ranks grew up in the Francoist era?

[Answer] Your observation is correct only with respect to a tiny section of the armed forces.

Under Francoism the Army had Less Power Than is Believed [Question] However, during the Franco years, the army controlled much power which the democratic constitution today no longer grants it.

[Answer] The power which the army held under Francoism was far less than is commonly believed. The real power lay in the hands of Franco and his close associates.

[Question] There is much talk of the army's loyalty to the king, but it is also said that in the event of another coup, the prime target to be neutralized would be the Royal Palace. Is this mere speculation?

[Answer] It is clear that a coup could only succeed by neutralizing the king. But this is a purely abstract hypothesis. In the event of a further uprising, the putchists would seek to have the support of the majority of the army and the majority of the population.

[Question] Nevertheless, one has the impression that, among the higher military hierarcy, loyalty to the king does not always coincide with loyalty to the constitution.

[Answer] Being democratic can also mean disagreeing with an aspect of the constitutional heritage, but this does not mean challenging the principles.

"Watching the Border"

[Question] Following the government's latest measures, the army has been sent to the Basque country to help the security forces curb terrorism. What is the exact nature of the mission and how long will it last?

[Answer] The army will limit itself to watching the border with Spain [as published] so as to enable the Civil Guards and the police force to attack the terrorist organizations more effectively. The armed forces' mission will not end when the government decides.

[Question] Is this direct intervention by the army in the Basque country not in a sense a "political" concession to the armed forces?

[Answer] I would like to specify that the security forces and not the armed forces are responsible for directing the antiterrorist struggle. And I must add this: It was not the army which asked to intervene in the Basque country. It was the government which decided to send troops to the border with France so as to grant the Civil Guard greater freedom against the Basque terrorists.

[Question] Do you really believe that Basque Fatherland and Liberty's [ETA] operational rearguard is on French territory?

[Answer] What do you think?

[Question] You are the minister.

[Answer] Very well.... Everything points to the fact that the masterminds of Basque terrorism find refuge in France. This is what emerges from our information. The traditional exchange that has always existed between the French Basque country and the Spanish Basque country is now being used and manipulated by the terrorist organizations working within our territory.

What Quintero Report?

[Question] The secret services did not intercept the 23 February coup. Some people have mentioned complicity. What is your opinion?

[Answer] Indeed, the attempted coup was not discovered. First, because the conspiracy involved only a few people--15-20 in all. Second, because the coup date was apparently advanced by 4 months.

[Question] In November, the military attache at the Spanish Embassy in Ankara, Colonel Quintero, send a secret report to Madrid explaining the Turkish generals' coup in the greatest detail. Some political circles regarded the report as a kind of "manual" for a possible future coup in Spain. The newspaper denounced it. Absolutely no special vigilance measures were taken. What is your opinion of that negligence?

[Answer] The Quintero report? What report?

[Question] What? Do you mean to tell me that you know nothing about it?

[Answer] In November, I was at the Health Ministry.

NATO

[Question] Could you tell me about the blueprint for Spain's NATO membership?

[Answer] This is merely one point in the Calvo-Sotelo government's policy on which we will begin talks as soon as possible with all the parties of the Spanish political spectrum.

[Question] What reasons prompted Spain to apply for membership?

[Answer] I believe that Spain's defense is better guaranteed within a multilateral organization than through bilateral agreements, as it is at present.

DENMARK

JORGENSEN REPLIES TO BREZHNEV'S CALL FOR DIALOGUE

LD241413 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 21 Apr 81 p 6

[FINNISH NEWS AGENCY report]

[Text] Copenhagen--The Soviet intervention in Afghanistan is a very serious handicap to dialogue between East and West, Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen said in a letter to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev.

Jorgensen's letter is a reply to the letter sent by the Soviet president at the beginning of March to a number of West European heads of state, including President Urho Kekkonen. In his letter, Brezhnev stressed the importance of dialogue between East and West.

In his reply, Jorgensen said that the Danish Government is very positive toward such a dialogue, but the dialogue must be open and constructive and should for this reason raise controversial issues.

DEFENSE MINISTER ON TNF, DISARMAMENT ISSUES

LD271149 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 21 Apr 81 p 4

[Lis Hojer Christensen interview with Danish Defense Minister Poul Sogaard--date not given]

[Text] Copenhagen--"There are no plans to station nuclear arms in Denmark even in wartime."

"But faced with a massive Soviet invasion in West Europe three or four times superior to the West's defenses, the question could arise, at least as far as the smaller tactical nuclear arms are concerned. But such a solution could only come about after a political decision."

This is how Danish Defense Minister Poul Sogaard summed up the Danish Government's view of nuclear arms in an interview with TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA.

[Question] Denmark's defenses are based completely on conventional arms. Would not a superpower war inevitably lead to nuclear war?

[Answer] I sincerely hope not. The primary aim of defense forces is to deter war.

[Question] The idea of the Nordic countries as a nuclear-free zone has been revived again recently. For example, [Swedish disarmament advocate] Alva Myrdal has proposed that Sweden and Finland begin with an agreement in which they commit themselves to keeping their territories free from nuclear arms. Would Denmark consider taking part in such an agreement?

[Answer] I do not see what purpose it would serve. The Nordic countries are already nuclear free. The Norwegian proposal for a Nordic nuclear-free zone embracing both the Kola Peninsula and the Baltic is more interesting, but a prerequisite is that we are given a signal from the Warsaw Pact that there is also interest there. And we have not received any such signal.

[Question] NATO's defense ministers adopted a decision in December last year [as published] on the deployment of 572 medium-range missiles as part of the modernization of the nuclear arms arsenal in Europe. The so-called cruise missiles play a crucial role here. The decision triggered a heated debate in several European countries. Denmark was a party to the decision.

[Answer] That is true, but it was not Denmark which raised the question of modernization. Quite the reverse, Denmark tried to bring about a 6-month postponement to try to get under way negotiations on a halt to the arms race or on disarmament. Unfortunately, we did not succeed, but together with a number of other countries, Norway, for example, we were able to link the decision with a call for negotiations on the limitation of nuclear arms in Europe.

[Question] The term "Denmarkization" has been coined to describe countries which do not live up to their NATO commitments. Is this picture correct?

[Answer] No, I think it is unfair. In actual fact only the United States and Norway have succeeded in increasing their defense spending by the 3 percent a year which NATO decided on in 1978. As far as Denmark is concerned, a 3 percent increase would mean additional defense spending of DKr500 million a year or DKr2 billion for the 4-year period now under discussion. I am quite simply unable to see where we would get the money.

FINLAND

COMMUNIST PARTY DELEGATION TO LEAVE FOR MOSCOW

LD241510 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Text] The Central Committee of the Communist Party [SKP] is dissatisfied with the preparations for the state budget. If the Finance Ministry's plans were realized, the forecast economic recession would deepen, an improvement of public services would be prevented and unemployment would increase, an SKP statement says.

The SKP Central Committee also formulated its views on the preparations for the 19th Party Congress. In the Central Committee's opinion, the debate within the party that has been carried out has indicated the membership's desire for party unity. According to the Central Committee, in the preparations for the 19th SKP Party Congress to be held in Helsinki in 4 weeks' time, the parties should avoid bringing their views into conflict.

A delegation from the SKP, led by Chairman Aarne Saarinen, will be leaving for Moscow on Sunday where it will meet the leaders of the CPSU. In addition to Saarinen, the delegation consists of Deputy Chairman Taisto Sinisalo, General Secretary Arvo Aalto and members of the Politbureau Urho Jokinen and Olavi Poikolainen.

NORWAY

AMBASSADOR ON LOS PROSPECTS, NEED TO PRESSURE U.S.

LD241015 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 22 Apr 81 p 8

[Per Egil Hegge report]

[Text] Washington, 21 Apr--"We must hope that it will be possible, using mild pressure on the Americans, to bring about rational negotiations on a Law of the Sea treaty when the talks begin in Geneva 3 August," Ambassador Jens Evensen told AFTENPOSTEN after the conclusion of the spring session of the Law of the Sea conference in New York over the Easter weekend.

"But I have little faith that the Geneva session will be the last, and so we must expect to have to meet again in New York in March next year," he said. Ambassador Evensen said that Norway ought now to make further efforts to bring about a Law of the Sea treaty on the consensus principle, for it would be unfortunate if it were necessary to resort to voting at the Geneva session. This was also the Norwegian approach during this round of meetings in New York.

LORD CARRINGTON FAVORS TORNADO SALES TO SAUDIS

LD241654 Hamburg DPA in German 1528 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 24 Apr (DPA)--Lord Carrington, the British foreign secretary, sees numerous advantages in supplying the Tornado aircraft to Saudi Arabia. In an interview for Saturday's BILD ZEITUNG, which was prereleased to DPA, Lord Carrington said: "We cannot sell the Tornado to Saudi Arabia without the consent of the German and Italian Governments. But I feel it would be to all our advantage, and to the advantage of the development of our own aviation industry, if we were to do precisely that."

Concerning the fishing problems with the Federal Republic, the foreign secretary said that the central question has to be solved between Great Britain and France, and that this could be solved only after the French presidential elections.

TELEGRAPH: WEST HAS LITTLE CHOICE BUT TO ARM ARABS

LD241135 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 24 Apr 81 p 20

[Editorial: "Arms and the Gulf"]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher's tour of the Gulf, which ends tomorrow, has opened up useful new ground. Some first fruits are seen in the order for Hawk jet trainers--worth up to perhaps 100 million pounds--orders may follow. Arms sales, however, were not the main object of the tour. Surprisingly enough, in view of Britain's long association with the region, Mrs Thatcher's visit was the first to have been made by a British prime minister in office. This symbolises the change in status. In the days when Britain provided the Gulf's military security a prime ministerial visit would presumably have seemed superfluous. Today it was a clear need. Mrs Thatcher has met it successfully.

The order for Hawk jets coincides with President Reagan's decision to ask Congress for approval for the supply of advanced reconnaissance aircraft (AWACS) to Saudi Arabia, together with extra equipment for the Saudi Arabian F-15 fighters already on order. The two deals do not compare in scale, but are nonetheless part of a trend. Chancellor Schmidt of West Germany will be in Riyadh on Monday and is expected to discuss the possible sale of Leopard tanks. The trend, in other words, is for the West to supply Saudi Arabia, and to a lesser extent other Gulf states, with sophisticated military equipment in much the way that Iran was supplied before its revolution.

The risks in this policy are obvious. With the example of Iran, they do not need labouring. Israel, expressing fears about a threat from Saudi Arabia does not ring very convincingly, has begun emphasising this aspect. Israel is right to do so, because the dangers of internal collapse or revolution in any Arab country do exist. Nevertheless, the West has little choice but to pursue the course it is addopting.

SUNDAY TELEGRAPH ASSESSES THATCHER'S GULF TOUR

LD271559 London THE SUNDAY TELEGRAPH in English 26 Apr 81 p 16

[Editorial: "Tour de Force"]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher has now completed a trip to New Delhi and the Persian Gulf states which has been something of a personal triumph even when (as in her talks with Mrs Gandhi) it produced little in the way of political results.

What must impress even her critics is the versatility, as well as the energy, she has displayed throughout these last arduous days. In Dubayy, for example, she turned herself into a high-pressure saleswoman, clinching a 150 million pound deal to provide the United Arab Emirates with British military jets whose technical merits she had found time to master. In southern Oman, standing on the battlefront with Marxist South Yemen, she contrived to appear as knowledgeable and involved as a visiting general. On every station of her Gulf tour she has persuasively argued the controversial Anglo-American case for a Western military support force to be made ready now, for use if needed against any further Soviet encroachment in the area.

Success, however, has its attendant problems. It is clear that Britain has now been launched on an all-out trade war with her Western partners (and especially France) to sell almost anything and everything she can (and especially, like France, military supplies) to those oilrich customers. If this competition continues without some overall coordination and control, the Gulf states as a whole are likely to end up with far more sophisticated weaponry than they can digest. That could prove a high price to pay for a fillip to Britain's export figures.

Another part of the price, already implicitly exacted, lies in the diplomatic field an even firmer commitment than hitherto to sponsor the Palestine Liberation Organisation as one of the principal Arab partners in any settlement of the Middle East question. This is a road we had started down already. It is hard to see now how we can turn back, for support for the PLO has been taken as the political quid pro quo for any expansion of Britain's economic and strategic role in the Gulf area.

DAILY TELEGRAPH URGES U.S. CONDEMNATION OF IRA

LD271557 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 25 Apr 81 p 16

[Editorial: "American Connection"]

[Text] To chide America for the antics of Ramsay Clarke might first seem as unfair as to blame Britain for the posturings of Canon Collins or John Pardoe. But there is one major difference. The British Government's stand on issues like the Atlantic alliance and the terror in Ireland is sound and clear; pro-IRA groups represent themselves alone. In the United States, people like Ramsay Clarke, local and state politicians pandering to the more atavistic among the Irish Americans, and, of course the so-called liberal east-coast media, are enabled to look disproportionately large thanks to silence by the nation's leaders. They fill a vacuum which is not of their making. To re-phrase Burke, for evil propaganda to influence the political climate, good men need only remain silent.

It is in America's interest that order and social peace be restored in Ulster. Victories, moral or political, by terrorists in one corner of the world, encourage extremist violence everywhere. The IRA is not a national liberation movement. It is a minority of a minority, which imposes its will by the most brutal terror, killing, torturing, burning, not sparing a man of 84 or a woman murdered for acting as census enumerator. America has suffered enough for terrorist activities, political, criminal and demented. The United States is actively assisting counter-terror campaigns by several friendly governments. Can its leaders pass by on the other side during Ulster's agony?

A word from President Reagan, now recovering from an assassin's bullet, from Secretary Regan, from Secretary of State Haig, would have an impact. They would lend added weight to British Government firmness, backed by a most responsible opposition spokesman, and help to make Sands and his advisors realise that his continued hunger strike would not achieve its effect of bringing sufficient pressure to bear on Britain to make them give in to the IRA demands, present and future. We have the right to ask this, not just because we are allies in defence of the Free World, but because British policies in Ulster are based on the quest for solutions respecting majority will and minority rights. Will the real America please stand up?

TURKISH PAPER CLAIMS GREECE 'REARMING' CYPRUS

NC271328 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 21 Apr 81 p 11

[Text] The HURRIYET correspondent in Nicosia and the HURRIYET bureau in Ankara have reported: Foreign forces, whose efforts to cause internal collapse in Turkey and to eventually dismember it failed following the 12 September operation, are now engaged in developing a new strategy that envisages an attack on our country from Cyprus. With this in mind, the Greek Cypriot sector is being provided with the most up-to-date weapons.

The Greek General Staff has reorganized the army, navy and air force in such a way as to be ready for an offensive operation in Cyprus. With this objective in mind, it has secretly moved the 5th Division to a base in Cyprus.

Since Turkey had air supremacy during the peace operation, the Greek Air Force command was accused of not taking the necessary measures in time. Now this command has based on Crete its A-7 air squadron, which was purchased from the United States. Military experts say that this squadron will be able to take off from Crete and return to base after having flown over Cyprus for 15 minutes and bombed specified targets.

Our intelligence organizations have obtained documentary evidence that in the past 3 months Syria has secretly sent to Cyprus several Syrian Army T-54 and T-55 Soviet tanks after having rebuilt their engines and equipped them with new weapons.

It has also been established that Bulgaria has since last October been supplying the Greek Cypriot Army with FROG missiles, which are the best antiaircraft and antitank missiles [as published] in the world. In addition, Bulgaria has secretly undertaken the training of the Greek Cypriot National Guard in the handling of the FROG missiles.

France too has undertaken big tasks in arming the Greek Cypriot National Guard now that the 5th Division has been secretly moved to Cyprus from Greece. The National Guard is now reorganized according to offensive warfare requirements.

In addition, it has been established that large numbers of AMX-30 French tanks have been off-loaded at Limassol and delivered to the Greek Cypriot Army.

The British Government has refused to sell to the Greek Cypriot Government and the Greek-Greek Cypriot lobby large numbers of military vehicles. However, 110 landrovers to be used for military purposes and 20 trucks to pull artillery have been secured through other ways and brought to Cyprus.

DENKTAS TO BE CANDIDATE IN COMING NORTH ELECTIONS

TA251129 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 25 Apr 81

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has announced that he will be a National Unity Party [NUP] candidate during the presidential elections to be held in June.

Denktas held a meeting this morning with the NUP candidates who will participate in the general elections to be held in June. In a statement at the end of the meeting, Denktas said that the candidates promised him they will serve the community in harmony. He announced that he will be a candidate from the NUP in the presidential elections.

I KATHIMERINI SEES ANKARA INCREASING PRESSURES

NC251829 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 25 Apr 81 p 1

[Text] Despite Greece's desire and its good will gestures in an effort to resolve differences, Turkey, by its actions, continues to have a negative influence on the climate prevailing between the two countries. This observation was made by diplomatic circles following the recent Turkish protest note. This note did not limit itself to the Armenian demonstrations in Athens but, primarily, contained a protest, couched in severe terms, over the recent Greek-Turkish airspace experts-level talks held in Athens. In addition to this in the note, which according to diplomatic observers was part of the well-known tactics of demonstrating hard positions prior to every official Greek-Turkish contact--space violations-experts meeting, demarche-Mitsotakis meeting with Turkmen--the Turks also protested the uncertainty of Greek representation at the Thessaloniki observances in honor of Ataturk and over minority issues.

The protest included in the Turkish note referred to the results of the Greek-Turkish airspace talks and is considered extremely provocative by the Greek side. This is mainly because the note expressed the unacceptable accusations that the Greek side reneged on agreements, and because it expressed Turkish...surprise as to why the Turkish experts were invited to talk at a time when our own country's expressed negative position toward Turkish proposals referring to the issue of the NOTOMS, to the submission of flight plans and to the abolition of firing ranges, were already well known.

The Turkish side appeared particularly bilious in its note, because our country did not agree to reject the right to request amendments or alterations to statements issued by Turkey on military maneuvers in international airspace whenever special conditions warranted such action. Mainly, however, Ankara was irritated because the Greek Government did not fall into the trap concealed in the Turkish proposal which would have meant recognition by our country in writing that an issue over the limits of Greek airspace truly exists. This Turkish proposal covered a written inclusion in the airspace agreement of the statement that the agreed-upon settlement would have nothing to do with the question of airspace limits and the submission of flight plans by military aircraft.

A Greek acceptance of this proposal would be tantamount to a written recognition that there is truly an issue of airspace limits to be discussed and that we agree that submission of flight plans by military aircraft is negotiable.

As to the representation of the Greek Government at the Thessaloniki observances for Ataturk--to which the note also refers--it has not yet been decided which minister will attend. It is also said that the Turkish protest was caused by the refusal of Culture Minister Andhrianopoulos to represent the Greek Government at these observances.

MILLIYET: GREEK LEADERS ATTEND ARMENIAN MEETING

NC280701 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 20 Apr 81 p 7

[Excerpts] Athens, (THA)--Greek parliamentarians have participated in a mass meeting and demonstration organized by the Armenian National Committee in Athens. A message from PASOK leader Andrea Papandreou was read aloud at it. In addition, parliamentarians and representatives of the New Democratic Party, which is currently in power, and the Pan-Hellenic Socialist Party (PASOK), KODISA, EDA and EDIK participated in the meeting, which began at the Orfeus cinema in Athens. It was observed that the Greek Communist Party-Exterior did not send a representative.

Addressing the meeting, Yannis Magryotis, who is the chairman of the "Solidarity Committee of the Asia Minor and Cypriot Peoples," which was set up 1 and 1/2 years ago, warned the Greek Government and lodged a protest with it against plans to celebrate Ataturk's 100th birthday anniversary in Greece.

Speaking on behalf of the Armenian National Committee at the meeting, where about 1,500 Armenians and Greeks were gathered, Hachaturyan alleged that the Turks massacred Armenians in 1915 and urged that Turkey be condemned in international circles. Hachaturyan demanded that the Turkish provinces of Van, Bitlis, Mus, Erzurum, Ardahan and Kars be returned to the Armenians. Hachaturyan further said: "Had international circles condemned Turkey for the Armenidan massacre, Turkey would not have dared to invade Cyprus, and neither would it have dared to try to expand at Greece's expense."

Addressing the gathering on behalf of Armenian youth, Serko Kuyumchiyan complained that the Armenian problem has not been taken up by international organizations, and added:" As their cause has not been accepted, certain organizations and youths have had to resort to nonpeaceful means to prove its righteousness."

Addressing the meeting on behalf of the New Democracy Party, which is not in power, former minister Yannis Varvitsyotis stated that Armenian demonstrations are inspired by three reasons: 1) to show respect for the victims of a dark page in history; 2) to remember the existence of this problem; and 3) to educate our children. Varvitsyotis concluded his speech with these words: "As a human being and as a Christian one may tend to forget, but peoples have no right to forget or to forgive. If they did, they would be wiped off the face of the earth."

Speaking on behalf of PASOK, the main opposition party, Apostolos Kaklamanis presented a message from party leader Papandreou. He said that "his party cherished sentiments of friendship for all the liberation movements in the world" and added that there are special ties between the Armenian and Greek peoples and that both communities suffered similar tragedies under the same sultanate. This parliamentarian added that whether it is in power or in the opposition, PASOK will always be on the side of the Armenians.

EDIK Party representative Neoklis Sarris protested plans to celebrate Ataturk's 100th birthday anniversary in Greece, adding: "This date marks the anniversary of the anti-Hellenic period ushered in by Ataturk."

Following the meeting at the Orfeus Cinema, in which 1,500 participated, those attending marched to the tomb of the unknown soldier. During the march these slogans were conspicuous in Greek and English: "Support the Armenian cause"; "1.5 million people are waiting to be vindicated"; "The struggle continues"; and "Struggle for our cause is a struggle against the common enemy."

PASOK CHAIRMAN PAPANDREOU LEAVES FOR SOFIA VISIT

NC271912 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Text] PASOK Chairman Papandreou, leader of the main opposition party, left early this morning on a 2-day visit to Sofia. Papandreou's visit to the Bulgarian capital takes place at the personal invitation of State Council Chairman Zhivkov. Papandreou will also pay a visit to Bucharest from 5 to 7 May 1981 at the invitation of Romanian President Ceausescu.

KKE CENTRAL COMMITTEE ISSUES MAY DAY PROCLAMATION

NC232106 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 23 Apr 81 pp 1, 11

["Text" of KKE Central Committee May Day proclamation issued on 22 April 1981]

[Excerpts] Workers, working women, employees; working people and pensioners:

On the occasion of May Day--a day of international solidarity, unity and struggle of the working class throughout the world--the KKE Central Committee addresses to you warm, militant and revolutionary greetings.

Today, the working class and the people throughout the world are fighting the aggressive activities of U.S. imperialism against detente and peace that have dangerously aggravated the international situation. The imperialists are rallying together in a frenzied arms race in order to acquire military supremacy and impose their domination over the world.

In this dangerous state of affairs and under the huge economic and social problems facing the working class, this year's celebration of May Day is of outstanding significance. The working class reviews its force, strengthens its struggles and forges its international solidarity with the common struggle of defending peace and disarmament, and promoting a democratic way out of the present crisis and against autocratic domination of public life in the capitalist countries.

The working people of Greece--who are more and more entangled by the U.S.-NATOite imperialism and who are undermined by the bases and missiles--are militantly participating in this struggle and coordinating their steps with all workers in the world. They demand:

--NO TO THE AGGRESSIVE PLANS OF IMPERIALISM.

--NO TO NATO.

--NO TO THE BASES OF DEATH--THE NUCLEAR WEAPONS MUST BE REMOVED.

--NO TO THE ECONOMIC AND POLITICAL SUBJUGATION OF THE EEC MONOPOLIES.

--YES TO DETENTE, PEACE AND PROGRESS.

The policy of the "New Democracy" government has become all the more harmful and caused new deadlocks for the country. This policy is constantly being denounced by the working people. The escalation of struggles in the past year reflects the desire of the working class for the implementation of a different policy, restriction of the immunity on monopolies, measures for the relief of the working people and plans for economic and social progress.

This year the country is facing serious political developments that will reach their climax in the forthcoming parliamentary elections. The KKE has declared that it is possible for the rightwing to be defeated and for the parties of democratic opposition to assume a parliamentary majority.

UK DEPUTY FOREIGN SECRETARY MEETS OFFICIALS

TA271655 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Text] British Deputy Foreign Secretary Sir Ian Gilmore who is in Ankara for an official visit began his talks today. Prime Minister Ulusu this morning received Sir Gilmore at the Prime Ministry and conferred with him for some time. Sir Gilmore then called on the Foreign Ministry secretary general, Kamuran Gurun.

Head of State Gen Kenan Evren received the British deputy foreign minister at 1430 and conferred with him for some time. Sir Gilmore then held a meeting with Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen. During the talks, issues concerning the two countries as well as international questions were discussed. Sir Ian Gilmore's visit will last 4 days.

COMMERCE MINISTER CANTURK DEPARTS FOR BULGARIA

TA280545 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk has left for Bulgaria on an official visit. During his contacts in Bulgaria, Canturk will discuss issues concerning the better implementation of the trade agreement between the two countries. He will return to Turkey on 30 April.

MILLIYET URGES LOOSENING OF POLITICAL RESTRICTIONS

NC271124 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 20 Apr 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Through the Eyes of a Politician"]

[Excerpts] There are politicians in both the People's Republican and Justice parties who are known by the public to symbolize "moderation" and not "discord". In expressing their views as citizens, they combine their experience as politicians with their knowledge. It would, therefore, be useful to know what they have to say. This type of politician does not generally oppose the 12 September takeover.

In Turkey, politics has not yet been dissociated from anarchy and terror; it is being jointly incriminated. If the political cases before the courts are not soon finalized, and if the exonerated politicians are not allowed to return to political life, the democratic elements whose position in our society is indisputable will inevitably be pushed aside.

Since we will eventually return to a new democracy, it is imperative that a dialogue with the political cadres be established. Since we do not have a long way to go, and since it is impossible to "produce" a new type of human being in such a short time, it would, to say the least, be irrational to treat the present political cadres with contempt. It would also be wrong to depend on the bureaucracy, because bureaucrats are always on the side of the government, and the politicians are questioning the wisdom of forming new political parties, because in Turkish politics the electorate invariably belongs to either of the two main parties. As we know, any other effort is doomed to end in failure.

Like anyone who loves his country, the moderate politician too has no alternative other than the success of the "12 September" revolution. However, he is of the opinion that success is definitely possible if the work undertaken is carried out within certain limitations.... The moderate politician fears lest deadlocks develop within our armed forces, which has saved our fellow countrymen's lives and protected the integrity of our realm, because of the long-term and complicated socioeconomic problems.

OECD ISSUES ANNUAL REPORT ON TURKISH ECONOMY

TA270920 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Text] An OECD report says that if present economic policies continue to be implemented, the inflation rate in Turkey should further decrease. The yearly OECD report on the Turkish economy has been issued. The report notes that the inflation rate which exceeded 100 percent at the beginning of 1980 has dropped to 40 to 50 percent at the end of the year. The report adds that if the proclaimed financial, monetary and income policies continue to be effectively implemented, the inflation rate should further improve. The report states that growth in the Turkish economy is expected to continue in 1981 as well. It concludes that if the necessary foreign exchange to provide the industrial input is obtained, the growth rate of the GNP in Turkey, which reached 2 percent in 1980, could go up to 3.2 percent in 1981.

IMF APPROVES $120 MILLION LOAN FOR TURKEY

TA242032 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Text] The International Monetary Fund [IMF] has approved a loan of nearly $120 million to Turkey. Turkish Radio and Television correspondent Berna Kulac reports from Washington that IMF officials noted that with the release of this new loan Turkey has received all loans envisaged in its agreement with the IMF for 1 year. The officials added that the amount of loan extended by the fund to Turkey during the last year has thus reached about $552 million.

Talks in connection with the amount of loans to be released by the IMF to Turkey during the second year of the agreement will begin in June. The IMF is expected to grant a loan of $480 million during that period.

VOTCP CALLS ON KURDS TO STRENGTHEN WORKING CLASS

TA241218 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 24 Apr 81

[Text] Toiling Kurdish people and all patriots who are against the continuing pressures on the Kurdish people and who want equal democratic rights for the Kurdish people:

The Kurdish people are approaching May Day in conditions of national oppression. Kurdish villages are still being raided by gendarmes at night. Toiling Kurdish peasants are being beaten, thousands of Kurdish patriots have been put in prison. Many intellectuals have been sentenced to heavy prison terms for acknowledging the very existence of the Kurdish people and for asking that the right of the Kurdish people to write and read in their own language, to develop their culture and to publish in their own language be granted. Some are being denaturalized. Turkish Kurdistan has not yet been saved from underdevelopment. Many villages lack roads, schools, teachers and electricity. Kurdish landlords, who have very close ties with collaborationist monopolist bourgeoisie, are [words indistinct]. It is quite clear that the military (?administration) that forcefully seized the country's administration will not solve any of the Kurdish people's problems. It is also clear that, as long as the oppression of the Kurdish people continues, democracy cannot be realized in the country.

All persons who are opposed to the oppression of the Kurdish people and who favor equal democratic conditions for the Kurdish people, every Kurdish toiler who wants a human existence, and Kurdish patriots who want to empty the jails of Turkish Kurdistan should strengthen the ranks of the Turkish working class. Take your place in the struggle being waged for a Turkey in which free and equal peoples live. Long live the friendship of the Turkish and Kurdish peoples!

FORMER PRIME MINISTER ECEVIT ANSWERS CRITICS

NC222222 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 18 Apr 81 pp 10-12

[Editorial by former Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit: "A Compulsory Disclosure"]

[Excerpts] As is known, the new administration has banned political polemics in order to bring peace to the nation. At the same time, it has also demanded the suspension of the pre-12 September arguments and discussions. The ARAYIS magazine, which has declared that it will be a magazine of peace, not discord, has complied with this demand right from its first issue. When we deem it necessary to venture certain evaluations linked with the past in the course of our searchings concerning the future, we take meticulous care not to use an offensive style.

A section of our press is observing this rule... as a matter of fact, one cannot do otherwise, because the writers and proprietors of some newspapers who dared to refer to the past either implicitly or in a very soft style or who reacted to serious attacks of the opposing political circles and their publication organs in very soft terms were immediately prosecuted.

However, it seems that this is not a general rule, because as we have seen in practice, every form of attack on the Republican People's Party, on the past behavior of this party and on me as its former leader is permissible. The gravest, the most unfair attacks are permissible; the ugliest insults are permissible. They are permissible to such an extent that these "targets" are being bombarded with insults so grave they have never been experienced, not even before 12 September.

As tension has kept mounting in Turkey and as I have refrained from polemics and from talking about myself, I have, over the years, chosen to let these attacks and insults go unanswered. Only once, upon the persistent accusations levelled against me by the largest of these privileged newspapers [presumably TERCUMAN] I sent an explanation replying to accusations, but it was not published. This explanation appeared in the fifth issue of ARAYIS.

But the more I kept silent, the more the attacks and insults increased. So, relying on the commonsense of our readers, I have felt the need to say a few things on this issue. The attacks became extremely ugly, particularly after the invitations I received from abroad. It is being alleged that I would take advantage of those invitations [to lecture in Germany and India] and leave Turkey never to return. It has also been alleged that like certain fugitives from justice, I would ask asylum in another country. It has, therefore, been suggested that I should be prevented from going abroad.

Others have written articles containing this implication: "Let him run away, so that we be rid of him." At the same time, it has also persistently suggested that I should be called to account.

I have been notified that the "National Security Council does not deem it advisable that I should respond to these invitations and go abroad, on grounds that this might lead to political speculation during this current period."

Going or not going abroad is not so important for me. Everyone is familiar with the "characteristics" of the period we are going through, and the people who have invited me will undoubtedly excuse me. But the campaign launched by some people using these invitations as a pretext is extremely interesting...

As I am unable to comprehend why I should abandon my homeland and what I am required to account for, I have felt the need to write the following:

A person may think of fleeing if he is frightened or if there are reasons for him to fear. But even when my life was in danger, I did not feel justified to run away or to be frightened to the extent of running 900 mph. Particularly during this period, I see no reason why I should be frightened, and I am not aware of anything I will not be able to account for. I encountered many situations before 12 September which were capable of scaring a person to the point of running away. But I did not run away from any of them.

If a man did not feel scared of many militant attacks in the past and did not seek to run away then, why should he feel scared now? Again, I do not at all understand what I am wanted to account for. Shall I be called to account because I shouted from the rostrum of the National Assembly "that we will never cooperate with certain leftist terrorists whose hands were stained with blood"? Or shall I be called to account because I did not spread a protective wing over a number of attackers, as did those who kept saying for years "You cannot make me say that the Nationalists too are committing crimes" [reference to remark by Demirel].

Shall I be held responsible for the deeds of those who ran the government for years with the support of the rightist terrorists, who are now being convicted by the martial law courts one by one? Or, shall I be called to account because I resisted pressure to form a government with those who organized those acts of militancy [reference to Nationalist Action Party leader Turkes].

Shall I be asked to account for the acts of certain newspapers that even today protect those terrorists whose guilt has been proved before the court, and that attempt to influence the present administration not to be too harsh on them?

What do they want me to account for?... Shall I be called to account for the fact that we opposed for years the separatists and all the terrorists without discrimination?

I have a feeling that the press and the attacks and threats directed at me are inspired by an inordinate desire to intimidate me by instigating our army against me. As a matter of fact, I have for years been the target of intense backbiting, and big capitalists have supported efforts to blacken me.

This campaign, which started when I refused, at the expense of risking a split in our group, to vote for a presidential candidate, despite pressures from outside the parliament after 12 March, was intensified after the Cyprus peace operation. This campaign was further intensified when we came to power in 1978 and started to look for ways and means of liberating our economy by tackling its structural defects.

Those who are continuing this besmirching campaign and who, through this campaign, are trying to turn the public and influential circles against me, are also endeavoring to cast a shadow on my and my party's sense of nationalism and our love for the loyalty to Ataturk.

Those who have always carried Ataturk's flag with honor cannot receive lectures on Ataturk from those who have undermined Ataturkism for years but who now seem to have been converted.

I have had to write all this as I am unable to understand from whom and why I should run away, and what I could not account for. Certain privileged press organs will undoubtedly continue to preach what they know. They will not stop their besmirching campaign which they have been carrying on for years just because we have made such a disclosure. They will continue to fulfill their "mission." I know all this, but as long as this campaign continues, no one will, I hope, expect me to maintain silence any longer. Those who will expect this will not have their expectations fulfilled.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 082

29 April 1981

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Genscher Urges Senators To Support National Policy J 1
DIE WELT Publishes Gaus 9-Point Statement [27 Apr] J 1
DIE WELT Notes FDP Groups' Split on Disarmament [27 Apr] J 3
Paper Cites Critical Bundeswehr Fuel Situation J 3
[FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE 28 Apr]
Press Comments J 4
Press Views Berlin FDP Adherence to SPD Partnership J 4
FRG, GDR Renew Talks on Legal Transactions Treaty J 5
GDR Ready To Negotiate on West Berlin S-Bahn J 5
DGB Circles Fear Increased Communist Influence J 6
[FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE 28 Apr]
Paper Assesses Effects of Soviet 'Peace Offensive' J 7
[FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE 27 Apr]
CSU Spokesman on Moscow 'Criticism' of Strauss J 8

FRANCE

Election Results Give Giscard 2.47 Percent Lead K 1
Communists Support Mitterrand in Second Ballot K 1
Marchais Statement K 1
LE MONDE Analyzes First Round Election Results [28 Apr] K 2
FRANCE-SOIR Ponders Prospects for Second Round [28 Apr] K 3
India, Venezuela Expected To Purchase Planes K 4
Mirage 2000 for India [LE FIGARO 11-12 Apr] K 4
Mirage 50, Jets for Venezuela [LE MONDE 26-27 Apr] K 4
LE MONDE Sees Paris 'Blunder' on Lebanon Policy [17 Apr] K 5

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Spanish King Arrives, Meets With President Pertini L 1
Various Issues Discussed L 1
Algerian Minister Comments on Energy Cooperation [L'UNITA 14 Apr] L 2
Defense Minister Views Euromissiles Issue [AVANTI 12-13 Apr] L 2

SPAIN

Calvo-Sotelo Against Referedum on NATO Membership [EL PAIS 25 Apr] N 1
PCE Carrillo Comments on NATO, Self-Censorship N 2
Jordanian Foreign Minister Meets With Perez-Llorca N 2

NORDIC AFFAIRS

NORWAY

USSR Asks Postponement of Demarcation Talks [AFTENPOSTEN 24 Apr] P 1
TU Federation Invites Solidarity To Visit [AFTENPOSTEN 23 Apr] P 1
Defense Minister Questions Value of U.S. NATO Report [ARBEIDERBLADET 14 Apr] P 2

SWEDEN

Paper Offers Reasons for Favoring JAS-NY Aircraft [SVENSKA DAGSBLADET 22 Apr] P 3

CYPRUS

Turk's General Says Greek Cypriot Side Rearming [GUNAYDIN 20 Apr] R 1
Paper Says Gobbi Optimistic on Talks Developments [O KIRIKAS 28 Apr] R 1
O AGON Skeptical [29 Apr] R 3
New 'Social Justice Party' Formed in North [BOZKURT 28 Apr] R 3
AKEL Central Committee Issues May Day Message [KHARAVYI 25 Apr] R 3

GREECE

Foreign Ministry: Talks With Turkey Rescheduled S 1
MILLIYET Summarizes Interview With Averof [22 Apr] S 1

TURKEY

Prosecution Demands Death Sentence for NAP Leaders T 1
UK's Gilmore Holds News Conference After Contacts T 2
Foreign Ministry Comments T 2
Romanian Chief of Staff Begins Official Contacts T 2
Libyan Trade Delegation Arrives for Talks T 3
Meets Industrialists T 3
Envoy in Iran Condemns Armenian Demonstrations T 3
Foreign Ministry Announces Changed Talks Schedule T 3

GENSCHER URGES SENATORS TO SUPPORT NATIONAL POLICY

LD281228 Hamburg DPA in German 1153 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Berlin, 28 Apr (DPA)--FDP Chairman and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has called upon the Social Democratic members of the Berlin Senat to make plain their support for the Federal Government's policy. Expressly referring to the recent statements on German policy by Senator Guenter Gaus (SPD), Genscher said that it is "not helpful" when Berlin senators let it be seen that there is contradiction to Bonn's policy. Genscher told journalists in West Berlin today that this applies particularly to the allegiance to the Western allies.

Genscher also stressed that he expects that negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on the deployment of medium-range missiles to begin "relatively soon." He said he hopes that the NATO foreign ministers' spring meeting next week will set the signals for this.

DIE WELT PUBLISHES GAUS 9-POINT STATEMENT

DW281335 Bonn DIE WELT in German 27 Apr 81 p 3

[Hans R. Karutz dispatch from Berlin]

[Text] At an election congress of the Young Socialists ("Berlin in the year 2001") Guenter Gaus (SPD), the former Bonn permanent representative in East Berlin and current Berlin senator for science, summarized his ideas on German and Western policies. Peter Glotz, the SPD federal manager and Berlin SPD chairman, who also was present, did not contradict any of Gaus' theses. Gaus presented a nine-point statement in an abbreviated form. DIE WELT documents the text in a version authorized by Gaus:

"1. The first remark on the situation we are in, and out of which we must try to make it to the year 2001 as unscathed as possible, is that the danger of war has increased considerably in the past 5 years. If I had had to write a scenario 10 years ago on whether a war were possible in Europe, I probably would have mentioned this possibility. Some 5 years ago, I would have put it down at the end of the paper. I fear today that the danger of war has grown and that it will not decrease in the coming years. Europe certainly has not passed through the most difficult years since 1945, it still faces them.

"2. As part of a divided nation, we made an attempt 10 or 12 years ago to develop new impetuses in thought and action for dealing with the other German state in a different way. We have made quite a bit of progress in this respect.

"For some time, however, we have been in danger, which I strongly complain about, of relapsing into the rigidity experienced 15 years ago when we had sterile discussions about whether one could recognize the 'phenomenon' of the GDR. Today, the danger of rigidity lies in a very sterile juridical interpretation-definition of certain problems we have with the other German state.

"This remark isn't a careless handling of necessary juridical safeguards. I merely see that we more and more consider juridical safeguarding as more important than the political developments to be safeguarded. We need considerations and concepts which are politically determined for which juridical safeguards are a framework and not a chain.

"3. I believe that we must take the fact into consideration, when it comes to our European policy, that we are a divided country and a divided nation. I think very little of statements that are not thought through, which are made in all parties to the effect that European policy is the way to solve German problems.

That may be quite so. But the primitive and uncouth way in which this is said too often, too quickly and without any differentiation is certainly not the way that would lead us to find answers to German problems.

"4. I believe that we must change our approach to the GDR. We must stop admitting that every attempt to think about unanswered German problems--I prefer to talk about this in the plural instead of the singular--is warded off with the remark that in doing this, one would lose track of GDR realities which are unpleasant for us.

"Not only the system we consider unpleasant belongs to GDR realities, not only the apparatus of functionaries which is like the apparatuses of functionaries in all parties belongs to the GDR realities, GDR realities also include the fact that fellow countrymen live there. We shouldn't lose track of that.

"5. We have developed an almost intolerable arrogance vis-a-vis the GDR as a whole, disregarding the achievements made there. This is in part due to the fact that we consider, more or less unchecked and uncritical--if you want to call it legitimate, you may, but I don't fully agree with it--the capitalist class standpoint as tantamount to correct action on the national issue.

"How is the understandable or not understandable dislike of communism the same as the right attitude regarding the national problem?

"6. I believe that we must redefine the alliance to which we belong and in which we must remain for an indefinite time, as I think. I don't believe that the U.S. interests will be served by a policy of submission by the Federal Government.

"7. I believe that we must use the opportunities already existing in the treaty instruments between the two German states--such as the basic treaty--for political consultations, including consultations on armament and disarmament. We ought to do this as quietly as possible--not making it a public affair, I don't think much of that.

"8. I believe that we ought to regain the courage to think in terms of concepts. What would be wrong with that? People said 20 years ago that it is impossible to sit on a rostrum and say: We want to recognize the Oder-Neisse border. "So what? We have gone ahead and recognized it.

"If we were to really regain the courage to think in terms of concepts, we could also recall long past but very fruitful models of confederation or federation, because these could be early stages or interim stages with the help of which we would get out of certain mental deadlocks we are in danger of entering into..

"9. I will make a final remark to forestall debates which usually ensue after my public statements on German problems:

"I haven't demanded the recognition of GDR state citizenship. I haven't given up our standpoint on state citizenship. I haven't once again tried to hope so much ability to differentiate so that on could ponder the term 'nation' without immediately being termed no longer nationally minded.

"I am for social democracy, which may well rule this city in the year 2001, because I believe that social democracy would be most likely to achieve the difficult thing that is necessary now, namely, regaining the courage for conceptional thinking, while simultaneously continuing the practical work between both sovereign German states in a very sober way and very concretely through very small steps.

DIE WELT NOTES FDP GROUPS' SPLIT ON DISARMAMENT

DW270952 Bonn DIE WELT in German 27 Apr 81 p 2

[Bernd Lampe dispatch from Husum: "Disarmament: Discord in the FDP"]

[Text] The Schleswig-Holstein FDP intends to oppose the party Executive Board's motion on security policy at the Free Democrats' federal party congress in Cologne in May.

The Free Democrats, meeting over the weekend at Husum, which is located between the North and Baltic Seas, passed two resolutions for the federal congress with large majorities, which call upon the Bonn FDP ministers and deputies to embark on an reorientation of German security, which is based on the disarmament proposals made by the German Society for Peace and Conflict Research and "to distinctly conveythis process of rethinking to the people as well." The Brezhnev moratorium also ought to be included in the disarmament dialogue.

To no avail, Federal Economic Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff warned the delegates against "holding the discussion on an emotional basis, devoid of facts and figures. Heaven only knows that what some organizations and deputies of our coalition partner are up to in this field is quite enough."

The minister said: "West Europe can be blackmailed, and peace is endangered if the scissors of military security is opened further at our expense."

Party congresses also were held by the Lower Saxony FDP and the Bremen liberals. In Delmenhorst, FDP General Secretary Guenter Verheugen reiterated the FDP's support for NATO's dual decision.

In Bremen, Land Chairman Horst-Juergen Lahmann rejected a sharing of government responsibility in the smallest federal land. Government business in Bremen wasn't very attractive (he said). After 10 year's of absolute rule, the SPD is faced with the financial-political pauper's oath.

In the discussion on the coalition's continuance on the federal level, FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher stressed that the coalition must have the strength to, in fact, implement the joint program of the SPD and FDP, as laid down in the government statement.

PAPER CITES CRITICAL BUNDESWEHR FUEL SITUATION

DW280946 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 28 Apr 81 p 1

[Commentary signed Ein.: "Army on Paper"]

[Text] The time has come to sound the alarm. The Bundeswehr will have no fuel left in the fall. The money is lacking. A technical army which cannot fly its airplanes, move its tanks and have wheels rolling because it lacks the fuel is a monument rather than an armed force. Unless the fundamental decision is made in May to increase the defense budget, the reality will be what is politically ridiculous and strategically inconceivable--we will have armed forces on paper, as it were.

The defense minister is determined to prevent this from happening. In this connection, the question about where the money should come from recedes into the background. The foreground is commanded by the problem of winding up long budget discussions so early that the tanks will not be empty by the time--of all times--the large-scale Atlantic fall exercises begin. Even the summer months may turn into a disaster for the armed forces. The flying operations of the air force already have been reduced. From a certain (low) level of training, the use of only partially experienced pilots turns into murder in case of hostilities. The pilot who is unable to practice adequately will not master the technical robots we call airplanes--and he may crash. And an armored company that doesn't move out to the field ceases to deserve to be called that.

Even worst, the Federal Republic in the event of such a tandstill would lose its credibility in several respects--as an Atlantic partner and as a nation which is ready to defend its freedom. At stake isn't just gasoline. Some other commitments must be fulfilled as well. A total of DM1 billion needs to be raised. Yet, this notwithstanding, two dozen Social Democratic members of parliament would like to cut the defense budget by exactly that amount. They want to have these funds set aside for development aid. What will it take before these politicians take note of the fact that the Red Army has marched into Afghanistan and that the shadow of the Russian soldiers darkens the life of the Poles? The defense minister should now be backed by the public in his efforts to maintain the Bundeswehr in an operational state. After all, polls have shown that the major p[illegible] of this nation does appreciate the mission and the significance of the armed forces.

Press Comments

DW290950 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 29 Apr 81

[From the press review]

[Text] AACHENER VOLKSZEITUNG writes: The Bundeswehr has a fuel shortage. Some people may find it funny or even see it in a chance for the tiresome discussion on rearmament or disarmament to end more or less by itself. A most erroneous assessment. A CDU spokesman charged yesterday that Defense Minister Hans Apel was more and more undermining the security of all of us. This can be considered too strong a statement. But the reports on the financing gaps demonstrate clearly that concern regarding the Bundeswehr's action readiness cannot be dispersed by mere promises and a play on words.

MANHEIMER MORGEN notes: It is hard to understand how persistently Hans Apel likes to risk his neck. He seems to have managed with much luck to overcome the Tornado debacle, and now he is about to fall into another financial hole which seems to have opened up suddenly. It is clear to everybody that the general explosion of costs did not leave the Bundeswehr unscathed, and Apel himself vaguely indicated the same. But why didn't the minister clearly speak up long ago?

KOELNISCHE RUNDSCHAU states: The Kremlin has known for some time that the weapon called the Bundeswehr could become blunt as a result of gasoline being unavailable for the necessary large and small exercises and maneuvers. Since this was predictable, the defense minister--and thus the government--must be reprimanded.

PRESS VIEWS BERLIN FDP ADHERENCE TO SPD PARTNERSHIP

DW281336 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 28 Apr 81

[From the press review]

[Text] Discussing the coalition statement by the Berlin FDP and its consequences on the political situation in the city after the 10 May elections, NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG states: Will Berlin become ungovernable after 10 May? This concern is greater than ever after the unequivocal commitment of the FDP to form a coalition with the SPD or to occupy the opposition bench with that party. As understandable as it is that the liberals, who are haunted by fears for their existence, create clear fronts by their rebuff of the CDU and thus seek to avoid any insecurity on the part of the voter, as urgent is the question whether a party is allowed to act in such an opportunistic way. If politics is understood as a service for the whole, any of the three great parties must be capable of forming a coalition with another in Berlin's critical situation--regardless of the parties' unequivocal preferences.

LUEBECKER NACHRICHTEN says: The Berlin liberals didn't say what their reasons are for repudiating a minority Senat. It is possible that they reject being tolerated by the alternatives [Greens and other splinter groups], a tolerance which the Social Democrats have included in their reckoning in the event of a minority government.

It remains to be seen whether the voters will honor this noble stance of the Free Democrats or their clear statement that they would go into opposition, if necessary. The FDP has brusquely rejected the lifesaving straw drifting in its direction now that its Berlin Land Chairman Juergen Kunze expressly ruled out a coalition with the CDU after 10 May.

FRG, GDR RENEW TALKS ON LEGAL TRANSACTIONS TREATY

LD281500 Hamburg DPA in German 1347 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 28 Apr (DPA)--A new round of negotiations between the governments in Bonn and East Berlin on a treaty to settle legal transactions between the two German states demonstrated today in Bonn the will of both sides for a continuation of their dialogue. The 16th meeting between Justice Ministry State Secretaries Guenther Erkel and Hans Ranke, after a pause of over 10 months in the negotiations on legal transactions, confirmed, however, the continuing difficulties in achieving a relevant treaty. According to the Justice Ministry, a further round of negotiations is envisaged for the autumn.

The Justice Ministry said that the two partners in the negotiations believe their meeting to be a confirmation of the interest of both sides in creating conditions for a further normalization of relations through the continuation of dialogue. Both sides regard the round of negotiations as useful.

GDR State Secretary Ranke described the meeting as an important part of the mutual efforts for the continuation of detente and at the same time for making the full observation of the basic principles of international law a precondition for a treaty on legal transactions. Ranke said this also includes respect for an independent GDR state citizenship, which Bonn rejects.

Bonn State Secretary Erkel admitted that progress in the negotiations could not be measured with a tape measure, but that in the course of the negotiations, mutual understanding of the respective positions had grown. A meeting between the federal justice minister and the GDR representative is scheduled to follow the 16th round of negotiations. The last negotiations were held last June.

GDR READY TO NEGOTIATE ON WEST BERLIN S-BAHN

LD281638 Hamburg DPA in German 1521 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] Berlin, 28 Apr (DPA)--The GDR has announced its readiness to negotiate on the future of the S-Bahn in West Berlin and about keeping the Staaken border crossing point open. This was disclosed on Tuesday by Sepp Binder, spokesman of the Berlin Senat, speaking about the latest talks between the GDR representative Walter Mueller and a Senat official. The Federal Government has been informed of the GDR representative's announcement. The Senat hopes that these and other topics will be discussed by the relevant quarters in the overall context of relations between the two German states. Questions pertaining to transit traffic have been the sole responsibility of the Federal Government.

DGB CIRCLES FEAR INCREASED COMMUNIST INFLUENCE

DW281337 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 28 Apr 81 p 4

[Report signed VR.]

[Text] Frankfurt, 28 Apr--Fears begin to grow in DGB circles that May Day demonstrations will be used by Communists or trade union members close to the Communists for antiwar demonstrations. There are respective indications. A report in the DGB paper WELT DER ARBEIT says that a Frankfurt/Main preparatory DGB conference for May Day invited Prof Wolfgang Abendroth, who has been ousted from the SPD and who is known to be close to the Communists, greeting him cordially as "colleague."

Professor Abendroth recently caused irritation even in far leftist Social Democratic circles by not merely advocating Communist positions, but by terming the arrest of Rudolf Bahro in the GDR as justified. Trade union circles note that the remarkable thing about the Frankfurt meeting was that the functionary of the Metal Workers Union Siegfried Balduin demanded "clear language" concerning May Day. The danger of war must be pointed out and the United States must be pushed back, he said. Trade union circles point out the sentence quoted by WELT DER ARBEIT saying: "But nothing about Poland, I don't want to hear that any more. Political strikes take place there. In our country, this is taboo."

Firm examples illustrate the Communists' tactics aimed at linking the general antiwar mood with wage policy. The paper of the trade union for mining and energy writes in its latest edition that the so-called "Krefeld appeal," campaigning in a grest collection of signatures for antiwar demonstrations, turns out more and more to be a "tactical masterpiece of the German Communist Party." The ice-cold calculation of the DKP has worked, writes the paper, to use and channel the uncontested existing emotional will for peace of bona fide democrats for their aims. This trade union paper believes that the desire for action of Social Democrats, Christians, Liberals, unaffiliated persons and Communists is tactically directed by the DKP.

This analysis, too, has the trade union youth as a main target group for Communist agitation. This opinion is supported by a recently published resolution of the main executive board of the Trade Union for Textile and Clothing, which strongly protested the publication of DGB Federal Youth Committee "for detente, disarmament and peace." This trade union maintains that the DGB Federal Youth Committee gives priority to the Soviet Union's disarmament suggestions. Simultaneously, it creates the unfounded impression that America's politics is hostile to peace. The Textile Workers Union strictly stresses the trade unions' will for peace. "Critical statements, demands and opinion presuppose factually founded and balanced justifications."

Trade union circles were alarmed in the wage policy field by reports in MUENCHNER MERKUR on a Munich trade union meeting where the representative of the Metal Workers Union termed Communist activities in his organization as "almost intolerable." Certain people have the task to implement basic votes and an enforcement strike. According to the MUENCHER MERKUR report, the participants of this meeting had to wiggle past a number of DKP people who were distributing propaganda material. Everybody was urged to sign an appeal against NATO's dual strategy. These trade union circles believe that Communists support so-called enforcement strikes in the Federal Republic to distract attention from the situation in Poland. This observation is identical with statements made at the Frankfurt meeting on Poland.

Further characterisitics of intensified activities of Communists and their followers are interpreted in the book "The March of the DKP Through the Institutions," published recently by the authors Flechtheim, Rudzio, Vilmar and Wilke. This book carries detailed reports on the approach of the Communists in the Weimar Republic to the SPD and the trade unions as well as on recent subversive attempts. A WELT DER ARBEIT review of the book maintains that it lacks "scientific quality and honesty."

Some of the authors were defamed. The chairman of the Timber and Synthetic Materials Trade Union urged members "to ignore this pamphlet and see to it that it will find neither approval nor attention in our organization."

All these events intensify DGB fears with regard to intensified Communist infiltration. One continues to share the opinion that the new basic DGB program adopted in January in Duesseldorf probably hasn't ended the discussion on infiltration. DBG Chairman Vetter clearly dissociated himself in Duesseldorf from the Communists. The DGB antagonists of a people's front fear that after the Duesseldorf congress, the Communists will continue to further try to secretly develop their influence through intensified activities in subordinate bodies, particularly in youth work.

PAPER ASSESSES EFFECTS OF SOVIET 'PEACE OFFENSIVE'

DW281130 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 27 Apr 81 p 1

[Ernst-Otto Maetzke editorial: "Manuilski's Belated Triumph"]

[Text] The Soviet leadership hopes to be able to compensate for the fact that Poland is demonstrating a long term instability. At the moment, a Soviet "peace offensive" is underway in the Federal Republic, which is proceeding more satisfactorily than any other previous maneuvers of this sort. This time it isn't not only the old and the new Trojan horses that permit themselves to be harnessed for it, but it only takes a slight impetus for a whole spectrum of comparatively irreproachable political and social forces to show a willing sympathy through signatures, banners, demonstrations and other manifestations for a so-called peace program of the Soviet state and party leader.

Just to mention one example among many: A youth delegates' meeting of an Evangelical regional church sends out a circular letter. It is almost natural that a list of signatures is included which reads in part: "I am joining the Krefeld appeal to the Federal Government to withdraw its approval of the stationing of Pershing II and cruise missiles in central Europe." This action alone, which is only one of several, is running so smoothly that it isn't even harmed by established proof that the Moscow-loyal German Communist Party has set itself the target of raising 1 million signatures by the end of May for the aforementioned appeal and that all kinds of tricks are being discussed at conferences for achieving and surpassing this target.

The importance Moscow attaches to this campaign was shown by the attempt a la coup de main made by the Soviet party leader early in April when he announced his visit for June (this year) without having reached any previous agreement with the Federal Government on the date of the visit so as to present himself personally as a prince of peace over here. Fortunately, the federal chancellor was man enough to avoid the compulsion; Brezhnev will now come after the summer recess. The guest would have been quite capable of pulling the draft of a German-Soviet friendship treaty out of his pocket in front of the television cameras so as to make the sympathizers of his peace offensive swallow even this bait. His objective is to play West Europe against the United States and to let the Federal Republic in particular become the rotten apple in the Western alliance.

How is it possible for things like this to happen in a divided country whose newspaper readers learn about Poland and Afghanistan day by day and whose young voters for the most part are familiar with, at least as a fact, the outrage upon Czechoslovakia? There are at least three reasons. The first one is the fear of the Soviet power, which is constantly increasing in the Federal Republic subliminally. Those who are prone to it willingly discover that approval of the security policy desires of the Soviet Union are commandments in ethical, moral and religious respects. Then it is no longer valid that peace first requires readiness. Then even the slogan "create peace without weapons" appears to be justified and can be interjected into every disarmament concept without further scrutiny.

The second reason for the remarkable success achieved in the current Soviet peace campaign in the Federal Republic is linguistic confusion and speechlessness. It apparently is no longer possible to draw attention to the diverseness and even the divergence in the interpretation of, for instance, the terms "peace, security, coexistence or detente policy." These and similar words are being used uncritically, thus promoting the success of skillful disinformation. The oft-cited "Cold War" meant not least of all the readiness of the overwhelming majority of the German people to comprehend linguistic differences, to take these differences into account and to proceed from correctly understood words so as to arrive at corresponding thought and action. Carelessness in words is no less dangerous than defenselessness against weapons.

The third reason for the headway made by the Soviet peace campaign in the Federal Republic is the rather advanced lack of knowledge of history on the part of the majority of Germans. There is little knowledge about the period between the wars; existing vestiges have been covered over with superficial and monotonous talk of "fascism." What good would it do today, for instance, to remind people of a leading functionary of the Communist International who early in the thirties said quite frankly: "The bourgeoisie must be lulled to sleep. This is why we will launch the most theatrical peace movement that ever existed. There will be exciting proposals and extraordinary concessions. The capitalist countries will take pleasure in contributing to their own destruction."

Such quotations today fall on deaf ears. Manuilski, in fact, was wrong in his reckoning: Peace propaganda alone doesn't work. What must be present in addition is fear, speechlessness and loss of knowledge of history to make it effective. This is why his assumption that things would work out this way within a period of 30 years was pegged too early. Had he said 50, then he would have been more on target.

CSU SPOKESMAN ON MOSCOW 'CRITICISM' OF STRAUSS

LD271338 Hamburg DPA in German 1152 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Text] Munich, 27 Apr (DPA)--The CSU rejected Moscow's criticism of the visit to Pakistan of the CSU chairman and minister-president of Bavaria, Franz Josef Strauss, as interference in the internal affairs of the Federal Republic and Bavaria. The CSU seeks contact with all those states and peoples threatened by Soviet imperialism, stated CSU spokesman Godel Rosenberg on Monday in Munich. The Soviet Union would also like to stipulate to its nonsocialist neighbors when, where and with whom they should speak. To date, however, said Rosenberg, the "political leadership in Bavaria" doesn't take "its instructions from Moscow."

Moreover, the Soviet news agency TASS should seriously consider the names it gives to Strauss. Even in the socialist camp, the term "ultraright politician" for the CSU leader is intensely disputed, said Rosenberg. TASS called Strauss an "ultrareactionary" and ascribed "provocative intentions" to his journey to the Afghan border.

ELECTION RESULTS GIVE GISCARD 2.47 PERCENT LEAD

NC281434 Paris AFP in English 1410 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 28 Apr (AFP)--French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing emerged from Sunday's first round of the presidential election with a 2.47 percent lead over Socialist challenger Francois Mitterrand, having eliminated their eight challengers, will now be pitted in the second round runoff presidential elections on May 10.

The abstention rate was 18.91 per cent of a total 36,418,664 registered voters, according to Interior Ministry figures, which gave final results as follows:

Valery Giscard d'Estaing	8,222,969;28.31 per cent
Francois Mitterrand (Socialist	7,505,295;25.84
Jacques Chirac (Gaullist)	5,225,720;17.99
Georges Marchais (Communist)	4,456,979;15.34
Brice Lalonde (Ecologist)	1,126,282; 3.87
Arlette Laguiller (Trotskyite)	668,195; 2.30
Michel Crepeau (moderate left)	642,815; 2.21
Michel Debre (ind. Gaullist)	482,067; 1.66
Marie-France Garaud (ind. Gaullist)	386,489; 1.33
Huguette Bouchardeau (ind. Socialist)	321,391; 1.10

COMMUNISTS SUPPORT MITTERRAND IN SECOND BALLOT

LD281520 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] Following the meeting of its central committee, the French Communist Party has called on its members and miltants to vote for Francois Mitterrand in the second ballot of the presidential election. Strictly speaking, the PCF leadership sets no conditions for this support for the Socialist candidate. But it calls for this choice with the aim of bringing together the best possible conditions to continue the struggle to satisfy its main demands and with a view to bringing about the creation of a leftwing union government in which the Communists will have their rightful place.

Marchais Statement

LD282129 Paris Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] On the left, one of the unknown factors of the second round of the presidential election was eliminated this afternoon. The PCF calls on its electors to vote for Francois Mitterrand.

Here are the precise terms of the communique, published following the PCF Central Committee meeting: Millions of you voted for Georges Marchais in the first ballot. We want to count on your support to beat Giscard d'Estaing and the politics of capitalism. The PCF again states its aims, however: to bring together the best possible conditions to proceed with the struggle, to obtain the indispensable anticapitalist reforms and to impose the establishment of a leftwing union government in which the Communists will have the place which is theirs.

Georges Marchais explained this once again just now at 2000 on television:

[Begin recording] We will have contributed to Mitterrand's victory. If we Communists don't call for a vote for Mitterrand, he will be beaten. It will not even be worth the trouble of going into the second ballot. He has the possibility to win, he can win because we have decided to call for a vote for Francois Mitterrand. Consequently, we have the right to make demands of him, and you know that I have been very clear. I am not a man who has one policy in the morning and another in the evening. I am not a man who speaks one way in Lille, another in Toulouse, another in Brest and another in Nancy. For example, I have said that we will not support a government which does not contain Communist ministers. This does not mean that we will not do what we did with the current government. For example, concerning the bill on voting at 18, we voted for this, we had it passed. But we will not support a government which does not include Communist ministers.

LE MONDE ANALYZES FIRST ROUND ELECTION RESULTS

LD290743 Paris LE MONDE in French 28 Apr 81 pp 1, 3

[L.F. commentary: "Double Success"]

[Text] The first round of the presidential election has resulted not in a victory for the left, whose overall percentage has increased little, but in a double success for the Socialist candidate. He has taken a strong lead over the Communist Party and is hot on the outgoing president's heels. The PS hasn't attained such a high percentage since the liberation. Those on the right who have been deploring its weakness in the face of the Communist Party for the past 30 years should welcome this.

Not at all. Scarcely had the first estimates been announced than the Giscardians revived their campaign and their slogan against the leftwing candidate--"hostage of the Communists."

The Communists' defeat--which was a complete collapse in the capital--has many causes, of course, and the main one is probably not the desire to cast a "useful vote." Only analysis, based not only on opinion polls but on on-the-spot investigations, make it possible to gauge to what extent the defeat is due to the style of the campaign and sectarianism (which discourage not only the intellectuals), to the workers' real situation (which has not deteriorated so much in all professions and all regions) and the conscious or unconscious desire for union by Communist voters who are less militant than the party members themselves.

The party can learn some very different lessons from this defeat. Either it can refuse more categorically than ever to be a supporting force for a left which is clearly dominated by the PS this time, or it can conclude that the leftwing agreement, which as an alliance has been broken, is the only way of reconstituting its election forces.

As soon as the first estimates were given, the Giscardians attacked the Socialists on the two closely linked themes of participation by Communist ministers and the choice of society. For the next 2 weeks, they will hammer these ideas home to the centrist voters and especially the Chirac voters, who are naturally tempted to defeat the outgoing president by any means available. One government member has even gone so far as to say that the choice in the second round would be between collectivism and freedom. Why not between fascism and freedom since the words have become meaningless?

Is this a reference to the Socialist plan? Although it does indeed contain more nationalizations than the French economy could stand, it could not lead to collectivism, and strict implementation of this plan would be rejected by the Left Radicals without whom, as is all too often forgotten, the left cannot win either in the presidential election or the parliamentary elections which would follow the dissolution [of the National Assembly]

While Mitterrand's election depends mainly on the transfer of Communist votes, Giscard d'Estaing's election depends on the transfer of the votes obtained by Chirac. The outgoing president's reelection would clearly reduce the significance of the relative success achieved by the Paris mayor, who has managed to justify the RPR's raison d'etre and safeguard its future.

But although it is true that there are fewer ideological differences between Giscard's and Chirac's supporters than there are between Socialists and Communists, the distribution of power is as difficult on the right as on the left. If Mitterrand wins, Chirac will appear to be the only recourse after the dissolution of the National Assembly.

The attitude adopted by the two "big" defeated candidates will be as important as the campaign waged by the two candidates still in the running. Nobody owns his votes, but there is an unmistakable way, whether clear or vague, of deterring voters from voting for one of the candidates. Meanwhile, whatever people say, the country is still completely divided. The public's state of mind determines this as much as the election system. This is one more reason why the media, especially radio and television, must now give a strictly equal place to the two second round candidates without waiting for the official campaign to start. This must be done for the sake of freedom.

FRANCE-SOIR PONDERS PROSPECTS FOR SECOND ROUND

LD290739 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 28 Apr 81 pp 1, 7

[Pierre Sainderichin editorial: "1974? No. 1981..."]

[Text] Valery Giscard d'Estaing is no Jimmy Carter.... Those who predicted a vote of repudiation or sanction against him were mistaken. However, it is true that the first round was nonetheless a warning vote to some degree--or even, in the eyes of his opponents, definitely so.

However, perhaps the most suprising feature in this round was the political stability of France despite the fact that it has been severely buffeted in recent years by the shock waves of international and national crises. Neither new elections nor the unavoidable wear and tear on the government, nor the opposition's wear and tear, have in fact breached this stability.

Politically, France has remained split into two parts, but the electoral system encourages confrontation between two types of society: between the traditional opposition, if we may say so, and the government, between the left and the majority.

This is how the polarization on both camps' most representative candidates, which has occurred even in the first round, can be explained. This polarization adversely affected the chances of Jacques Chirac and, especially, those of Georges Marchais.

So Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand are to confront each other again. But is it likely that their duel in 1981 will be a replay of the 1974 contest?

It is true that it looks as if that duel will be an extremely close contest with less than a three-point margin between the two finalists. But the context is no longer the same, and not only because of the international situation and the economic crisis.

On both sides, the long campaign preceding the first round has caused some perturbations. They will affect the second round.

A Communist Party, which no longer dominates a split left bereft of a common program, and a Gaullist party, rather disappointed with respect to its immediate hopes but which, however, will remain pugnacious at Jacques Chirac's prompting, are the political and psychological factors which must be taken into account.

The future cannot be built with the past, Jacques Chirac stated yesterday. This is true. As for Valery Giscard d'Estaing, he has declared that he will take into account, without exclusions or rancor, the anxieties expressed on Sunday. However, the present will weigh heavily on the 10 May round, and on its aftermath.

INDIA, VENEZUELA EXPECTED TO PURCHASE PLANES

Mirage 2000 for India

LD271335 Paris LE FIGARO in French 11-12 Apr 81 p 6

[Excerpts] Marcel Dassault disclosed yesterday that 150 Mirage 2000 fighter planes are to be ordered by India, making it the first foreign customer for the firm's latest product. Speaking on Europe 1, the French manufacturer added that the problems delaying deliveries of this aircraft to the French Air Force are now almost resolved.

The Mirage 2000, possibly delivered starting in 1983, should, by the nineties, be the main weapon of the French tactical air force, which hopes to receive some 400 of them in all to replace the Mirage III's as they are withdrawn from service. The orders approved by the government in 1980 were for 88 aircraft. This year, 22 have been ordered, but 21 Mirage F-1's have had to be ordered to compensate for the delay in the production of the Mirage 2000.

French relations with India, which have embarked on a development phase, have made possible the presentation of the aircraft in this country. Indian test pilots already have evaluated the new aircraft in flight and haven't concealed teir interest in its capabilities. The engineers of the Indian national company Hindustan Aeronautics Limited also don't conceal their very lively interest in the Mirage 2000. According to the French specialists, who met with them recently in Bangalore in southern India, Indian aircraft manufacturers believe that the aircraft should be built in India through the partial or total issue of the necessary licences. They add that the Mirage 2000 eventually would replace the Indian Air Force Jaguars which the government has just ordered from Britain and, at best, could coexist with the Jaguars, the first deliveries of which have been taken from Royal Air Force stock, while the rest should be manufactured in India by the country's own aeronautics industry.

Mirage 50, Jets for Venezuela

LD281229 Paris LE MONDE in French 26-27 Apr 81 p 8

[Text] Venezuela is talking to France about the purchase of Mirage 50 fighters and Alpha Jet training aircraft designed by the private Dassault-Breguet group and by the National Aircraft Engine Research and Construction Company. According to information obtained from an industrial source in Paris, a decision to order is expected during the second half of the year.

Indeed, a Venezuelan Air Force mission has been staying in France since the beginning of April and has seen demonstrations of the Mirage 50 at Cazaux (Gironde) and the Alpha Jet at Tours and Istres (Bouches-du-Rhone). Venezuelan pilots and technicians have made test flights in the two aircraft. The Mirage 50 is a Mirage III with the addition of the Mirage F-1's Atar 9K-50 jet and improved electronics. The Alpha Jet is a twin-jet training and tactical support aircraft.

Back in 1971, to replace its U.S.-made Sabre aircraft, Venezuela bought 16 Mirage III aircraft from France (including models of the simplified version known as the Mirage 5) which form a squadron based in Barqisimento.

LE MONDE SEES PARIS 'BLUNDER' ON LEBANON POLICY

LD290733 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Apr 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Blunder by Paris in Lebanon"]

[Text] France, formerly regarded as a "friend" of the Arab world, has for some days been the subject of bitter criticism in a number of capitals of the Near East and North Africa. From Algiers to Riyadh and from Damascus to Tunis, via Beirut, politicians and editors continue to attack the Paris initiative--now discreetly abandoned--which advocated the creation of a peace keeping "buffer" force in Lebanon.

Even the Christians in Lebanon, which the French Government appeared to be backing, have not been unanimous in appreciation of the international "protection" which Paris was offering them.

Without mentioning moderate or progressive leaders, at least two conservative figures--Camille Sham'un and Sulayman Franjiyah, former presidents of the republic--have declared their support before Bashir al'Jumayyil, chief of the Phalangist militias, for dialogue with Syria to resolve the conflict which has broken out again around the town of Zahlah. The Lebanese Government also protested the French Government's plan, denouncing it mainly for elaborating the plan "without consultations with the legitimate authorities in Lebanon."

In the face of this protest, and even before the French Government could begin to beat a retreat, the Israeli authorities--some of whom were apparently tempted to intervene militarily--applied themselves to the task of playing down the Zahlah conflict by asserting that, contrary to initial information, Damascus had in no way attempted a "genocide of Christians."

The moderation of the Begin government was appealed to during Haig's recent visit to Jerusalem. The U.S. secretary of state allegedly advised the Israelis to refrain from any action, whose only effect would be to restore Arab unity at the expense of the West. Haig probably did not foresee that the plan for an international force would in any case arouse so much negative reaction in Lebanon and the Near East, hence, his support for the French initiative during his stopover in Paris at the end of last week.

Since then, Washington has appreciably modified its stance, to judge by the friendly message which Ronald Reagan sent to President al-Asad on Wednesday, 15 April. Not only does the White House chief make no reference to the events in Lebanon, but he also assures his opposite number that "the Syrian people and leaders can play a central role in seeking a just peace in the Near East and in establishing security and stability in the region."

So the French Government remains alone in the face of the criticism of an initiative which was initially described as "French-American." Its relations with Lebanon have cooled, while relations with Syria and the PLO are strained. The credibility of Giscard d'Estaing's "Arab policy," which was readily identified in the Near East with General de Gaulle's policy, has been undermined. Definitely a blunder, but was it inspired--as various Arab editors suggest--by electoral motives? Wasn't Giscard d'Estaing still priding himself on Wednesday on working for peace...in Lebanon?

SPANISH KING ARRIVES, MEETS WITH PRESIDENT PERTINI

AU282005 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] Rome 28 Apr (ANSA)--Spain's King Juan Carlos met today with Italian chief-of-state Sandro Pertini for a political talk at the Quirinale Presidential Palace. Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia had arrived in Rome this morning for a three-day official visit to Italy.

Pertini welcomed the Spanish monarch with a long embrace, a gesture demonstrating his admiration for the young king who forcefully defended Spanish democracy against an attempted coup d'etat last February. King Juan Carlos was also presented to Italian Premier Arnaldo Forlani, Senate Speaker Amintore Fanfani, House Speaker Nilde Jotti, Constitutional Court President Leonetto Amadei and numerous cabinet members. The monarch also met with the diplomatic corps. This evening the royal couple will be guests at an official dinner at the Quirinale Palace.

Various Issues Discussed

AU290825 Rome ANSA in English 0800 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 29 Apr (ANSA)--Spain's King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia began the second day of their official visit to Italy today. Premier Arnaldo Forlani will host an official luncheon for the royal couple and this afternoon King Juan Carlos will meet with the Spanish community in the capital.

Tonight the monarch will offer a dinner at the Spanish Embassy in honor of Italian Head of State Sandro Pertini. The political dialogue between Italy and Spain will be continued at the Foreign Ministry level. This morning Italian Diplomatic Chief Emilio Colombo will receive his Spanish counterpart Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca in the first of a series of meetings.

The royal pair flew into Rome Tuesday for a three-day official visit. They were received at the Quirinale Palace by the head of state and the two men had their first political talks on a wide range of topics of interest to the two nations.

Pertini enquired especially into the attempted coup of February 23. The day ended with an official dinner offered by Pertini at the Quirinale Palace, attended by 170 eminent figures in the world of culture, politics, diplomacy and economics.

In toasts Juan Carlos underscored the cultural affinities which link Italy and Spain. He said that the two countries had a certain responsibility for the peace and prosperity of the area of the world to which they belong.

For a certain time in Europe, other concerns and priorities had placed the focus on "the problems and difficulties of other latitudes", Juan Carlos said. It was now time to ask if more attention should not be given to "shores of this sea which unites us: The peace and future of the world is played out here as well", he added.

In response, Pertini recalled the dramatic moments recently lived by the Spanish people during the aborted coup and commended the king upon his firm rejection of an authoritatian state. The majority of people in Spain and Italy alike love liberty and want a democratic regime, Pertini continued. He said it was "the specific duty of our political classes" to ensure the correct functioning of democracy. Pertini stressed that true European unity would never be achieved as long as nations like Spain and Portugal were left on the sidelines. He warned that the European Community risked becoming an alliance rather than a jumping-off point for definitive European unity and strongly pushed for full EEC membership for both Spain and Portugal.

ALGERIAN MINISTER COMMENTS ON ENERGY COOPERATION

LD281315 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 14 Apr 81 p 16

[Giorgio Migliardi undated interview in Rome with Algerian Energy Minister Belkacem Nabi]

[Excerpts] Rome--"The majority of European countries want to be more independent of oil as an energy source and believe that natural gas can make them more autonomous and independent. But it must not be believed that gas can be bought cheaply. Independence must be paid for and you also have to pay for security of supplies--a security which can be guaranteed with gas." This is what we were told by Algerian Minister of Energy and Petrochemical Industries Belkacem Nabi with regard to one of the greatest problems for the top officials of the National Hydrocarbons Agency who are involved in complex negotiations with their Algerian counterparts. The stakes are extremely high. We are talking about the great 2,500 km gas pipeline linking Algeria and Italy, which will be completed this year, albeit with some delay. And we are talking about our country's energy policy and cooperation agreements with Algeria and other African countries, which can open up enormous opportunities for Italian labor. However, so far, at least, there is no agreement on gas prices.

The Algerian minister, one of the most authoritative representatives of the select team in charge of the neighboring North African country's economy, seemed relatively optimistic: "We are bound to reach an understanding," he told us, "and to cooperate. The idea of integration between countries on the northern and southern coasts of the Mediterranean for the sake of development is making headway and this is consistent with our concern to make the Mediterranean a sea of peace and cooperation--not tension and conflicts." But, he added, to achieve these objectives, especially the objective of an interdependence based on cooperation and the development of both sides, there must be "a greater balance of relations." At present, this balance does not exist. We must act fast, because "many of the decisions that we take now will not take full effect until after 10 years' time."

"It is an abnormal situation," Minister Nabi said, "for the international gas trade in 1981 to be exclusively in the hands of the consumer countries and for them to be the ones to dictate its prices through their domestic tariff policies." I understand, he added, that consumers do not want the setting of prices to pass exclusively into the exporting countries' hands now. We asked Nabi whether it is possible to reach an understanding. Yes, he replied, if we accept what can be the best qualified and most impartial arbiter, namely "the international energy market," where there are balances which reflect the relationship between supply and demand. "Italy is demanding long term security of supplies, and we are demanding security of development of resources." In short, there are two problems to resolve: The setting of a starting price based on current prices (last Friday saw the announcement of an agreement between Algeria and Belgium for methane supplies on the basis of $4.8 per million British thermal units, equivalent to 193 kilowatt-hours); and the setting of indexes linked to "the evolution of world oil market prices," Nabi told us.

DEFENSE MINISTER VIEWS EUROMISSILES ISSUE

LD280929 Rome AVANTI in Italian 12-13 Apr 81 pp 1, 20

[Article by Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio: "While Moscow Grasps the Sword and Brandishes the Olive Branch"]

[Text] The Bonn meeting of NATO defense ministers provided an important thermometer for measuring the present temperature of relations between Europe and the United States. Haig and Weinberger, on their subsequent visits to European capitals, merely specified something that had become apparent in Bonn.

There is only one issue: What kind of face to show the Soviet Union now, at a time when Moscow is brandishing a sword with one hand and an olive branch with the other.

The Soviet sword is well known. In recent years the USSR has greatly strengthened its conventional and nuclear arsenals, purposely to secure, and in fact securing, a high degree of military superiority which seemed, and still seems, unjustified by the general climate of international detente confirmed in the 1975 Helsinki Treaty.

The olive branch is more recent, however. Moscow discovered it when it decided to square the accounts, at least in the Euromissiles field. The decision dates back to December 1979. The USSR tried to play safe by saying that if NATO opted for the Pershing and cruise missiles there would be no possibility of any negotiations. But as soon as the West showed that it was not changing its mind on this point, the Soviet Government progressively developed a "smiling offensive": first it agreed to begin preliminary negotiations in Geneva on the bilateral reduction of euromissiles; later it offered a moratorium; and then it specified that the moratorium is not a precondition and that negotiations can therefore be held even without freezing the status quo, namely the Soviet Union's military superiority.

Moscow's flexibility is an important factor. And this is what NATO has been discussing in Bonn over the past few days.

First, it had to be made clear whether there are any changes in the new U.S. administration's line. The Carter administration proved indecisive on strategic issues. It therefore had to be established whether the Reagan government would limit itself to a few modifications of the previous policy or whether it would thoroughly revise U.S. policy instead. During the election campaign the new president made no secret of his leaning toward the latter line. Nixon summed it up more completely in his book "The Real War," which is an out-and-out foreign policy blueprint for the new Republican administration.

But the real question in Bonn--more important than what stance the Americans want to adopt with respect to the Soviets--was the nature of Washington's policy with respect to Europe. Is it Kissinger's old bipolar policy--that is, the quest for direct relations between the superpowers--or is it a policy that lends priority to the link with the European allies?

All the Europeans posed the issue in the same way--and Italy led them in this. NATO, Europe said, is an alliance of independent, free and sovereign countries, jealous of their national prerogatives and equal dignity; it is a strictly defensive and geographically delimited military pact. The Atlantic allies can therefore also jointly consider a "division of labor," that is a sharing out of commitments and responsibilities according to each member's means within an agreed framework; there must be no thought of "blanket delegations;" the majority of Europeans, in other words, must not delegate to anyone else the handling of the alliance's principal political and strategic problems. Indeed, delegation conflicts with the spirit of NATO because it alters the spirit of equality among member states and thus harms the allies' political unity, which is is West's real persuasive strength.

Italy in particular stressed that it would never implement a decision which the Rome government had not helped to formulate. The United States provided repeated assurances on this point. Nothing will be done without prior consultations and without general agreement. If the words are matched by deeds, we will be witnessing a change of course which the Europeans (and Italians in particular, having been excluded from previous Western summit meetings) cannot fail to judge positive.

Thus, it was possible to proceed to the central problem of the moment. Are Europeans and Americans still agreed on the decision adopted at the end of 1979. when it was decided to modernize the Euromissiles? In other words, is NATO as a whole still convinced that the adjustment to the missiles balance and East-West negotiations must proceed hand-in-hand? Italy accepted the Euromissiles program on this specific condition, and it cannot relinquish it. In any case, the West's Euromissiles will only start to be ready in about spring 1984, so there are still 3 years in whch to try all negotiation methods. The aim of negotiations is to reduce these weapons in a balanced and guaranteed manner in both the Eastern and Western blocs; indeed, if possible, the aim of negotiations is to find a balance by eliminating missiles on both sides.

There was a diversity of assessments among the allies on the negotiations issue. The Americans believe that the "Polish case" is disrupting the negotiating climate and exerting adverse pressure on us. The Europeans too are convinced that if the Polish situation were to deteriorate rapidly, things could no longer remain as they are between East and West. But the use of force, that is an invasion, is one thing, and the state of tension that has existed for months is another--and nobody can forecast whether or when it will let up. If we make the starting of East-West negotiations dependent on the continuation or disappearance of this tension, the danger is that negotiations will never start.

The European thesis prevailed. Similarly, the Europeans managed to demonstrate the validity of another of their viewpoints, namely that the opening of negotiations must not be subordinated to the West's resumption of military superiority. This would be the path of generalized and unrestricted rearmament, while Europe must establish immediately whether negotiations are possible in the immediate future in order to avoid exposing itself to the fate of becoming a shooting gallery for the superpowers.

So in Bonn and in Haig's and Weinberger's conversations in Rome, there was honest talk between Europeans and Americans (and between Italians and Americans). The United States is making it known that it wants to leave a policy of negligence behind and to become a useful ally, that is, to surmount the worst points in the state of weakness and uncertainty in which it has found itself. The Europeans (and the Italians) are not challenging the United States on this point; but they do stress that an alternative to the rearmament race must be sought. Brezhnev's proposed moratorium, whereby the present balance of forces would be frozen, is regarded as insufficient by all Europeans. The advantageous position gained by the Eastern Bloc must be remedied, because balance is a precondition for a stabilization between East and West. Therefore, negotiations must start as soon as possible and must serve to initiate immediate discussion of the matter of the 200 Soviet SS-20s which have already been lined up against Europe and already have a firepower equivalent to that of the entire program for the Western Euromissiles, which are still at the study phase and will only begin to reach Europe in 3 years' time when the USSR will have in fact doubled the number of its launchpads, unless it is stopped first.

Therefore, these SS-20s cannot stay where they are, and their numbers must be reduced. This is what the Europeans want to discuss with the Soviets first. This is why, if the freeze proposed by President Brezhnev is not a precondition, negotiations must start right away. The Europeans (and the Italians) believe that they were not mistaken when they accepted the Euromissiles program in 1979. Our parliamentary opposition told us that Moscow would stop talking to us and that we would therefore be responsible for an exacerbation of the international tensions. In fact, the opposite happened. The Soviet smiling offensive began after that decision. Therefore, our decisions did not obstruct the path of negotiation, and in fact made it possible. Indeed, peace, which is related to realism and not to propaganda, is not served by talking about and concerning ourselves with only our own weapons, without opening our eyes to other countries' weapons.

CALVO-SOTELO AGAINST REFERENDUM ON NATO MEMBERSHIP

LD290847 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 25 Apr 81 p 13

[Unattributed report on Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo 24 April press conference in Madrid]

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo said yesterday that his cabinet has no intention of making the matter of Spain's entry into the Atlantic alliance the subject of a referendum. He also expressed his respect for Socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez' opinion that if his party wins the elections, he will withdraw Spain from NATO unless a referendum has already been held. Calvo-Sotelo added, however, that he did not believe in the possibility of a Socialist government in Spain in the near future.

"Neither impatience with regard to Spain's entry into NATO nor patience with regard to our EEC membership." This is how Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo summed up his government's latest foreign policy actions. At yesterday's press conference at the Council of Ministers, Calvo-Sotelo expressed satisfaction with the way the policy of consultation (he prefers to call it dialogue) is proceeding and gave assurance that now, 2 months from 23 February [reference to coup attempt], we are in a "normal" political situation.

The prime minister confirmed his position on Spain's "possible" membership of NATO as the implementation of one of the political objectives stated in his inaugural speech--he pointed out that this predated the unsuccessful coup d'etat--and strove to give the public the impression, as he did in his first appearance after his appointment, that we are in a normal political situation and that our democracy "is not supervised."

"Possible" NATO Membership

Replying to questions from several reporters, Calvo-Sotelo asserted that there is unanimous agreement within the armed forces in favor of NATO membership and that there is no intention to hold a referendum on the decision. With regard to the Socialist position on withdrawing Spain from NATO by means of a straight majority, since such a majority would be the basis for its membership, Calvo-Sotelo said that the considered the foremost opposition party's viewpoint correct, though he added: "I do not believe in the possibility of a Socialist government in the near future."

Satisfactory Dialogue With Opposition

With regard to the consultation--which the prime minister called dialogue--with the opposition of the autonomies, terrorism, foreign policy and the economic situation, Calvo-Sotelo said that on the first two topics, on which he said that there are no differences between the Union of the Democratic Center and the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, major steps forward had been taken. Specifically with regard to the autonomies, he stressed the establishment of a committee of experts "under the chairmanship of professor Garcia Enterria, a man of great prestige and independence," and pointed out that the committee has already been instructed to provide answers to questions raised with regard to the autonomies and that in 1-2 weeks' time these answers will probably serve as the basis for the envisaged political dialogue.

He acknowledged that, with regard to foreign policy, there is general agreement on EEC membership but that the disagreements on NATO membership persist. He also pointed out that there are greater differences concerning economic policy, despite which the government will continue with its aim of creating jobs and combating inflation following the administration's talks with the trade union confederations and the employers' organizations and following what he described as "a difficult path, though with hopes of agreement."

PCE'S CARRILLO COMMENTS ON NATO, SELF-CENSORSHIP

LD281242 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] [PCE Secretary General] Santiago Carrillo has been speaking about the consequences of Spain joining NATO. Here is what he had to say to our colleague Martin Rodriguez after his lecture last night at the Siglo-CCI club:

[Begin recording] I believe that to join NATO today would be to embark on a most dangerous course of action, to join a movement of events which is carrying the world toward Cold War and could well bring it to the brink of real war. To accept that nuclear war or nuclear confrontation is inevitable and that we have to put ourselves among those who may be burned to ashes is, in my view, an option which should not be offered seriously to the Spanish people, and it cannot be said that democracy depends on it. [end recording]

From the rostrum of the Siglo-CCI club, Carrillo had also complained about the self-censorship which has been practiced in parliament since 23 February. Here is how he put it:

[Begin recording] In recent weeks, parliament has reminded me of those journalists and writers who under the previous regime practiced self-censorship in order to avoid the official censorship. Some draft laws are now coming up which in practice will reduce the scope of civil liberties, and it is almost as though we ourselves wished to reduce this scope so that it will not be necessary for a coup to occur. [end recording]

Finally, Santiago Carrillo backed the Eurocommunist line in his party and expressed confidence that internal differences will be overcome:

[Begin recording] I believe that in essential matters, the party will save itself, and I repeat that the Spanish Communist Party will reaffirm its Eurocommunist policies.

JORDANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS WITH PEREZ-LLORCA

JN281507 Amman PETRA-JNA in Arabic 1440 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] Madrid, 28 Apr (PETRA)--Foreign Minister Marwan al-Qasim discussed with Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca at a meeting here today the latest international developments and the Middle East issue.

The Spanish minister stressed his country's clear and constant attitude toward the Arab-Israeli conflict. He also expressed his confidence in the continuation of the good relations between Spain and Jordan.

Al-Qasim briefed him on the international moves in the region in the last few weeks, particularly the visit U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig paid to the region.

Al-Qasim invited the Spanish minister to visit Jordan. He accepted the invitation and promised to fulfill it in the near future.

The meeting was attended by Jordan's ambassador in Madrid, Hani Khalifah, and a number of Spanish Foreign Ministry senior officials.

NORWAY

USSR ASKS POSTPONEMENT OF DEMARCATION TALKS

LD290725 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 24 Apr 81 p 12

[Morten Fyhn report]

[Text] The planned negotiations in May between Norway and the Soviet Union on the Barents Sea demarcation line have been postponed until the fall at a request from the Soviet Union. Foreign Ministry press spokesman Geir Grung informed AFTENPOSTEN of this.

The Russians have told the Norwegian Embassy in Moscow that practical reasons lie behind the request for a postponement, and Norway has accepted this explanation.

During Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund's visit to Moscow immediately before Christmas last year, it was agreed that Norway should take the initiative for a new round of talks on the demarcation line. At the beginning of January, an invitation was sent in which Norway proposed negotiations in Olso during the first half of May. The Russians only replied to the invitation 2 days ago by asking for a postponement. Norway has continually had the impression that the negotiations would take place in May, because clear signals have been given by representatives of the Soviet Embassy in Oslo that the invitation had been accepted.

There could be several reasons why the Russians want to postpone the negotiations. One of these could be that the postponement is a reaction to the recent Norwegian declaration of three Soviet citizens persona non grata in Norway as a result of their industrial espionage activities. The postponement could also be connected with the fact that the Soviet Union is busy working out a new policy for the northern areas. It is well-known that for several years, Norway has clearly signaled its willingness to reach a compromise by no longer adhering to its demand that a demarcation line be drawn on the median line principle. Norway has also clearly expressed its hopes that the Russians might also show their readiness to compromise by abandoning their sector line principle.

Regardless of the motives behind the request for a postponement, the result could be that a nonsocialist government in Norway could assume the responsibility for the negotiations, if the Labor Party loses power in the September Storting election. This would also mean that there would be little chance of Ambassador Jens Evensen's being chief Norwegian negotiator at the next round of talks. According to present plans, Evensen was to have led the negotiations with the Russians in May, as he has done in the past on several occasions; the most recent being 5 days of fruitless negotiations in Moscow last April.

TU FEDERATION INVITES SOLIDARITY TO VISIT

LD271301 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 23 Apr 81 p 35

[Text] The Polish independent trade union Solidarity has been invited to Norway. The invitation was sent just before Easter. It is still not known for certain whether it will be possible for a delegation from Solidarity to visit Norway, AFTENPOSTEN has been told.

"The intention is that we should discuss practical cooperation between Solidarity and the Norwegian Trade Union Federation in greater detail," federation international secretary Karre Sandegren told AFTENPOSTEN.

Sandegren visited Poland in February this year, where he discussed the possibility of a Polish visit to Norway. During his stay in Poland, Sandergren was also in contact with the so-called Union Coordination Committee, which is what is left of the old trade union movement. There was also time for talks with the leaders of another [unspecified] autonomous trade union organization, which today has 700,000-800,000 members.

"If a Polish delegation does come from Solidarity, it would not be a political visit but a working visit during which we would discuss a number of practical questions for future cooperation," Sandegren said.

MINISTER QUESTIONS VALUE OF U.S. NATO REPORT

LD270933 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 14 Apr 81 p 7

[Thor Viksveen interview with Norwegian Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg--date not given]

[Text] "I am not convinced that this type of 'report card' on other NATO nations' defense endeavors gives the best results for cooperation. I think that it could rather create negative reactions in the countries mentioned, and thus contribute to a weakening of cooperation."

Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg told ARBEIDERBLADET this in a commentary on a U.S. report on the European NATO nations' defense efforts presented to the House Armed Services Committee.

A subcommittee of the armed services committee undertook an analysis of military endeavors after a trip to several NATO actions last fall. The report states for instance that in the last few years, Norway has made considerable progress in its work to improve the efficiency of its armed forces and to improve NATO cooperation on the north flank. "But these efforts bear no relation to the growing Soviet threat, nor are they sufficient to remove the weaknesses in Norwegian defenses," the report states.

As far as Norway's investments in monetary terms are concerned, the report says that the country must spent more and restructure priorities so that greater importance is attached to the defense forces. If this does not happen, it will not augur well for joint efforts to maintain a credible deterrent capability vis-a-vis Soviet military advances in northern Norway, says the report, which has been written by a number of congressmen and has now been submitted to the House Armed Services Committee.

"I do not see either this or comparable earlier U.S. reports on Norway's NATO efforts as a problem. We always come out of such assessments quite well. However, in general I must say I am skeptical about such 'report cards.'"

[Question] Do you see such reports as a strain on the cooperative relationship?

[Answer] All countries--including the United States--are worried about their national dignity. For this reason one should be careful about giving grades like this. It is perfectly reasonable and understandable for the United States to be concerned about European NATO endeavors, but I am skeptical of the way in which this occurs. There are other ways of cooperating which would lead to more positive results.

[Question] Is there a tendency in such reports to assess defense spending and efforts in isolation from a country's general economic situation?

[Answer] It is too easy to assess defense efforts in isolation. Our capacity is always dependent on the country's total security. And this covers the country's political, social, economic and military situation.

[Question] Do you have the impression that within NATO there is no longer a tendency to assess an individual country's contribution merely on the basis of defense spending, but also on the basis of its forces' effectiveness, for example?

[Answer] That is probably true, but this does not mean that such considerations do free us from the economic commitments we have already made. [answer ends]

As far as the report that has been published is concerned, Stoltenberg stressed that there has never been a time when the objective has been to create regional balance in the north. "The United States had also conceded that the balance must be seen in a broader context," the minister said.

SWEDEN

PAPER OFFERS REASONS FOR FAVORING JAS-NY AIRCRAFT

LD281403 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 22 Apr 81 p 2

[Editorial: "After the Viggen"]

[Text] In 10 years' time, the first division of AJ 37 Viggen aircraft will reach retirement age. In this context, 10 years are quite a short time. For this reason, various bodies are hard at work looking into the question of which aircraft should replace the Viggen.

The defense forces' materiel department is at present studying tenders for a number of U.S. systems, of which the F-16 is probably the best known--and has been purchased by Norway, Denmark, Belgium and The Netherland, among others.

At the same time, Saab is hard at work producing its own tender for the so-called JAS-NY--initials which stand for "Jakt, Attack, Spaning" [interception, attack and reconnaissance]--in other words an aircraft able to carry out all the tasks the defense forces require.

Since the work is far from finished and since it is surrounded by strict secrecy for obvious reasons, it is not yet possible even to guess whether Swedish industry will be able to show that it is capable of meeting the U.S. challenge--the toughest in our industrial history.

However, the two important reasons why Sweden should preserve its own capacity for the development of combat aircraft are still as urgent as ever.

First, this would give us the opportunity to acquire a system which from the very beginning would be tailormade for our needs.

And second, it would--as Commander in Chief General Ljung has pointed out--emphasize for the rest of the world our unshaken resolve to preserve both our defense capacity and our neutrality.

These reasons are--as SVENSKA DAGBLADET has often pointed out--the decisive considerations here.

But the fact that the deal would also involve around 7,000 job opportunities in advanced industry and several billions in the balance of trade are hard facts which the government can hardly ignore....

TURK'S GENERAL SAYS GREEK CYPRIOT SIDE REARMING

NC280836 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 20 Apr 81 p 3

[Resat Akar report from Nicosia]

[Text] Brigadier General Kemal Yavuz, commander of the TFSC Security Forces, has drawn attention to the fact that the Greek Cypriot side is rapidly rearming and urged the Turkish Cypriot community to be vigilant at all times.

Addressing a meeting he organized to officially mark the commencement of the duties of the "Association for the Strengthening of the Security Forces," which was attended by state authorities, military personnel and representatives of the press, Brigadier General Kemal Yavuz said: "If we do not protect our security forces, our enemy's forces stand to gain most. We are strong today. But we must not forget that the Greek Cypriots are strong too and they are speeding up their war preparations."

Stating that the efforts to be exerted will provide the finest example of the unity between the "army and the nation," Commander Kemal Yavuz added that the prerequisite for the preservation of the liberated territory is to cherish and protect the security forces.

Brigadier General Yavuz then asked the three principal leaders of the Turkish Cypriot community to the rostrum to address the gathering. Delivering the first speech, Faiz Kaymak said: "We have shed much blood to make this struggle successful. We have achieved everything through the aid of our fatherland, which is why we will not surrender the land we hold to the Greek Cypriots." Dr Fazil Kucuk said: "We do not care for rightist or leftist ideologies. The left has neither a following nor depth. We must silence those who preach that all peoples are brothers. If all people were brothers, the Greek Cypriots would not have shed Turkish blood for years."

TFSC President Rauf Denktas said that the Greek Cypriots are equipped with modern missiles and that they are waiting for an opportune moment to annihilate the Turkish Cypriot community. He added that this would not be allowed to happen.

PAPER SAYS GOBBI OPTIMISTIC ON TALKS DEVELOPMENTS

NC281459 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 28 Apr 81 p 1

["Exclusive" interview granted by UN Special Representative Hugo Gobbi to O KIRIKAS correspondent Dhimitris Andreou; date not given]

[Excerpts] The chat with Hugo Gobbi took place in his office at the headquarters of the international peace force in the vicinity of Nicosia airport. The chat was friendly and cordial. The recent agreement on missing persons gave impetus to the discussion. Gobbi did not hide his satisfaction.

Gobbi: The agreement is the culmination of a large-scale effort. This is a purely humanitarian question and the UN has demonstrated a strong interest in its solution. The achievement of an agreement, he added, is in no way a victory for Cyprus.

Andreou: What will be the next step?

Gobbi: The committee will take over the question of missing persons. It will study the ways and means in order to establish the situation on the missing persons. This is a delicate as well as an important task which the committee will have to undertake.

Andreou: Will investigations extend to Turkey?

Gobbi: I cannot give you a concrete answer, because all this is under the committee's jurisdiction. The committee will operate on the basis of consensus as much as possible. It will function like every other committee in its effort to establish cases of persons mentioned as missing.

Andreou: Apart from the agreement on missing persons there has been no significant progress during the intercommunal dialogue. As you know we are in the eighth month of negotiations.

Gobbi does not appear to share this viewpoint.

Gobbi: One year ago everything was in total paralysis. We managed to have the intercommunal talks restarted. This is a very considerable achievement. We also managed to have the best atmosphere ever in the history of the inter-Cypriot talks. We must admit that something is moving, that something is showing progress. Yet on such problems we cannot expect progress from one day to the next.

Gobbi: The offer of good services is an art. It is like a dive into dangerous waters, where the diver must not bellyflop. If I reveal details I would be making a very dangerous dive. Therefore, allow me to continue our dialogue on the surface.

Andreou: Then what is the role of the United Nations? Is it the role of a spectator or of the protangonist?

Gobbi: We will be the protagonists.

Andreou: When?

Gobbi: Time, as you know, in this type of political development cannot be forecast with ease. Yet, as soon as the two sides give me some form of green light, then the secretary general will proceed toward a more inventive approach. In some way the United Nations will undertake the role of the protagonist in the approach.

Andreou: When do you believe that this will take place?

Gobbi: We must wait until the elections.

Andreou: Until after July?

Gobbi: Until July.

Andreou: My chat with Gobbi then turned to the recent meeting between UN Secretary General Waldheim and Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen. I asked whether the expected developments are the result of this meeting.

Gobbi: The only thing I know is that the secretary general was very satisfied with the meeting. In the past the secretary general has had such meetings with Rolandhis and Mitsotakis. We sincerely believe there are elements which justify optimism.

Andreou: Will the Turks be submitting specific proposals on the territorial issue after July? Are these the new elements? Will they be submitting proposals?

Gobbi: My impression from the start of the talks is that there will be an open and clear discussion on all issues, sooner or later. The territorial issue is one of these issues.

Gobbi: I believe that after a long time in discussions, the conditions today are far more ripe for achieving results. If I succeed this will not be due to my personal efforts or my predecessors.

Andreou: And if the talks should fail?

Gobbi: We would have lost a unique opportunity. I believe that it would be very difficult in the future to recapture the mobility we have today, to have this quality of dialogue once again. Today we have so many favorable elements which would disappear if the talks are wrecked. I prefer not to think of such an eventuality.

O AGON Skeptical

NC290804 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 29 Apr 81 p 2

[From the "Our Positions" column: "Developments in July"]

[Text] Gobbi, the special representative of the UN secretary general foresees developments next July, that is, after the elections have been held both on our side and in the occupied areas. He connects such developments to some UN initiative. This Gobbi statement appears to coincide with information from other sources about developments in the interim. As to the UN initiatives, we have repeatedly argued that this international organization cannot forever remain inactive and in doing so give the impression of being an impassive observer.

As for possible developments, however, we continue to have reservations, learned from past experience. For years now, every 6 months or so we have had statements about time limits for developments. Time passes, but there are no developments. This is because under one excuse or another--very often without any excuse at all--Turkey refuses to negotiate in a way which would make the talks basic and fruitful. Turkey's refusal to submit specific proposals by insisting, in its traditional tactics, upon the establishment of criteria--which in any case do exist within the two agreements which are the basis for the talks--make the conduct of any dialogue impossible. We have the impression that Turkey will follow the same tactics once again in July.

NEW 'SOCIAL JUSTICE PARTY' FORMED IN NORTH

NC290751 Nicosia BOZKURT in Turkish 28 Apr 81 p 1

[Text] Nicosia, (BOZKURT)--The eighth political party in Cyprus, which has chosen scales as its emblem and social justice as its name, was introduced to the press yesterday by its leader, Selahattin Oztokatli. Stating that the names of the founder members will be announced later, Oztokatli added that the majority of the founders would be composed of Cypriot citizens possessing Turkish nationality, who would participate in the coming elections throughout the island. Selahattin Oztokatli further stated that he has been trying unsuccessfully for the past 6 years to acquire Cypriot citizenship. If his efforts succeed, he too would participate in the general elections. Oztokatli also said that the majority of the candidates are Cypriot citizens of Turkish nationality and that candidates for election would be chosen according to the characteristics of the region. Holding a press conference at Saray Hotel yesterday, Selahattin Oztokatli stated that the Social Justice Party is wholeheartedly devoted to the principles and reforms of Ataturk, and the prime aim of the party is to serve the people.

AKEL CENTRAL COMMITTEE ISSUES MAY DAY MESSAGE

NC250800 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 25 Apr 81 p 1

["Text" of AKEL Central Committee May Day message]

[Text] Workers, employees, farmers, working people, women, young people, democrats, patriots: On the occasion of May Day, the international day specifically celebrated by workers and working people, the AKEL Central Committee addresses to all of you a warm militant greeting.

We greet the thousands of uprooted refugees, the mourning relatives of those who have been unjustly slain and of the missing. We greet the enclaved people, all of whom are victims of the traitorous coup and Attila's barbaric invasion. We address to all of you a greeting of hope, faith and optimism for a better future.

We greet the indomitable and proud Cyprus people who, with the working class and all the patriots and democrats in the vanguard, with faith and enthusiasm, are waging a struggle against imperialism, against occupation and for liberation, for a peaceful, just, mutually acceptable and viable solution to the Cyprus problem. We greet the Turkish Cypriots, the democratic patriotic forces, the workers and the working people for the tough and hard struggle they are waging in the midst of very difficult conditions. We address our greeting to all the people of the world who are struggling for freedom, independence, social and economic progress, for socialism.

Patriots, May Day is dedicated to the struggles and sacrifices of workers, employees, farmers and generally to all those who work either with their hands or brains--the people who toil for a higher living and cultural standard. May Day expresses the loftiest and noblest ideals of the working people, women and young people for democracy, for social justice, for a joyful, peaceful and happy future. These lofty patriotic ideals inspire our island's working class and working people in their struggles. With these ideals as their banner, the workers, employees, farmers and other working people of Cyprus have struggled and have achieved significant victories and conquests. This international day of the workers and working people this year coincides with a political struggle in Cyprus of immense significance for the people and their future--the struggle of parliamentary elections, the struggle for the election of a parliament that will be democratic, patriotic in its overwhelming majority and in which the EOKA B forces that committed the traitorous coup, the forces of chauvinism and extreme right plutocratic reaction will have the most restricted representation possible.

In order to honor suitably this year's May Day, in order to honor suitably the ideals May Day represents, the AKEL Central Committee addresses itself to all democrats and patriots, to the workers and employees, farmers and professional people and small businessmen, women and young people with the following appeal:

--Join the May Day gatherings;
--Convert May Day parades into manifestations of unprecedented impressiveness;
--Through your mass participation in May Day gatherings and parades declare your faith in May Day's ideals and your will in the struggle for the triumph of these ideals;
--Declare your resolution for a parliament that will truly be a militant bastion for our people's tough and difficult struggle against occupation, imperialism, and for liberation. Strive for a democratic parliament against the Rally Party with AKEL-left as the first party;
--Strive for a parliament that will struggle;
--For a peaceful, just and mutually acceptable and viable solution to the Cyprus problem;
--For the eradication of mistrust and the elimination of the separatist wall of hate between Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots, for the restoration of mutual trust, friendship and cooperation between them, for a common fatherland of all Cypriots--Greeks, Turks, Armenians and Maronites;
--For a higher living and cultural standard, for a more human and dignified life for workers, farmers and all working people.

With its profound political content and the lofty and noble ideals it represents, May Day dictates:

--Forward for a democratic, patriotic parliament against the Rally Party and for AKEL-left as the first party in it!
--Long live May Day, the international day of struggle and solidarity of all working people!
--Long live the indomitable, proud Cyprus people!
--Forward for a splendid victory in the parliamentary elections of 24 May!
--Forward for majestic May Day gatherings and parades!

FOREIGN MINISTRY: TALKS WITH TURKEY RESCHEDULED

NC282021 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] The Foreign Ministry has issued the following statement:

Press reports about an interruption in the Greek-Turkish dialogue are inaccurate. Within the framework of this continuing dialogue, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis will meet with his Turkish counterpart Turkmen at 1800 on 3 May in Rome. As usual, the two ministers will discuss all issues existing between the two countries. A meeting between the secretaries general of the two countries' Foreign Ministry will not be realized because the experts have not completed the preparation of pertinent matters.

MILLIYET SUMMARIZES INTERVIEW WITH AVEROF

NC281150 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 22 Apr 81 p 7

["Summary" of undated interview granted by Greek Defense Minister Averof to THA correspondent in Athens]

[Text] Question: In what direction do you feel progress is being made in the talks between Turkey and Greece on the Aegean issue? The Greek press believes that the talks are heading toward a deadlock. Would you kindly state your views on this?

Answer: As far as I am concerned, there are no indications that the talks are headed for a deadlock. On the contrary, some progress has been made on some points, while there are still divergent views on some others. Nevertheless, I can say that, generally speaking, the issues under discussion have been clarified and that they are being jointly tackled. It is difficult to discuss details at this moment, because the issue is very complicated. As you know, it even involves international law, which is being interpreted by both countries differently. Turkey says it is going to implement the articles of the international law; Greece says the same thing. But what we each wish to say are two different things. If I am to express my viewpoint in a broader sense, I would have to say that mutual trust is the most important factor.

Question: How can Turkey and Greece strengthen their cooperation in the defense of NATO's southeastern wing?

Answer: I believe that this cooperation will be automatically secured by the fact that both countries form part of NATO's structure. Both countries are cooperating in matters concerning planning, maneuvers and other issues. We may have some insignificant difference on such matters as airspace, but I do not think that delay in resolving these differences will affect our military cooperation.

Question: Would you please express your views regarding the political developments in Turkey?

Answer: As someone who is devoted to democracy and who did not for a moment refrain from defending democracy even against the occupation forces when Greece was under Nazi and Fascist occupation, I believe that democracy has a right to defend itself. I believe that the Turkish Armed Forces have taken over the administration solely to protect democracy. Because, if I am not mistaken, there cannot be democracy in a country where approximately 5,000 people are killed in the streets every year. The democratic ground currently being prepared in Turkey is such that General Evren has repeatedly stated that there will be a return to democracy as soon as conditions permit. I have heard much about him over the years. He is a very intelligent person and he loves democracy.

PROSECUTION DEMANDS DEATH SENTENCE FOR NAP LEADERS

TA291128 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1005 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] Death sentences have been demanded for Nationalist Action Party [NAP] leader Alpaslan Turkes and 219 rightist suspects in a case opened by the Ankara Martial Law Command military prosecutor. The Ankara Martial Law Command military prosecutor completed the investigation about the NAP and its leaders and is charging a total of 587 persons at the Martial Law Command 1st Military Court.

The Ankara Martial Law Command military prosecutor issued the following announcement in connection with the suit: A public suit was opened against a total of 587 persons at the Ankara Martial Law Command 1st Military Court on 29 April 1981. Of the suspects, 64, including Alpaslan Turkes, are being charged under paragraph 1 of Article 146 of the Turkish penal code, and 156 are being charged under paragraph 2 of Article 149 of the penal code. They are charged with ignoring the constitutional principles and other laws on public order; (?trying to impose) the idealist-nationalist view which aims at ruling the state under their leader Alpaslan Turkes; dividing the Turkish nation--which is indivisible and which shares a common fate, sorrow and happiness--into idealists and communists with the support of the NAP and with the help of legal and illegal associations; using force in a deliberate and systematic way and within an organized and centralist order; creating a vacuum of authority among the masses as a result of terrorism and filling this vacuum through brute force; establishing, under the guise of a political party, an organization and terrorist cells in the social structure, in the political arena, in the administration of the law and the state and in the economic structure with the aim of ruling the society and the state; and going through the stages of training, consciousness-forming, conditioning, guiding, organizing, arming and planning and reaching the last stage, the stage of action under the guise of trying to save Turkey from the communist attacks or from a communist order.

They are also being charged because of their attitude toward those who did not agree with them--not recognizing such persons' right to work, study or even live--and for pushing the Turkish people toward unease, pessimism and lack of confidence in the state and against the order and existence of the state; disrupting the unity and solidarity of the Turkish people; their hateful activities which went so far as to kill or have killed the persons who did not agree with them--what they considered enemies; for creating the impression that the legal order and legal rights were not to be used and that the police force is untrustworthy; making use of the lack of authority which was created in this pessimistic and negative anarchistic situation; and for their efforts to rule the state under their "only leader" Alpaslan Turkes and under partisans of the idealist view, in opposition to the constitutional order.

It has been decided that there is insufficient evidence against 141 suspects, 23 of them under detention, and the files against 146 suspects who have not been captured have been put aside.

Paragraph 1 of Article 146, under which the military prosecutor is charging Turkes and 63 of his colleagues, reads as follows: Those who try to change or abolish part or all of the Turkish Constitution or those who try, by force, to abolish the Grand National Assembly which was established by the constitution or to prevent it from functioning are sentenced to death.

Paragraph 2 of Article 149 envisages the death sentence for those who cause a revolution or massacre by arming people and inciting them to kill each other.

Our correspondent has learned that 16 members of the NAP General Administrative Council are among those whom the prosecutor is asking for the death sentence. The prosecutor is asking for life imprisonment for the remaining 21 members.

UK'S GILMORE HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE AFTER CONTACTS

TA281210 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] British Deputy Foreign Secretary Sir Ian Gilmore has said that the Turkish Government has clearly demonstrated its intention to return to democracy as soon as possible. Sir Ian Gilmore, who arrived in Ankara 2 days ago, held a news conference after concluding his contacts. At the news conference, Sir Ian Gilmore said he came to Turkey with the aim of seeing the situation in the country. Noting that the country was in a dreadful state at the time the 12 September operation was carried out, Sir Ian Gilmore added that therefore Britain received the operation with understanding and was hopeful about the future. He said that Britain will continue to observe developments in Turkey with interest.

Replying to reporters' questions, he said Britain believes that Turkey's continued membership in the Council of Europe will be very beneficial but that this is an issue that concerns that body.

Pointing out that Britain condemns attacks directed against Turkish diplomats, Sir Ian Gilmore concluded by saying that it understands the Turkish stand on the issue.

Foreign Ministry Comments

TA281604 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1520 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 28 Apr (AA)--Talks held in Ankara between Britain's Lord Privy Seal and Deputy Foreign Secretary Sir Ian Gilmore and Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen focused on the Middle East in particular, Foreign Ministry sources said.

Sir Ian noted during the negotiations there were some common misconceptions about the Rapid Deployment Force.

The force was not envisaged merely for the Middle East and the Gulf region, Sir Ian specified. He added such a force would be deployed only at the request of the states concerned in the region.

The two sides agreed the Arab-Israeli dispute lay at the root of the Middle East question. Any realistic settlement of the question would have to take the Palestine issue into consideration, they further agreed, and U.S. influence could be a major factor in such a settlement.

Turkey confirmed her "full impartiality" with regard to the Iran-Iraq war.

Sir Ian Gilmore pointed out British aid to Turkey under the OECD consortium should not be expected to go beyond the 15 million pounds pledged in view of the current economic difficulties faced by Britain.

A preliminary agreement was reached on setting up an Anglo-Turkish trade chamber in Turkey in order to increase the volume of trade between the two countries.

ROMANIAN CHIEF OF STAFF BEGINS OFFICIAL CONTACTS

TA281233 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] Romanian Chief of the General Staff Maj Gen Vasile Milea has begun his official contacts in Ankara. Major General Milea visited the chief of the General Staff headquarters this morning. He was received by the deputy chief of the General Staff, Gen Necdet Oztorun. Head of State Gen Kenan Evren received Major General Milea at 1000.

In a statement during the meeting, General Evren said that economic and cultural relations between Turkey and Romania have always been developing. He added: I believe that our military contacts will greatly contribute to these relations. Major General Milea later visited the ground forces war school. The visiting chief of staff will leave Turkey on 1 May.

LIBYAN TRADE DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR TALKS

TA271345 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 26 Apr 81

[Text] A Libyan trade delegation arrived in Ankara today for talks with Turkish officials. The five-man Libyan delegation is comprised of representatives of various food companies. The delegation will hold talks with officials from the Commerce Ministry and affiliated organizations on increasing trade between the two countries. It was learned that the delegation will move to purchase sheep, meat and olive oil from Turkey.

Meets Industrialists

TA281230 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] The Libyan trade delegation which is in Ankara is continuing its contacts. The delegation members met with industrialists and exporters at the Turkish Union of Chambers this morning. Problems obstructing trade between the two countries were voiced at the meeting. The chairman of the Union of Chambers, Mehmet Yazar, requested that money owed to Turkish firms be transferred without delay, that quality control procedures be undertaken in Turkey and that the congestion at the Tripoli port be eliminated. Head of the Libyan delegation and director general of the Libyan foodstuff company (Mustafa Zgali) said that Turkish firms should definitely fulfill their contracts on time and solve the packaging problem. He added that trade between the two countries will develop in proportion to the acceptance of Turkish products by Libyan consumers. The delegation later began discussions with exporters.

ENVOY IN IRAN CONDEMNS ARMENIAN DEMONSTRATIONS

TA281542 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1528 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 28 April (AA)--Turkey's Ambassador to Tehran Tanju Bleda said on Iranian television that the 23 April demonstrations by a group of Armenians in front of the Turkish Embassy aimed at disrupting Turkish-Iranian friendship.

Such incidents, which the Iranian Government had announced it would not again allow, could not hurt the friendship between Turkey and Iran, he declared, based on common moral and religious values and close neighborly relations. The Turkish Government was satisfied with the assurance by Iranian authorities that they would bring the offenders to justice, Ambassador Bleda added.

FOREIGN MINISTRY ANNOUNCES CHANGED TALKS SCHEDULE

TA281618 Ankara ANATOLIA in French 1558 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 28 Apr (AA)--The Foreign Ministry spokesman has announced that the meeting of the Turkish and Greek Foreign Ministries general secretaries to be held in Rome on 30 April has been indefinitely postponed. The spokesman said that the foreign ministers of the two countries would meet in Rome on 3 May as scheduled, and added that the general secretaries would meet at a later date. The spokesman denied reports to the effect that Turkey had asked for the postponement of the meeting because Greece rejected the Turkish note protesting the anti-Turkish demonstrations held by Armenians in the Greek capital city.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 083 30 April 1981

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Expectations for NATO Spring Conference Outlined J 1
Genscher Favors East-West, Intra-German Talks J 1
Restates Commitment to Detente J 1
Schmidt Cited on PLO, OPEC Pricing Policy [Riyadh AR-RIYAD 20 Apr] J 2
Chancellor Visits Saudi Arabia; Discusses Talks [cross-reference] J 4
DIE WELT Commentary J 5
FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU View J 5
FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Article J 6
SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG on Lifting of U.S. Embargo [27 Apr] J 6
JUSOS Ask Termination of NATO Counterarming J 7
[FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU 30 Apr]

FRANCE

AFP Reports on PCF Support for Mitterrand K 1
Mitterrand 'Not Surprised' by PCF Decision K 1
General Labor Confederation Endorses Mitterrand K 1

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Spanish King Continues Visit With Talks, Dinner L 1
Foreign Minister Receives Somali Vice President L 1
PCI's Berlinguer Talks With Lebanon's W. Junblatt [L'UNITA 17 Apr] L 1

PORTUGAL

PCP's Alvaro Cunhal Comments on Party Progress [EXPRESSO 17 Apr] M 1

NORDIC AFFAIRS

SWEDEN

Editorial on 'Cynical Game' of Food Weapon [DAGENS NYHETER 25 Apr] P 1
Briefs: Aid to Tanzania P 1

UNITED KINGDOM

Reportage on Visit of Egyptian Minister of State Q 1
Meeting With Carrington Q 1
Dialogue With Conservatives Q 1

CYPRUS

New Round of Intercommunal Talks Begins R 1
North Announces Session [Bayrak Radio] R 1
Next Round Scheduled 6 May R 2
Foreign Minister Rolandhis Departs for Oman R 2
Registration of Social Justice Party Rejected [Bayrak Radio] R 2

TURKEY

General Evren, Force Commanders Observe Exercise T 1
Death Penalty Demanded for 57 Dev-Yol Members T 1
Paper Interviews Turkmen on Relations With Greece [CUMHURIYET 26 Apr] T 1
GUNAYDIN Urges Understanding by Greek Politicians [23 Apr] T 3
NATO's Commander Crowe Arrives in Istanbul T 4
Negotiations With France on Visa Requirements End T 4
Council Approves Economic Agreements With Iraq T 4
Turkey To Be Represented at Council of Europe T 5
Council Report Favorable T 5
VOTCP Urges Punishment for Turkes, NAP Leaders T 5
Paper on Role of Various Powers in Kurdish Problem [YANKI 20-26 Apr] T 6
TERCUMAN Attacks Ecevit Opposition Articles [22 Apr] T 7
Communist Leader Bilen Delivers May Day Speech [VOTCP] T 7
Briefs: Weapons Seized T 10

EXPECTATIONS FOR NATO SPRING CONFERENCE OUTLINED

LD291506 Hamburg DPA in German 1123 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 29 Apr (DPA)--Bonn expects a clear signal for the continuation of the arms control talks with Moscow from the NATO spring conference of foreign ministers, which begins in Rome on Monday. German diplomatic circles also expect a framework of dates to be set for negotiations on medium-range missiles. This signal for negotiations, about which Bonn is fairly certain, will be part of a formal, renewed confirmation of the NATO twin decision of December 1979 on readiness to negotiate and on counterarming.

Furthermore, German diplomats are hoping for a precise mandate for a European disarmament conference at which all-European confidence-building measures will have priority. The German side attaches very great importance to the Rome meeting because, with the new U.S. administration participating for the first time, it is intended to underline the Western alliance's solidarity in all its security and foreign policy aspects. It is stressed in Bonn that the allies have not been left in doubt about the enormous German interest in such a demonstration of unity, including the signal regarding negotiations.

It also has been learned that Foreign Minister Genscher will point out to his colleagues in Rome the three German basic principles on Poland which have so far, at least, been successful and which could lead to the creation of the renewal desired by Poland: strict noninterference; readiness for economic assistance and stabilization of East-West contacts.

Under the most important, basic concept of "Western unity," German diplomats also want to work for the continuation of the Madrid CSCE followup conference until a final declaration of substance is made.

GENSCHER FAVORS EAST-WEST, INTRA-GERMAN TALKS

LD292242 Hamburg DPA in German 2025 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] Berlin, 29 Apr (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher again has come out in favor of disarmament negotiations with the Soviet Union. In an interview with VOLKSBLATT BERLIN (Thursday edition), Genscher declared that there is no doubt that the West wants to hold negotiations with Moscow on medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe "without preconditions." He expressed his belief that next week's NATO spring session in Rome would give the relevant "signal."

Genscher said the aim of the Federal Government is "to ensure that the Soviet Union finally removes its forward missiles, which endanger the survival of our entire people. Only then, can we do without counterarming." He told the critics of the NATO dual decision that anyone who now jeopardizes these accords "negates the security interests of our country." Moreover, the question of the FRG's partnership commitment and its internal credibility will be put in doubt if after the election the government acts inconsistently with how it spoke before the election.

Genscher also favors a meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker. The important thing now is to use every possibility for a dialogue without reservations and conditions to find out whether and where progress is possible. "I would be glad if the dialogue could be conducted at the highest level."

Restates Commitment to Detente

LD291346 Hamburg DPA in German 1222 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 29 Apr (DPA)--Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FDP chairman and federal foreign minister, has given a clear commitment to detente policy.

In a statement for May Day, published in Bonn today, Genscher stresses that detente policy must be continued "despite, or particularly because of, the threatening world situation." In some FDP circles, suspicion has been expressed recently that Genscher is distancing himself from the policy of detente, which is one of the strongest links in the social-liberal alliance.

Genscher stressed that detente policy, on the basis of guaranteed defense capability, is a long-term concept; it cannot be refuted when it suffers reverses. Contact between East and West especially must not be broken off when conflicts occur. In the efforts to continue the policy of detente, "we are relying on the support of the trade unions and we are grateful for it," Genscher stated.

Pointing to the high degree of internal stability and external peace which the years following the war brought the Federal Republic, Genscher praised the trade unions, "which, as representatives of the workers and employees, have rendered great service in preserving social peace."

SCHMIDT CITED ON PLO, OPEC PRICING POLICY

LD291513 Riyadh AR-RIYAD in Arabic 20 Apr 81 pp 5, 17

[Interview granted by FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn to Muhammad al-Jahlan, Ahmad Mahmud and Khalil al-Fuzayyi'--date not given]

[Excerpts] Question: What is your attitude toward the PLO, and does it differ from that of the other EEC countries? Do you have any objection to the opening of a PLO office in Bonn and to receiving a number of PLO officials in order to know their views, and, if so, why?

Answer: This subject concerns the Palestinian people alone; they themselves have to determine who represents them. We said at the EEC meeting in Venice that the Palestinian people must participate in the negotiations. We also said that the PLO must be brought into these negotiations. Regarding the German attitude toward the PLO itself, this will be determined by the attitude of that same PLO toward the question of the rights of the state of Israel, that is, with regard to the question of secure and recognized borders.

The PLO has, for several years, had a Palestinian Information Office here, and we do not hamper the work of this office.

Question: Your country was the pioneer of Ostpolitik and of overtures toward the Soviet Union and the Soviet camp. Do you believe, after the experience of the past decade, that this policy is still useful, and do you believe that Moscow has fulfilled its moral commitment in response to this policy? What is your explanation of Moscow's military activity in Africa and Afghanistan, and do you believe that this activity violates the Ostpolitik concept? And how can it be confronted?

Answer: The policy toward the Eastern countries--that is, Ostpolitik--is not and was not intended to be a rigid principle.

This policy didn't bring about complete serenity between Moscow and Bonn, nor did we have this solution in mind.

The result achieved by the policy of overtures (Ostpolitik) was much less than that. It was, namely, the normalization of relations between us and the Soviet Union and a number of East European communist countries, some of which are our immediate neighbors, as well as the reaching of an agreement in principle on a modus vivendi between us and East Germany which recognized the right to existence and ensured the status and the viability of West Berlin.

At no time did we entertain the illusion that our treaties with the Soviet Union would reflect on the Soviet stance in other parts of the world.

And so we observe Soviet activities in other parts of the world with great interest. Also, we and the Saudis condemn the continued Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan and demand the restoration of the sovereignty and nonalignment of the state of Afghanistan.

We also strongly condemn the Soviet intervention in the Horn of Africa, South Yemen and Ethiopia and, therefore, we condemn the presence of Cuban soldiers (Cuba being an ally of the Soviet Union) in that area.

We regard all these factors as hampering the efforts being made to reduce international tension. I met with the French president before the end of last year and I agreed with him that the world cannot endure a new shock following the occupation of Afghanistan and that, were this to happen, there would be serious repercussions and changes.

This situation is still valid, but at the same time I believe that in the present difficult conditions the dialogue should continue.

We have taken every opportunity to point out to the Soviet side the dangers and serious consequences of its stand on Afghanistan, as well as the serious consequences of its arming itself with medium-range nuclear missiles. On the other hand, we are seeking, together with friendly countries, including Saudi Arabia, to bolster the elements of stability. We also are seeking to prevent the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan from causing instability elsewhere in the region.

One measure we are taking is to give economic and political support to the threatened countries such as Turkey, Pakistan and Somalia and to support them in general by intensifying relations with Saudi Arabia and other Gulf countries.

Question: You have already said that the kingdom has not sought to purchase arms from Germany. Suppose the kingdom did ask for arms, would you approve its request?

Answer: As I have said, there are regulations that prevent us from exporting arms to countries other than NATO states. This policy makes it incumbent upon us to exercise great caution with regard to exports. But as I said, these principles are being reviewed and the results considered. I have said before that this restrictive stand on arms will remain valid in the future. And I will repeat once again that our decisions are not influenced by any foreign country. Incidentally, I must say here that a large number of countries have asked us for arms and have been refused.

Question: Several oil-producing countries complain that their oil revenues are continually diminishing because of fluctuations in the rates of exchange of the major currencies. Do you believe there is a solution to this problem that would reassure them that their deposits in the international banks will not be continually eroded because of the drop in the value of these currencies?

Answer: We are following with interest the current discussion within OPEC regarding the definition of the organization's long term petroleum and development policy. I hope this will lead to the formulation of a stable pricing policy that will enable us to perceive the future world economic situation as it relates to oil prices.

My government has supported and continues to support a long term dialogue between the oil-exporting and oil-consuming countries, because this alone will enable us to find solutions to the world's energy problems, particularly those of the Third World countries which do not export oil.

The raising of prices several times in the past few years concerns me. This increase means to us in the FRG an increase of 160 percent. This increase has had an adverse effect on the world economy in the form of an economic recession, especially for the oil-importing developing countries.

These price hikes came at a time when no improvement could be reached in the world economic situation.

A respite in oil price increases will serve to stabilize the world economic situation, but we don't see at present that the idea of freezing oil prices is being applied. My government believes that OPEC must fully realize that it should define its pricing policy according to the ability to pay of each party to the world economy.

We need to transform the world's long term supply of energy, including oil. This must be done without obstacles, and when I say obstacles, I mean this operation shouldn't be accompanied by a little hunger and a little unemployment; no, on the contrary.

I hope that common stands will emerge in this regard. I also have great expectations regarding the role that the Saudi kingdom is playing in this operation, the role it has played and the role it will play in Cancun, Mexico, shortly.

Question: The OPEC countries are endeavoring to pursue a policy which would help your community of countries and the developing countries stabilize their economies. How would you evaluate this OPEC policy and, in particular, the kingdom's stand within this group? Will you be happy if the freeze on oil prices continues, and what is the limit of any increase as you see it in the present conditions? Do you subscribe to the idea held by some people that it is the rich countries and not the OPEC countries that are responsible for the present world economic situation?

Answer: In 1980, the OPEC countries' balance of payments surplus reached $120 billion, whereas the situation was precisely the opposite for all the non-oil-producing countries, which suffered a substantial balance of payments deficit. But we see that the deficit differs from one country to another depending on the volume of oil imports.

These varying degrees of balance of payments deficit were preceded by some fluctuation in the rate of exchange between one country and another; this fluctuation in the rate of exchange was primarily due to the existing balance of payments deficit, which in turn was due to increased oil prices.

In my view, the best guarantee ensuring the realization of real values for the oil countries is the existence of a stable world economic system. This can be achieved through a stable pricing policy. Also, the industrial countries can themselves contribute to stabilizing the world economic situation.

We have an example in our country. Although we rely greatly on oil imports, our rate of inflation is small, no more than 5 percent. This is a great contribution on our part to the achievement of world economic stability, despite the fact that we fork out an exorbitant price for oil which we pay for in dollars, whose exchange rate in the past 2 years has increased in relation to the deutschmark.

I cannot make a positive evaluation of the proposed indexation of oil prices and commodity prices. There are countries which have indexed wages and salaries to prices, and this indexation has resulted in high inflation rates. It is possible that if we apply this principle it may adversely affect the world economic situation. In my view, the idea of the indexation of prices doesn't achieve the desired results.

CHANCELLOR VISITS SAUDI ARABIA; DISCUSSES TALKS

For reportage on the 27-29 April visit of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to Saudi Arabia, including a Riyadh SPA report on the chancellor's 29 April press conference in which he discusses the substance of the concluded talks, see the Saudi Arabia subsection of the Arabian Peninsula section of the 29 April Middle East and Africa DAILY REPORT and subsequent issues.

DIE WELT Commentary

DW291136 Bonn DIE WELT in German 29 Apr 81 p 1

[Friedhelm Kemna commentary: "Adjourned"]

[Text] The chancellor in Riyadh has shelved the subject of the arms deliveries. In justifying this to the Saudi princes, he adopted the pose of hands tied. He did so with the same arguments, by the way, with which Bonn urges the Americans to conduct East-West negotiations on arms control: Regard for the domestic discussion--more likely meaning the internal party discussion--has largely deprived the government of the basis for responsible action.

Beyond the morale of the controversial deal, this is the strange aspect of a journey which probably must have been aimed at squaring the circle. For, how can the Saudi Arabian dynasty be tied down to comprehensive economic cooperation with the Federal Republic if the latter fails to let it have the desired arms? Does the chancellor hope to extricate himself from the dilemma by the miraculous conversion of the disarmament and export ideologists of his party?

Rarely before has a visit abroad by the head of the government been accompanied by such discord in the social-liberal choir. Rarely, too, has the opposition camp been as pitifully split as it is now. Meanwhile, only a segment of these German voices refers to the explosive consequences on the relations with the Jewish state. Obviously, it is a bone of contention 36 years after the holocaust that this German decision last but not least must be a decision of political morals--so that German politics will remain credible at all, within and without.

The Federal Republic's interest in the stability of the region can become reality only within the framework of an overall Western strategy including essential U.S. cooperation. The military strengthening of the Gulf states against Soviet pressure from the north is a legitimate mission of this strategy. But the interests of Israel, which exists in a potentially hostile environment, irrefutably belong to such a concept. If it is to be efficient, it needs consensus, and this requires the discontinuation of the race for the big contract in Riyadh. German energies should be concentrated on such a strategic consensus.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU View

DW291245 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 29 Apr 81 p 3

[Commentary signed GRD: "Canceled"]

[Text] So Saudi Arabia isn't supposed to get German arms. This seems to be the chancellor's clear word, but there are undertones: The chancellor supposedly indicated to Saudi Crown Prince Fahd that the difficulties the supply of Tornado planes or Leopard tanks would create in the German public can't be overcome "for the time being."

Keeping matters open may be a diplomatic virtue. After all, one doesn't want to disappoint the hosts too much. Yet, it remains a political virtue to say unmistakably "no" with regard to rearmament and excessive armament. This is natural also in our country. And if Helmut Schmidt says clearly "no" in Riyadh, it must be welcomed.

It would be even more pleasant if the chancellor's party would say the equally clear word to certain politicians and publicists at home who suggest, out of business interest or secret boasting mania, that the world would improve with the help of German arms. It should be said clearly and without keeping anything open diplomatically.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Article

DW291135 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 29 Apr 81 p 1

[Commentary signed RM: "More Than Arms"]

[Text] Nobody could assume that the rulers of Saudi Arabia would simply drop their urgent request for tanks and other military equipment from the Federal Republic. But they know the obstacles Bonn is facing with regard to such an arms deal, and they also know that it doesn't make sense to insistently demand something from Federal Chancellor Schmidt which he cannot give them at least now. So the Leopard tanks have to remain for Riyadh an issue to be discussed later. But, the federal chancellor could not say much of any substance even with regard to this. His opinion on German arms exports amounts to the fact that the Federal Republic must continue to maintain restraint, that it must discard the rather senseless formula "no arms to tension areas," and that it must decide in every individual case according to its foreign political interests. In such a procedure, Schmidt would obviously have said yes in the case of Saudi Arabia.

The reasons for it are grave. The Arab kingdom is an important oil supplier for the Federal Republic, a trade partner and a creditor. And even more, it is a friend of the entire West in a region which the Soviet Union tries to encircle outwardly and where it wants to create disorder inwardly. It doesn't seem, however, that the balance of strength in the Bonn coalition will permit the arms deal to take place in the foreseeable future. The arms export policy of the Federal Republic probably will not achieve the flexibility the chancellor considers as necessary. On the contrary, it will find itself pressed into even more rigid barriers. Not only the left part of the SPD is pressing for it, the counterforces are split up and uncertain of their cause. So the chancellor and his foreign minister have taken a resigned attitude for the time being.

But not all is lost in relations between Bonn and Riyadh. Saudi Arabia doesn't want only tanks from the Federal Republic. It also wants civilian technology. Most of all, Riyadh wants to have Bonn as a reliable friend with regard to international policy. If the Federal Republic doesn't accept that, it will be disregarding its vital interests and those of the West. Objecting that Saudi Arabia is internally unstable would bring about just that in an overhastened way. Bonn must do everything to strengthen Saudi Arabia.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG ON LIFTING OF U.S. EMBARGO

DW280920 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 27 Apr 81 p 4

[Commentary signed A.: "Haig's New Defeat"]

[Text] The lifting of the export restrictions for U.S. grain to the Soviet Union did not come as a surprise. President Reagan has never hidden his dislike for the partial embargo imposed by his predecessor Carter. Obviously, the effects of these punitive measures on Russia and Russian policy remained limited.

Meanwhile, Reagan's decision might turn out to be momentous for U.S. policy in another respect. However the President may interpret and expound it, the fact remains that a diplomatic step in response to the Russian occupation of Afghanistan is being retracted without that occupation having been discontinued. Granted, during the election campaign, Reagan time and again declared his displeasure over the grain embargo. However, this rejection was primarily attributable to domestic motives, as is the lifting of the measure now. During the election campaign, Reagan needed the important votes of the American farmers and the pressure groups affiliated with them.

Today, in turn, the President needs these votes in Congress to implement his controversial economic and tax programs. Reagan was careful not to make the lifting of the export restrictions dependent on a reduction of tensions in Poland. Combining his decision with the Polish developments would indeed have hazarded the credibility of Washington's foreign policy.

Haig opposed Reagan's decision to the very end. To the United States, the danger of a misunderstood signal to Moscow is greater than the potential domestic benefit for the President. But again, the latter's advisers turned out to wield more influence than the secretary of state. This represents a new defeat for Haig.

JUSOS ASK TERMINATION OF NATO COUNTERARMING

DW301030 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 30 Apr 81 p 2

[Text of decision "unanimously adopted" by the Federal Committee of the Young Socialists organization (JUSOS) on 25 April]

[Text] 1. The Federal Committee of the Young Socialists emphasizes its demand for the termination of the NATO armament decision by the Federal Government. The Young Socialists continue to advocate the view, in the party and in public, that no nuclear medium-range missiles and cruise missiles be deployed in West Europe in general and in the Federal Republic in particular.

2. The Young Socialists reaffirm their demand for the ratification of the SALT II treaty. The Federal Committee of the Young Socialists considers the moratorium proposal a suitable basis for negotiations. This is why the Young Socialists condemn the attitude of the Federal Government which has rejected the moratorium. The JUSOS demand the immediate opening of negotiations without any preconditions on the basis of the status quo--with the inclusion of all ground and sea-based nuclear weapons (including the forward based systems of the United States, the French and the British medium-range weapons)--with the objective of mutual disarmament. The Young Socialists demand that the Federal Government make it clear to the Reagan administration that the planned armament policy, the procrastination of negotiations on medium-range weapons and the U.S. imperialist policy toward the countries of Latin America, Asia and Africa are at odds with the objectives of social-liberal policy and the interests of the Federal Republic.

3. The Young Socialists will continue to endeavor to make their ideas concerning an offensive Social Democratic peace policy prevail in village associations, subdistricts and districts, so as to contribute at the SPD federal level congress in Munich toward the termination of the NATO arms decision. Offensive peace policy would mean repudiating continuous armament and would include calculated unilateral disarmament measures.

4. During the past several years, a politically manifold peace movement has evolved in the Federal Republic which comprises large segments of the churches and trade unions. The Young Socialists will support the actions of the DGB youth on the occasion of antiwar day and the peace weeks prepared by the Sign of Expiation Movement.

The Federal Committee of the Young Socialists welcomes the appeal of the DGB youth for actions for peace, disarmament and detente as an important basis, with respect to both content and organization, for a broad disarmament movement which formulates the peace policy objectives independent from the interests of either of the two superpowers.

The Young Socialists will continue their own actions on the basis of the appeal for an offensive Social Democratic peace policy, "Courage for a Better Future" (Bielefeld appeal).

5. Various signature canvassing actions are in progress in the Federal Republic now against the deployment of additional missiles.

The Federal Committee has called on all Young Socialists to mobilize people for the support of the Bielefeld appeal "Courage for a Better Future" and to collect signatures.

In this respect, it is possible for every Social Democrat to sign such texts as the Krefeld appeal, which exclusively concentrate on the question concerning medium-range missiles and disregard other essential aspects of disarmament policy. The JUSOS therefore reject all attempts to shift the Krefeld appeal into the communist area because of its contents just because it has been supported by the DKP as well. This ignores the political broadness of the circle of supporters that has so far been attained, and it is aimed at splitting the peace movement as a whole. We likewise reject any attempt to discriminate against pacifist positions from among ecclesiastical quarters.

In this context, the Young Socialists consider it important that Gert Bastian, one of the initiators of the Krefeld appeal, has made it clear that this Krefeld appeal is directed against the deployment of the SS-20 as well. Like Bastian, they do not regard the deployment of the SS-20 "as a convincing justification for the deployment of a NATO nuclear potential in Europe suited only for a first strike, especially since the alliance even without ground-based systems can put up something equal to the Soviet medium-range potential."

The JUSOS also are agreed with Bastian when he writes that "it doesn't serve our security if the foolish armament behavior of the East is answered in an even more objectionable manner."

6. The JUSOS will counteract all attempts to have the extraparliamentary peace movement swallowed up by the parties, in their cooperation with other organizations also on questions concerning peace and disarmament policies. The Young Socialists abide by their principles of alliance policy. Political organizations which sub-ordinate their foreign policy concepts to the changing foreign policy of one of the two superpowers are not credible partners in detente policy. This applies to the DKP and for the majority of the FDP.

AFP REPORTS ON PCF SUPPORT FOR MITTERRAND

NC290930 Paris AFP in English 0916 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Paris, 29 Apr (AFP)--The French Communist Party will support Socialist leader Francois Mitterrand in the final round of the presidential election on May 10, but if he is elected president it will insist on Communists being included in the new government.

Yesterday, the Communist Central Committee urged its supporters to vote for Mr Mitterrand in the final runoff vote because "it is unthinkable to vote for President Valery Giscard d'Estaing."

The Communist Party is sending out eight million copies of its statement to support Mr Mitterrand and they will be distributed by hand throughout France.

The Communist Party Central Committee has worked out its strategy based on the actual situation of the Socialist Party which does not want negotiations between Communists and Socialists between the two rounds, and does not want Communist ministers, at least not initially. But the Communists have no wish to give a "blank cheque" to Mr Mitterrand. They are insisting that they must participate fully in decisions immediately after the election and they have indicated that they will continue to assert [words indistinct] social reforms they have always fought for.

The position is summed up in today's mass circulation evening newspaper FRANCE-SOIR with the front-page headline "Marchais Gives His Vote and Makes His Demands."

The conservative LE FIGARO, which backs President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, describes the second round duel as one between "a free man and a prisoner."

The Communist Central Committee appeal to vote for Mr Mitterrand is seen as a return to a leftist union without which Mr Mitterrand could never win, while Mr Marchais' demands buttress the right's claims that Mr Mitterrand is "a hostage of the Communists."

MITTERRAND 'NOT SURPRISED' BY PCF DECISION

LD291432 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Excerpts] The Communist Party is giving its unconditional but unenthusiastic support to Francois Mitterrand in the second ballot of the presidential election. Francois Mitterrand isn't surprised about the Communists' decision:

[Begin recording] If you want to know something, it didn't surprise me. It comes within the framework of the political responsibility assumed by the leadership, the Central Committee, of the Communist Party. And from that point of view, there can be no mistake. They are responsible people. As far as what I think about it more precisely, I am taking my time. I am in no hurry. I will sleep on it. For the moment, I am primarily concerned with knowing what I have to say about my proposals. I am not disdainful of other people's proposals and I rejoice every time I notice that the popular movement which I am promoting is broadening. [end recording]

Francois Mitterrand made this statement yesterday evening in Paris where he was the guest of the Women's Association choir.

GENERAL LABOR CONFEDERATION ENDORSES MITTERRAND

LD291628 Paris Domestic Service in French 1000 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] The CGT Executive Committee is calling on its members to vote for Francois Mitterrand.

SPANISH KING CONTINUES VISIT WITH TALKS, DINNER

AU300907 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 30 Apr (ANSA)--Spain's King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia will conclude their 3-day official visit to Rome today with a private audience at the Vatican with Pope John Paul II before departing for Madrid.

Along with political talks with Italian Government officials and talks between Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and his Spanish counterpart, Jose Pedro Perez Llorca, the Spanish royal couple took a few hours off Wednesday for some sightseeing.

After the official luncheon offered by Premier Arnaldo Forlani at Villa Madama, King Juan Carlos and the queen visited Rome's City Hall on the Michelangelo-designed Campidoglio Square, recently deprived of the bronze equestrian statue of Marcus Aurelius.

At City Hall they were welcomed by Rome's Mayor Luigi Petroselli, who praised the king for his firm action which averted a coup d'etat in Spain last February and said that Juan Carlos is a symbol of Spanish democracy.

The royal couple then moved on to the nearby Central Restoration Institute at San Michele where the Marcus Aurelius bronze, dating from the late Roman empire, is currently undergoing delicate cleaning and repair work.

Later in the afternoon, the monarch and his queen visited the Spanish Academy on the Janiculum Hill where they met with the Spanish community in Rome.

The second day of their visit ended with a dinner at the Spanish Embassy in honor of President Sandro Pertini.

FOREIGN MINISTER RECEIVES SOMALI VICE PRESIDENT

AU300904 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 30 Apr (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo met Wednesday with Somali Vice President General Hussein Kulmiye Afrah.

The two officials discussed bilateral relations and the situation in the African Horn during a talk which was described as "cordial".

PCI'S BERLINGUER TALKS WITH LEBANON'S W. JUNBLATT

LD281233 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 17 Apr 81 p 19

[Text] Rome--[PCI Secretary General] Comrade Enrico Berlinguer received at PCI Central Committee headquarters Walid Junblatt, president of the Lebanese progressive forces [as published], with whom he discussed the present grave situation in Lebanon and the obstacles to restoring peace in that country and throughout the Middle East.

The conversation took place in an atmosphere of mutual understanding and trust and with acknowledgement of the Lebanese side of the value of the solidarity of the Italian Communists and Italian democratic forces in safeguarding Lebanon's territorial integrity and independence and supporting the Palestinian people's cause--an essential element in any political solution.

The meeting was attended by [PCI International Affairs Department Chief] Comrade Gian Carlo Pajetta.

PCP'S ALVARO CUNHAL COMMENTS ON PARTY PROGRESS

LD291531 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 17 Apr 81 pp 26-30 (supplement)

[Part one of Maria Joao Avillez interview with PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal--date and place not specified]

[Excerpts] EXPRESSO: Let us discuss politics. You are accused--in quotation marks, if you like--of having interfered in Socialist Party [PS] affairs by discussing in detail the struggle between the Mario Soares group and the Secretariat group. Since you have already commented on this, I would ask you to comment on it for me. How do you view the PS congress? Is it important to you? What about its eventual result?

Alvaro Cunhal: If you permit, I would like to refer first to two terms which you used--"accused" and "interference." Yesterday, for instance, I appeared on television and what happened, more or less, was this: I went there to answer the charges. These charges are always being made against the Communist Party!

EXPRESSO: Why? Have you never thought of that?

Alvaro Cunhal: I have, I have. It is a way of trying to prevent the Communist Party from being regarded as a party, like all the others, which presents its ideas and solutions and which thus indicates its blueprint for life to the Portuguese people. So the question of accusations and interference....

EXPRESSO: I did say, in inverted commas.

Alvaro Cunhal: Of course. And I am talking in inverted commas too.... But as for interference, I believe that all Portuguese political forces without exception have had something to say about the opinions of other parties' leaders. In this case, it was the Socialist Party.

In interviews, articles and statements made to the major media, television and radio, almost all of the PS leaders express opinions about the Portuguese political situation and about solutions to the nation's problems. If this is the case, irrespective of whether these PS leaders' opinions are contradictory, they are opinions that become public and the legitimate subject of discussion. Nor is it for any other reason that they appear in the media. It is therefore legitimate for any party to express its own opinion on the PS leaders' opinions regarding the major national problems--the revision of the constitution, the powers of the president of the republic, responsibility for appointing the armed forces chief of general staff, the policy of alliances, the alliance with the Social Democratic Party [PSD] or with the Communists.... These are universal, national topics, on which any party is entitled to make pronouncements.

EXPRESSO: And what is your opinion?

Alvaro Cunhal: If you will permit me to say so, the strange thing is that when right-wing parties and the media to a greater or lesser extent subservient to the present government speak out, in whatever terms, not only on the subject of the PS leaders' opinions....

EXPRESSO: You are quite right.... And when I interview them I will tell them so.

Alvaro Cunhal:...Not only on the subject of their opinions but also on the subject of who should prevail within the PS....

EXPRESSO: That's a good joke!

Alvaro Cunhal: A joke at EXPRESSO's expense, because EXPRESSO, through one of its commentators--perhaps its best known political commentator--issued the following warning to the other media: "Beware, my friends! You are praising Mario Soares too much; he is the Democratic Alliance's favorite ally (there were in fact very nearly the words he used, are they not?) and therefore you must stop issuing these eulogies, otherwise you might jeopardize his victory at the congress." This is, almost verbatim, what EXPRESSO's formost political commentator said on page 2 of your newspaper.

EXPRESSO: So you are a careful reader of EXPRESSO?

Alvaro Cunhal: I read the papers. Of course I do not have time to read them all.... But fortunately, the comrades provide me with an indication of the most important material so that I can inform myself of the positions of the various parties and tendencies. To return to the subject: All the leaders of the rightwing parties, the PSD and the Social Democratic Center Party, express their opinions about what is happening within the PS, about who should win or who should lose--in short, the entire right says that Mario Soares must win, because if he loses, it would be a disaster, because the Communist Party probably already has infiltrators in the PS.... Nobody protests these interferences.

EXPRESSO: I protest.

Alvaro Cunhal: Unfortunately, I am not the one conducting the interview, because otherwise I would register your protest against this interference. But the fact is that the Communist Party, without commenting on the result of who wins or does not win, is commenting on what is an issue of fundamental importance. What is in Portugal's best interest? What is in the best interest of democracy: that the president of the republic should appoint the armed forces chief of general staff or, as Mario Soares and other PS leaders believe, that the government should appoint him? We say that it is in the best interest of democracy that it be the president of the republic, and it would be dangerous if a government composed of reactionary forces wanting to destroy democracy could appoint the armed forces chief of general staff--perhaps someone like General Soares Carneiro, or someone similar. As far as the congress is concerned, we address our general thoughts to the people, to those who wish to hear us. First, that the PS is a democratic party, with a role to play in Portuguese democracy; second, that this important role can only be performed if, instead of opting for alliances with the right, with reactionary parties, parties in the government, whose basic plan is to destroy the democratic system, if instead of this it realizes that the necessary alliance is with all democrats and patriots in defense of the regime and the constitution. This is what we say.

EXPRESSO: Do you really believe what you say? That the government wants to destroy the democratic system?

Alvaro Cunhal: Not only do I believe it, but I can prove it, if necessary by statements made by the very leaders of the ruling parties. Now they are a little more restrained. Pinto Balsemao is more restrained in his remarks than Fritas do Amaral. That is obvious. Even though, following 7 December, Freitas do Amaral temporarily tempered his tone. In fact on the night of 7-8 December he was still talking big. Then he realized that the battle was lost on 7 December and that therefore he could not give himself such airs. Be that as it may, Pinto Balsemao's tone is more restrained. But the plan is the same--in pay policy, the antiworker policy, the reduction of real earnings, the lowering of living standards, the attack on agrarian reform, the new plan--almost identical to the previous plan--to delimit the public and private sectors, the foreign policy of subservience to U.S. imperialism and in all the basic aspects. In the media too. All the basic aspects of the present government's policy repeat the previous government's policy. The Democratic Alliance was clear and explicit following its 5 October victory. And it was not only explicit but extraordinarily explicit on the eve of the 7 December elections. Encouraged by the 5 October victory....

EXPRESSO: ...that is natural...

Alvaro Cunhal:...they made the desire to gain complete control of power very clear. By securing the presidency of the republic, the Democratic Alliance held three fundamental state bodies, the fourth, namely the Council of the Revolution, being challenged. It had the assembly to formulate the laws, the president to promulgate them and the government to implement them.

EXPRESSO: Mr Cunhal, this is part of the nature of politics. Or is it not?

Alvaro Cunhal: It is. But let us see what they were trying to do. Their explicitly declared aim was the destruction of the democratic system: They wanted the revision of the constitution to be carried out outside the legal and constitutional norms. Namely, nonobservance of the material limits (Article 290) and nonobservance of the formal limits (two-thirds) necessary for its approval. The system is defined in the constitution. A constitution defines a system and it is the constitution that embodies the system's basic characteristics with regard to the citizens' rights and freedoms, the state bodies and relations among them and the economic and social structures. The constitution is the basic law. Even in Britain, which has no constitution--the constitution that is not written down is perhaps the most unchanging of all. There is no country in the world that has a written constitution and which does not at the same time define the limits for revising the constitution. Our own constitution defines these limits: The system is characterized by its freedoms and rights, the responsibilities of the state bodies, their interdependence and the economic and social structures defined in the constitution. However, the ruling parties explicitly stated that they did not respect these limits and that they wanted to eliminate these limits; they refused to abide by the two-thirds rule and produced the expedient of the referendum, which is not enshrined in the constitution. They also refused and still refuse to observe the material limits. This applies to the government's present activity. The constitution forbids the restoration of the big estates. But I could give you a whole list of restored estates, if necessary....

EXPRESSO: Thank you, but there is no need.

Alvaro Cunhal: ... f families that have had thousands upon thousands of hectares returned to them by Democratic Alliance governments--thousands of hectares taken away from the collective production units, from the cooperatives, and returned unconstitutionally and illegally to the landowners.

EXPRESSO: Did previous governments do this or did they not?

Alvaro Cunhal: They did; they did and to a considerable extent--weapons were used, there were beatings and deaths were caused. It was a full-scale violent offensive against the agrarian reform, in violation of the basic law, namely the constitution, which states that the estates cannot be returned. We have good reason to state that the political forces that make up the present government are aiming to eliminate the democratic system that was created and consolidated by the revolution....

EXPRESSO: Are Mr Francisco Pinto Balsemao and his government partners not democrats?

Alvaro Cunhal: If you are referring to their leisure time, they could even be extremely democratic people in their leisure time. But in their political activity they pursue a consistently antidemocratic and antipopular policy aimed at eliminating freedoms and the system.

EXPRESSO: Since 1974, why has the Socialist Party always refused an alliance with the Communist?

Alvaro Cunhal: Since 1974 is an exaggeration, because alliances can appear in many forms. There are alliances...

EXPRESS: But I was talking about government...and opposition....

Alvaro Cunhal: Well, the PS and the Popular Democratic Party [PPD, former name of PSD] were in government with the Communists.

Freitas do Amaral Pays Tribute to the PCP

EXPRESSO: That's fine, but....

Alvaro Cunhal: And I won't tell you what the PS leders and Mario Soares as well as the PPD leaders were saying about the Communists.... Take Freitas do Amaral, for example, who visited me at Sao Bento with the Social Democratic Center [CDS] leadership and whom I received in my ministerial office. There we had the CDS leadership paying tribute to democracy together with a government minister who was a Communist. And the PPD approved the constitution in the Assembly of the Republic. You're not going to tell me now that there haven't been alliances. There have been limited alliances based on short term considerations, calculations. Ours was not like that. We formed alliances with all who wanted to combat fascism and build a democratic Portugal.

EXPRESSO: What did Dr Freitas do Amaral tell you during that conversation?

Alvaro Cunhal: I don't have the minutes with me, or my diary, of course. At any rate, it was pretty symptomatic. There were others who offered their services to the Communist minister. Many others whom we see around us today. Adriano Moreira didn't and wouldn't cross the threshold.

EXPRESSO: But after your slip-up in 1975, the PS would have nothing more to do with you....

Alvaro Cunhal: I don't accept this term slip-up.

EXPRESSO: But it's a mild enough term....

Alvaro Cunhal: No. Journalists may use it, but I can use whatever terms I like. Afterwards, at the start of the counterrevolutionary process, in 1975, although those who sought to prevent the structural changes had signed a constitution enshrining the changes, things in Portugal became easier for political freedoms in the bourgeois sense....

Freedoms Can Be Interpreted in Two Ways

EXPRESSO: So there are two ways of interpreting freedoms?

Alvaro Cunhal: Yes there are.

EXPRESSO: Oh, Mr Cunhal...!

Alvaro Cunhal: Allow me to explain, calm down. One way is as follows: Communists can have freedom--the freedom to protest, freedom to express dissent-- but Communists must not have the freedom to act within the democratic framework in such a way as to transform economic and social reality; to tranform life.

Relations With the PS

EXPRESSO: The Socialists have never chosen you as an ally.

Alvaro Cunhal: That's because they prefer capital to the world of labor. That is it, basically. Instead of protecting the interests of the working people they prefer practical action along the lines of protecting the interests of big capital and landowners. That is the reality which brought about alliances with the right, not with the PCP.

EXPRESSO: Is it possible to generalize in that way about a big party like the PS?

Alvaro Cunhal: By this generalization I am in no way trying to criticize Socialists in general. The PS is a big party with a large membership and many voters. And we believe that a large number, I don't know whether it is a majority or a minority, of Socialists in the party and of PS voters are not about to restore monopoly capitalism in Portugal. They advocate the protection of the interests of the working people.

The Hen and the Line on the Ground

EXPRESSO: Can you stop for a moment, Mr Cunhal. A characteristic of yours is that when asked a question your reply refers to something else.

Alvaro Cunhal: I would say the problem is that journalists sometimes want interviews to keep within certain limits or to go only where they want them to go. It's like hens behave. With hens you scratch a line on the ground and the hen won't cross it. If you like, I'll show you: Make the hen's beak touch the ground, draw a line with a pencil or any other writing implement in front of the beak; the hen will stand stock-still, its gaze will not shift from the line. Fine, but an interviewee is not a hen and the interviewer is not going to draw a line in front of his nose. You asked me about the PS and I am making the comparisons I deem necessary in my reply. I am telling you that not only in the PS but in the CDS and PPD as well, many members and many voters oppose a policy which runs counter to the interests of the working people and policy of restoring capitalism.

Working People's Unity Against the Government

Alvaro Cunhal: In the present social situation, the unity of the working people is very apparent. At this time many members of the PPD and many members of the CDS agree with PCP members, Socialists and various other political trends on the need to struggle, on the basis of strikes and trade union action, against the government's measures, against its social and economic decisions. We salute the unity of the working people even though it is not an explicitly political struggle against the government. It is not that, it is a political opposition to the government policy. Have no doubts on that score. The unity on essential and common problems is magnificent. I can be interviewed by an EXPRESSO journalist and we can put quotation marks in the questions and in the replies to make it clear that there are differences of opinion; but if we were to look closely at the deepest and most vital interests of these two Portuguese, this man and this woman, we would find an extraordinary thing: The interests are the same. The ways of resolving problems relating to these interests can differ, of course.

EXPRESSO: Yes that can and does happen. And your way of resolving these problems causes your electoral decline....

Alvaro Cunhal: It's not quite like that. The party's strength is growing. In the first legal census a month after 25 April we had 15,000 members. On 28 September we had 30,000 members; on 11 March--these are the best known dates and milestones in the history of the Portuguese revolution, or counterrevolution, if you like--we had around 100,000 members; at the time of the 8th congress we had 115,000 members....

EXPRESSO: But you lose the elections, Mr Cunhal! That's what I was getting at!

Alvaro Cunhal: We have lost elections. But if the elections had been truly democratic you can be sure that the results would have been different.

EXPRESSO: But an intelligent person like you does not say things like that....

Alvaro Cunhal: And I could say that an intelligent journalist like you doesn't say things like that and we could have a quarrel.

I was giving you information. Perhaps you want us to stay at 115,000 members which is the figure I had reached when you interrupted me. But I was going to add the 167,000 at the time of the 9th congress and 187,000 in 1980. There is something else I am going to tell you and it's a secret which you may disclose: At the moment we have more than we had in 1980 and we continue to make progress. No other party is making such progress....

EXPRESSO: Tell me something. In what country of the world has the Communist party been voted into power? Tell me that.

Alvaro Cunhal: Do you know something? We believe that it is possible to be voted into power. But it is not a question of achieving or not achieving power. It is a question of building or not building democracy. Just concentrate on the following. Portugal has an electoral law. In the rightwing parties, the feeling is that it is not enough, since through the electoral law and democratic freedoms the working class and revolutionary parties like the PCP can make great progress. Now they want something else so that they can be sure to have deputies even with a minority of votes, so that the PCP's potential for advancement is curtailed. Take France, for example: According to the French electoral law, a communist party deputy needs many times as many votes as a rightwing party deputy. The electoral law is messed about in that way by the bourgeois parties in order to prevent the working class parties from making marked progress through elections. That is a general rule.

SWEDEN

EDITORIAL ON 'CYNICAL GAME' OF FOOD WEAPON

LD290723 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 25 Apr 81 p 2

[Editorial: "The Grain in the World"]

[Text] President Ronald Reagan wants to appear tough and uncompromising in his attitude toward the Soviet Union.

But the ideologically anticommunist Reagan is also a practical politician who wants to implement that which is advantageous above all for U.S. economic interests. When his predecessor Jimmy Carter announced a grain embargo on the Soviet Union early in 1980 as a result of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, presidential candidate Reagan opposed the move. The embargo was not popular among the large farmers in the Midwest--an important constituency--because they faced problems with a grain surplus and falling prices.

Now that the Reagan administration is in the process of lifting the embargo, Reagan is only fulfilling an election promise. The reason he has not done so earlier is the tense situation surrounding Poland. It would have made all too great an impression of inconsistency if the United States had lifted the embargo at the same time as it warned the Soviet Union of countermeasures if it should decide to invade Poland.

A similar example of how economic interests take precedent over ideology in Reagan's policies is the U.S. Government decision to sell the AWACS system to Saudi Arabia. Such comprehensive arms sales to an Arab nation are giving rise to protests among the Jewish voters in the United States, who last fall deserted the Democratic presidential candidate in the belief that Reagan would be a more faithful defender of Israel's interests. But here Reagan gives priority to considerations of oil supplies and military-strategic interests.

Using food as a political weapon is despicable in principle. But Reagan does not oppose the principle of food weapon. On the contrary, his recent decision to at least suspend aid to Nicaragua means that this country will lose vital grain supplies. According to reports from Nicaragua, the Soviet Union is now stepping in to replace U.S. food aid.

The suspension of aid to Nicaragua only contributes to the creation of what the United States says it wants to prevent--an increase in Soviet influence in Nicaragua. And this points to a cynical game involving something which should be above political and economic differences of opinion--our daily bread.

BRIEFS

AID TO TANZANIA--Sweden has agreed with Tanzania on aid totaling 1.2 billion kronor. The funds will be distributed over 3 years and will be used for various aid projects in which Sweden is engaged, for example in industry, education and health care. Part of the funds will be used by Tanzania to purchase Swedish goods. [Text] [Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1600 GMT 16 Apr 81 LD]

REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF EGYPTIAN MINISTER OF STATE

Meeting With Carrington

NC281623 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1530 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] London, 28 Apr (MENA)--At their meeting today, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Dr Butrus Ghali conveyed to Lord Carrington a letter from President Anwar as-Sadat in answer to that which Carrington sent to the president last month within the framework of the continuous consultations between Egypt and Britain.

Informed sources in London told the MENA correspondent that the meeting between the two ministers dealt with Britian's role when it assumes the chairmanship of the European Community in the middle of this year. The same sources also said that Dr Ghali explained to Carrington the efforts which Egypt is exerting to bolster peace in the Middle East.

Dialogue With Conservatives

NC282228 Cairo MENA in Arabic 2145 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Excerpts] London, 28 Apr (MENA)--Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Dr Butrus Ghali said that since his historic visit to Jerusalem in 1977, President as-Sadat has been devoting 6 hours daily to the Palestinian question.

In a political dialogue tonight with members of the Conservative Party Foreign Relations Committee at the British House of Commons, Ghali added that Egypt has for the past 3 years been the only Arab state working seriously for the Palestinian question and the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, particularly because of the current conflict in the Arab world, represented in what is happening between Algeria and Morocco, Syria and Lebanon, Iraq and Iran and the Libyan invasion of Chad.

Ghali emphasized to the members of the British Conservative Party Foreign Relations Committee that one of the aims of Egyptian diplomacy is to help Israel overcome its security complex. He also stressed that Egypt really seeks peace and that it seeks to convince Israel of this.

Asked how pressure could be exerted on Israel, Ghali stressed Egypt's respect of the peace treaty and all its provisions. He said that Egypt abides by this treaty and that the pressure could be exerted through contacting other parties, such as contacts with Europe. He stressed that the level of normalization can only reach its potential in the appropriate atmosphere.

A question was then raised about the Rapid Deployment Force and the facilities that Egypt could provide. Dr Ghali stressed that Egypt is one of the founding states of the Nonaligned Movement and that it is always keen on abiding by the principles of the movement, which has an important role to play in the Third World.

Ghali said that President as-Sadat announced the provision of military facilities under three conditions, namely, that there be an aggression against an Arab or Islamic state, that this state request aid from the United States and that the United States approve the request for its intervention.

Ghali stressed that Egypt absolutely refuses to provide permanent bases on its territory or to enter into an alliance with any of the big states.

NEW ROUND OF INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS BEGINS

NC292042 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] A new meeting began this afternoon at the Ledra Palace within the framework of the intercommunal talks. During the meeting, which is the last in the sixth round of the intercommunal talks, discussion on the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem will continue.

In a statement before the meeting, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, said that either next month or in June he will go to New York to brief the UN secretary general on the talks. In addition, replying to a pertinent question, Mr Gobbi said that should there be positive, as he stated, progress, the United Nations would be prepared to play a more leading part. Furthermore, he mentioned that for the United Nations to take the initiative, the green light must be given by both sides. He also said that the talks are at a sensitive stage owing to the impending elections.

Replying to another question, Mr Gobbi said that he has no reason not to expect the Turkish side to submit proposals after the elections. On the contrary, he said, my personal assessment is that after the elections we shall have all kinds of proposals.

The Greek Cypriot side's representative, Mr Ioannidhis, stated that the discussion of the territorial aspect would continue in today's meeting under the shadow of the uncertainty of whether the Turkish Cypriot side would submit proposals on the issue. As I have repeatedly said and reiterate again today, Mr Ioannidhis stressed, unless we have concrete proposals on map on the territorial aspect, a constructive dialogue cannot develop. I expect, he added, that the Turkish Cypriot side will fulfill its obligation and will submit proposals at the negotiating table.

Making an assessment of the talks thus far, Mr Ioannidhis said that the end of the investigatory stage of the dialogue has been reached. Now, he said, we should have proposals on all aspects, including the territorial aspect, so that a constructive dialogue can develop.

Replying to an observation that the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor, Mr Onan, insists that the constitutional aspect is the most serious aspect of the Cyprus problem, Mr Ioannidhis said that both the constitutional and territorial aspects are of substantive significance for the solution of the Cyprus problem.

Before the meeting, Mr Onan, the representative of the Turkish Cypriot side, stated that he continues to be optimistic and believes that the intercommunal talks are the only way to find a solution to the problem. Certainly, he said, both sides have hesitated in submitting proposals on certain issues. Furthermore, he expressed the viewpoint that after the elections there will be a change and a better approach to the talks than there are at present.

Replying to a question as to whether after the elections he will submit his proposals on the territorial aspect, Mr Onan said that the issue of nonsubmission of proposals never arose. He also reiterated his viewpoint that the solution of the Cyprus problem is not dependent on the submission of proposals on the territorial aspect.

North Announces Session

TA291720 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Text] The intercommunal talks aimed at finding a peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem resumed today. The territorial issue is being discussed at today's session which is being held at Ledra Palace.

Speaking to reporters before the meeting, Turkish Cypriot interlocutor Umit Onan said that the intercommunal talks are the best way to finding a solution to the Cyprus problem that will be acceptable to both sides. Expressing the belief that there will be changes in the Greek Cypriot cabinet after the elections, Onan expressed the hope that this will create the possibility for holding more constructive talks. In reply to a question, Onan said that he still retained his optimism.

Replying to reporters' questions before the meeting, the UN special representative in Cyprus, Hugo Gobbi, said that he will leave for New York in May or June but that the date has not yet been fixed.

In reply to another question of allegations concerning a statement made by Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen to the effect that the Turkish Cypriot side will put forward proposals on the territorial issue after the elections, Gobbi said that he had not read Turkmen's statement but that he was waiting for proposals of all kinds. He concluded by saying that he was still optimistic about the intercommunal talks.

In a statement before the meeting, Greek Cypriot interlocutor Ioannidhis claimed that fruitful talks cannot be held so long as the Turkish Cypriots do not put forward concrete proposals on the territorial issue. In reply to another question, Ioannidhis said that the Greek Cypriot side is continuing the talks because they are the best way to finding a peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem. He said that the investigative part of the talks were concluded in six rounds and that now the stage has been reached in which the proposals will be taken up in a substantive manner.

The intercommunal talks were in progress when this newscast was being prepared.

Next Round Scheduled 6 May

NC292044 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1917 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Excerpt] The next meeting in the intercommunal talks will be held on 6 May. It will examine the issue of achieving an agreement for resettlement in Famagusta under UN auspices.

FOREIGN MINISTER ROLANDHIS DEPARTS FOR OMAN

NC292054 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis this afternoon departed on an official visit to Oman that will last until 1 May. Rolandhis will then pay a 2-day official visit to the United Arab Emirates, completing the second round of his visits to the Persian Gulf countries. Rolandhis will return to Cyprus next Monday. He is being accompanied on his visits by Director General of the Foreign Ministry Pelayias.

REGISTRATION OF SOCIAL JUSTICE PARTY REJECTED

TA291059 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] It had been learned that the application for the registration of the social justice party as an established party has been rejected. According to information given by the Interior Ministry, the application has been rejected for legal reasons because the person who claims to have established the party is not a citizen of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus.

GENERAL EVREN, FORCE COMMANDERS OBSERVE EXERCISE

TA291547 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren has left for Erzincan to observe the national sovereignty planning exercise organized by the 3d Army Command. National Security Council members--Ground Forces Commander Gen Nurettin Ersin, Naval Forces Commander Adm Nejat Tumer, Gendarme Forces Commander Gen Sedat Celasun and NATO Southeastern Europe Allied Ground Forces Commander Gen Sedat Guneral--left for Erzincan with General Evren. At Erzincan airport, General Evren was received by 3d Army Commander Gen Selahattin Demircioglu. Erzincan Governor Yuce Bolgen and Mayor Nusret Cetinkaya were also at the airport.

Nevfik Fikret Dincer and Necmettin Urkmen from the Turkish Radio Television [TRT] news center report that General Evren and the commanders later left for the 3d Army headquarters. Citizens cheered General Evren all along the road to the headquarters, where he was received with a military ceremony in front of the 3d Army headquarters. General Evren and the commanders accompanying him held a meeting with Gen Demircioglu at the headquarters. General Evren and the commanders later began observing the exercise organized by the 3d Army Command. The exercise will last for 2 days. General Evren and the commanders are expected to return to Ankara tomorrow.

DEATH PENALTY DEMANDED FOR 57 DEV-YOL MEMBERS

TA291640 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] The military prosecutor's office of the Army VI Corps and Adana Martial Law Command has demanded the death penalty for 57 suspects belonging to the illegal Revolutionary Path organization [Dev-Yol]. According to information obtained by a Turkish Radio and Television correspondent, the military prosecutor's office has filed a suit against members of the organization in question at the 1st Military Court. In accordance with Article 146 of the Turkish penal code, the indictment demands the death penalty for 57 of the 78 suspects who are claimed to have been involved in murder and other incidents at various dates. The indictment demands prison sentences of 5 to 15 years for the remaining 21 suspects. The hearings will begin within the next few days.

PAPER INTERVIEWS TURKMEN ON RELATIONS WITH GREECE

NC291350 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 26 Apr 81 pp 1, 7

[Interview granted by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen to CUMHURIYET correspondent Sedat Ergin in Ankara; date not given]

[Text] Question: In the note given to the Greek Government in connection with the demonstrations staged by fanatical Armenians in Athens last Sunday, it was suggested that effective measures be taken to prevent the repetition of similar acts in the future. Do you consider the reply given to the Turkish note by the Greek Government adequate and satisfactory?

Answer: There would be no end to the exchange of notes with Greece if we were to compare such notes word by word and if we were to say: "This point is ambiguous." The Greek Government should be asked to clarify this point. We should pay more attention to the effect that our note has had. In its reply, Greece has proved several points, the most important being its admission that "I could not prevent it, because our laws are not suitable." It admits that a member of the party in power, the New Democracy party, has participated in the demonstrations, but it says that this member did not represent the party. It stresses that using Greece for hostile acts against Turkey is out of the question. Indirectly it argues that certain points in the Turkish note cannot be accepted.

I am of the opinion that we should wait for the outcome of this affair. We have to wait and see what attitude Greece will adopt toward the Armenian activities. It would not be fair to make an evaluation on the basis of its answers. I am not saying that the Greek note is satisfactory. I want to say that making such a comparison would not be a very useful exercise. We shall watch the Greek Government's behavior in the future. We can then make the necessary evaluation. The note contains various elements. It won't be correct to reach a conclusion about the Greek Government's attitude by merely looking at the note.

Question: Turkish-Greek relations are going through a period of amelioration. Both sides have undertaken to refrain from adversely influencing public opinion. Also, Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis made statements which were welcomed as constructive by Ankara. Isn't then the attitude displayed during the Armenian activities in violation of this amelioration?

Answer: It is obvious that such an attitude contradicts efforts to develop relations between Turkey and Greece and to create an atmosphere of mutual trust between Turkey and Greece and to create an atmosphere of mutual trust between the two peoples.

Question: Another important point is the anti-Turkey activities displayed by the Greek parliamentarians at the forums of the Council of Europe and the European Parliament. Some time ago, you had made representations to the Greek Government stressing the need to exercise greater care at such forums. It is a known fact that beside PASOK, also members of the New Democracy party--the party in power--are actively against Turkey. Isn't this a contrast also? Don't you think the Greek Government could control its parliamentarians somewhat?

Answer· We cannot argue that the Greek Government can do this fully. When we look at our own experience, we cannot say that it is possible for a party to exercise full control over its parliamentarians. Every party entertains different views. There may be members who act contrary to the party line. However if we take a look at the development of this issue, this is what we see:

The Greek Government informed us that it has strongly advised the parliamentarians of the party in power not to indulge in anti-Turkish activities and not to participate in such activities at the Council of Europe. Occasionally, we formed the idea that the Greek parliamentarians were complying with these recommendations. But we have recently observed that, starting from the latest decision on Turkey, the New Democracy Party parliamentarians not only participate in anti-Turkish activities; they have also been seen to act as ringleaders. It would not be fair to attribute this to bad faith by the Greek Government. But has the Greek Government done everything possible to counter such behavior? I cannot say this either. It is clear that parliamentarians of the party in power are openly partitipating in anti-Turkish activites. The latest example of this is the participation of the New Democracy Party parliamentarians in the Armenian demonstration held in Athens.

Question: Now what does Ankara expect from Athens for the continuation of efforts for amelioration?

Answer: Right from the start our aim has been to improve our relations with Greece. We did not expect much. We knew that the improvement of relations with Greece would be gradual and that it would not be easy to leap forward toward the solution of outstanding issues. Our intention has been to create an atmosphere of mutual trust and to take short strides. In our opinion this would be the starting point. We must acknowledge that some members of the Greek Government have been making similar efforts.

Like us, they have tried too. We sorrowfully observe that either because they cannot control the situation or because they have not acted with enough determination in this respect, certain developments have occurred that seriously shake the atmosphere of trust. Undoubtedly, at this stage we are not in a position to comment on Turkish-Greek relations with undue optimism.

Question: What kind of result do you expect from the talks you are going to have in Rome with Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis on the subject of Aegean airspace?

Answer: When the secretaries general of our Foreign Ministries met in Ankara, they reached some measure of understanding on certain issues. We are going to review these issues.

Question: It is said that [restrictions on] a section of the dangerous region of the Aesean airspace will be mutually lifted. Is this true?

Answer: Let us not touch on this at this moment, because the secretaries general have not disclosed this. They waited for the ministers to do so. We shall see whether we can or cannot make a disclosure.

Question: Finally, it is said that at the meeting held in Athens at the technical level, Athens insisted that the military planes state their flight plans. What is the position in this respect?

Answer: It is impossible for us to accept anything beyond the international civil aviation rules.

Question: It is said that you have approved a form of approach in the settlement of the Aegean dispute which postpones the continental shelf issue and favors a piecemeal rather than a bulk package settlement. It is also argued that in the long run this approach will adversely affect Turkish interests in the Aegean. How do you explain this viewpoint?

Answer: We have not undertaken a piecemeal settlement. Our approach to the dispute is very realistic. That we should neglect such a question as the continental shelf is out of the question. Every time the secretaries general of our Foreign Ministries meet, they discuss the continental shelf issue. Talks are continuing. But failing to explore other fields where we can reach agreement just because we are unable to achieve an early settlement of the continental shelf issue would be contrary to the interests of Turkey, and would not be compatible with our efforts to gradually create an atmosphere of mutual confidence between Turkey and Greece. I do not believe that a policy of "all or nothing" is acceptable in foreign politics.

GUNAYDIN URGES UNDERSTANDING BY GREEK POLITICIANS

NC281248 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 23 Apr 81 p 3

[Article by Husamettin Celebi: "The Greek Politicians"]

[Excerpts] On Thursday evening, 16 April, the TRT television network broadcast an interview by Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis on its "From Home and From Abroad" program concerning present and future relations between Turkey and Greece.

Three days after this contrived statement, the coalition of the adventurers plotting against Turkey organized a meeting and demonstrations in Athens. This meeting helped to clarify certain points:

1. The Greek politicians are still far from understanding and evaluating Turkey. More important, they are also far from understanding and evaluating their own public opinion. On the one hand, they permit and even encourage and instigate plots capable of hurting us deeply and, on the other, "they sing songs of friendship."

2. The Kurds who participated in the meeting and demonstrations that the Armenians have organized by taking advantage of the present condition in the Turkish-Greek relations have seen that the Kurds and Armenians are the two communities in the world that could never come to terms with each other. The whole world has come to realize that the Kurds and Armenians have united only against Turkey. They are certain to clash in the event they are successful.

3. All states, including the Soviet Union and the United States, which have for their own interests been encouraging and in fact provoking militant acts by the Kurds and Armenians who cherish illusions over our territory, must realize that dividing Turkey will not bring peace to the region. If there is no peace in the region, no country can safeguard its interests in it.

The demonstrations staged in the streets of Athens by some utopians could turn out to our advantage. But the most important development is that the entire Turkish press--rightist and leftist papers alike--has grasped "the Athens affair" well and has united in its condemnation of Greece. Now only the press is talking, but this is an indication of how the entire nation will talk tomorrow.

The Greek politicians know only too well what happens when the Turkish nation talks. At least, they had better. If they have forgotten or if election considerations have confused them, it would be very much to their advantage for them to read once again the history of 50 to 60 years ago. If they have no time to do that, they should have a chat with their old compatriots living among them. Only then will they realize that they cannot dupe the Turkish nation with their "songs of friendship" or their "deceptive fables." The Turkish nation wants peace. It cannot be duped with lies. We hope that Greek politicians will realize this as quckly as possible.

NATO'S ADMIRAL CROWE ARRIVES IN ISTANBUL

TA291710 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] NATO Southern Europe Allied Forces Commander Adm William Crowe has arrived in Istanbul. Admiral Crowe was received by Commander of the War Academies Gen Halil Sozer and Air War School Commander Brig Gen Kemal Yalcin with a military ceremony at Yesilkoy Airport. Admiral Crowe will leave Istanbul for Ankara tomorrow and will be received by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE ON VISA REQUIREMENTS END

TA291630 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1550 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 29 Apr (AA)--Turkish and French teams have concluded two days of talks on easing the visa requirement imposed on Turkish citizens by France. A joint press release at the conclusion of the talks at the Foreign Ministry in Ankara listed the specific points on which they had agreed to facilitate visas for Turkish citizens residing in France, businessmen, truck and bus drivers, and Turkish workers residing in neighboring countries. The visa negotiations will be resumed in Paris in 6 months.

COUNCIL APPROVES ECONOMIC AGREEMENTS WITH IRAQ

TA291616 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1540 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 29 Apr (AA)--Letters signed during the meeting of the Turkish-Iraqi joint economic committee was ratified by the Council of Ministers. Under agreements reached at the Ankara meeting from December 22 to 25, 1980, Iraq will study proposed joint projects on raising the capacity of the oil pipeline, construction of a refinery and a petrochemical complex, building of a new pipeline for transportation of natural and compund gas, operation of heavy crude oil plants in northern Iraq, and joint production of electrical energy.

In line with the same agreement, Turkey will export wheat and barley to Iraq, will ship 500 buses over two years, and will bid for construction contracts in Iraq.

TURKEY TO BE REPRESENTED AT COUNCIL OF EUROPE

TA292036 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] The Council of Europe Chairmanship Council has reached a consensus regarding Turkey's representation at the Council of Europe meetings to be held in May. At its meeting today, the chairmanship council also decided that its view on the issue be added to the Council's activities report and submitted to the parliamentary assembly. The Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly will meet in Strasbourg on 11 May and will discuss the Turkish issue. The Turkish Radio Television correspondent in Strasbourg, Nadir Syagilik, reports that the Council of Europe's Chairmanship Council and Permanent Representatives Committee met separately today and discussed the report prepared by the president of the parliamentary assembly, Hans de Koster, at the end of his recent visit to Turkey.

In a statement after these meetings, De Koster said that Turkey should continue to be represented at the Council. Noting that the Turkish people are very happy about the 12 September operation, De Koster noted that the (?course) in Turkey showed that a return to democracy is close. De Koster added that Western countries should continue their economic aid to Turkey.

Council Report Favorable

TA281524 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1510 GMT 28 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 28 April (AA)--Political observers in Ankara were in general satisfied with the report submitted by speaker of the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly Hans de Koster to the assembly's Political Committee on the situation in Turkey. De Koster, who has just completed a visit to Ankara last week, believed the September takeover had saved the country from confusion, and that the Turkish people had no doubts about their eventual return to democracy.

VOTCP URGES PUNISHMENT FOR TURKES, NAP LEADERS

TA300818 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Commentary: "The Fascist Turkes Should Be Brought to Justice"]

[Excerpts] Dear listeners, the trial of the fascist NAP has started at the 1st Military Court of the Ankara Martial Law Command. There is a bloody file in the hands of the Ankara Martial Law Command prosecutors. The murderers of hundreds of patriots are included in this file. The ringleaders of fascist terrorism are also in this file. The file includes those who planned a fascist coup in Turkey. This is the criminal file of the fascist NAP. Fascist Turkes is at the head of those who caused bloodshed in the country in order to realize their plan for a fascist coup. This bloody murder file is very thick and comprises hundreds and thousands of pieces of evidence, plans for a fascist coup and many other things. The source of terrorism in Turkey is inside this file.

Our people want the bloody Turkes and the other fascist NAP administrators to receive the punishment they deserve. However, dear listeners, there is also the other aspect of the issue. Those who wish to cause the fascist NAP prosecution to lose its fervor and save the fascists and the blood-stained Turkes have begun to act. The setting for this has been in preparation for a long time. As has been learned, the headquarters of the fascist NAP in Ankara has been illegally engaged in activities for some time. Lawyers affiliated with the NAP are communicating between the headquarters and the provinces.

Preparations have been started in Istanbul to publish an organ of the fascist NAP. Various fascist publications in the FRG are being mailed to Turkey. Meanwhile, during a film about India on television on Saturday, there were words to the effect that the nationalist movement is intact.

The meeting organized by TERCUMAN--the voice of the monopolies--under the guise of a workers congress, and the fascist show of force in West Berlin constitute some other links in the maneuvers to absolve the NAP and make it seem powerful. A few pieces of data clearly demonstrate that the West Berlin march under the banner of "loyalty to the army and the state" is really aimed at saving the fascists and influencing the NAP case.

At a time when the file of the fascist NAP has been opened, the Turkish working class, the toiling people and all democratic forces should act against the plans to save the fascists. It is the duty of everyone including the workers in the factories, the mothers who have lost their children to fascist bullets, the democrat press writers and the honest judges and prosecutors in the martial law courts to prevent activity concerning the file from dying down.

PAPER ON ROLE OF VARIOUS POWERS IN KURDISH PROBLEM

NC281112 Istanbul YANKI in Turkish 20-26 Apr 81 p 6

[Excerpts] That not only the Soviet Union but almost all the big Western countries have a finger in the "Kurdish movement" is a well-known fact. We wish to believe that the Turkish authorities are fully aware of this and that they are closely watching these activities. All the countries that want to keep an eye on Turkey's efforts to gain strength and stability and that hope "to keep the situation under their own control in case Turkey runs into trouble some day" are trying to keep this issue alive. There may be some naive people who might come forward and ask: "Why should we always look for imperialists behind everything?" Maybe these people will turn out to be the collaborators of imperialism in Turkey. We would hasten to remind them of the role the CIA has played in the conflict between the Iraqi and Iranian Kurds, and the secret agreement it concluded with the shah of Iran and the implementation of the agreement that followed.

What we wish to point out through this reminder is that we should not look at the issue one-sidedly, and that we should feel anxiety over the fact that this is not the outcome of the instigations and secret activities of just one outside power but of the conspiracy of many outside forces.

In their efforts to eradicate terrorism in Turkey, the Turkish Armed Forces are also trying to eradicate ethnic-based separatism. We believe that this is the first time in our republic's history that the issue has been publicly indentified. It is admitted that more than 3,000 persons in the eastern provinces have been accused ofengaging in "Kurdish and separatist activities" and that 2,331 of them have been caught. The activities of these people have been fully described, and death sentences have been demanded for 97; this is a political decision taken by the National Security Council administration, and it is extremely interesting that this issue can no longer be suppressed.

It is one thing to exert every sincere effort to ensure the solution of the problems of the 5 to 7 million Turkish citizens of Kurdish origin, and another to try to exploit these fellow countrymen by instigating them for the purpose of securing certain interests and achieving certain aims. Turkish security organizations should always watch and foil efforts by those in the second category to undermine our national integrity. Unfortunately, political parties in power have always neglected to do so. They have underestimated the danger. They have even pretended ignorance of its existence. Now the action being taken by the National Security Council will--you will see--cause an uproar from various parts of the world.

TERCUMAN ATTACKS ECEVIT OPPOSITION ARTICLES

NC290815 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 22 Apr 81 p 6

["Putting it Politely" column by Osman Kibar: "The Trouble We Encounter Is Often Due To Our Own Acts"]

[Excerpts] The subject of my column this week is Bulent Ecevit. The editorials he has written in the past 2 weeks for the purpose of coming into the limelight of politics have proved that he has not and will not change at all. Neither his promises nor his understanding o the situation have any value. This spinner of words behaves as if he were not aware of what is going on in our country. As far as he is concerned, the interests of our country and nation do not count. What counts is only his own prestige and grandeur!

If I could believe that washing the dirty linen of the past in the public would be of any use at all to our country, I could write lots of things. But we would be wise and patriotic if we shut our mouths and controlled our pens, particularly now that we are moving on to a smooth path.

Ecevit says the notification served on him was invalid as he has resigned from the leadership of the RPP. This is Ecevit for you. He has always acted with this mentality. There were times when he was "the hope" of the nation. There were times when he was described as "a conqueror." How many of us expect anything of him now? It is even a mistake to write about him. The best course to take is to abandon him to the harms and monstrosities he has inflicted on our country. He will naturally have to atone for what he has done.

COMMUNIST LEADER BILEN DELIVERS MAY DAY SPEECH

TA291650 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen's May Day speech; time and place not given--recorded]

[Text] I wish May Day--the working class' day of international unity, struggle and solidarity--to be auspicious to the Turkish working class, the toilers, the communists, to all patriots and progressives.

May Day is celebrated in different ways in every corner of the world. On that day, the peoples of the socialist countries turn their May Day squares into real holiday areas. They move toward new victories in the path of socialist and communist construction with the slogan of "Everything for the good of the people." In the developed capitalist countries, the workers unite for job security, for better living and working conditions and for opposing the monopolies' attacks against workers' rights. In other countries, May Day becomes the banner of the national independence struggle against imperialism, neocolonialism and racism.

However, there is a common (?axiom) rising in every country: To protect peace.

Every person who wants to live shouts his demands on May Day--to prevent a nuclear war, to stop the arms race and to ensure the continuation of detente. In the fortresses of imperialism--in the United States, the FRG and Japan--the masses are uniting against the efforts of the U.S. administration and of NATO to bring back the Cold War and to increase reaction, against the arms monopolies which trade in death.

Millions of people see the vital importance of the Soviet Union's new peace proposals. They approve of this concrete peace program. The peoples of the Middle East stand against U.S. imperialism's blackmail, impositions and efforts to turn the area into a powder keg.

Our country is not outside these dangers. The U.S. imperialists and the NATO ruling circles have filled our country with spying bases and nuclear arsenals from Edirne to Kars. And that is not enough for them. They are increasing their pressure in order to drag our people closer to the fire. They want to turn our country into an outpost of imperialism against our neighbors, the socialist countries and the Middle Eastern peoples, and to use the Turkish Army as a tool in their imperialist adventures. That is why they try to break every peaceful and realistic tendency in Turkey's foreign policy and to undermine the relations with the socialist countries. The dangers are real. Furthermore, the patriotic forces which were the first to warn the public of these dangers and to oppose Turkey's dependence on imperialism, NATOism and other sources of the present crisis, are under intense pressures today. The generals in power have eliminated all the basic democratic rights and freedoms and have left our country defenseless before imperialist impositions.

There are more patriotic and democratic forces than fascist and Maoist terrorists in the prisons. The pressures on the working class--which is the most (?lively), progressive and revolutionary class of the society--and on its unions, as well as the threats on the patriotic intellectuals, serve only to increase the effectiveness of the imperialists and of the collaborationist and reactionary monopolies. These imperialists and collaborationist and reactionary monopolies implement the anticommunist and anti-Soviet campaigns organized by the CIA against all the forces that are for peace and democracy. They pave the ground for turning Turkey into a full slave of imperialism, NATO and the Common Market.

The fascists within the army and the state maintain their power. The fascist Nationalist Action Party has increased its tendency to organize secretly. The fascist threat has not disappeared. Dependence on imperialism and NATO, the economic crisis and the class sources of terrorism have not been eliminated.

The working class and our people are receiving May Day under extraordinarily harsh conditions. The May Day holiday has been banned. The Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK] has been closed. A large number of worker leaders are in prison being tortured. The Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is] is open but does not really function. Now the collaborationist and monopolist bourgeoisie can limit the workers' salaries and workers' rights to its heart's content. Seniority compensation has been reduced to almost nothing; the same with the social security rights. The workers are not allowed to use their collective agreement rights. More and more workers are being fired. The workers go to work half hungry because of the salaries imposed by the junta. Those who buy the villagers' products--produced with great difficulties--at prices of next to nothing now want taxes as well. There is an increasing number of small shopkeepers who close down their shops, of taxi drivers who sell their taxis, of small manufacturers who lock their doors. There are efforts to turn the state offices, the universities and the schools into army barracks.

Brute force is being used to suppress the Kurdish people's democratic national demands. Whatever the junta takes from the dining table of the people it gives to the monopolies in the form of "support" and "loans." According to Ozal [state minister and deputy prime minister in charge of economic affairs], the increased profits of the big holding companies will save the economy from the present crisis. However, it is clear that the crisis cannot be eliminated by condemning the people to hunger and poverty under the threat of bayonets or by filling up the safes of the monopolies.

The profiteering of the big holding companies has been increasing in the recent years. While workers' salaries dropped last year, six monopolies made profits higher than 1 billion Turkish liras, the press says. There are holding companies that raise their profits 10 times in 1 year. What problems have been solved, though? It is obvious that the more profits the monopolies make the deeper the crisis becomes and the poorer the people become.

Today there is no force outside the creative force of the working class, the working people and the masses to overcome the deep crisis our country is in. Only the determined struggle of our working class and the close cooperation of all the national democratic forces can push back those who want to make the military dictatorship permanent or to turn it into an imperialist-guided and oppressive regime. Only such a struggle and such cooperation can move toward a real democracy. That is the only solution.

Our people have not forgotten the May Day tradition. Hundreds of thousands of workers, civil servants, intellectuals, villagers, women and youth formed a mass power on May Day 1976. The fascist guns which spewed out death on May Day 1977 had been clogged by the people's close unity on May Day 1978. This tradition was enhanced in 1979 and 1980 under different conditions.

Our working class takes power from the struggle [word indistinct] of the May Days.

Since the 12 September military coup, the junta has carried out antidemocratic pressures. Now it has banned May Day. What does this indicate? First of all, it shows more clearly than ever that the unity of the working class, of the national and democratic forces has not been achieved sufficiently. Today, it is very important for the workers and unionists belonging to DISK or Turk-Is to wage a common struggle for the voluntary syndical unity of the working class, for free collective agreements, for unlimited strike rights, for the reopening of DISK and for the release of imprisoned unionists. It is more essential than ever for the working class parties to draw the necessary lessons from the common mistakes they made in the past and to strengthen their unity of action in order to achieve political unity.

The junta administration banned the May Day holiday as well as the 27 May holiday. This development shows once more how essential it is for the patriotic officers and intellectuals--who are loyal to the principles of democracy and independence and to anti-imperialist traditions and who are in favor of a national army--to be in solidarity with the struggle of the working class.

[Words indistinct] the collaborationist monopolies, the most pro-American and the most reactionary profascist forces inside and outside the army. The precondition for dispersing the black clouds over our country and our people is for the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] members, the Turkish Labor Party [TLP] members and the Turkish Socialist Workers Party [TSWP] members to wage a common anti-imperialist and democratic struggle with the widest democratic forces. The TCP is doing and will continue to do all it can regarding this issue.

The urgent problems of youth await solutions. Unemployment affects youth the most. Half a million youth wait at the doors of the universities. Education is for money. Prisons are full of youths. We must win the youths over to the struggle for democracy and national independence. Youths must be prevented from becoming martyrs of terrorism.

The tens of thousands of members of the progressive youth association which is the independent and progressive organization of Turkish youth waged a self-sacrificing struggle and thus carried out important duties in this direction.

The progressive youths who said "the path of the youth is the path of the working class" are on the side of the working people today. They are helping, in a friendly way, all the other youths to find the right path under these confusing conditions--all these other youths who believe that terrorism can solve all problems, who get carried away by adventures and who harm the democratic struggles.

Joining the masses is the only way to struggle without being carried away by adventures and without becoming pessimistic. The working class and our working people need a strong, united, antifascist and anti-imperialist youth movement more than ever. This duty is on the shoulders of all progressive and revolutionary youths.

The socialist, peaceful, national independence and democratic forces in all corners of the world are winning new victories. Imperialism and its collaborationists cannot stop history's flow toward the future. No new weapon factories, no new nuclear missiles, no new prisons or torture chambers can stop this flow. They cannot stop this flow in our country either. No force will be able to suppress our people's national and social liberation struggle, its demands for jobs, (?houses), land and freedom. The working class, our people have not yet uttered their last word. They have not surrendered and will not surrender to the military dictatorship. The working class and our people will prove that they have the power to walk the path that can take this country to a bright future. Our people will take their own fate in their hands. They will prevent our national pride and national independence from being trampled upon by the Pentagon and NATO generals or by the multinational imperialist monopolies. An independent and democratic Turkey where May Day can be celebrated freely will certainly be established.

On this May Day, we extend our revolutionary solidarity greetings to the DISK officials, unionists, worker representatives, villagers' leaders, to the progressive and patriotic youths, Women, teachers, [word inistinct] members, to the Kurdish democrats, to the communists, to all anti-imperialist and antifascist forces.

On this May Day, the communists will carry out their duties for the struggle of the people under these difficult conditions, in all parts of the country and in all sectors of the people. The struggle continues. Long live May Day, the working class' day of international unity, struggle and solidarity.

BRIEFS

WEAPONS SEIZED--During the past 3 days, security forces found 1,031 rifles, 19 automatic pistols, 138 shotguns, 17,930 pistols, 50 machineguns, 41,397 rounds of ammunition and 74 other weapons, mostly in rural areas and buried under the ground. They also found 65 dynamite sticks and 5 hand radios. [Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 27 Apr 81 TA] In operations conducted by security forces in various parts of the country during the last 24 hours, the following weapons were seized: 402 rifles; 6,276 pistols; 18,793 rounds of ammunition; 7 automatic rifles; 12 shotguns; 5 submachineguns; 24 explosive devices as well as 26 weapons of various types. [Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 28 Apr 81 TA] A total of 6,171 pistols, 636 rifles, 186 shotguns, an automatic rifle, 12 submachine guns, 22,585 rounds of ammunition, 8 bombs and 38 weapons of various kinds were seized in searches and operations conducted by the security forces in the last 24 hours. [Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 29 Apr 81 TA]

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 084 1 May 1981

AUSTRIA

Kreisky Attends Socialists International Meeting E 1
Criticizes U.S. Policy [ARBEITER-ZEITUNG 30 Apr] E 1
Meets With Japanese Delegate E 1
Polish Minister of Justice Arrives for 2-Day Visit [WIENER ZEITUNG 28 Apr] E 2
Comments on Censorship [DIE PRESSE 30 Apr] E 2

BENELUX

BELGIUM

Prime Minister Eyskens on Economic Problems [LE SOIR 16 Apr] F 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Reportage on Schmidt's Saudi Arabia, UAR Visits J 1
Lambsdorff Interview in Riyadh J 1
Reports on UAR Visit [cross-reference] J 2
Schmidt Return, Statement J 2
Lambsdorff Remarks in Bonn J 3
Genscher Cited on Spain's EEC, NATO Membership [Madrid ABC 28 Apr] J 3
HANDELSBLATT Comments on U.S. President's Speech [30 Apr] J 4
Press Discusses Approaches to NATO's Dual Decision J 4
Bremen Workers, Polish Solidarity Form Exchange J 5

FRANCE

Latest Poll Shows Mitterrand Ahead of Giscard K 1
First Round Votes of Expatriates Tabulated K 2
LE MATIN Analyzes First Round Election Results [27 Apr] K 2
L'HUMANITE: PCF Defeat Due to 'Complex Situation' [28 Apr] K 3
LE MONDE Article Considers Election Aftermath [29 Apr] K 4
Antisubmarine Warfare Aircraft To Be Modernized [LE MONDE 26-27 Apr] K 5

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Spain's King Juan Carlos Departs for Home L 1
L'UNITA Comments on Craxi Report to PSI Congress [23 Apr] L 1

SPAIN

Government Tightens Reins on Soviet Nationals N 1
Plane, Ship Reduction N 1
Sources Confirm Removal of Armored Division Chief N 1
Police Ban Against DIARIO 16 Newspaper Lifted N 1

NORDIC AFFAIRS

FINLAND

USSR First Deputy Arkhipov To Visit in May P 1
HUFVUDSTADSBLADET on Finnish-USSR Treaty Debate [24 Apr] P 1
Briefs: Loan to Poland P 2

SWEDEN

Tribunal To Investigate Soviet Afghan Role P 2

GREECE

TO VIMA Sees U.S. Pressure on Talks With Turkey [30 Apr] S 1
Mitsotakis Departs for NATO Rome Meeting S 1
Iraq's Hammadi in Athens for Official Visit S 2
Arrival Statement S 2
Begins Meetings S 2
Meets Karamanlis S 2
INA Report S 3
Hammadi Statement S 3

TURKEY

Evren Speaks on Return to Democracy, Other Topics T 1
Turkmen Interview on Middle East, U.S. Relations [CUMHURIYET 27 Apr] T 2
Foreign Minister Discusses Relations With Greece T 3
TERCUMAN Says Soviets Support Armenian Terrorists [27 Apr] T 4
UK's Gilmour Ends Official Visit, Departs T 4
Transportation Talks With Iran Begins in Ankara T 4
NATO's Luns Assures Economic, Military Aid T 5
Commerce Minister Canturk Returns From Bulgaria T 5
Death Penalty Demanded for Kurdish Secessionists T 5
Former Minister Sentenced for Arms Smuggling T 6
ARAYIS Questions Government Role in Congress [25 Apr] T 6
Briefs: Sulphur Exports T 6

KREISKY ATTENDS SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL MEETING

Criticizes U.S. Policy

AU300933 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 30 Apr 81 p 5

[Georg Hoffmann-Ostenhof report on Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's speech at the Amsterdam Socialist International party leaders conference on 29 April 1981]

[Text] Amsterdam (AZ)--The U.S. "policy of strength" was criticized by Chancellor Kreisky at the Socialist International's party leaders conference that was held on Wednesday at the Amsterdam Congress Center.

"Have there ever been more military advisers than in Iran, and what was the outcome? Has there ever been a more extensive military engagement than in the Vietnam war, and what was the outcome?" This was asked by Chancellor Kreisky in his speech at the meeting of leaders of social democratic and socialist parties from all over the world, who on Wednesday morning discussed East-West relations in light of the latest CPSU Party Congress and the first 100 days of the Reagan administration.

Kreisky declared that there had been a "fundamental change" in the U.S. policy to which there had not been paid enough attention. He depicted the new U.S. policy as a return to a pre-Roosevelt policy. He diagnosed the conservative basic trends in the United States and expressed the opinion that the Reagan policy at the moment is in conformity with large sections of the American people. Haig's distinction between totalitarian regimes (Eastern dictatorships) and authoritarian regimes (rightist dictatorships), and as a result, a differentiated attitude toward the human rights question--a differentiation that was made only recently by the U.S. secretary of state in a speech--is regarded by Kreisky as dangerous. He cites approvingly a HERALD TRIBUNE commentary attacking Haig's statements: People do not care whether they are mistreated by communist or fascist torturers.

Socialists, Kreisky declared, are often regarded in the United States as "Reds" and "fellow travelers" of the Soviet Union, but nevertheless, one must not "antagonize" the United States, since otherwise the rift would only be increased. Rather, it is necessary to seek a dialogue with U.S. politicians: "Such a dialogue can be useful. Americans are openminded by nature."

The policy of detente, of course, appears differently from different geographic points. "If one is situated 40 kilometers from the border with the East European countries, one sees thing in a different light than in Houston, Texas," Kreisky said. In this context, the chancellor also commented on Austria's experiences. "We had to carry a heavy occupation burden. The Austrians often resisted pressures very courageously, we did not put up with any encroachments. But honesty requires us to say that for a quarter century, we have been free of any pressure and any intervention by the Soviet Union." The social democrats and socialists have stood the test in good times on the policy of detente--"now we must prove that we are also able to pursue our social democratic policy in hard times," he said.

However, if Europe is seeking to bring about a resumption of the policy of detente, one has to tell the USSR clearly in which specific field confidence-building measures should be taken; measures "which we must demand in order to be credible," Kreisky declared.

Meets With Japanese Delegate

OW300223 Tokyo KYODO in English 0208 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Amsterdam April 29 (KYODO)--Austrian Premier Bruno Kreisky has openly denied any possibilities at present for a Soviet military intervention in Poland.

Kreisky made the observation in a meeting with Japanese Democratic Socialist Party Chairman Ryosaku Sasaki. They are here to attend the Socialist International being held here.

Sasaki quoted Kreisky as saying that the Soviet Union had not enough reserves to intervene in the domestic affairs of Poland because the Kremlin has enough work of its own.

The Austrian premier, indicating his personal views, stressed that it was out of the question for the Kremlin to take over the cumulative liabilities of the Polish Government.

He was also quoted by Sasaki as saying that the Western bloc countries should continue economic assistance to Warsaw to help that country promote industrialization programs, without making any moves to intervene directly in Polish domestic affairs.

Sasaki plans to visit Warsaw on his way home after visiting Vienna via Paris after the Amsterdam meeting. His itinerary in Poland is to be fixed later. Sasaki hopes to hold a series of talks with Deputy Premier M. Rakowski, and leaders of the union Solidarity, the leading Polish labor organization, while in Warsaw.

POLISH MINISTER OF JUSTICE ARRIVES FOR 2-DAY VISIT

AU281311 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 28 Apr 81 p 2

[Text] The Polish People's Republic Minister of Justice Prof Jerzy Bafia, arrived in Vienna yesterday for a 2-day official visit. He is returning a visit to Poland by Minister of Justice Christian Broda. During his visit, Minister of Justice Bafia will have a working discussion at the Ministry of Justice and also will meet with the supreme court president and the procurator general of the supreme court.

Comments on Censorship

AU301205 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 30 Apr 81 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "Gud"]

[Text] Vienna--The Austrian news media draft bill has aroused strong interest on the part of Justice Minister Jerzy Bafia during his current Vienna visit. This was confirmed by Bafia and his Vienna host, Minister of Justice Broda, speaking to journalists on Tuesday evening after their talk at the Justice Ministry. According to Bafia, the Polish Sejm is at present working on a bill which is to subject censorship to court control. "The bill is to expand the freedom of opinion in Poland," Bafia declared. In his opinion, the bill will go into effect in the near future: "To name a date would be difficult."

As has been learned from Polish sources, two draft bills have been presented to the Warsaw parliament: one by the government, the other by a "joint committee" of intellectuals and the "Solidarity" trade union movement. The committee draft envisages that censorship decisions should only be permitted in the future if the reasons for them are given in writing and if they are founded on valid law. Appeals against the censorship of articles in dailies and weeklies would have to be settled within 48 hours.

As far as the independence of the judiciary is concerned, it already exists in Poland, according to Bafia. The main problem dealt with in the pending amendment is "the expansion of the judges' self-management." Asked about the primary of the communist party in Poland, Bafia said "the leading role of the party is primarily a program role. The party also exerts certain control functions. These functions can be taken into consideration within the framework of the judges' self-management."

BELGIUM

PRIME MINISTER EYSKENS ON ECONOMIC PROGRAM

LD301515 Brussels LE SOIR in French 16 Apr 81 p 2

[Guy Depas, Catherin Ferrant and Yvan Toussaint interview with Belgian Prime Minister Marc Eyskens--date and place unspecified]

[Excerpt] [Question] The idea of issuing a crisis loan between now and June 15 has been retained. It will be combined with some tax concession. But what concessions, when exemption from the advance deduction of tax is being ruled out?

[Answer] There are two reasons why the advance deduction of tax from income from these loan bonds is being retained: First, a desire to bring the characteristics of the operation into line with the political imperatives of each of the majority parties--the Socialist reservations are common knowledge, second, the government's desire to offer a product technically tailored to the wishes of all types of subscribers.

Besides private savings, such a loan will tap the assets of institutions (banks, insurance companies and so forth), which, because of the tax conditions applying to them, have no interest in the abolition of advance deduction. While private savings can be attracted by other concessions (tax or otherwise) compensating for the retention of advance deduction, those concessions are the crucial factor in institutional investor's decision to respond to the state's appeal.

[Question] There will doubtless be other concessions, but, once again, what sort? Is the debate still centering on the possibility of an amnesty for expatriated capital, the proceeds of which are out of reach of the internal revenue?

[Answer] A tax amnesty? That is out of the question, It would create a major political problem and would be unfair at a time when the government is stepping up the struggle against fraud.

But just use your imagination. For instance, the advance deduction could be considered the final tax, and income from the bonds could be exempted from the lump-sum tax. Or, the invested capital could be exempted from death taxes.... Those are possibilities. There are others too, not necessarily to do with tax.

What I can tell you is that we cannot risk failure. In particular, the interest rate will have to be calculated so it takes into account the retention of advance deduction.

[Question] No risk of failure.... How much do you expect this special loan to bring in ?

[Answer] More than a conventional loan, of course--and if possible much more. It will all depend on the general climate, the state of the investment market and the yield offered for savings. A hundred billion may not be out of reach....

[Question] What about the Socialist reservations about this operation?

[Answer] There is a broad consensus within the government in favor of a crisis loan capable of helping finance a new industry policy and of helping stabilize or even curb the foreign debt and restructure the domestic debt by reducing the percentage accounted for by short term borrowing, which is very expensive in terms of interest rates. Not that I have any illusions about the development of interest rates....

All Out

[Question] Still on the subject of taxation, it looks as though various measures will soon have to be submitted to the two sides of industry....

[Answer] Let's get things straight. On Monday, the government approved various draft laws. These will have to be ratified by Parliament. You know the measures in question: Further tax immunity for enterprise profits that are retained--up to 30 percent of the profits; adjustment of the solidarity tax, which will be alleviated by the expedient of allowances on enterprise profits in proportion to recruitment; tax immunity for reinvested surplus value, which will be institutionalized and so forth. Indeed, these are all measures that I think are capable, on the one hand, of slowing or reversing the downward trend in investment that we are witnessing in Belgium and, on the other, of promoting employment. You must concede that the government is "going all out," as they say.

[Question] Let us return to the advance deduction of tax. While this is not being abolished for subscribers to the crisis loan, it is being abolished for foreign subscribers to certain public and commercial bills. However, you look at it, that is an incentive to foreign financing....

[Answer] That is true. But tell me how we could implement our industrial policy--iron and steel, textiles, coal and so forth--without attracting foreign money? You have to be realistic. But what I do promise you, however, is that the state accounts will from now on make this point clear. I am in favor of figures and statistics being clear.

Index-Linking: One Cost Among Others

[Question] There remains one thorny issue: The restraint of incomes and in particular the revision of the system of index-linking wages. Will the issue be raised again when the current price freeze ends?

[Answer] The price freeze will end 2 May, as planned. It will then be a case of persuading the so-called "sheltered" sectors--especially the energy sector--not to go too far. Do I need to remind you of the government decision empowering the king to review oil prices at every level?

[Question] What about wage indexing? Will the prime minister fight to change the system?

[Answer] Indexation is only one element among others--there are about forty--which are going to make up enterprises' costs. My plan is to tackle the issue comprehensively. The essential thing is that the expenses of Belgian enterprises should not always exceed the average expenses of European enterprises. That is essentially those of France, the Benelux countries and Germany, our neighbors and competitors.

[Question] How can this be achieved without changing the wage indexing system?

[Answer] First by taxation, as I have already explained. Second by a reduction in social security contributions with a compensating selective increase in value-added tax rates on nonessential goods. Finally, by taking action on the structure of costs.

The problem must be split into three aspects"

First, I believe that indexation is not a cause of excessive inflation but rather the opposite. Is it harder to maintain under the Belgian system than under the neighboring systems? I doubt it if you consider the size of the settlements reached elsewhere in collective agreements. Second, to abandon an unprotected population to monetary erosion is unacceptable both socially and politically. Finally, I wonder is indexation a factor stabilizing or destabilizing employment?

[Question] What is your answer to that question?

[Answer] I am looking for it. And the government is looking for it. It is the answer that will dictate the government's political attitude in the matter.

In the Face of the Christian People's Party Youth Group I am Keeping Cool

[Question] Has anything fundamental changed in your relations with the Socialists in the last week?

[Answer] The fall of Martens' fourth government was a shock, but our basic problems remain the same. Martens was right in his analysis. And in his proposals. That is my opinion anyway, and it is shared by the other Social Christian ministers. There is a political bottleneck that must be resolved but there is still a lot of good will within the government, even if we were not always in agreement.

The coalition between the big families remains a political stabilizing factor, provided that it produces fundamental decisions and effective measures.

[Question] Your predecessor had problems inside his own party. Just recently, the Christian People's Party youth group seemed to resume its offensive against the government, asking you, for instance, to abandon the Walloon iron and steel industry. What is your reaction?

[Answer] I am keeping cool! I regard myself, as I have already said, as a bridgebuilder. I do not want to let myself be drawn into political polemics while at the same time, I want to copy Mr Martens in his loyalty to his government partners. I want to avoid the worst, but of course I may find myself clashing with my own party: that is a prime minister's vocation.

[Question] Wasn't it your party that pushed Mr Martens out the window, so to speak?

[Answer] The Social Christian minister accepted Mr Martens' proposals. If the four government partners had all done likewise, Mr Martens would still be in office. But that chapter is closed! I don't want to return to the topic....

[Question] Budget policy. Costs policy. Recovery policy. All in a rush. And a policy of defending the franc as well: that's a great deal. Isn't it too much in so short a time? Indeed, the franc is beginning to weaken again....

[Answer] Devaluation? No! A monetarist policy with all its economic contradictions, especially on interest rates? What a long time that would take!

The main thing is a battle for the real economic priorities. This is the only thing that can restore confidence in our country. My objective is to prevent the worst, to stabilize, to bring about a recovery. That is how the franc will survive.

Regionalization? No Innovations

[Question] What about regionalization? Is it completely out of fashion because of the economic problems? Does the change of prime minister sign its death warrant?

[Answer] I do not believe that now is the time to make innovations here. Promises have been made and they must be kept: in particular, the notorious "commission for Brussels problems" must be set up. That is the "missing link" in regionalization. But that is not in the hands of the government alone. And community problems do not seem to be priorities so far as public opinion is concerned.

[Question] People are saying that Belgium has become an ungovernable country, that everybody has the power to oppose decisions. What do you think?

[Answer] First note that the people who criticize consultation are the first to demand it--down to the smallest detail--when their own interests are at stake! It is true that our country, with its divergent regional majorities, finds it difficult to avoid complex government coalitions. Our pluralist system sometimes prevents us from being efficient, and this has repercussions on the economic indicators. But on the other hand, it must be said that every one of our governments has gotten budget and recovery laws passed....That's not bad.

But in fact in a hierarchical society such as ours, what is decided at the top is poorly disseminated, and implemented only slowly and imperfectly. Sergeants are our problem! To ensure that officials have a sense of responsibility at all levels of government, I have launched an "outline law" which changes budget methods and will give each intermediate decisionmaking body control of its budget package, which it will have to administer completely. I have great expectations of this new instrument.

[Question] Our recent campaign to obtain information about Flemish attitudes, which we mounted together with the standard, shows that a majority of Flemish people no longer feel any solidarity with the Walloons, especially on the economic level. What do you think of this?

[Answer] I advise those Flemish people who want to "drop" Wallonia to take a trip to the region, so they can see what the economic decline of an area means in terms of human cost. The economic interdependence of the regions--I am thinking, for instance, of the port of Anvers which is extensively connected with the Walloon iron and steel industry--remains very important.

REPORTAGE ON SCHMIDT'S SAUDI ARABIA, UAR VISITS

Lamsdorff Interview in Riyadh

DW301034 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0450 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Excerpts from reporter Hauschild interview with Minister of Economics Otto Graf Lambsdorff in Riyadh--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The federal chancellor yesterday explained in detail to his Saudi discussion partners the stance of the Federal Republic with regard to the arms export question: no supplies to tension areas, but an examination of our export practice in the foreseeable future. Did that issue come up again at last night's talks?

[Answer] It came up, but nothing has changed. The federal chancellor explained the situation in the morning on his own, and once more at night he confirmed the current situation in the Federal Republic. The Saudis accepted this statement.

[Question] Was there any discord over the chancellor's explanations, which might have brought influence to bear on the climate of the economic talks?

[Answer] I can give you an explicit no! The Saudis said that they would wait for the results of the discussions. They don't want to embarrass a friendly partner. It can be said that there was no discord or disapproval. On the contrary, I believe that the fact that the federal chancellor, not alone but together with the Saudi crown prince and government chief, will give a press conference here, which is not part of the usual rules in Saudi Arabia, indicates that our visit here has contributed positively to the improvement of friendly relations and thus certainly also to the strengthening of economic relations.

[Question] Saudi Arabia, the Federal Republic's biggest oil supplier, has brought a moderate influence to bear on OPEC price policy in the past. Will this continue?

[Answer] It will continue. The crown prince as well as Oil Minister Shaykh Yamani reconfirmed that this policy will be continued. They said: We consider cooperation with the countries of the industrial world to be in our long term interest. Naturally, we want to achieve as high a price as possible for our only property, namely oil. But with our prices, we don't want to economically embarrass our current and future business partners or even make them insolvent.

[Question] Were any concrete agreements made which would have an effect on German exporters' order books?

[Answer] No, that didn't happen. That isn't the aim of such visits. Neither the federal chancellor nor the federal minister of economics are salesmen for German industry. But what we must do and what we have done is prepare the background, the framework conditions, so that German firms can make their offers without running into political difficulties. Naturally, the firms must make their offers at prices that are competitive. That was one of our problems in the past 18 months.

The deutsche mark has become somewhat cheaper. The dollar and the yen have become more firm. That will certainly have an effect on our cashbox, not from one day to the next and not the day after tomorrow, but in the long run it will certainly have an effect on the development of our export relations. That is necessary because in 1980 Saudi Arabia achieved for the first time a very high trade surplus with the Federal Republic. Some action must take place in our export field to balance the figures again.

[Question] Is it possible that the money transferred to Saudi Arabia for German oil bills will flow back some time in the form of orders? That ought to be the main aim of our minister of economics in view of our export balance.

[Answer] That is correct; that is how it has been in the past. Trade was almost balanced. We must work very hard to achieve balanced figures again. To do this, it is indeed necessary that orders coming from Saudi Arabia will have to increase, that we must intensify our activities so that we--as I said--will be able to compete. To do this, we must make great efforts at home as well. Politically, at any rate, there will be no obstacles and no stiff opposition to face.

Reports on UAR Visit

For reportage on the visit of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to the United Arab Emirates, including a report on the granting of oil concessions to German companies and a report on Chancellor Schmidt's 30 April press conference, see the UAE subsection of the Arabian Peninsula section of the 1 May Middle East and Africa DAILY REPORT.

Schmidt Return, Statement

LD302200 Hamburg DPA in German 1954 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 30 Apr (DPA)--Chancellor Schmidt has left the time of Bonn's decision concerning possible arms deliveries to Saudi Arabia and other interested countries open. Immediately after his return from his visit to Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates, the chancellor said on German television tonight, in response to a question on whether a clarification would not have to be achieved at home this year on the arms export issue: "I don't want to tie myself down as regards the timetable." During his Middle East tour, he had "spoken of years." At present, he sees no need to qualify this statement. Even so, Schmidt held out the prospect of a change in the government's principles on arms exports by autumn.

Schmidt made it clear that the Federal Government intends to make its decision on such arms deliveries dependent on the support of the Bundestag. This is not a question falling within the chancellor's competence to issue guidelines, he said, but requires endorsement by a majority in the Bundestag. Schmidt emphasized that the Bundestag in which all three party groups are divided on the question of arms deliveries to Saudi Arabia and other countries outside NATO, must deal with the overall question carefully and rationally. The discussion must not be emotional.

The chancellor reaffirmed his statement to the Saudi Arabian leadership that for the Federal Government arms deliveries aren't possible "at present." Concerning Bonn's decisionmaking process in this matter, he said that the Federal Government and parliament are reviewing how the principles concerning arms exports have worked out in practice during the past 10 years. This might lead sometime in the autumn to changes or an adjustment of these principles, which certainly would not remain quite as they have been thus far. At the same time, Schmidt declared that the "fundamental restraint" regarding arms exports would "certainly" be retained in the sense that the arms industry should not develop manufacturing capacities which would subsequently "become greedy" for orders to provide employment. The wishes of the various countries for German arms will have to be assessed only after the principles governing arms exports have been reformulated.

Schmidt once again described Saudi Arabia as the Federal Republic's most important economic and political partner outside NATO. He stressed the friendly attitude of Saudi Arabia and the Emirates toward the Federal Republic, saying that friendship born of a similarity of interests made solidarity a moral obligation.

Even a decision not to make any arms deliveries outside NATO during the next 10 years might also involve considerable moral risks for the security interests of one's own state. Bonn wants no Bundeswehr soldiers in the Gulf, but it is perfectly clear that the security of the Federal Republic would be affected if oil supplies were cut off by military conflicts. Schmidt paid tribute to the "highly pronounced sense of responsibility" of Saudi Arabia regarding oil prices and quantities, as well as currency questions.

Schmidt criticized German industry for having contributed to linking in the public mind economic expansion and the arms supply issue. This is not particularly wise and has been done against his express advice. The chancellor denied that he promised arms deliveries to King Khalid during his visit to Bonn last summer. In fact, he cited "weighty reasons" for speaking against them. Schmidt admitted, however, that he told a Saudi Arabian visitor last autumn that he hoped that a definite decision on the whole matter might be reached by Christmas.

Lambsdorff Remarks in Bonn

LD301342 Hamburg DPA in German 1020 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 30 Apr (DPA)--Federal Economics Minister Count Otto Lambsdorff is of the opinion that Saudi Arabia, notwithstanding the discussion on German arms sales, continues to be interested in close cooperation and the expansion of traditional trade relations with the Federal Republic. "This applies at present, at least, independent of the question of whether Saudi security policy desires can be met," Lambsdorff stated in Bonn today after his return from Riyadh. But he said, he is not prepared to conclude from the present attitude of the Saudi Government that this will always be the case. Lambsdorff called on German companies to become more involved in Saudi Arabia again. "Saudi Arabia is a test case for German competitiveness," he said.

Petroleum and Mineral Affairs Minister Yamani gave the chancellor and himself the understanding that Saudi Arabia will continue to adhere to its price and production policy, Lambsdorff said. Despite the present oil glut, the Saudi price policy is still aimed at cutting the top prices of some African producers in particular and at reestablishing a unified OPEC oil price. Lambsdorff said the Saudis have great political sensitivity and a high sense of responsibility regarding the world economy. Saudi Arabia clearly feels itself to be part of the Free World.

GENSCHER CITED ON SPAIN'S EEC, NATO MEMBERSHIP

LD301505 Madrid ABC in Spanish 28 Apr 81 p 18

[EFE report: "Spain Welcome in EEC and NATO"]

[Text] Bonn--In the wake of Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo's visit to the FRG 22-23 April, FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher told EFE news agency:

[Question] How do you assess the Spanish prime minister's visit?

[Answer] Extremely positive. The FRG Government is pleased that the Spanish prime minister's first visit to a foreign country was to the FRG. This is further proof of the excellent relations between our two countries.

[Question] What does Spain entry into the EEC mean for you?

[Answer] The FRG Government is convinced of the political need for Spain's entry into the EEC. The decision to incorporate Spain into the Community is irreversible, as far as we are concerned. Spain's participation in the EEC is an important factor for strengthening democracy in the Iberian Peninsula, and the attempted coup has highlighted even further the importance of entry into the EEC.

[Question] Do you believe it's possible to keep to the envisaged timetable for entry?

[Answer] The negotiations on entry must continue intensively within the framework of the envisaged timetable and despite the difficulties stemming from the EEC's internal problems of reorganizing structures. Spain should join the Community as soon as possible.

[Question] You also discussed Spain's possible entry into NATO. What is the FRG's stance on the issue?

[Answer] The FRG Government clearly has said that Spain's entry into NATO would be interpreted as the direct and logical consequence of its progress toward the Community of the Western democracies. It has also always repeated that Spain, when it decides to take that step on its own responsibility, can rely on a favorable reaction on the part of the FRG. Spain's participation in NATO also would be in interpreted in Bonn as a pro-European decision. As far as we are concerned, Spain is a welcome member in the EEC and NATO.

HANDELSBLATT COMMENTS ON U.S. PRESIDENT'S SPEECH

DW301202 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 30 Apr 81 p 2

[Commentary by Jens Eckhardt: "Reagan Rides on the Attack"]

[Text] At the joint session of both houses of the U.S. Congress, U.S. President Reagan again demonstrated the qualities of a speaker which even his adversaries praise. With the correct timing of the professional actor, he praised and provoked as well as appealed to the readiness to cooperate and to the political instinct of the members of Congress, clearly overtaking the adversaries of his economic program at the finish line.

Two core sentences of the speech brought ovations for Reagan: "The government has become too big and it spends too much money," and "We cannot go on as we did before." As is known, the U.S. Government wants to tackle such evils as high inflation and decreasing productivity with budget and tax cuts, the elimination of government regulations and with a restrictive monetary policy.

It is the distribution of the budget cuts and particularly the tax cuts which is in dispute. The Democrats want to have less cuts in the social field and they want to add less to defense expenditures. But regarding total expenditures, they are close to the ideas of the Republicans. The main point of their criticism of government plans involves taxes.

Reagan, therefore, dealt particularly with the criticism of his tax plans. In addition to the prepared text of the speech, he pointed out that despite his cuts U.S. citizens would have to pay more taxes in 3 years than today. He just wanted to make the increase milder which otherwise would be intolerable.

The only chance for the Democrats to implement their own plans in the House of Representatives lies in keeping conservative party comrades under control and talking Republicans who demanded a balanced federal budget prior to 1984 into leaving the group. They are already tinkering with a compromise. Their chances of prevailing have decreased even more after Reagan's speech.

PRESS DISCUSSES APPROACHES TO NATO'S DUAL DECISION

DW291007 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 29 Apr 81

[From the press review]

[Text] WESTDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG of Duesseldorf writes: The FDP Executive Board supported almost unanimously Genscher's double course in matters of European Nuclear armament.

The document of the Executive Board is a verbal masterpiece since it coordinated the most different voices and moods under one party hat. The advocates of giving priority to disarmament negotiations found their opinion as much reflected as those who consider the stationing of missiles on European territory as indispensable because of the imbalance between the West and the East. After ambiguous statements on rifts in the Bonn coalition, the liberals mainly wanted to demonstrate smooth agreement with the almost similar 5-point program of the Social Democrats outlined in February. But the link that was supposed to hold foreign and security policies together in view of a decreasing common platform still must stand its test.

LUEBECKER NACHRICHTEN notes: The foreign minister's party cannot afford an ambiguous stance with regard to this decisive problem. There is more than enough of that in the SPD, the chancellor's party. The FDP Federal Executive Board decided in a motion to support NATO's dual decision. The new move of the Young Socialists aimed at its termination looks like an alarming signal in this situation. If the FDP recalls that the agreement on foreign and defense policies was always the strongest force holding the coalition together, this is a clear warning to the SPD.

SCHWAEBISCHE ZEITUNG of Leutkirch deals with the ideas of the Young Socialists. It writes: The liberal leadership supports partnership in the Western alliance and close cooperation with the United States, the indivisibility of NATO's counterarmament decision and a rejection of Brezhnev's suggestion to freeze missile armament in its current state. This is opposed by a catalogue of the Young Socialists containing several points such as opposition to the stationing of American medium-range missiles in West Europe, support of the Soviet moratorium plan and opposition regarding the planned rearmament policy of the Reagan government. SPD Federal Manager Peter Glotz tries--who is surprised by that?--to play down the importance of the Young Socialists' dialogue. The defense policy opinion of the young party generation doesn't reflect the opinion of the SPD, said Glotz. This is certainly true with regard to the top echelon, but not to great parts of the followers and mandate bearers. Certainly, the most leftist Bundestag Deputy Manfred Coppick still stands alone with his current statement that he will vote against the defense minister's budget in parliament. And yet, he will certainly get some more or less loud applause.

BREMEN WORKERS, POLISH SOLIDARITY FORM EXCHANGE

LD010834 Hamburg DPA in German 1151 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] Bremen, 29 Apr (DPA)--The Bremen Workers' Chamber has agreed on an exchange of experiences and information with the Polish Solidarity trade union. The chamber's chief business manager, Mayor Walter Franke, announced on his return from Gdansk on Wednesday that this first exchange between Solidarity and West German trade union members was agreed upon with the workers' leader, Lech Walesa. It will take place this fall. Walesa's deputy, Alojzy Szablewski, will lead a delegation of 10 shipyard workers from Gdansk. A German group of the same number will subsequently travel to Poland.

According to Franke, this exchange will become permanent. The Poles' interest centers mainly on acquiring knowledge of German social laws, labor law, the economic system, German constitutional law for factories, workers' participation and work safety. A seminar will be arranged for this purpose.

LATEST POLL SHOWS MITTERRAND AHEAD OF GISCARD

NC302046 Paris AFP in English 2023 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 30 Apr (AFP)--Socialist Francois Mitterrand held on to a three-point lead over President Valery Giscard d'Estaing in his bid to become the first leftist leader of France in the 23 years of the Fifth Republic, according to a poll released today.

Meanwhile, Mr Giscard d'Estaing, who beat Mr Mitterrand for the presidency in 1974, stepped up his efforts to lure the challenger into a no-holds-barred-showdown televised debate before their two-man runoff election on May 10.

A poll conducted by the I.F.O.P Institute and published by the weekly news magazine LE POINT gave Mr Mitterrand 51.5 percent of the vote against 48.5 percent for Mr Giscard d'Estaing.

The survey was taken before the main battle lines had been drawn in the campaign--before the rightist Gaullist party announced it would support but not campaign for the president and the communists (?said) they would back Mr Mitterrand.

But with French election law barring publication of any polls within a week of the election, it was likely to be the first and last voter survey before the decisive second round of balloting, shaping up as a classic left-right battle.

Mr Mitterrand, who finished a close runner-up to Mr Giscard d'Estaing in the first-round vote on April 26, is trying to become the first leftist president of the Fifth Republic.

After Leon Blum served as premier of the National [Popular] Front government immediately before World War II and as premier briefly afterwards, there were three other post-war Socialist heads of government, Felix Gouin, Paul Ramadier and Guy Mollet. Fourth Republic President Vincent Auriol was also a Socialist.

After the poll results were released showing Mr Mitterrand the frontrunner, Mr Giscard d'Estaing increased the pressure for a free-wheeling televised debate with his rival that could play a major role in the race.

Mr Giscard d'Estaing, 55, came out the clear winner when the two men squared off in a TV debate before the 1974 election and this was considered a key factor in his slim 420,000 vote victory.

The president wants an open debate with plenty of room for direct interplay between the two candidates. But Mr Mitterrand has held out for a much more structured forum in which they would be questioned by four journalists most of the time with only 15 minutes at the end for direct debate.

Today Mr Giscard d'Estaing sent a personal ultimatum to the 64-year-old challenger, daring him to show up at a television studio for an unrestricted debate on Tuesday, a date originally proposed by Mr Mitterrand.

"I will be in the television studio on Tuesday, May 5, [word indistinct] to debate with you and you alone on the topics concerning the future of our country," wrote the president. "I pose no conditions and I want to end this haggling over the modalities of this [words indistinct] it is with you that I want to speak and not third parties."

The Socialists have insisted that they will not allow the debate to become a "spectacle," or a "competition in eloquence." They also want to have only one encounter, where Mr Giscard d'Estaing is seeking two: one on foreign policy and the other on domestic matters.

Mr Giscard d'Estaing pressed his bid today to scare away voters from Mr Mitterrand with the argument that a Socialist vote would also be a vote for France's Communists.

"If there are Gaullists who think that France can be the only country in Europe elected with Communist votes, it is a reasoning that I cannot understand," he told at lunch he offered here for some 500 doctors, lawyers and other professionals.

Mr Mitterrand, for his part, picked up the support of Arlette Laguiller, a Trotskyite candidate in the first round, as well as backing from the weekly magazine CHRISTIAN WITNESS, a Marxist institute, about 30 scientists and councilmen from the greater Paris region.

FIRST ROUND VOTES OF EXPATRIATES TABULATED

LD301152 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Summary] The results of voting by French people overseas are now officially known:

Valery Giscard d'Estaing	45 percent
Jacques Chirac	22 percent
Francois Mitterrand	18 percent
Brice Lalonde	4 percent
Arlette Laguiller	0.9 percent
Georges Marchais	1.7 percent

LE MATIN ANALYZES FIRST ROUND ELECTION RESULTS

LD301131 Paris LE MATIN in French 27 Apr 81 pp 2-3

[Jean-Francois Doumic article: "PCF's collapse: Considerable Unknown Quantity for the Second Round"]

[Text] There are two ways to assess the results of the first round of the presidential election--by addition or subtraction. By the addition method, the five leftwing candidates together have a total of around 47 percent of the votes, while the left attained 48.6 percent in the 1978 parliamentary elections, a figure which was then regarded as a record, and 45.9 percent in the first round of the 1974 presidential election. On the other side, the right with its four candidates now has a little over 49 percent (49.3 percent was the estimate at 2200 hours) as against 49.3 percent in 1978 and 50.9 percent in 1974.

A comparison with 1974, therefore, shows an improvement in the left's positions while the right was lost ground. A comparison with 1978 gives the opposite result. The ecologists make the difference in the two cases.

But this gives very little idea of what might happen in the second round. The 1981 first round has, in fact, been characterized by one of the most important political events of recent decades--the PCF's collapse. With scarcely more than 16 percent of the votes, Georges Marchais has achieved the lowest score for his party since the Popular Front. It is true that the PCF has only once before faced a presidential election, which is a difficult test for it in view of the French electorate's tendency to bipolarization. But in 1969--in circumstances which were, of course, different--Jacques Duclos won more than 21 percent of the votes. If yesterday's results are compared with those of the 1978 parliamentary elections, an election in which the turnout (81.18 percent) was very similar to yesterday's (around 80 percent), the PCF's collapse is just as noticeable. In percentage terms, it obtained 20.51 percent of the votes then as against around 16 percent today. In figures, the PCF lost exactly 1 million votes: the Communists dropped from 5,865,000 votes in 1978 to around 4.8 million.

Where have these voters gone--voters who can legitimately be assumed to have been loyal PCF supporters until now? The result of the second round depends essentially on this question. If these votes have stayed on the left, if for example they helped to swell Mitterrand's electorate or if some went to the extreme left and some to Michel Crepeau, then we have witnessed a simple internal transfer of votes on the left. Of course, it is an important transfer since they went to the Socialist candidate and because this shift could create an impetus leading to victory for Mitterrand. But the consequences of this operation are limited since the total number of votes for the left remains the same.

However, there is nothing to suggest that these 1 million votes which the PCF lost all remained on the left. They could have gone in three other directions: first abstention, thus replacing other traditional abstentionists who were mobilized this time, to the ecologists who with their candidate Lalonde achieved the best score in their election history, finally, to Jacques Chirac, thus choosing to vote "against" [Giscard] but for a man who does not belong to the left.

What will the section of former Communist voters who didn't vote for the left yesterday do on 10 May?

The other question which will dominate the campaign for the second round relates to the attitude of those who yesterday voted for Jacques Chirac. With some 18 percent of the votes, the Paris mayor has the support of voters whose behavior is largely unknown. It is difficult to identify the 5 million voters who chose him with the 3.8 million or so people who voted for Jacques Chaban-Delmas in 1974: the Bordeaux mayor then waged a campaign of criticism. Furthermore, it isn't certain that the 5 million people who voted for Chirac in 1981 will transfer their votes to the majority as effectively as the 6.45 million RPR voters did in 1978.

There was, in fact, one main victor in the first round yesterday and one minor candidate who has every reason to be satisfied. Yesterday's victor was Francois Mitterrand. With around 25.5 percent of the votes, the Socialist candidate has broken all records, even thought he had to face opposition from several small candidates including Michel Crepeau who maintained his party's position (2 percent). The 7.5 million or so votes received yesterday form the broadest rally of support achieved by the Socialists in an election in which the left was divided. It received only 6.44 million in 1978--a year in which there was a strong leftwing thrust. Moreover, by closing the gap separating him from Giscard to around 3 points, Mitterrand yesterday provided himself with the means of winning a second round victory. The minor candidate mentioned is Brice Lalonde. By winning more than 1 million votes for the ecology party, he too has broken all records for the "greens," who numbered only 800,000 in 1979, 600,00 in 1978 and 330,000 in 1974.

L'HUMANITE: PCF DEFEAT DUE TO 'COMPLEX SITUATION'

LD301513 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 28 Apr 81 p 1

[Rene Andreieu editorial: "The Margin"]

[Text] It surprises no one that most commentators welcomed the PCF's loss of ground in the presidential election as a marvelous surprise. This drop is serious, as we stressed in L'HUMANITE yesterday before the final results were even known. However, there is a difference between that and portraying it as a total collapse which has dashed our hopes once and for all, although radio and television networks have happily done so.

The fact is that the 4,456,000 votes for Georges Marchais represent a considerable popular force in an election which has been difficult for our party on several counts--the very nature of the election and the fact that on two previous occasions we didn't present our own candidate.

That precedent undoubtedly made it easier to use the "useful vote" maneuver. This maneuver was probably also facilitated by the aggravation of the crisis which, far from spontaneously engendering political awareness, encourages people to seek any alternative solution, even if it is no solution at all.

Nonetheless, although it is true that a large number of our voters have cast their first round votes for the Socialist candidate, portrayed as the man in the best position to defeat Giscard in the second round, this doesn't mean that they voted against the PCF. They merely anticipated the second round by voting for the leftwing union, even though they were aware of the risk involved in their choice. We do not disown them because they were wrong and misjudged the risk they were taking.

A number of commentators think that Sunday's vote ought to prompt us to make a sweeping review of our policy. For instance, J. Fauvet, writing in LE MONDE, invites us democratically to restrict ourselves to the role of a "backup force" for the PS. Thank you very much! We don't feel that that is our vocation, and you just have to look at the past to see what kind of mess that would have gotten us into. The defeat we suffered is the result of a special situation and it doesn't condemn our basic policy.

This is particularly true since Sunday's vote is certainly not likely to open up prospects for the necessary changes to be made. Of course, we cannot expect salvation from Giscard d'Estaing and Chirac. The former says he is prepared to pursue a policy whose success can now be gauged by all, especially in the employment sphere. The latter stated yesterday that he "personally" would vote for Giscard d'Estaing, against whom he had pronounced an unqualified indictment the previous day.

F. Mitterrand claims to seek change, but his policy remains vague and he is still opposed to the participation of Communist ministers in his government if he is elected. Therefore, the danger has not been averted in that quarter.

LE MONDE ARTICLE CONSIDERS ELECTION AFTERMATH

LD301113 Paris LE MONDE in French 29 Apr 81 pp 1, 8

[Maurice Duverger article: "The Bugaboo"]

[Text] Can the outgoing candidate be taken seriously when he mentions the danger of a majority dominated by Marxism and portrays the second round as a dramatic choice between two types of society? How can an opponent be accused of being a hostage of the communists when the latter only obtained 15 percent of the votes? How can anybody imagine that they could control a left of which they don't even constitute one-third? They no longer have enough influence to hold it in their power. This is particularly true since their losses are heaviest among the working class from whom they draw their dynamism and legitimacy. Mitterrand is now more justified in talking on behalf of the "workers" since more of them voted for him that for Marchais. With such a low score, does the latter have the means of brandishing a strike threat, as in June 1936, even if the government blames him for the provocations which some "separatists" are likely to stage 1 May?

The Communists still have just one seemingly effective weapon: the demand for ministers in a leftwing government. They are helping Giscard d'Estaing by brandsihing this bugaboo at every available opportunity. But this is only creating an illusion through ignorance of the provisions of our constitution. It might seem surprising that the president of the republic, who is responsible for respecting these provisions, pretends not to know them.

They imply a distinction between the 10 May presidential election and the parliamentary elections which would follow it in June in the event of a victory for the Socialist candidate who would immediately dissolve the National Assembly.

By discussing at this stage the future majority to emerge from the ballot boxes and the composition of the government which would then be formed, the opposition would itself be moving toward the seizure of executive power by the assembly, which it has always condemned. By raising this matter, Marchais is taking part in the monarchical deviation from our constitution--a deviation which his party has constantly criticized. Mitterrand cannot follow him on that course without repudiating his own doctrine and that of the entire left.

The disregard for our constitution goes even further than that. It concerns the very root of the problem: Under the Fourth Republic, no government could act unless it was backed by a deputies' vote and unless it obtained a clear majority after submitting a motion of confidence. Under the Fifth Republic, the government doesn't need an initial vote of confidence or formal support when committing itself to a document. It can only be defeated by submitting a motion of no confidence which must be adopted by more than half the deputies. Moreover, votes in favor of the motion alone are counted, which rules out abstentions.

In an assembly with a leftwing majority, a government without Communists would not need their support to stay in power and have its bills passed. To defeat the government, the PCF representatives would have to vote with the UDF and RPR representatives on a motion of no confidence adopted jointly. How could reforms benefiting the workers be impeded in that way on the pretext that they were inadequate? When the choice is between a change regarded as inadequate and the return of a right which will perpetuate ultraconservatism, how can the classes which would benefit from the former tactics be persuaded that they must choose the latter?

The existing balance of political forces means that the secondary party in each camp must more or less place itself under the authority of the main party. Now that Marchais' party has been weakened and Chirac strengthened, would a leftwing majority be more fragile or paralyzed than a rightwing majority?

ANTISUBMARINE WARFARE AIRCRAFT TO BE MODERNIZED

LD281429 Paris LE MONDE in French 26-27 Apr 81 p 8

[Text] The French Naval Air Service has decided to modernize most of its Breguet Alize antisubmarine warfare aircraft on the aircraft carriers Foch and Clemenceau. This program will be carried out in stages from 1981 to 1984.

The Breguet Alizes, which have Rolls-Royce turboprops, have been in service in the national navy since 1959 and have so far clocked up around 250,000 flying hours. The 34 existing aircraft form two flotillas usually stationed at Lann-Bihoue and Nimes-Garons, with a training base at Hyeres. The Breguet Alize is an antisubmarine warfare and surface protection aircraft, its armament comprises grenades, torpedoes, rockets, bombs and air-to-surface missiles.

Only 28 of the 34 existing Alize will be modernized before 1984. This modernization will consist mainly of replacing the existing radar, refitting the navigation system and improving the electronic countermeasures. The main aim is to meet the threat posed by nuclear-propelled attack submarines, which can dive deeper and are less subject to radar [as published; acoustic] detection owing to the silence of nuclear propulsion. The new radar, anmed Iguane by Thomson-CSF, its manufacturer, is known as a pulse compression and variable sweep radar. In other words, it has been especially designed to obtain high performance in the sphere of range, distance resolution and reliability of detection of feeble echoes in stormy seas. In addition, the radiated power is kept to a low level to reduce the chance of detection by enemy radar. The Iguane radar will be combined with a new and highly accurate navigation system.

SPAIN'S KING JUAN CARLOS DEPARTS FOR HOME

AU301532 Rome ANSA in English 1520 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Rome, 30 Apr (ANSA)--Spain's King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia flew home today from Rome's Ciampino Airport after winding up a three-day official visit to Italy. Italian Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni saw the royal couple off. The departure was a private affair.

L'UNITA COMMENTS ON CRAXI REPORT TO PSI CONGRESS

LD291351 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 23 Apr 81 p 1

[Claudio Petruccioli commentary: "Craxi: Nothing New"]

[Text] Palermo--So Craxi has spoken, thus fulfilling the expectations recently expressed by newspapers and commentators. He spoke for a long time and, at the finish, proved right those who expected no significant innovations from his report.

He decided to issue a twofold message--of consolidation within the party, and of a wait-and-see approach outside. With regard to the latter, the implication was that as things stand, the PSI does not intend to introduce changes of any significance into its own political conduct, especially with regard to "governability," and therefore in its stance with respect to the Forlani government and its political alliances.

Basically, what Craxi meant to say was that possible changes depend not on us, but on others; if other people modify their options and their stances (this argument is clearly addressed mainly to the left) then the Socialists can assess the new situation. This clearly implies a negative reply to the requests originating from various sides, and not only from the Communists--requests aimed at introducing a change into the government setup with a view to establishing at least the minimum requirements for a dialogue and a coordinated effort among the essential social forces and among all the democratic political forces, in order to combat the crisis and to advance a process of regeneration.

This negative reply is strengthened and underlined by several allusions that form the framework of the various sections of the report. All anxieties and critical observations stemming from the victory by Reagan (whose name is not even mentioned) and the new U.S. administration's first acts have entirely disappeared, with a considerable discrepancy from the PSI secretary's previous speeches, such as the one delivered at the latest Socialist International congress.

Even with regard to the country's socioeconomic situation, despite some alterations of tone, there is no basic change in the verdict expressed in the majority's theses. In short, there is a failure to take as the starting point the existence of a profound and structural crisis that is challenging social structures and balances of power among the classes, that poses the question of who must pay for a recovery and regeneration--and how and how much. It seems that the failures and distortions are superimposed--who knows why--on a structurally healthy body and therefore no overall remedies are indicated.

The references to the indexing system is unclear; it is asserted that "to unload the blame for inflation onto the working class is a great mystification," but this is followed merely by a generic condemnation of "all powerful indexing factors." One innovation, however, is the clear and emphatic criticism "regarding both principle and method" of the general strike regarded in purely political terms.

The internal consolidation message issued by Craxi's report rests on the broad majority which he enjoys. It remains to be seen in the days ahead whether the congress will express equally broad support for the message regarding the continuation of the existing political situation which the PSI secretary decided to issue outside the party, with the arguments and points of emphasis that we have indicated.

GOVERNMENT TIGHTENS REINS ON SOVIET NATIONALS

NC301142 Paris AFP in English 1131 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Madrid, 30 Apr (AFP)--The Spanish Government has decided not to renew residents permits for more than 20 Soviet nationals, as part of moves to readjust its relations with the Soviet Union, Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca said in an interview published here today.

Mr. Perez-Llorca, who is currently on an official visit to Italy with King Juan Carlos, told the Madrid daily EL PAIS that the government would refuse new permits to other Soviet nationals, in particular those in the Canary Isles, where a large team is based to maintain the Soviet fleet in the area.

Soviet nationals in the Canaries include three high-ranking officials in companies or institutions close to the Soviet administration, the newspaper said.

The move coincides with a Spanish Government decision to apply for membership of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO) as soon as possible.

Over the past four years, seven Soviet officials have been expelled from Spain accused of spying.

Plane, Ship Reduction

LD301758 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] According to reliable sources, the Spanish Government has told Soviet airplane officials to cut by half the number of Aeroflot flights between Moscow and Las Palmas. The government has also told the mixed fishing company, Sovhispan, to reduce the number of their boats in the Canary Islands by half.

The same sources report that it is not known whether the Spanish Government's decision is connected with the recent expulsion of Soviet officials of Sovhispan for apparent connections with the KGB.

SOURCES CONFIRM REMOVAL OF ARMORED DIVISION CHIEF

LD301308 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Gen Jose Juste Fernandez, chief of the Brunete 1st Armored Division, will be relieved of his command at the next Council of Ministers session on 8 May, according to reports yesterday evening, The reports were later confirmed by official sources at the Ministry of Defense.

According to EL PAIS, the name of Maj Gen (Francisco Carbonel) was being mentioned last night as the probable replacement as chief of the Brunete Armored Division, which is headquartered in Madrid.

POLICE BAN AGAINST DIARIO 16 NEWSPAPER LIFTED

LD301036 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0800 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] The Madrid newspaper DIARIO 16, which at first had been confiscated, is now being distributed normally. The police measures which prevented this have been lifted. In its edition today, DIARIO 16 published a front page report on the conspiracy which led to the attempted coup of 23 February.

FINLAND

USSR FIRST DEPUTY ARKHIPOV TO VISIT IN MAY

LD301108 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] The first deputy chairman of the Soviet Union, Ivan Arkhipov, will visit Finland in the middle of May. He will lead a Soviet Government delegation attending the festivities marking the commissioning of the Loviisa II nuclear power station. Arkhipov will also have talks with President Urho Kekkonen on Finnish-Soviet economic relations and new cooperation projects.

HUFVUDSTADSBLADET ON FINNISH-USSR TREATY DEBATE

LD301345 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 24 Apr 81 p 24

[Editorial: "The Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance Treaty"]

[Text] The increased candor characteristic of Finnish public life is also making itself felt in the discussion on foreign policy. This is a circumstance which can be assessed in several different ways. It can be seen as a pleasing feature from the democratic viewpoint that there is growing discussion in an area where for a long time--in accordance with the tradition created in the years after the war--not much was said. The characteristic feature of the present debate is the fact that there are attempts to avoid the diplomatic formulas and get down to brass tacks. It is also possible to say that today's debaters do not question the Passikivi-Kekkonen line as such, but that there is disagreement over its application.

On the other hand, it would be naive not to realize that there are certain risks involved in discussing our most sensitive problems with the world looking on. What is now emerging shows, it has been said, how much we actually disagree behind the semblance of agreement we have held up to the rest of the world. Nevertheless, we are inclined to think that the open discussion should go on--the differences of opinion which do exist can be more easily charted and attempts to bridge the gaps can be made now, while we are still dealing with a theoretical scenario and not with a harsh reality.

What has been said above has special application to the discussion which has flared up around a brief section of the parliamentary defense committee's recommendations and which has been a hot potato for a time now. As is well-known the section deals with the friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance treaty's military articles, especially the second article, the so-called consultation article, which has generally only been commented on very sparingly.

In actual fact, the differences of opinion that we are now seeing are not new. Even in 1971 when the first defense committee presented its recommendations and placed great emphasis on our own defense capability, there were leftwing critics who thought that the committee had raised the consultation threshhold too much. The second committee, which produced its recommendations in 1976, went into the assistance mechanism contained in the treaty in greater detail. Here the committee also gave its approval to the statement which has now been discussed, according to which the military articles can be applied both when an attack has taken place and also when both sides have decided that there is a threat of attack. The third committee inherited this formulation along with everything else from its predecessor. The new element in the committee's evaluation of the treaty were the remarks--in themselves fairly obvious--that Finland itself bears the primary responsibility for the defense of its own territory and that the treaty offers various alternative gradations of assistance. There is clear support for both of these remarks in the wording of the first article.

It was not the committee's statement as such which gave rise to the animated discussion, but those reports which had leaked out about the committee's internal deliberations and which had probably not been made public without some political ulterior motive. Special attention was paid to a number of leftwing contributions to the debate on Under Secretary Korhonen's proposed wording for the section of the recommendations dealing with the friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance treaty. In a past editorial, we discussed the wisdom of giving to the public a preparatory proposal from an expert which was never taken up for final treatment. However, at the present time we just have to assume that the committee's internal deliberations are beginning to be public property.

When the defense committee approved the present wording, it was partly due to the fact that a divergence from the previous committee's unanimously adopted position would give rise to speculation about a change in policy course. But also the committee's political members were obviously convinced how matters stood and wanted to get the recommendations into print.

What is special about the consultation article is that it only says that the parties shall consult each other in the event of a threatened attack, but does not state what these consultations should result in. This, probably very wise restraint in the wording, means that it will depend on the political considerations on both sides whether any decision is made about the steps to be taken and if such a decision is made what they should be. The defense committee did not consider that it was able to exclude the possibility on legal grounds that consultations, if they take place, might result in military assistance even without an attack having taken place. It is worth remembering that the communique from Novosibirsk in 1961, the only occasion on which consultations have been touched on in practice, said that the Soviet Union "considered that it could postpone the proposed military consultations."

The discussion has sometimes touched on President Kekkonen's declaration in his book "Tamminiemi" where he says that a precondition for aid must be that an attack has already taken place. In our reading of the book, this declaration refers principally to the friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance treaty's first article, which speaks of an actual attack, while Article 2 is treated later in the book. No matter, not even an extremely authoritative statement such as this can excuse the members of a political body like the defense committee from making their own assessment and shouldering responsibility in such matters.

Behind the discussions of the military articles' legal significance--which can smack of legal hairsplitting even though they are important--there are concealed the even more important evaluations of what is most important for Finland in a serious crisis situation.

Two opposing viewpoints were advocated by Managing Director Max Jakobson and Finnish People's Democratic League [SKDL] Secretary General Jorma Hentila who is a member of the defense committee. In an interview in HUFVUDSTADSBLADET on Good Friday [17 April], Jakobson stressed especially that Finland would try to remain outside a major war as far as possible, and that it is therefore important that we do not commit ourselves, through the consultation procedures, to such military involvement as would make our country a legitimate military target for the Soviet Union's adversaries. Hentila, on the other hand, stressed that it is important that we do not undermine Soviet confidence by giving the impression that we want to "wiggle" out of our military commitments.

In this case, it is completely correct to say that there is something worth considering in both arguments. The motion that it is a vital objective for Finland at least to try to remain outside a full-scale modern war is so obvious that it should be disputed by no one. But--and this is connected with our special position--this objective can only be achieved if we can convince the Soviet Union that a neutral Finland on its northwestern flank is not only an acceptable solution but also even a useful solution in an acute situation. And this in its turn requires not only confidence in our political intentions, but also faith in our desire and ability at least to shoulder the responsibility for all essentials of the defense of Finnish territory. The leftwing is definitely correct to underline the significance of this confidence. But on the other hand, it is making a mistake if for ideological or other reasons, it refuses to make a contribution to efforts to ensure that the country is provided with a defense capacity which is credible under the circumstances.

When we discuss what should happen in a threat situation, it should not be forgotten how much our communications with the Soviet Union have developed since the treaty was written in 1948. Exchanges of all types are constantly taking place, and our defense forces, among other bodies, receive an important part of their materiel from the Soviet Union.

We cannot of course dismiss the consultation procedures, but a great deal can also be achieved through other channels. When SKDL representatives, for example, raise the question of whether at least materiel aid is needed in a threat situation, this is by no means an unreasonable view. But it should be stressed that supplies of materiel can be stepped up in such a situation whenever the partners wish it, even though no spectacular steps have taken place.

BRIEFS

LOAN TO POLAND--The Parliament has approved state guarantees for a loan of Fmk30 million to be granted to Poland. The Post Office Bank in Finland will grant the loan. With this loan, Poland will be paying debts which were due in the early part of this year as well as for imports to Poland from Finland. In addition, the Poles have asked Finland for a credit of $40 million, or Fmk160 million, to finance raw material deliveries. [Text] [Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 24 Apr 81 LD]

SWEDEN

TRIBUNAL TO INVESTIGATE SOVIET AFGHAN ROLE

NC301600 Paris AFP in English 1531 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Stockholm, 30 Apr (AFP)--An "international tribunal" is scheduled to open an investigation here tomorrow of the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

The "court," composed of legal experts and international personalities, was set up by the "Poyvanent People's Tribunal."

The tribunal, whose headquarters are in Rome, was formed in 1976 by Italian Socialist Lelio Basso to succeed the "Bertrand Russell Tribunal," which held a series of hearings in Stockholm on U.S. actions in the Vietnam war.

The panel will remain in session until Tuesday and will consider whether the Soviet intervention "constitutes in international law an aggression against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence" of Afghanistan.

Sixteen "witnesses," coming from Afghanistan by way of Pakistan, will be heard. The Soviet Government and the Afghan regime of President Babrak Karmal have been invited to send delegates, but no response has been received.

Among the 14 members of the panel are Brazilian Bishop Sergio Mendez Arceo, former Portuguese Foreign Minister Ernesto Melo Antunes, U.S. Nobel laureate for medicine George Wald and French mathematician Laurent Schwartz.

TO VIMA SEES U.S. PRESSURE ON TALKS WITH TURKEY

NC302132 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 30 Apr 81 p 1

[By TO VIMA correspondent St. Evstathiadhis]

[Text] New York, 29 Apr--Responsible sources in Washington today admitted that there is a "clear change in the atmosphere" in relations between Athens and Ankara. They expressed optimism that the Greek-Turkish dialogue "may possibly continue," although they were uneasy lest the tension in Greek-Turkish relations also influence the course of relations between Athens and Washington.

In the course of a conversation, the same sources stressed that NATO will not permit a deterioration of the situation in relations between the two countries, which constitute the "bastion" of Western defense in the area. They let it be understood that there will be some form of U.S. pressure on both sides to resume at least the dialogue and admitted that lately tension has been noted in Greek-Turkish relations. Nevertheless, the sources diligently avoided expressing any thought that could possibly be interpreted as criticism of Ankara's position concerning the dialogue and so forth.

In Washington, generally, the course taken by the Greek-Turkish dialogue and, more generally, relations between Athens and Ankara seem to occupy more responsible U.S. officials than one would expect of relations in a single regional area of NATO defense.

Responsible U.S. officials indicate and behave to a certain extent as if afraid that Athens may ask them to intervene toward Ankara in a form they would not desire or that they will be blamed for Turkey's position. This is so because, according to the opinion of some people, at least part of the responsibility for Turkey's "arrogant" stance and its entire tone of public protests to Athens falls on Washington. Specifically, the recent Turkish stance should be attributed to the moral strenghtening Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen received from the U.S. Government during his recent visit and talks in Washington. The Washington STAR reported the day before yesterday that "in addition to military aid and economic support, Turkmen received concrete assurances on the political and moral support of the Reagan government to Ankara."

Regarding the possible role of the United States in the improvement of Greek-Turkish relations, responsible sources in Washington take it for granted that General Haig will "intervene" during the talks he will have next week in Rome with Foreign Ministers Mitsotakis and Turkmen. Naturally, it is not difficult to predict today the tone and the content of this intervention by the U.S. Secretary of State. There is also speculation that the NATO Ministerial Conference will actively manifest its interest in the resumption of the Greek-Turkish dialogue as quickly as possible.

Finally, it is noted in Washington that Turkish intransigence is manifesting itself precisely on the eve of the Rome conference. Although this intransigence is, to a certain extent, attributed to domestic reasons and to Ankara's interest in appearing to its NATO allies as important and tough, Turkey's intransigence on the issue of its relations with Greece is due to the fact that Turkish generals have reason to believe that their position will not be criticized by NATO and even less by General Haig.

MITSOTAKIS DEPARTS FOR NATO ROME MEETING

NC011215 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 1 May 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Mitsotakis departed this morning for Rome to participate in the spring meeting of the foreign ministers of NATO member countries. Within the framework of contacts he will have in the Italian capital, Mitsotakis will meet with U.S. Secretary of State Haig and Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen.

IRAQ'S HAMMADI IN ATHENS FOR OFFICIAL VISIT

Arrival Statement

NC291412 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] Iraqi Foreign Minister Sa'dun Hammadi arrived in Athens this morning on an official visit at the invitation of Foreign Minister Mitsotakis. Mr Hammadi was welcomed at the airport by Mr Mitsotakis. Upon his arrival, the Iraqi foreign minister stated that relations between the two countries have improved considerably and, particularly following the visit to Iraq some time ago by the then prime minister and now president of the republic, Mr Karamanlis. The Iraqi foreign minister also said that all fields of bilateral cooperation will be covered during his talks with Mr Mitsotakis and other Greek ministers. Mr Hammadi also made it clear that the supply of oil from Iraq will be among the topics to be discussed. He also said he will expound Iraq's views on the Palestinian issue as well as its dispute with Iran.

The Iraqi foreign minister further said he was conveying greetings from Iraqi President Saddam Husayn to Greek President Karamanlis, Prime Minister Rallis and the Greek people. In conclusion, he expressed confidence that the Greek-Iraqi talks in Athens would strengthen even more the already very good relations between the two countries.

Iraqi Foreign Minister Hammadi and Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis will begin their talks at 1800 at the Foreign Ministry. The talks will resume tomorrow at the same time. This evening, Mr Mitsotakis will give an official dinner in honor of Mr Hammadi. Tomorrow, at 1115, the Iraqi foreign minister will be received by Prime Minister Rallis.

Begins Meetings

NC300638 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 0400 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Excerpts] President of the Republic Konstandinos Karamanlis will today receive Iraqi Foreign Minister Sa'dun Hammadi, who is on an official visit to Athens. Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis will also receive Hammadi today. The Iraqi foreign minister will visit National Defense Minister Evangelos Averof and Minister of Industry and Energy Stefanos Manos.

The Greek-Iraqi talks started yesterday with a broad conference at the Foreign Ministry attended by Hammadi, the Iraqi ambassador in Athens (Hasan ad-Din al-'Ali) and members of Hammadi's delegation representing the Iraqi side. Greece was represented by Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis, Deputy Foreign Minister Rendis, Greek Ambassador to Iraq Vandhalis and Foreign Ministry officials. Bipartite and international issues were discussed during the conference.

In a statement Foreign Minister Mitsotakis stressed, among other things, that our country's relations with Iraq as well as with the entire Arab world are extremely good. "Together with my Iraqi colleague," he said, "we will discuss bipartite issues and we will try to further develop our cooperation in all sectors, in commerce, industry, cooperation on certain large-scale investment projects and at the same time we will conduct a general review of the problems in our area which are of interest to both countries."

Yesterday afternoon, Hammadi conferred with Trade Minister Aristidhis Kalantzakos. Trade and economic relations between the two countries were examined during the meeting and their prospective further extension was confirmed. During this meeting Kalantzakos and the Iraqi minister discussed the question of the export of Greek tobacco and tomato pulp to Iraq as well as the establishment of joint enterprises for the exploitation of our country's mineral wealth.

Meets Karamanlis

NC301404 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] At noon today, President Karamanlis received Iraqi Foreign Minister Hammadi who is on a 3-day official visit to Greece at the invitation of Foreign Minister Mitsotakis. The Iraqi Foreign Minister was accompanied by Mitsotakis. Earlier, at 1130, Hammadi was received by Prime Minister Rallis with whom he had talks. Present at the talks were the Greek ambassador to Baghdad, Vandhalis, and the Iraqi ambassador to Athens, (Hasan ad-Din al-'Ali). The Greek-Iraqi talks between Foreign Ministers Mitsotakis and Hammadi will be completed at the Foreign Ministry at 1800. Prior to this meeting, the Iraqi foreign minister will give a press conference.

INA Report

JN301210 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1135 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Athens, 30 Apr (INA)--Foreign Minister Dr Sa'dun Hammadi met here last night with his Greek counterpart Konstandinos Mitsotakis to discuss bilateral relations and means to bolster them in various fields. Dr Hammadi briefed the Greek foreign minister on the nature of the Iraqi-Iranian conflict, pointing out that the Persian regime is responsible for the war and for its continuation. He said that Iraq has responded favorably to all international and regional efforts to stop the war. The Greek side expressed its full understanding of Iraq's stand on the conflict and on Iraq's commitment to its legitimate rights over its land and waters.

The two sides also reviewed the Arab-Zionist conflict. The Greek side asserted its commitment to its firm stand on demanding the Zionist forces' withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories and recognition of the Palestinian people's inalienable rights. The Iraqi minister arrived in Athens yesterday on an official visit of several days to Greece.

Hammadi Statement

NC302008 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] The talks between the Greek and Iraqi delegations ended at the Foreign Ministry this evening. In a speech, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis stressed that the talks were very useful. A good attitude prevailed from both sides and, in a spirit of sincere friendship, all the possibilities for further developing the two countries' relations were dealt with. The talks on the oil issue were absolutely satisfactory. Mitsotakis also said that the issues on economy, industry, technology and cultural relations were dealt with more broadly. In general, he said, all issues relative to the development of bilateral relations were discussed.

This afternoon, Iraqi Foreign Minister Hammadi, who headed his country's delegation during the Greek-Iraqi talks in Athens, gave an interview in which he stressed that his visit to Greece has brought positive results in all sectors. Greek-Iraqi relations, he said, have been excellent for a very long time, but were strengthened even more during Karamanlis' visit to Baghdad in 1979. Hammadi confirmed that Iraq will supply Greece with crude oil in whatever quantities it needs and, in general, will positively examine any Greek request in this area.

The Iraqi foreign minister also welcomed the Greek support of the Arab cause. Greece, he said, supports the sovereign rights and the right of self-determination of the Palestinian people as well as the Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories. The Iraqi foreign minister said that his country adheres to a firm stand toward the Cypriot issue and supports the independence, sovereignty and nonalignment of the Republic of Cyprus and the finding of a solution through negotiations. Hammadi leaves for his country tomorrow.

EVREN SPEAKS ON RETURN TO DEMOCRACY, OTHER TOPICS

TA301751 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Address by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren to the citizens of Erzincan on 30 April--recorded]

[Excerpts] My dear citizens of Erzincan, I thank you all and I extend my gratitude for the warm interest and hospitality you have shown to us. May you live long! As you all know, our beautiful Erzincan was subject to a great disaster 42 years ago. It suffered a great earthquake. Some 40,000 citizens lost their lives. Our Erzincan was completely destroyed. However, as a result of your diligence and patriotism, this beautiful Erzincan which we now see was created. These are your creations. You can be proud of them.

My dear citizens, now I will refer to another issue. Representatives of various organizations outside Turkey frequently come to Turkey and keep on asking when we will return to a parliamentary system. As though we do not intend to return to a parliamentary system or as though they think about Turks more than we do about ourselves, they keep on asking us this question. We have presented a program. I will not repeat this program now because you all know it. We will return to the parliamentary system step by step within the framework of this program. I say this everywhere. However, I would like to emphasize that Turkey, the Turkish nation, adopted the parliamentary democratic system through its own will, not through the pressure of other countries. The Turkish nation realized that this system is the best one and adopted it through national will. We will return to the parliamentary system not because they want it but because the Turkish nation thinks it best and because it is the most suitable system for our nation. I would like to reiterate this fact here.

Now I would like to refer to various reports that come from the outside and to an issue that is constantly raised by certain people who come to visit our country in factfinding missions: allegations of torture. As you know, there is an organization called Amnesty International. This organization is not in our country but outside. However, there is a Turkish representative within the organization. Certain people belonging to this Amnesty International organization come to Turkey and claim that we are torturing the detained. We have never approved of torture. We have always opposed torture and we have always stated that torture is against humanity. Despite this, if there are certain isolated incidents--as it happens in every country--and if they are discovered, the necessary measures are taken against officials concerned. Why are these people coming now? Where were these people who are so opposed to torture before the 12 September operation? Where was the Amnesty International organization that is making all these allegations about tortures when terrorists were killing some 20 to 30 citizens daily and when the ears and noses of many citizens were being cut off and their eyes were being gouged out? Why did it not come to Turkey then? Why did it not come and ask about the tortures then? It did not come then, yet it is coming now. There should be a reason for this, my dear citizens.

Traitors who have not been able to remain in Turkey and who have escaped from the country are collaborating with them. These traitors are constantly supplying false information to them and trying to instigate them. However, we still say that there is something called the Human Rights Declaration. We have also signed this declaration. We have agreed to respect human rights. The second article of the Human Rights Declaration states that a human is, above all, entitled to the right to live. No one can violate a person's right to live. The right to live is the most important right. Now I am asking whether or not this right was guaranteed before 12 September. Where were all these people who are opposed to torture then?

Again, this Amnesty International organization is against the death penalty. They say: Do not give capital punishment. This issue depends upon the laws of each nation. Many nations have accepted this punishment and many others have rejected it. We do not question those countries who have eliminated capital punishment; they have no right to question us about giving capital punishment. Imagine a person who will take a gun and slaughter 8, 10 or 20 persons as though they were cattle and then he will not be punished by death. Such a thing does not exist in our religion. Capital punishment exists in our religion. It also exists in Christianity.

My dear citizens, valuable Erzincan citizens, addressing you was not included in my program. As I pointed out earlier, I felt the need to refer to these few points in the face of your great enthusiasm. However, I would like to say this before concluding: Turkey is approaching better conditions and light each day. The road ahead of us is clear and illuminated. We are advancing with a clear conscience in this clear and light path. We fear nothing. We can face the nation with a clear conscience. So long as we have your support and so long as the unity and solidarity of the nation continues, Turkey will always advance and will surpass contemporary civilization. On my behalf and on behalf of the National Security Council members, I extend you our best wishes, our respect and love on occasion of the Ataturk centennary. I bid you all goodbye. Thank you.

Now I will be briefed by the honorable governor on the province's needs. After having been briefed on the problems of the province, we will discuss them on our return [to Ankara].

TURKMEN INTERVIEW ON MIDDLE EAST, U.S. RELATIONS

NC301209 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 27 Apr 81 pp 1 & 7

[Interview granted by Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen to CUMHURIYET correspondent Sedat Ergin in Ankara; date not given]

[Text] Question: How do the signs of tension observed in East-West relations and the developments which are adversely affecting the period of amelioration in these relations influence Turkish foreign policy?

Answer: The detente policy which maintains stability in East-West relations has recently been badly shaken. The reasons are obvious. The Afghan and Polish crises followed one another. Our attitude toward these crises is known. But despite these developments, we are trying to improve our relations with our neighbors to the extend that the international situation permits.

Question: Are there signs that the tension in Europe might spread to the Balkans as well?

Answer: On the contrary, there is a general desire in the Balkans to improve cooperation. There are, naturally, differences among the Balkan states. Yugoslavia, for example, belongs to the Nonaligned Movement, while Romania and Bulgaria are attached to the Warsaw Pact. Turkey and Greece, on the other hand, are members of the NATO alliance. Therefore, multilateral cooperation is possible [as published]. But all the Balkan states appear to be sharing the general view that bilateral relations can be developed and the possibility of cooperating in the economic field can be explored.

Question: How does Turkey evaluate the Lebanese crisis?

Answer: We are watching the crisis in Lebanon with deep anxiety. We wholeheartedly wish to see stability restored in Lebanon. We hope that all states concerned with Lebanon will cooperate. We believe the UN forces should be given a chance to operate and that aggression should stop.

Question: The United States and Europe have different approaches to the way the Middle East dispute should be resolved. But, as you have stated before, the United States is still in the process of formulating its Middle East policy. Europe too is engaged in various initiatives. England appears to be in an active mood. In the light of all these developments, what form do you think Europe's efforts will take toward the settlement of the Middle East crisis? Can the European initiative come to the limelight again?

Answer: Britain's activity may be linked to the fact that it is going to become the chairman of the EC for the next term as of June. The Europeans are not taking any initiative at the moment. The Europeans keep saying that they are carrying out a number of investigations in the Middle East and that their intention is not to introduce a new method that would rival the Camp David accord. However, we know that there are certain differences between the attitudes of the United States and the EC. Since the meeting held in Venice last year, the EC has come to accept the reality of Palestine. No such change has occured in the U.S. policy. This is the real source of diversity. Will the Europeans be more active from now on? This is difficult to say. However, we must bear in mind the fact that it is not easy to imagine that the Middle East crisis can be resolved without the contribution of the United States which can exercise influence over Israel.

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES RELATIONS WITH GREECE

TA301757 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1545 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 30 Apr (AA)--Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said it was impossible for Greece to cooperate with Turkey within NATO while considering her a threat. He claimed this was a contradiction which Greece must solve herself.

In a statement given to the ANATOLIAN NEWS AGENCY, Turkmen commented on Turkish-Greek relations and on recent developments which interrupted the atmosphere of detente between the two countries and said the main reason why Greece had not honored some of her commitments was the Greek Government's concern about the coming elections in the fall. He believed this was not justified, as the elements damaging the atmosphere of mutual confidence would remain after the elections were over.

Turkmen said it would be "excessive optimism" to expect a dramatic turn in Turkish-Greek relations in the coming months. However, he added, the dialogue between the two countries would be continued under a rational policy.

Evaluating recent developments in bilateral relations, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said a period of relative detente had, in fact, started between the two countries following the Sept. 12 takeover in Turkey. The initial step in this direction had been Greece's return to the military wing of NATO. He noted rather constructive meetings between the foreign ministers that followed it.

Pointing out the complexity of Turkish-Greek relations, he added it was not so easy to preserve the atmosphere of mutual trust. These developments should be assessed from a rational viewpoint as a whole, he commented. The Turkish foreign minister said however it was not possible to ignore the recent incidents. He admitted these incidents had an adverse effect on the [word indistinct] of trust between the two countries, but, he added, he would still meet with the Greek foreign minister during the NATO Council session in Rome on May 3rd. Ilter Turkmen said he did not except a great deal from his forthcoming talks with Greek Foreign Minister [Konstandinos Mitsotakis. Addiing that the important thing was to continue the dialogue and to create the necessary conditions for a dialogue, Turkmen explained he did not mean to suggest breaking off the dialogue when he said he did not expect much progress in bilateral relations in the near future. The dialogue would continue, he said, with Turkey maintaining her efforts not to damage bilateral relations. Turkey would also expect Greece to work toward such an atmosphere of confidence, he added.

Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen believed there was no reason to be suspicious about the good will and sincerity of Greek statesmen who speak of their desire to improve their relations with Turkey and of their belief in cooperation. He said such cooperation and good relations were in the interests of both countries. Turkmen said the Greeks, even from the very selfish point of view, should strive for better relations. The same was true for Turks, he added, but Turkey could not overlook the contradictions contained in statements [that] had been inspired by good will. He added, evidently they were not followed by relevant action. Foreign Minister Turkmen said there were several possible gestures of good will which Greece could make and what was needed most was the "political will" to make these gestures.

TERCUMAN SAYS SOVIETS SUPPORT ARMENIAN TERRORISTS

NC302136 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 27 Apr 81 p 2

[Article by Ahmet Kabakli: "The Satan Within Us"]

[Excerpt] Valuable ideas were expressed at the meeting held by the intellectuals' club on Saturday, 25 April, on the subject of "Terror and the Armenian Terror." The truth that crystallized at the meeting is that the Armenian terror is only part of a general terror that has subjected Turkey to bloodshed.

The target of the bullets that have murdered our soldiers and policemen as well as our youths and intellectuals, and the target of those that have murdered our diplomats are identical. This target is the Turkish state. The roots of both forms of terror are outside the country, and they are being organized by a big imperialistic state and "an organization" that is its extension in the Middle East.

The Armenian crimes may be linked with some fanatical Armenian organizations, but communism is the main source. Communism, which was turned by Lenin and Stalin into the brain destroying machine of Soviet imperialism, is using such wild terms as "minorities" and "peoples" to bring about Turkey's collapse.

Provoking old hostilities and inspiring the Armenians with the dream and lunacy of demanding territory from Turkey is all part and parcel of communist plans.

The Soviet Union, not daring to occupy our country, which is a great geographical obstacle in its plans to set up a world proletarian state, and not daring to kindle a revolution in Turkey (in other words, it cannot risk a war with NATO) is trying to achieve its aim by supplying racist, regionalist and sectarian groups with funds, weapons and propaganda material.

UK'S GILMOUR ENDS OFFICIAL VISIT, DEPARTS

TA301100 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] British Deputy Foreign Secretary Sir Ian Gilmour, who has concluded his official visit in Turkey, departed today. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport before his departure, Gilmour said that he held useful talks with government officials in Ankara and that he is leaving Turkey with positive impressions.

TRANSPORTATION TALKS WITH IRAN BEGIN IN ANKARA

TA301103 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] The official talks between Turkey and Iran on the development of cooperation in the field of transportation have begun in Ankara. In a statement at the beginning of the talks, Transportation Ministry Under Secretary Necdet Sanay expressed the belief that the talks will yield results beneficial to both countries.

In his speech, the head of the Turkish delegation, Transportation Ministry Deputy Under Secretary Orhan Buldac, said that the ways of implementing some of the subjects agreed upon during previous meetings in Tehran will be sought during these talks in Ankara. Pointing out that the establishment of a transportation company between Turkey and Iran will be discussed, Buldac said that the subject of increasing Iran's transportation through Turkey will also be handled during the talks. Buldac noted that Iran wishes to benefit from the railway industry in Turkey and that the ways to extend to them the necessary assistance on this subject will be sought.

In his turn, the Iranian deputy transportation minister, (Mohammad Ism'il Kaymagami), said that, as with other Islamic countries, Iran wants to develop its relations with Turkey. (Kaymagami) expressed the belief that all possible efforts will be exerted to further develop existing cooperation in the field of transportation between the two countries, and that the talks will yield positive results.

The official talks between Turkey and Iran will be concluded on 6 May. The visiting delegation will also tour the Behicbey engine maintenance workshop in Ankara, the engine factory in Eskisehir and the railway carriage factory in Adapazari.

NATO'S LUNS ASSURES ECONOMIC, MILITARY AID

TA301101 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns has said that the economic and military aid to Turkey will be continued. In a statement to Turkish Radio and Television in Brussels, Luns said that the Turkish nation is a patriotic and honorable nation and that it has shouldered important roles in world history as well as in current times. Luns said anarchy and terrorism had for some time created great sorrow in Ataturk's Turkey, but the current administration brought tranquillity back to the country.

COMMERCE MINISTER CANTURK RETURNS FROM BULGARIA

TA010618 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Turkish Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk, who concluded a 3-day official visit to Bulgaria, has returned to Turkey. In a statement at Yesikoy Airport, Canturk said that during his talks with Bulgarian Government officials the further development of trade and economic relations between the two countries was discussed. He added that a unity of view was reached on the issues to be discussed at the Turkish-Bulgarian joint economic committee meeting to be held in Ankara on 26 May. He noted that during his stay in Bulgaria he was received by Bulgarian President of the State Council Todor Zhivkov.

DEATH PENALTY DEMANDED FOR KURDISH SECESSIONISTS

TA301840 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] The Army 6th Corps and Martial Law Command Military Prosecutor's Office has filed a law suit against 19 members of the illegal [Kurdish] secessionist organization called Kawa, and has demanded the death penalty for them. Prison sentences of no less than 5 years are being demanded for 7 militants of the organization in the suit filed at the 2d Military Court of the Martial Law Command.

FORMER MINISTER SENTENCED FOR ARMS SMUGGLING

TA301843 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 20 Apr 81

[Text] The Erzincan High Criminal Court has sentenced former Social Security Minister Hilmi Isguzar to 20 months prison and has fined him 833 liras for smuggling arms into the country. According to information obtained by a Turkish Radio Television [TRT] correspondent, during his term in office Isguzar brought a weapon from Denmark into the country, obtained a license in Erzincan and later gave it to his son as a present in Nevsehir. The suit filed by the Erzincan Public Prosecutor's Office in December 1980 against Isguzar for a license contrary to regulations and for violating law No 6163 was concluded today. Isguzar's prison sentence of 2 years and fine of 1000 liras was commuted to 20 months prison and 833 liras due to constructive confession.

ARAYIS QUESTIONS GOVERNMENT ROLE IN CONGRESS

NC302146 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 25 Apr 81 p 8

["Semijoke and Semiserious" column: "A Congress and a Question"]

[Text] Last week the newspaper TERCUMAN, which is the spokesman of a specific political wing and the guardian of certain big interests, organized a "congress" in a state hall at which the problems of Turkish workers in foreign lands were considered.

In the course of the 2-hour congress, the prime minister, a deputy prime minister, five ministers and the general manger of the central bank spoke.

The television network and radio news bulletins allocated much time to the congress, carrying also the opening and closing speeches of the newspaper's proprietor [Kemal Ilicak].

The time allocated to the congress on the television newscasts was about 15 minutes. This, together with the time allocated in the radio news bulletins, amounted to free advertisement which otherwise would cost 80 million lira.

It may be argued that the congress in question was "a service to the public." But the same service could have been rendered by the state or the Confederation of Labor (Turk-Is) in a more serious manner and not in the form of a political display or a commercial advertisement.

We pose this question: "Since the administration alleges to be impartial and since the constitution and the laws require TRT to be just as impartial, would the administration permit ARAYIS magazine to organize a congress that would take up, for instance, the problems of the workers at home? Would the administration allocate a hall for this purpose and would the state authorities address the congress? And would TRT televise the deliberations of such a congress?"

Note: Don't let anyone work. We have no such intention at the moment: ARAYIS.

BRIEFS

SULPHUR EXPORTS--The ban on sulphur exports imposed on 1951 has been lifted. The council of ministers decision on lifting the ban was issued in the official gazette on 29 April. In accordance with this decision, sulphur will be exported with the permission of the Commerce Ministry. [Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0900 GMT 29 Apr 81 TA]

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 085 4 May 1981

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Commission Still Studying Grenada Airport Plan [LE MONDE 25 Apr] B 1

NATO

NATO Foreign Ministers Hold Meetings in Rome C 1
Luns' Outline of Agenda C 1
Prior Bilateral Talks C 1
Mitsotakis-Haig Meeting C 1
Mitsotakis-Turkmen Session C 2
Athens Report C 3

BENELUX

BELGIUM

Plan Launched for Extended Security Zone [DE VOLKSRANT 29 Apr] F 1

THE NETHERLANDS

Van Agt Crtiticized for Vacillating on Cruise Issue [NRC HANDELSBLAD 24 Apr] F 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Schmidt Denies Saudi Annoyance Over Arms Supplies J 1
Bonn Rejects Israeli Criticism of Schmidt Remarks J 1
Genscher Views NATO Foreign Ministers Conference J 1
Notes Meeting's Significance J 2
SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG on Problems of NATO Meeting [30 Apr] J 2
Reportage on Talks With Portuguese President J 3
Eanes Interview J 3
Meeting With Schmidt J 4
Session With Carstens J 4
Officials Meet With Cuban Economic Delegation [Havana] J 4
Bonn Meetings [Havana] J 4

FRANCE

Giscard Lists Consequences of Mitterrand Victory K 1
Mitterrand: Giscard Divides; I Want To Unite [LE MONDE 30 Apr] K 1
Marchais Justifies Backing of Socialist Candidate [L'HUMANITE 29 Apr] K 1
L'HUMANITE Bemoans 'Anticommunist Propaganda' [27 Apr] K 5
France, Egypt Sign Food Products Trade Agreement [LE MONDE 30 Apr] K 6

SPAIN

Calvo-Sotelo Departs for 3-Day Visit to Portugal N 1
Ministers Summoned to Special Cabinet Meeting N 1
Military Authorities Extend Partial Security Alert N 1

NORDIC AFFAIRS

FINLAND

Commerce Minister Sundqvist Travels to Iraq P 1

NORWAY

Nuclear-Free Zone Important Issue for NKP [AFTENPOSTEN 28 Apr] P 1
AFTENPOSTEN on USSR Motives for Postponing Talks [27 Apr] P 1

SWEDEN

Industrial Cooperation Discussed With Norway [AFTENPOSTEN 29 Apr] P 2
Polls Show Government Would Lose Elections P 3

GREECE

Mitsotakis Replies to Turkmen Allegations S 1
Comments on Bases Talks S 1
Statement Issued on Visit by Iraq's Hammadi S 2
AKROPOLIS on Extension of Territorial Waters [3 May] S 2
I KATHIMERINI on Need for Dialogue With Turkey [2 May] S 4
MESIMVRINI: Western Hypocrisy Toward Turkey [2 May] S 5
Briefs: Envoys Depart S 6

TURKEY

Turkmen Departs for NATO Meeting in Italy T 1
GUNAYDIN: Turkmen Discusses Relations With Greece [1 May] T 1
Message Sent to Soviets on Peace Proposals T 2
NATO Commander Departs After Talks With Officials T 3
Bank To Adjust Foreign Currency Rates Daily T 3
Bank Official Comments T 3
Ecevit Editorial Warns of 'Big Interests' Aims [ARAYIS 25 Apr] T 4

COMMISSION STILL STUDYING GRENADA AIRPORT

LD301301 Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Apr 81 p 4

["PH.L." report]

[Text] Brussels (European Communities)--Will the Community disregard U.S. pressures and contribute to the construction of a modern airport at Pointel-Saline in Grenada, a small Caribbean state which is a Lome Convention signatory (note: The Lome Convention links the EEC to 50 African, Caribbean and Pacific countries, known as the ACP countries) and which, in Washington's view, has the disadvantage of being politically close to Cuba? This is still an open question following the Brussels meeting on 14-15 April between the countries and bodies whose aid has been requested.

Grenada, which is anxious to attract more tourists, would like a well-equipped airport where four-engined jet aircraft would be able to land. The project is costly: $72 million (Fr 360 million). The Cubans, who have carried out technical studies, are prepared to make a major contribution. Around $40 million (Fr 200 million) still have to be found. Grenada and Saint Lucia, a neighboring ACP state, have jointly asked the European Commission for the project to be given the financial aid for which the Lome Convention makes provision. Not only did Brussels react favorably, but since its contribution could only be very limited, offered to help Grenada find other financial backers. This gave the Commission an opportunity to promote a joint financing operation in this region (for instance associating the Community with Arab funds and Latin American oil-producing countries) similar to the operation it is carrying out with increasing success in the African ACP countries.

Things then went wrong and the United States, suspecting Cuba of seeking to use Grenada as a stopover for its troops transports to Africa, made energetic approaches to its European allies to persuade them to abandon plans to finance the project. The EEC states thought that the American fears were well-founded and decided not to participate in the meeting which Grenada held on 14 and 15 April. The meeting, chaired by Grenada Deputy Prime Minister Coard, took place on the scheduled date and was attended by Venezuela, Libya, Syria, Sweden, the OPEC Development Fund, the World Bank and...the European Commission. All the indications are that although the member states boycotted the meeting themselves, they were not displeased that the Community was represented at it. This is, particularly the view held by France which, however, originally seemed to be one of the countries which responded most to the State Department's arguments. The meeting ended with the publication of a communique supporting the project, although none of the participants announced its possible contribution.

Rather than force people to give their verdicts at a difficult moment, Mr Coard indicated that his government will establish bilateral contacts with each participant on this point.

The tendency to resist the U.S. pressure which has thus been demonstrated is encouraged by the conclusions of the report produced by the (French) expert sent to Grenada by the Commission, which are very favorable to the project. The expert concludes that the airport is indeed necessary for the development of tourism, which is the only means of increasing the island's income. In 1973, Saint Lucia, like Grenada, was welcoming 30,000 tourists per year. Since then, Saint Lucia has had a modern airport. In 1980, it welcomed 100,000 tourists while there were still only 30,000 in Grenada.

Development Commissioner Cheysson's department is still examining the project. It is waiting in particular for Grenada to make a request accompanied by facts and figures.

NATO FOREIGN MINISTERS HOLD MEETINGS IN ROME

Luns' Outline of Agenda

NC031724 Paris AFP in English 1717 GMT 3 May 81

[Text] Rome, 3 May (AFP)--North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) defense ministers may decide to resume talks with the Soviet Union on European-based strategic missiles during their meeting next week in Brussels, NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns said today.

In a press conference, Mr Luns confirmed that the question would be discussed here during the NATO foreign minister's meeting, beginning tomorrow.

He also praised what he called the Western alliance's firmness on Poland and added that this stand may well have been partly responsible for the relative calm in Poland now. He said that East-West relations, the Middle East, Southwest Asia and other regions would be discussed at the foreign ministers meeting, adding that these areas were vital for Western interests and were now being threatened.

The question of Spain's membership in NATO will probably also be discussed by the ministers, he said.

Prior Bilateral Talks

LD031910 [illegible]e Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 3 May 81

[Albert[illegible]nocchi report]

[Exc[illegible]cs] We are now on the eve of the Atlantic council meeting which will start tomorrow mor[illegible]g.

[illegible]or to the meeting, many bilateral talks were held. First of all, our Foreign Minister [illegible]ilio Colombo met with his Portuguese counterpart and his West German counterpart [illegible]enscher. The talks revealed an identity of views on Euromissiles, on readjusting the balance of forces in the field to bring about negotiations with the USSR without any further delays and on exploring all the possibilities of favoring a positive conclusion of the Madrid conference on European cooperation and security whose proceedings have been dragging on for months without any appreciable results.

In the meantime, U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig talked with the French, West German, British and Canadian ministers. All the meetings and talks were scheduled [words indistinct] the summit meeting which will take place tomorrow here in Rome.

Mitsotakis-Haig Meeting

NC040858 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0400 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] Yesterday in Rome at 1400, Mitsotakis met with U.S. Secretary of State Haig who gave a luncheon in Mitsotakis' honor. Mitsotakis described the meeting with his U.S. counterpart as successful and added that a step forward had been taken on the issue of negotiations for the bases in Greece. Simultaneous announcements, issued after the Mitsotakis-Haig meeting, noted that their talk was useful and cordial and concerned the Atlantic alliance and Greece's relations with the United States.

The announcement mentions that the two ministers proceeded into negotiations for the conclusion of a new agreement for defense and economic cooperation. The heads of the two negotiating teams, Ambassadors Roussos and McCloskey, will discuss the new steps of this agreement as soon as they return to Athens.

Mitsotakis expressed the viewpoint that a final result must be achieved by 20-25 May because after that date the Chamber will recess for the summer. In any case, the Greek minister maintained (?obvious) reservations concerning the final outcome of the negotiations. He said characteristically: If it is possible to resolve the problems over which there are disagreements, the agreement will be signed.

The ATHENS NEWS AGENCY correspondent in Rome notes in a dispatch that the Greek side has expressed the viewpoint that an impression has been created that the United States wishes to complete the negotiations on the bases before the elections.

Mitsotakis-Turkmen Session

TA032033 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 3 May 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen today met with Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis in Rome. Turkmen and Mitsotakis met at the Turkish Embassy at 1900 Turkish time. The two foreign ministers made statements following the talks.

In his statement, Turkmen said that the talks were held in a cordial and friendly atmosphere. He added that bilateral relations were reviewed. Expressing his hope that these talks would put an end to certain differences between the two countries, Turkmen said that Turkey and Greece are determined to continue the dialogue between them. Recalling that he would meet again with the Greek foreign minister in New York during the UN General Assembly meetings, Turkmen said: The two countries have common interests in the long run and we shall exert efforts within this framework.

Altan Acar and Ali Kirca from the Turkish Radio and Television news center reports that in his statement, the Greek foreign minister said: There recently has been some unpleasantness between the two countries. However, during the talks we held with Mr Turkmen, we have put the dialogue between the two peoples back on the track.

A joint statement was issued to the press following the talks between the two foreign ministers. The joint statement says that the two foreign ministers reviewed Turkish-Greek relations in a friendly and cordial atmosphere, and noted work conducted in meetings held earlier by the general secretaries of the two foreign ministeries. The statement adds that the two foreign ministers noted the constructive developments achieved during those talks, particularly on the subject of the airspace between the two countries. The statement concludes by saying that the dialogue between the two countries will continue both on the level of the general secretaries of the foreign ministries as well as of the foreign ministers.

Athens Report

NC032154 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 3 May 81

[Text] The Greek-Turkish dialogue will continue at all levels, according to a joint press release issued following a 2-hour meeting in Rome today between Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen.

The release also notes that the two ministers will meet again next September in New York during the UN General Assembly Session. Beforehand, meetings will be held between the secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish foreign ministries.

During their meeting in Rome today, the two ministers discussed bilateral relations in a sincere and friendly atmosphere and established that the secretaries general had accomplished good results in their previous talks, particularly on the issues pertaining to the Aegean airspace where, as the joint statement notes, some progress has been made. The joint statement also points out that certain points of this issue will be discussed in the future at the experts level.

On the question of the Aegean continental shelf, Mitsotakis and Turkmen took into consideration the relevant exchanges of views held between the secretaries general on the matter. According to the joint statement, the two ministers reiterated the significance attached by the Greek and Turkish Governments to the continuation of the dialogue either at the ministerial or secretaries general level.

Answering questions from newsmen following today's talks with Mitsotakis, the Turkish foreign minister said that during the meeting it was established that recent developments had an unfavorable effect on the general atmosphere between Greece and Turkey. He stressed: Today's talks allowed us to clarify many points. Furthermore, Mr Turkmen said that the joint conviction (?consists in that) the long-term interests of Greece and Turkey coincide, particularly in light of present international developments.

After the meeting with his Turkish counterpart, Mitsotakis made the following statement: We have exchanged views on all issues concerning the two countries. I believe that, in depth, nothing has changed. The basic line remains always the same and I believe that, with good will by both sides, we will manage to finally solve the problems justly.

BELGIUM

PLAN LAUNCHED FOR EXTENDED SECURITY ZONE

D011455 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 29 Apr 81 p 16

[Own correspondent report]

[Text] Brussels--A European plan was launched in Brussels yesterday for an extended security zone in Europe from which nuclear arms would be banned. The initiative for the plan was taken by a group of Belgians from public and political life. Since then, the plan has won the support of intellectuals and parliament members in Poland, Hungary and Italy. In The Netherlands, the Labor Party, among others, has shown interest in the plan.

The plan, as Belgian ex-minister Albert de Smaele yesterday made clear, is based on the supposition that as a result of changes in the strategy for the modernization of nuclear arms in Europe, the citizens of central Europe would become the primary victims of a nuclear war. Hence, the plan for a security zone embracing the thirty states in Europe which do not possess nuclear arms. This zone would therefore stretch from the Soviet border to the borders of France and Britain.

THE NETHERLANDS

VAN AGT CRITICIZED FOR VACILLATING ON CRUISE ISSUE

LD010949 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 24 Apr 81 p 3

[Own political correspondent report]

[Excerpt] Schiedam, 24 April--"Does Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA) leader Van Agt want The Netherlands to inform NATO in December 1981 that it will not deploy any new nuclear arms on its territory, or doesn't he?" Labor Party leader Den Uyl put this question publicly to his political opponent Van Agt at a party meeting in Schiedam yesterday evening.

The CDA leader, who was addressing party members in Roermond at the time, defended the situation that the CDA approach to the nuclear question had brought about. The double NATO resolution at the end of 1979 to set up within NATO a disarmament group as well as a modernization group would never have come about without The Netherlands and Germany, Van Agt said.

According to the prime minister, the Americans will have to react positively when Brezhnev goes to West Germany for talks. "If this leads to fewer SS-20 missiles, we would then be able to make do with fewer cruise missiles in NATO," said Van Agt, who was obviously unable to answer the question put to him by Den Uyl in Schiedam.

Van Agt must make his position known before the elections, Den Uyl argued. The U.S. administration has definitely rejected the ratification of the SALT II treaty. By December, there will be no new results from negotiations with the Russians and thus no new developments for Van Agt and the CDA to await, Den Uyl said.

"Mr van Agt and the CDA want to duck out of answering this question to keep their dissidents in check and possibily to be able to deploy nuclear missiles after forming a new cabinet with the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy after 26 May," Den Uyl said.

At a press conference in The Hague earlier, Den Uyl defended the position that the Labor Party's absolute rejection of the new nuclear missiles in Europe was beginning to have positive results. "The Labor Party's 'no' is doing good work in Europe; it is having a great effect."

SCHMIDT DENIES SAUDI ANNOYANCE OVER ARMS SUPPLIES

LD011732 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1700 GMT 1 May 81

[Text] Chancellor Schmidt resolutely denied that Saudi Arabia is annoyed because German arms supplies have still not been promised. Schmidt said in an interview with BILD that there is no truth to that whatsoever. Saudi Crown Prince Fahd said that the Saudis expressed no desire for German arms supplies; hence, good trade relations between the two countries will not be impaired.

BONN REJECTS ISRAELI CRITICISM OF SCHMIDT REMARKS

LD031408 Hamburg DPA in German 1327 GMT 3 May 81

[Excerpts] Jerusalem/Bonn, 3 May (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's remarks on the "moral right" of the Palestinians to the right of self-determination have led to a row with the Israeli Government.

Bonn government circles commented on Sunday on the Israeli reactions: "The chancellor, following his return from Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emitrates criticized neither the Israeli Government nor the bombardment of targets in Lebanon by the Israeli Air Force." The chancellor's remarks were fully within the framework of the statement by the Council of Europe in Venice last June.

Juergen Moellemann, FDP foreign policy and security spokesman, rejected Shamir's criticism of Chancellor Schmidt as both inappropriate and unjustified. If the chancellor described the attitude adopted by the EC on the Middle East conflict and demanded the inclusion of the Palestinians in the peace process, then that was an attempt to contribute toward a constructive and peaceful development.

The senior spokesman of the Israeli Foreign Ministry, in an interview with DPA on Saturday evening, announced "many other strong reactions" to the chancellor's remarks. "The remarks by the Bonn head of government have deeply shocked broad circles over here," spokesman Naftali Lavi said. These remarks were made last Thursday of all days, the memorial day for the 6 million victims of national socialism. Circles of the social democratic opposition Labor Party also "disapproved" of Schmidt's remarks.

GENSCHER VIEWS NATO FOREIGN MINISTERS CONFERENCE

LD011030 Hamburg DPA in German 0930 GMT 1 May 81

[Text] Bonn--In the opinion of Federal Foreign Minister Genscher, the conference of NATO foreign ministers, which is due to open in Rome on Monday, should reemphasize the desire of the NATO countries to open negotiations with the USSR on medium-range missiles as quickly as possible. These negotiations by refraining from "increasing the potential threat to us all" by the deployment of further medium-range missiles aimed at West Europe.

NATO's spring meeting, the first to be attended by Alexander Haig, the secretary of state of the new U.S. Government, should, Genscher said, also "provide a signal of the unity of the Western alliance and its determination to preserve its security." At the same time, it should serve as a signal to the USSR "to subscribe to the principle of moderation in all matters of world politics." Finally, it should be a signal of the West's desire for arms control and disarmament.

Notes Meeting's Significance

LD031224 Hamburg DPA in German 1104 GMT 3 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 3 May (DPA)--Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher once more underlined the "considerable significance" for the Federal Government of the NATO council meeting in Rome. Prior to his departure for Rome, Genscher emphasized in Bonn on Sunday that the meeting in Rome should be "a sign of Western unity."

The federal foreign minister, prior to the actual start of the conference in Rome on Sunday, is to have meetings with U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo. A meeting of the foreign ministers of the five states involved in the Namibia initiative, the United States, Canada, Great Britain, France and the Federal Republic, also has been planned.

Genscher said: "In view of the current difficult international situation, the Western alliance must prove itself to be a decisive factor for safeguarding peace and stability." An essential part of the Western alliance's credibility is the preservation of its defense capability and simultaneous willingness for cooperation to reduce tension and for arms control.

The Rome conference will have to exemplify the determination to counterarm. This is necessary to overcome the superiority in medium-range missiles created by earlier Soviet arming, through the reestablishment of equilibrium. At the same time, the offer for the immediate resumption of arms control talks with the Soviets will have to be confirmed in Rome in order to achieve an equilibrium at the lowest possible level.

According to Genscher, only unqualified determination by the NATO partners to adhere uncompromisingly to the December 1979 dual decision will induce the Soviets to hold constructive negotiations. The Federal Government will advocate in the NATO council that negotiations should be tenaciously and patiently continued at the CSCE followup conference in Madrid. Bon also is interested in a clear statement by the alliance concerning Third World policy. Genscher also views the NATO council meeting in Rome as an opportunity to take stock of the intra-Germany and Berlin policy.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG ON PROBLEMS OF NATO MEETING

DW301038 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 30 Apr 81 p 4

[Commentary signed Dr.: "European Pressure on Washington"]

[Text] The NATO foreign ministers will have to demonstrate great diplomatic skill at their spring meeting in Rome if they want to avoid a repeat of the embarrassing events which happened during the Bonn meeting of the Nuclear Planning Group. The new U.S. Secretary of State, Alexander Haig, is a more understanding discussion partner for the European allies than his colleague Caspar Weinberger, but it seems that there are still no binding directives from the White House for negotiations on medium-range arms with the Soviets. The Europeans must reckon with the fact that the Rome "signal" for the continuation of the Geneva talks will be less clear than they wish it to be.

Bonn is in the frontline of those who are pressing an early beginning of negotiations. The Social Democratic chancellor as well as the Free Democratic foreign minister are under pressure from their parties to make a move. U.S. critics, however, ought to consider for the sake of fairness that thorough preparations could produce half the success of the negotiations. The Americans, on the other hand, must learn to understand that those countries on whose soil the new nuclear systems will be deployed have a great interest in decreasing the Soviet threat so that the need for counterarmament will be as low as possible.

Not every statement by the parties giving priority to negotiations over the implementation of armament need be condemned as a violation of the alliance's solidarity. The irritation of the FDP top echelon regarding the old liberal member William Borm is unfounded; his party motion, in contrast to the senseless demands of the Young Socialists, doesn't call into question NATO's "dual decision." Hans-Dietrich Genscher just wants to iron out Borm's initiative in order to point his finger at the cohesion which is lacking when it comes to the SPD coalition partner.

REPORTAGE ON TALKS WITH PORTUGUESE PRESIDENT

LD011530 Hamburg DPA in German 1508 GMT 1 May 81

[Text] Hamburg, 1 May (DPA)--Portuguese President Gen Antonio Ramalho Eanes arrived in Hamburg on Friday for a 3-day private visit and for talks with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and President Karl Carstens. Eanes is to meet Schmidt in Hamburg on Saturday and Carstens in Bonn on Sunday.

Despite the private nature of the visit, Bonn political circles expect that--expecially in his talk with the chancellor--the subjects of NATO and the counterarming decision, Portugal's membership in the EEC, Poland and the Near and Middle East will be discussed. Other subjects could well be the chancellor's recent trip to Saudi Arabia.

Eanes and Schmidt are now holding the meeting which was planned for last year, but which had to be postponed on account of the political developments in Portugal. President Carstens paid a state visit to Portugal last year.

Eanes Interview

LD030020 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 2 May 81

[Text] President Ramalho Eanes granted an interview to the Portuguese section of Deutsche Welle in Bonn this afternoon which will be broadcast later today.

In the interview, Eanes discussed his talks this morning in Hamburg with Helmut Schmidt. He said that they dealt mainly with international issues rather than bilateral relations. Southern Africa, the Middle East, Latin America and the North-South dialogue were among the topics covered. Eanes spoke of the role that Portugal can play in this sphere within Europe by virtue of its ties with the Portuguese-speaking countries in Africa.

Eanes also said in the interview that the West German chancellor assured him that steps have been taken with regard to the permanence of residence of the Portuguese immigrant workers in the FRG.

On the subject of military bases, such as Beja, Lajes and Porto Santo, he said that Portugal has undertakings with NATO that it accepts and will fulfill. With specific regard to Lajes, he said that Portugal has a bilateral agreement with the United States, which will remain in force until 1984 and that there will be no changes until then.

With regard to the possibility that nuclear weapons will be deployed in Portugal, Eanes said that this question has never been raised and thus never discussed. It really is a nonissue, he added.

Eanes also referred to the revision of the constitution. He said that he hopes that the revision will take into account the real interests of the Portuguese from a standpoint of complete democracy.

In reply to a question on the possibility of Portuguese emigrants being allowed in future to vote in the presidential elections, Eanes said that as president of the republic he should not exceed the limits of his authority--even in a radio interview--adding that this is a matter for the assembly of the republic.

Meeting With Schmidt

LD021734 Hamburg DPA in German 1553 GMT 2 May 81

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 2 May (DPA)--Portuguese President Gen Antonio Ramalho Eanes today talked for several hours with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Hamburg. The talk in the Hamburg Senate guest house was part of a 3-day private visit Eanes is paying to the Federal Republic. The Portuguese president then flew from Hamburg to Bonn where he will meet Federal President Karl Carstens on Sunday.

According to a government spokesman in Bonn, the federal chancellor described his talk with President Eanes as "extremely satisfactory." The situation in Africa, the Middle East and Latin America was discussed, as was Portugal's proposed entry into the European Community and the problems connected with this. Also dealt with in detail were joint tasks within the Atlantic alliance, questions of the North-South relationship in world economic energy supply as well as the situation of Portuguese employees in the Federal Republic.

Session With Carstens

LD031300 Hamburg DPA in German 1241 GMT 3 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 3 May (DPA)--Portuguese President Gen Antonio Ramalho Eanes met President Karl Carstens in Bonn on Sunday at the close of his 3-day visit to the Federal Republic. During his talk with Carstens, the Portuguese president paid tribute to the support given by the Federal Republic to his country during the postrevolutionary phase and to Germany's important role in Europe. The two heads of state also discussed aspects of defense and alliance policies as well as West-West relations. The Portuguese president also mentioned his country's desire to join the European Community.

OFFICIALS MEET WITH CUBAN ECONOMIC DELEGATION

FL272234 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2205 GMT 27 Apr 81

[Text] Ernesto Melendez Bachs, first vice minister-president of the Cuban State Committee for Economic Cooperation, today began his activities in the Federal Republic of Germany with several meetings in Frankfurt Am Main. The Cuban economic delegation led by Melendez Bachs was received in Frankfurt's Chamber of Industry and Commerce by its secretary (Kurt Holzmeir) with whom it talked for nearly 2 hours.

Melendez Bachs and his delegation also visited the West German Federal Bank where they held a meeting with bank Vice President Helmut Schlesinger. The Cuban vice minister is in the FRG to take part in a broad schedule of visits and meetings with West German economic sectors to examine the possibility of developing bilateral relations for mutual benefit.

Bonn Meetings

FL301529 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1500 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn--West German Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, Klaus von Dohnanyi talked with the first vice minister of Cuba's State Committee for Economic Cooperation, Ernesto Melendez Bachs, who is on a visit to the FRG. Von Dohnanyi talked to Melendez Bachs during a reception hosted by the Cuban Embassy for the economic delegation headed by Melendez Bachs. Melendez Bachs and his delegation were received yesterday by Bundestag Economic Cooperation Committee Chairman (Hued Belshen), as well as by secretary of state at the Foreign Ministry Hans Lautenchlaeger; Secretary of State at the Finance Ministry H. Stullman and by Ministerial Director for Economic Affairs G. Schussler.

GISCARD LISTS CONSEQUENCES OF MITTERRAND VICTORY

LD011800 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 1 May 81

[Dominique Souchier dispatch from Cagnes-Sur-Mer]

[Text] Giscard d'Estaing has just announced a turnabout in his campaign. As of Sunday, he will conduct a campaign no longer for himself but for France. Giscard d'Estaing proposes to denounce the three dangers which, in his opinion, will threaten France if Mitterrand is elected. Giscard said at Cagnes-Sur-Mer a few minutes ago:

[Begin recording] The election of the opposition's candidate will have three consequences for you. I am going to repeat them throughout the week--a sort of rule of three--because if you bear them in mind, I am sure that you will not make this choice.

First consequence: Dissolution of the National Assembly and political disorder.

Second consequence: Economic and social confusion exacerbating the deficit, inflation and unemployment.

And the third consequence: Decline of France in the world.

Such would be the consequences of such a choice. [end recording]

MITTERRAND: GISCARD DIVIDES; I WANT TO UNITE

LD040809 Paris LE MONDE in Frnech 30 Apr 81 p 10

[Text] Nevers--After opening the spring session of the Nievre Department General Council and giving details about Nievre's new energy sources, Francois Mitterrand made the following statement on Tuesday, 28 April, in the presence of elected representatives of the PS:

"The first duty of a president of the republic is to unite the French people. I now observe with regret that the manner in which Giscard d'Estaing has embarked on his second-round campaign has made it impossible for him to claim that he will do this. It is a serious matter to hear him indict the majority of the French people who repudiated him on Sunday. Liberties would be endangered, he said. My answer to this is loud and clear: Do not insult those who want to achieve, at your expense, the possibility of living free from the pangs of unemployment in a reconciled country and who believe that by getting rid of your policy, they will acquire the chance to enjoy a better life. I want to remind Giscard d'Estaing that it was the people who won freedom nearly 200 years ago from the feudal system prevailing under the old order, that it was the people who defended it against the financial oligarchy, often at the cost of their blood, and, finally, that it is the people who now fight in support of freedom against the narrow and selfish caste which he, Giscard, embodies.

"Therefore, I object to a campaign of verbal violence which forecasts some other kinds of violence by the outgoing candidate, and I will not follow him along that path. He divides. I want to unite. I simply challenge his right to appropriate a struggle which in fact belongs to the people's forces which I represent.

"Let the virtuous feel reassured and the wicked tremble,' the prince-president, the future Napolean III, who also was seeking reelection as president, exclaimed in 1849. It was thought that this kind of language was obsolete, but I can see that the old right continues to follow the same kind of logic, a logic identical to itself--sectarian and intolerant--and I ask the French people if this is what they want. The answer is no."

MARCHAIS JUSTIFIES BACKING SOCIALIST CANDIDATE

LD011421 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 29 Apr 81 p 3

[Report on Jean-Pierre Elkabbach and Alain Duhamel television interview with PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais on 28 April: "Our Call To Vote Mitterrand Certainly Doesn't Constitute Abandoning Our Objectives"]

[Text] After the PCF Central Committee meeting, Georges Marchais was interviewed by Jean-Pierre Elkabbach and Alain Duhamel on television channel 2 yesterday evening.

First, he was asked whether the stance adopted by the PCF constitutes standing down. "No," Georges Marchais replied, "standing down is impossible in a presidential election. The law requires two candidates in the second round. We are calling on people to vote for Socialist candidate Francois Mitterrand.

"I will quote you the two essential sentences in our resolution: 'It is true that the first round result doesn't give us the full strength necessary to move toward change in the best conditions, but there are millions of you. We can and will rely on you to progress as quickly as possible to defeat Giscard d'Estaing and capital's policy.

"'With the aim of establishing the best possible conditions for extending the struggles to satisfy the major demands, with a view to securing the vital anticapitalist and democratic reforms and with a view to imposing the formation of a leftwing union government in which the Communists will have their rightful place, we call on you to vote for Socialist candidate Francois Mitterrand in the second round.'"

No Blank Check

"Isn't that a blank check?" a journalist asked.

"No," Georges Marchais replied: "It isn't a blank check. It is the continuation of the policy which we, which I, pursued before the first round, by relying now on the 4.5 million voters who placed their trust in us.

"We are calling on our voters to vote for Francois Mitterrand on specific bases--the 131 proposals which we submitted to them. These are 131 proposals for full employment, social justice, independence and national sovereignty and a new society for young people. The 131 proposals are accompanied by the means of carrying out this policy, nationalizations and so forth."

Georges Marchais recalled the importance of the struggle to implement them. He added: "It is true that we aren't approaching this battle in the best conditions. This election has displayed a profoundly antidemocratic character. The voters have been manipulated. Comrades told us today--and I have received letters on this--that Communist voters had voted for Francois Mitterrand because they were manipulated by opinion polls which suggested that there was a danger of having two rightwing candidates in the second round, namely, Giscard d'Estaing and Jacques Chirac."

"You think that a section of the Communist voters feared a second round contest between Giscard and Chirac?" he was asked.

"But you know that that is true; everybody knew it," Georges Marchais replied. "Chirac was way behind the 22, 24 and 25 percent which the opinion polls gave him. Our voters were the victims of an odious political maneuver that took place in the last few days of the campaign. All those who knew about it and the other three candidates are responsible for it. They helped to manipulate the Communist voters.

"Everybody heard Mitterrand say on television: 'Why have six leftwing candidates when one would be enough.' That was an appeal for his own candidacy."

[Question] How will you have your 131 proposals implemented?

"It is important to see things clearly," Georges Marchais said. "There will be no discussions between the first and second rounds: Mitterrand said that back in September. He has confirmed that there will be no Communist ministers.

"So what should we do. It is unthinkable to vote for Giscard. We cannot abstain. We have decided to vote for Francois Mitterrand. On what are we counting? On the 4.5 million voters, on those who would have voted Communist if they had not been manipulated. We are counting on that force once Giscard is defeated to immediately form a union government with Communist and Socialist ministers.

"It would be difficult to convince the voters that it is possible to implement a new policy when you hear Francois Ceyrac yesterday adopting such a categorical stance in favor of Giscard d'Estaing. Consequently, we need a government which is strong enough to carry out the measures the voters expect.

"The voters must see that the PCF has a consistent policy. This is not an about-face. I have always said that there must be a union government with Communist and Socialist ministers.

"This government must raise the minimum wage to Fr3,300, increase family allowances and freeze prices. It could immediately initiate discussions between the trade unions and the employers which should have the backing of the new president and the government. Some 4.5 million voters voted for this policy. You cannot expect me to abandon it."

We Will Not Abandon Our Objectives

A journalist asked Georges Marchais what means he has of making Francois Mitterrand, who has emerged from the first round in a stronger position, listen to him.

"The means we have is struggle," Georges Marchais said. "Do you think that our voters and all the others who want to defeat Giscard d'Estaing and who want change will indefinitely postpone the measures they are expecting now?

"Of course, things are more difficult because there is disagreement and because Mitterrand maintains his rejection of Communist ministers. If the voters had listened to us--and moreover if they had not been manipulated--we would be in a stronger position for taking that course. But for all that, we are not abandoning it. Above all, don't think that our decision to call on people to vote for Mitterrand constitutes any kind of abandonment in any sphere of the objectives which I submitted to French men and women."

[Question] Do you have confidence in Francois Mitterrand?

[Answer] If I had confidence in F. Mitterrand, I would not be a PCF member and I would not be the PCF candidate.

I have confidence first in my party and also in the workers, the struggles and the mass movement. The first round shows discontent, opposition to the government's policy and a desire for change. Well, we intend to use this desire for change as the means of making F. Mitterrand take into consideration the measures without which there can be no change.

Marchais was then asked: "What will you do after 10 May if Mitterrand is elected, since he will be even stronger then?"

Georges Marchais explained: "We will be stronger too. We will have helped to defeat the right by the decision we have just taken. We have 4.5 million voters--voters with awareness, since they voted for my proposals. We will have contributed to F. Mitterrand's victory because if we Communists don't call on people to vote for Mitterrand, there is no point in holding the second round. There is a chance of winning because we have decided to ask people to vote for him.

Consequently, we will be entitled to make demands on him. I have made things quite clear in all my speeches. I have said that we will not support a government in which there are no Communist ministers. That doesn't mean that we would not do what we now do with the present government. For instance, we voted for the right to vote at 18 years of age--we imposed that measure.

"But I am saying clearly that with a government without Communist ministers, Francois Mitterrand would be incapable of forcing the employers to meet the demands."

A journalist then asked whether he was "rooting for F. Mitterrand." Georges Marchais answered: "Have you ever seen me do something for nothing? Do you think that the 4.5 million voters who voted for me, in difficult circumstances and despite the campaign against me, would forgive me any capitulation?

"I can say quite calmly," the PCF secretary general continued, "that the decision taken by the central committee today is part of the struggle we are waging to defeat Giscard d'Estaing and establish a Socialist-Communist government which will implement a new policy. This is an episode in the struggle we are waging for change."

Questioned on the warning he issued during his campaign that there is danger of Mitterrand's governing with the right, Georges Marchais explained: "I said that there was a real danger. That danger has been increased by the fact that we have been weakened. But should we have called on people to vote for Giscard d'Estaing? No."

No Change Without Struggle

"I hope that we will succeed in defeating Giscard d'Estaing. That is why we are calling on people to vote for Francois Mitterrand." Georges Marchais continued: "If Giscard d'Estaing is, unfortunately, reelected we will not fight for Communist ministers in the government. We will launch a struggle against that government and the employers to impose the workers' demands."

[Question] What if Mitterrand is elected?

"The struggle will have to be waged in any case," Georges Marchais replied. "Do you know of any example in the past when the employers have willingly given the workers anything? I have always said that there was no supreme savior on the right or the left. We have suffered enough from the personality cult to have been cured of it once and for all. I believe in the workers' struggle, the masses' struggle. I have no illusions, nor has the central committee, which unanimously took the decision to call on people to vote for Francois Mitterrand. This is stated in the resolution, 8 million copies of which will be distributed. We aren't allowing any illusion to remain. We are telling the workers that they will have to struggle.

"We are telling them: First, your vote shows your intention to impose your demands; second, you need a government comprising Socialist and Communist ministers and third, there must be struggle, for without it there will be no change."

"You talk as if you had won the first round, but didn't bulldozer methods harm you?" he was asked.

"Those who used the term 'bulldozer' with reference to the Vitry affair have disgraced themselves," Georges Marchais replied. "It was a provocation staged against us."

Referring to the question of results, he continued: "I would have preferred to obtain 1 or 1.5 million votes more. However, that is what you must expect if you wage a struggle. We have been through worse than that. We have lived through some more difficult moments.

"We have on our side 4.5 million aware workers," Georges Marchais recalled, "who know what they want."

Marks of Affection

Alain Duhamel then asked the Communist candidate whether his party supports him now in the same way as it supported him before the first election round.

Georges Marchais replied: "My office and my person are of little account compared with what the PCF represents and with what is at stake in the battle. I received proofs of affection and solidarity from a unanimous central committee, which greatly touched me. All central committee members expressed their approval for the way in which I conducted the campaign, in accordance with the 22d and 23d congresses. We received thousands of telegrams and resolutions from comrades saying 'you fought well, continue your fight.' This is what we are doing. Our decision to call on people to vote for Mitterrand means that we are continuing the struggle which I began as soon as I was appointed a candidate."

L'HUMANITE BEMOANS 'ANTICOMMUNIST PROPAGANDA'

LD010757 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 27 Apr 81 p 1

[Rene Andrieu editorial: "Regardless of Difficulties"]

[Text] Even though the final results of the poll are not yet known, it is already possible to define its trend.

Let us state openly that it doesn't seem to us to be satisfactory, neither for our party, naturally, nor, above all, for the destiny of the workers and the future of our country.

True, the Communist candidate obtained a considerable number of votes, but the percentage achieved is considerably lower than the percentage which we achieved in the previous national poll, in the June 1979 European elections (20.52 percent).

True, our adversaries who forecast our collapse and dreamed of reducing us to insignificance have not achieved their objective. Nonetheless, they managed to deal us a blow.

In a situation which, as we fully realized, was difficult, Georges Marchais was subjected to a constant propaganda barrage which should not have come from so many sides.

The outgoing president, closely followed by Chirac, gave the cue by stating on television that he deemed it "abnormal" that millions of French people should vote for our party. For many months, radio and television utilized everything at their disposal, indulging in violent anticommunist propaganda day after day.

However, the view can be taken that we should look elsewhere for the main reason for this loss of votes. It may be found in the desire--or rather illusion--which prompted a certain number of voters to vote in the first round for the candidate of the left who, they were told by the government, was the only candidate capable of reaching the second round. The "useful vote" appeal maneuver developed by the Socialist candidate throughout his campaign and obligingly supported by the media seems to have borne fruit. Probably, the more easily because in the two latest elections of this kind the Communist Party stood aside in F. Mitterrand's favor as early as the first round.

It also will be noted that "the useful vote" concept has also played into Giscard d'Estaing's hands. It isn't the first time that our party has suffered a setback. Already in 1958--true, under different circumstances--it retreated temporarily before a Gaullist onslaught and even saw its percentage of votes reduced to 18.9 percent in parliamentary elections, but it soon regained its positions in the following local elections.

It is now a question of preparing for the second round--it is up to the central committee to determine our stance. Our party's setback in this round hasn't created the best possible conditions for ensuring that the necessary political change takes place. We feel sure that the only way to achieve such a change is to ensure that a majority of public opinion realizes that our stance is correct. This hasn't occurred. But, irrespective of any temporary difficulties, the Communists will not yield and they will continue to wage their struggle in the service of the workers.

FRANCE, EGYPT SIGN FOOD PRODUCTS TRADE AGREEMENT

LD011009 Paris LE MONDE in French 30 Apr 81 p 45

[J.P. Peroncel-Hugoz report]

[Text] Some 100 French enterprises, that is, considerably more than in previous years, are showing their products (machine tools and food products) at the 14th Cairo International Fair, which is taking place in Nasr on a 5,000-square meter site.

French Foreign Trade Minister Michel Cointat, in Egypt in connection with this event, announced that a major food products trade agreement has been signed between Paris and Cairo. Under this agreement, France is to grant Egypt a loan, available until 1 August 1982, for the purchase of French consumer goods up to a maximum of Fr1.5 billion. A previous loan of a similar kind amounted to Fr930 million and was granted to Cairo exclusively for the purchase of grain and flour on the French market. The new agreement will enable Egypt to buy extra sugar, dairy products, oils, eggs, meat and beef on the hoof.

This year, France is to sell Egypt goods costing a total of more than Fr6 billion. Agricultural and food products will amount to some 45 percent of this sum (as compared with nearly 40 percent of Fr5.5 billion in sales in 1980).

CALVO-SOTELO DEPARTS FOR 3-DAY VISIT TO PORTUGAL

LD021312 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 2 May 81

[Excerpt] At midday today, Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo left Madrid's Barajas Airport for Lisbon for a 3-day private visit. Sr Calvo-Sotelo is making the trip on a regular flight of the Portuguese Airline Company.

Shortly before setting off for Portugal, the prime minister told journalists that he would have a long informal meeting with his Portuguese counterpart, Pinto Balsemao, with no agenda and no one else present.

On the private nature of this visit, Sr Calvo-Sotelo said that the two government and the two countries' prime ministers need to have frequent, relaxed and friendly contacts without the solemnity of official visits. He also said that he would discuss with his counterpart those subjects which are in everyone's mind and that he would also have the opportunity of meeting President Eanes on Monday morning shortly before returning to Madrid.

Finally, he said that he might also meet Lorenzo Natali, vice president of the EEC and the person responsible for the expansion of the Community.

MINISTERS SUMMONED TO SPECIAL CABINET MEETING

NC011406 Paris AFP in English 1354 GMT 1 May 81

[Text] Madrid, 1 May (AFP)--Ministers were summoned to a special cabinet meeting here today to discuss the repercussions of new press revelations about tbe February coup attempt, well-informed sources said.

Security was meanwhile stepped up at Madrid region army barracks, where the number of duty sentries was doubled, following reports of possible demonstrations by the military in protest at the press reports. Officials said security had been tightened because of May Day rallies, but observers noted that such a move had never been taken in previous years and that no such measures were taken today in other Spanish towns. The Civil Guard implicated in the abortive February 23 coup had all been barracked in Madrid.

The cabinet meeting, which began early today and ended just before 1100 GMT, was widely thought to have been called in response to fresh revelations yesterday about the failed coup, although officials described the session as "normal."

The centrist newspaper DIARIO 16 reported yesterday that a director of the Defence Ministry's information centre was implicated in the coup attempt, and it named the operation's two leaders as General Jaime Milans del Bosch and General Alfonso Armada.

MILITARY AUTHORITIES EXTEND PARTIAL SECURITY ALERT

NC031148 Paris AFP in English 1129 GMT 3 May 81

[Text] Madrid, 3 May (AFP)--Spanish military authorities have extended a partial security alert, declared in the Madrid region last Thursday, for another three days, reliable sources said today.

The alert, in what some observers saw an increasing political restlessness in the country, covered the setting-up of rapid intervention units and the suspension of leave for officers [words indistinct].

Authorities had yesterday continued questioning the alleged leader of an abortive military coup on February 23, Lieutenant Colonel Antonio Tejero, in La Palma prison near the northwestern port city of La Coruna, the daily paper YA said. This was seen as an attempt to speed up the inquiry in the face of restlessness in Spain, YA said.

National police had set up several checkpoints on roads leading to the prison because of people wanting to visit the lieutenant-colonel.

FINLAND

COMMERCE MINISTER SUNDQVIST TRAVELS TO IRAQ

LD021718 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1600 GMT 2 May 81

[Text] Minister of Commerce and Industry Ulf Sundqvist today left on an official visit to Iraq. During the visit, talks will be conducted on the development of Finnish-Iraqi trade and the diversification of commercial and industrial cooperation. The visit takes place at the invitation of the Iraqi minister of industry. From Iraq, Minister Sundqvist is to continue to the United Arab Enirates to which he will pay an unofficial visit. Minister Sundqvist is to return home on Wednesday.

NORWAY

NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE IMPORTANT ISSUE FOR NKP

LD010811 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 28 Apr 81 p 3

[Text] The struggle for detente, disarmament and peace will be the most important issue in the Storting election in the fall, says a statement from the Norwegian Communist Party [NKP] National Executive.

A nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries will be a major issue for the NKP in the election campaign, and the party considers that such a zone should embrace the four Nordic countries.

"We see the Labor Party's national conference resolution on the Nordic countries as a nuclear-free zone as a step forward, even though the resolution itself is somewhat vague. Such a zone ought to be the first step toward creating similar zones covering larger areas of Europe. But it must be established without waiting for these other zones, and should embrace Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Finland.

"None of these countries has nuclear arms and they must guarantee that such weapons will not be used from their territory. In return, the nuclear powers must guarantee that the Nordic countries will not be the targets of nuclear attacks," the statement says.

The NKP gives its backing to policies proposing that Norwegian oil revenues be used to create jobs in areas with little industry, to build more health facilities and schools and to reduce taxes.

AFTENPOSTEN ON USSR MOTIVES FOR POSTPONING TALKS

LD010921 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 27 Apr 81 p 2

[Editorial: "The Kremlin Makes Another Postponement"]

[Text] Only very few people in Norway expected the visit to Moscow by Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund in December last year to lead to any real improvement in relations between Norway and the Soviet Union--despite the fact that this was the first official visit in 14 years and despite the fact that the visit could otherwise be described as fairly successful. Now the Russians have made it clear that this sober view of things was quite correct. Last week they asked for a temporary postponement until the fall of the talks on a Barents Sea demarcation line. Norway had invited them to talks scheduled in the first half of May. The extremely short notice--Norway made its invitation at the beginning of January--is probably intended to be a new general expression of Soviet political dissatisfaction with Norway.

The practical reasons to which the Russians point we find hard to see, but we can on the other hand see several political reasons for the Kremlin's desire for a postponement--the general international situation, of which the situation in the northern areas also forms a part, is very fluid at present; the security policy debate in Norway has been left somewhat in midair and has not taken the turn the Russians could have hoped; and perhaps most important there will be an election in Norway in 4-and-1/2 months' time.

Once again, the Russians are best served by following what has been their main line in the north: stall--then wait and see. And to reemphasize that they find their relations with Norway "difficult," they also omit to take part in a round of "courtesy talks" with Norway on the demarcation line at the same time as they have PRAVDA accuse Norway of being "swamped by a wave of anti-Sovietism and militarist hysteria"--according to the party organ's commentary last Saturday.

This is not the first time the Soviet Union has held out to Norway the prospect of negotiations on the demarcation line, only to make long postponements instead. The joint Norwegian-Soviet communique from Frydenlund's Moscow meeting last December stated: "The two sides stressed the importance of continuing regular consultations between the two countries on a wide range of international questions and also on questions of Norwegian-Soviet relations. For this reason, Norway extends an invitation to a new round of talks in Oslo in the near future on the apportionment of the continental shelf in the Barents Sea." At first, Norway expected "the near future" to be some time during the winter, then May was suggested--and now the whole business has been postponed until the fall.

When the negotiations on the "gray zone" in the north caused a storm in Norwegian domestic politics in the summer of 1977, the Russians agreed to a "supplementary declaration"--after secret talks in London between the then Law of the Sea Minister Jens Evensen and a top Soviet diplomat. The then Prime Minister Odvar Nordli interpreted this declaration at a press conference as a clear Soviet promise of demarcation line negotiations in the near future. Nevertheless, 2-and-1/2 years passed before the Russians agreed to a new (and fruitless) rounds of talks.

Norway ought to make careful note of how Soviet representatives subsequently act on those prospects held out during negotiations. And in addition, we ought to reflect a little over what attitude toward its neighbor Norway really lies behind Soviet behavior of this type.

SWEDEN

INDUSTRIAL COOPERATION DISCUSSED WITH NORWAY

LD011451 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 29 Apr 81 p 3

[Terje Svabo report]

[Text] Goteborg [Sweden], 28 Apr--Work on joint tax and currency credit regulations and on the harmonization of legislation was a central topic when Prime Ministers Thorbjorn Falldin and Gro Harlem Brundtland on Tuesday [28 April] discussed the implementation of the Norwegian-Swedish industry and energy agreement. Both prime ministers addressed the "Goteborg Forum" conference and stressed that the prospects of improved and extended cooperation between the two countries are dependent on the companies' own interest in participating.

Despite the government split in Sweden, Prime Minister Falloin found time to travel to Goteborg to meet Gro Harlem Brundtland and to speak at the conference. Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland said after her meeting with Falldin that the main point of the meeting today was to go through a checklist of points in the agreement which need clarification before further work is done.

In this context she said that the two countries' governments were now looking into the possibilities of including the Norwegian-Swedish agricultural agreement and a coordination of civilian and military purchases in the agreement. The prime minister stressed that what was being talked about here was military trade between Norway and Sweden and not joint trade with a third country.

In her address at the "Goteborg forum," the Norwegian prime minister said that in the government's view the internationalization of Norwegian industry is one of the preconditions for achieving the objective of efficient and competitive industry. She said that Norway's own home market was too small to be able to satisfy efficient industrial production.

The prime minister said that industrial production in Norway had stagnated since 1974.

In an interview with Norwegian journalists, Swedish Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin pointed out that the guiding principle in this agreement was to be that it will not be possible to achieve cooperation if one side demands that all its view be accepted. He said that this was true of both politicians and managing directors.

In reply to a direct question, Falldin said that there was no reason to believe that the uncertain government situation in Sweden would have any effect on the implementation of the agreement. In his reply, Falldin pointed out that the Swedish opposition had given its support to the text of the agreement.

Falldin said of his meeting with Gro Harlem Brundtland today that the most important thing was to establish that the work on the agreement was going as it should. He expressed his satisfaction with the meeting and said that in the coming weeks the two countries' tax regulations and the possibilities of harmonizing legislation will be looked at. He also told the journalists that the two prime ministers had also discussed which aspects of this agreement could perhaps best be realized in a broader Nordic context.

The two prime ministers have already agreed to meet again to discuss the agreement during the Nordic prime ministers' meeting at the end of May.

POLL SHOWS GOVERNMENT WOULD LOSE ELECTIONS

NC031525 Paris AFP in English 1429 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Stockholm, 3 May (AFP)--A public opinion poll published here today showed that if an election were held now, the opposition Socialist and Communist parties would defeat the currently ruling center-right coalition.

According to the monthly sounding of the SIFO [Swedish Institute for Opinion Research] polling organization, the opposition parties are favored by 54.5 percent of the people questioned, while the ruling coalition has the backing of 43.5 percent. Two percent favored parties not represented in the Swedish parliament.

Former premier Olof Palme's Social Democrats received the support of 48.5 percent of those polled, a drop of 1.5 percentage points from their standing the previous month. However, the Communists picked up the 1.5 points. The last elections were in 1979.

MITSOTAKIS REPLIES TO TURKMEN ALLEGATIONS

NC011924 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 1 May 81

[Text] Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis arrived in Rome this morning to participate in the foreign ministers' conference of NATO member countries. During this stay in the Italian capital, Mitsotakis will meet with the U.S. secretary of state and the Turkish foreign minister and with counterparts from other countries of the Atlantic alliance.

Referring to statements made yesterday by Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen to ANATOLIA NEWS AGENCY before his departure for Rome, Mitsotakis said the following: The Greek Government is exerting consistent efforts for the consolidation of an atmosphere of trust in relations between the two countries and for the peaceful solution of Greek-Turkish problems, and Turkmen's claim of unfulfilled promises on our part surprises me. Such promises were never given. The Greek Government has manifested its devotion to the Greek-Turkish dialogue even recently when, despite the massive violation of Greek airspace by Turkish military planes, it avoided interposing obstacles to the advancement of the dialogue.

On the contrary, the Turkish side raises problems for the Greek Government through the unjustified furor it creates over Armenian demonstrations in Greece which were of the usual extent and did not surpass similar demonstrations in other countries, Greece does not consider Turkey a threat as Turkmen says. Greece considers that a balance of forces contributes to the maintenance of peace and security, and that it is to everybody's interest to implement the maintenance of the balance of forces both on an international and regional scale.

Since this principle is generally accepted, why should it not be valid in our area too? Finally, it is a fact that the Greek Government acts within the framework of the procedures envisaged by the country's democratic regime and the upcoming elections in no way impede the government from consistently defining and implementing its foreign policy.

Comments on Bases Talks

NC11954 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 1 May 81

[Excerpts] Foreign Minister Mitsotakis arrived in Rome today to participate in the foreign ministers' meeting of NATO member countries. Also during his stay in the Italian capital, Mitsotakis will meet with the U.S. secretary of state and with the Turkish foreign minister and with his counterparts of other countries in the Atlantic alliance.

Replying to a question by a correspondent of ERT [Greek Radio Television] on his trip and program, the foreign minister said:

[Begin recording] Indeed I have before me a rather long trip. My first stop will be Rome, where I am going to participate in the spring meeting of the foreign ministers of the Atlantic alliance but where, at the same time, I will have the opportunity to meet, within the framework of the continuing Greek-Turkish dialogue, my Turkish countrpart, Turkmen, and where also a significant meeting has been planned, a working luncheon on Sunday noon with U.S. Secretary of State Haig, a meeting that will afford me the opportunity to discuss the issue of the U.S. bases agreement.

Question: Mr Minister, regarding your meeting with the Turkish foreign minister: Given current facts are you optimistic concerning the results of the talks you will have with him?

Answer: I will reply that I am neither optimistic nor pessimistic. We revived this dialogue [with Turkey] a year ago when I visited Ankara.

It is certain that we have not resolved the issues, but we have achieved an improvement in the atmosphere of relations between the two countries. Recently, some events occurred which caused deterioration in the good atmosphere we had achieved, events for which Greece is not to blame. In any case, I am going determined to continue the dialogue provided a corresponding good will exists on the other side. When I meet Mr Turkman, I will tell you whether I am optimistic or pessimistic.

Question: Mr Minister, will you allow us one more question? At first you referred to your meeting with Mr Haig and to the bases issue. What is precisely going on regarding this issue? I beg you, tell us.

Answer: Negotiations on the bases have been conducted for some time. These negotiations have progressed sufficiently at the departmental level. The ground has been sufficiently at the departmental level. The ground has been sufficiently at the departmental level. The ground has been sufficiently cleared. However, some issues that are significant for us have been noted, issues on which no approach of viewpoints has taken place. There are some issues on which Greece is firm. They are nonnegotiable issues like, for instance, the issue of the Greek identity of the bases, the issue of the balance of forces in our area and some other issues. My meeting with the U.S. secretary of state in this sense will be critical, because, of course, the margin of time we have, as we have repeatedly stated, is not great, because the Chamber will close, after the expiration of a short time, for the summer vacation. Therefore, if the agreement on the bases is to be passed by the Chamber's plenary session, it must be ready soon. My meeting with Haig will prove whether this agreement will be advanced or whether negotiations will continue after the elections. [end recording]

STATEMENT ISSUED ON VISIT BY IRAQ'S HAMMADI

NC021455 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 0400 GMT 2 May 81

[Text] The results of the talks that Iraqi Foreign Minister Sa'dun Hammadi had in our country during his 2-day stay in Athens were satisfactory.

In a statement issued at the conclusion of his visit, it was pointed out that Greece and Iraq expressed the wish to continue strengthening their relations in the spirit of the ties that bind the two countries and their peoples.

Sa'dun Hammadi was received by President Karamanlis and Prime Minister Rallis. He also had talks with Foreign Affairs Minister Mitsotakis, Industry and Energy Minister Manos, Commerce Minister Kalantzakos and Minister Without Portfolio Dhimas.

During the talks Hammadi held with Mitsotakis, the two ministers examined bilateral relations and the recent talks on the Cyprus issue as well as international issues, particularly the Middle East issue, the Israeli-Arab dialogue and the Iraq-Iran conflict. The two sides expressed satisfaction over the outcome of the talks as well as the conviction that these talks will boost relations.

The Iraqi minister invited Mitsotakis to visit his country. The dates will be fixed later through diplomatic channels.

AKROPOLIS ON EXTENSION OF TERRITORIAL WATERS

NC031856 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 3 May 81 p 6

[Article by Pavlos Kamvisis: "Vainly Ankara Toils for the 6 Miles..."]

[Text] For reasons that require understanding, all officials and all spokesmen are keeping silent. They are avoiding clear and open statements on what is happening and what they are thinking--that Greek-Turkish relations are at a dangerous point and that perhaps Ankara is engineering an open crisis.

Truly with skillful diplomatic expressions, with obvious vagaries and vague statements, the responsible people are trying to avoid publicly commenting on the core of the problem and even speculating on possible developments and redefining the framework within which any Greek reaction will take place.

Events, however, have their own voice, which cannot be taught or kept silent. They speak by themselves, and what events are currently saying is that which officials are refusing to declare.

Events, therefore, are saying that Ankara: first, is escalating its provocations against Greece; second, is renewing its claims against Greece; third, is now undisguisedly "hardening" its position.

More specifically, all authoritative diplomatic observers have ascertained that in this period Ankara is focusing its frontal efforts on principally one goal--reducing Greek airspace in the Aegean.

Turkey has already advanced its policy and transferred its tactics to tangible manifestations; that is, while Ankara had previously confined its challenge of the 10-mile zone to the political and diplomatic field where it is seeking the conclusion of an "agreement" (that we reduce our national airspace to 6 miles), this challenge has now become practical. Ankara is attempting to create a new de facto situation in the issue, and the fact that in its reply to the Greek demarche over the violations of 8 April it "accepted for discussion" and "possible expression of an apology" only the violations inside 6 miles is proof of this. Ankara now states that is considers legal only a 6-mile limit.

The argument Ankara is putting forward to support its behavior is essentially the following: since Greek territorial waters extend 6 miles, our national airspace should also extend 6 miles. This--claim the Turks--is valid internationally.

They also add that, almost for 15 years now, Greece has accepted that during NATO exercises the 6-mile limit is valid, not the 10-mile limit.

Of course, all these points are accurate. But in no case are they subject to the interpretations Ankara is trying to give them, and in no case is it possible to use Greece's gestures of good will as a "platform" for raising claims against it. All authoritative and well-informed diplomatic observers stress that this is precisely what Ankara is doing. Turkey is using Greece's friendly gestures to the West and to its neighbors (that is, toward Turkey) to lay the foundations for its nonexistent rights in the Aegean, because--the same circles add--both the 10-mile limit and the case of the NATO exercises constitute friendly gestures by the Greek Government. They are not concessions.

This can be proved by examining two very simple arguments: The first: Yes, there is a difference between the territorial waters limit (which is 6 miles) and the airspace limit (which is 10 miles). But this does not imply "greediness" or "arbitrariness" on the part of Greece as far as the airspace is concerned. It shows that Greece is prepared to provide a service to its neighbors in its territorial waters; that is, in simple terms, that if tomorrow Greece decided to extend its territorial waters to 10 or 12 miles--Greece has a right to do so--would the current Turkish argument regarding a difference between the 10-mile airspace and the 6-mile territorial waters stand to reason?

The second: Yes, we have facilitated the NATO exercises. But this does not mean that we have accepted a writ by Ankara on our sovereign rights. Consequently, henceforth the facility toward NATO will not be valid.

One may now believe that difficulties will be created for NATO. Perhaps, or, if you want, certainly, but this will be a NATO problem. The alliance should make it clear to Ankara that it is not possible to use Greece's friendly gestures as arguments for claims against it.

If the alliance does not do this, then a problem will be created that will concern the entire structure of the West's defenses in the explosive area of the eastern Mediterranean. Of course--it is being stressed--the problem will also concern Greece, but Greece will not be the one to suffer most.

In conclusion--stress the authoritative observers--in view of today's (this evening, in Rome) meeting of Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis with his Turkish counterpart Turkmen, all interested parties should know that:

Greek airspace is not negotiable. The 10-mile limit is in force and will remain in force. If the exertion of pressure continues--regardless of origin--Greece has the option of fixing a 10- or 12-mile limit for its territorial waters. This constitutes Greece's own sovereign right, from which it has not resigned nor does it intend to resign. Thus, the "argument" of the difference between the 6 and 10 miles is eliminated.

Of course, any threats that "should Greece extend its territorial waters, this will mean war" do not intimidate Greece because it knows--as everyone does--that once you succumb to the intimidation of a blackmailer, from that moment on you are at his mercy. However, the Greek people and the Greek nation have learned not to succumb to blackmail. The Greek nation proved this when other people were "fortifying themselves" behind suitable neutralities... This--stress all responsible officials--is currently much more valid when peace's friend, the balance of forces, has not been upset...

I KATHIMERINI ON NEED FOR DIALOGUE WITH TURKEY

NC022148 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 2 May 81 p 5

[Editorial: "Chronic Crisis..."]

[Text] The Turkish Foreign Ministry's well-known announcement last Wednesday somewhat "deescalates" the tension that had been created in Greek-Turkish relations--or rather the aggravation of the chronic crisis in these relations--but leaves unchanged the essence of the entire problem and situation.

We recall that the tension was created by a series of Turkish activities in the last 3 weeks of April. This began with the well-known violations of Greek airspace by Turkish military aircraft on 8 April.

The series continued with the unacceptable content and tone of demarches on the Armenian demonstrations, and it peaked with last Monday's announcement on the cancellation of the meeting of the two foreign ministries' secretaries general which had been planned for 30 April, something that was tantamount to the suspension of the Greek-Turkish dialogue. Relations between the two countries thus reached a critical point.

Two days later, Ankara attempted a "turn" designed to "deescalate" the tension. The Turkish Foreign Ministry announced that the "political dialogue between the two countries would continue in accordance with the predetermined method" and that the two foriegn ministers would meet and have talks in Rome during the meeting of the Atlantic alliance's council. However, the cancellation of the secretaries general's meeting stands and no mention has been made of a resumption of the dialogue at the departmental level...

At the risk of becoming tiresome, we shall repeat that all these alternations between tension and "detente" are tactics and circumstantial expediencies of the Turkish side and leave untouched and unchanged the essence of the crisis in relations between the two countries. This crisis centers on Ankara's coveting Greek areas (not to mention Cyprus) through specific (and sometimes practical) contestations of our country's sovereign rights, which are based on international law and the conventional status of the entire Aegean area.

These designs constitute an organized part of Turkey's complex of permanent aims and "national goals"--beyond and regardless of maneuvers and the faces of the agents or holders of power in Ankara, even lessened when detente is noted to a certain degree in the atmosphere of Greek-Turkish relations--because they depend on an entire correlation of forces and an entire complex of factors, objective and subjective, from 1974 onward.

As long as this correlation and this complex--which includes the position of some of this world's powerful on whom Turkey depends, positively or negatively--do not change, the generative Turkish designs of the now chronic crisis will not be eliminated. In these circumstances, a solution should not be expected from a Greek-Turkish dialogue from which, after all, nothing substantive or tangible has emanated thus far.

Consequently, what reason is there for a dialogue, and why do its continuation and the suspense around it acquire such significance? As we have already explained, the dialogue is like an end in itself (as it is in Cyprus), and its existence in itself keeps the crisis from reaching the point of explosion. Its use--at least for the time being--lies solely in this. However, restraining and containing the tension is not insignificant and for this reason the Greek Government--most correctly--refuses to be unnerved and swept into "escalation" the tension, created by the provocativeness of the attitude of certain activities by Ankara, but remains firm in the defense of Hellenism's acquired rights and vital interests. Quite correctly, it leaves the initiative and the responsibility for "escalating" the crisis and its possibly unforeseen and terrible (for all) consequences to the other side.

Quite correctly, also, it adheres to the current priority of dangers and similar needs faced by Hellenism. If last month's developments have shown anything, it is the immutability of the other side's intentions and aims, which determine the priorities we mentioned, despite any unfounded recommendations or "assessments" by certain do-gooders to the contrary....

MESIMVRINI: WESTERN HYPOCRISY TOWARD TURKEY

NC030738 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 2 May 81 p 5

["The Diary of Political Developments" column by P. Lambrias: "Seriously, do they want us to believe that they seriously believe the Turks?"]

[Text] This column had never shared the widely disseminated (but always inadmissible) viewpoint that in foreign policy problems it is easier to come to an understanding with military leaders who have cloaked themselves with political power. Unfortunately, its conviction to the contrary has been confirmed.

Indeed, in this instance the expectation had existed--particularly based on our bitter experience both with "socialist" Ecevit and "popular" Demirel--that the generals who had abolished democratic formalities in Turkey would be more agreeable (more "credible negotiations" according to the diplomatic terminology) than the vote-seeking politicians because, being rid of the temptation to be demagogic and the reactions of irritable public opinion, they would be able to look more coolly, more realistically, at Greek-Turkish differences and on their part in contributing acceptable proposals to the erratic dialogue between the two countries.

Thus far, such an expectation has not been strengthened with truly and steadfastly constructive indications. On the contrary, it can be said that even those points in which Ankara wanted to appear concessive fell within a predetermined plan of maneuvers with specific and firm aims, and not within a sincere intention for negotiation based on the principles of good faith and the needs of good neighborliness.

For instance, the Turkish military government's conciliatory nature on the issue of Greece's return to NATO can be interpreted as a move that had aimed at convincing the members of the Atlantic alliance, and Europe more specifically, of the law abiding and cooperative nature of the regime that was imposed through a coup. Naturally they achieved this and immediately began, through the method of objections of a "technical nature," to interject obstacles to the entrusting of responsibilities that belonged to Greece.

These tactics, which because of the constant alternation of intransigence and eagerness bring to mind a Swedish sauna, Ankara implements specifically in bilateral issues. Regardless of the patience and understanding that the Greek side may have, it would be difficult now not to suspect—after so many months--that Turkey's current rulers are trying by all means to gain time and also to maintain the deceitful picture of always being agreeable and cooperative.

It is almost tragicomical that history, even recent history, teaches nothing. Alas, not so many years have passed for international organizations, the Council of Europe of Diplomatic Services to have forgotten the assurances the Greek junta's foreign minister was giving--with tearful persuasion--concerning the junta's "honest intention" to bring back democratic normality as soon as possible. Is it permissible to have forgotten the constantly postponed timetables of the dictators, together with their contradictory bragging, that they had saved the country from disaster and had opened new and splendid prospects for it? Does anybody remember the furious denials or sorrowful excuses they were giving when they were denounced by international organizations for the blatant violation of human rights, for the revolting tortures of detainees and for the terrorist operation of the courts?

All these things are currently being repeated in Turkey, one by one, as if one junta were the carbon copy of the other. In his effort to convince the Council of Europe that he is seriously ... thinking of restoring the parliamentary regime, General Evren is copying the comic device of Papadhopoulos' "advisory" [parliament] (with 1/3 of the planned constitutent assembly appointed by the military leadership and the exclusion of all members of the parliament that was dissolved by a coup as candidates!....)

Yet there are politicians and diplomats and officials of democratic countries who claim that they believe these transparent and comical assurances, and feign deafness to reports that military prosecutors are demanding the death penalty for hundreds of opponents of this regime!....

Gullibility cannot be an explanation of the phenomenon; only hypocrisy logically explains this Western stance toward Ankara. And it is precisely on this stance that Ankara also bases its own stance toward the West. Unfortunately, this complex of sullen interests, which most hypocritically they want to cover with a veneer of naivete, provides very few hopes that any progress will take place at the "continuation of the dialogue" in Rome, especially under the eyes of the U.S. secretary of state, General Haig.

BRIEFS

ENVOYS DEPART--Danish Ambassador to Ankara Lorenz Patersen and Venezuelan Ambassador to Ankara Francisco Quijada Gonzalez were received separately by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren today. The ambassadors paid a farewell visit to General Evren as they have been appointed to new posts. [Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 1 May 81 TA]

TURKMEN DEPARTS FOR NATO MEETING IN ITALY

TA020830 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0800 GMT 2 May 81

[Text] Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has left for Italy to attend the NATO ministerial council meeting to be held in Rome on 4 and 5 May. In a statement at Esenboga Airport, Turkmen said that primarily East-West relations, arms control in Europe, the Middle East problem and developments concerning the European Security and Cooperation Conference will be reviewed during the meetings in Rome. Noting that cooperation among member countries will also be discussed at the meetings, Turkmen added that aid to Turkey will also be brought up. Turkmen pointed out that he will also hold bilateral talks with Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, the U.S. secretary of state and the foreign ministers of The Netherlands, Britain and the FRG.

GUNAYDIN: TURKMEN DISCUSSES RELATIONS WITH GREECE

NC040958 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 1 May 81 p 1, 4

[Ahmet Uran Baran report from Ankara]

[Text] In a special statement made to GUNAYDIN, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said: "I believe that the general elections to be held in Greece this year will make progress in the talks between the two countries difficult."

Pointing out that Greece frequently considers Turkey as a threat, Turkmen added: "Under these conditions, it is impossible for Turkey and Greece to cooperate in NATO, particularly within the military integration."

Turkmen stated that in essence there is no change in Turkey's policy toward Greece, but, referring to the Armenian activities in Greece, he added: "If Athens is not careful, Turkish-Greek relations may be disrupted."

In his statement to GUNAYDIN in Ankara, Foreign Minister Turkmen stated that Turkish-Greek relations were not always as good as they should be and that these relations frequently went through critical periods. He then added: "Ankara cannot be blamed for this situation." He further said that despite this, Ankara is in favor of the continuation of the dialogue between the two countries. Turkmen continued: "Greece's views on the Aegean airspace and the continental shelf issues differ from ours. However, there is no change in the legal views put forward by Turkey," adding that Turkey had not accepted suggestions made by Greece on the airspace and the continental shelf issues.

Stating that he did not doubt the good intentions of the Greek statesmen when they say they wish to establish good neighborly relations with Turkey, Turkmen added: "The difference between what they say and what they do is damaging the effort to establish an atmosphere of mutual confidence."

Responding to a question, Turkmen stated that Greece's demand that, for the sake of a balance of power in the Aegean, the United States and Germany provide Turkey and Greece with arms in the ratio of 7:10 and 3:5 respectively, has been rejected. He added: "Neither the United States nor Germany have accepted such a ratio and such a balance. The disclosures made by the U.S. administration are known. Germany, on the other hand, extended substantial credits to Turkey last year. "Although no such thing as ratio and balance exist, Greece interferes in Turkey's relations with third countries, which amounts to insisting on the existence of something which is actually nonexistent."

When asked whether a joint statement would be issued after his talks with Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis on 3 and 4 May on progress which the secretaries general and the experts have made concerning "the airspace and flight corridors," Turkmen said this would be determined after his meeting with the Greek foreign minister.

Reiterating his belief that because of the general elections in Greece this year, progress in the bilateral talks would be difficult this summer, the Turkish foreign minister added that the anti-Turkey activities of certain Greeks in various European institutions will not create a difficult situation for Turkey. Neither will they result in the ousting of Turkey from Europe. Turkmen went on: "Probably through the efforts of the Greek parliamentarians a minority decision was taken against Turkey in the European Communist Parliament, of which Turkey is not a member. There are, though, positive efforts in the Council of Europe of which Turkey is a member. In fact, Turkey has fully and clearly explained its position. It is exerting great efforts to remove obstacles which damage democracy and human rights. It has already proclaimed its intention to return to democracy as soon as practicable. Under these circumstances, ousting Turkey from Europe at a time when great efforts are being made to ensure a return to democracy as rapidly as possible, is out of the question."

MESSAGE SENT TO SOVIETS ON PEACE PROPOSALS

TA012027 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 1 May 81

[Text] Today, an answer was given to the message sent to the Turkish Government in connection with the decisions adopted and proposals posted during the 26th Congress of the CPSU. The Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General made the following announcement on the issue: A memorandum presented by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen to the Soviet ambassador today says that Turkey attaches great importance to the continuation of consultations and talks aimed at strengthening peace and security and at limiting the arms race. The memorandum adds that the actual implementation--through positive acts--of the desire shown by all countries in relation to peace and stability would be the most effective factor for the establishment of an atmosphere of trust which is necessary to maintain peace.

The message sent by President of the Soviet Presidium Brezhnev on the decisions and proposals of the 26th Congress of the CPSU had been given to Head of State Gen Kenan Evren by the Soviet ambassador to Ankara on 12 March.

ROMANIAN CHIEF OF STAFF ENDS VISIT, DEPARTS

TA011706 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 1 May 81

[Text] Romanian Chief of the General Staff Maj Gen Eral Vasile Milea departed Turkey today after concluding his contacts. Major General Milea was in Turkey as the official guest of the Turkish General Staff. The visiting chief of the General Staff visited Istanbul and Antalya after completing his talks in Ankara. Subjects of interest to the armed forces of the two countries were taken up during these talks.

COUNCIL RATIFIES TOURISM PROTOCOL WITH JORDAN

TA021512 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1432 GMT 2 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 2 May (AA)--The annex protocol between Turkey and Jordan related to cooperation in the field of tourism was approved by the Council of Ministers. The notice of approval appeared in Saturday's Official Gazette.

Under the protocol, which was signed in Amman on January 10, 1981, Turkey and Jordan will exert efforts to promote land and air transportation between their two countries. Jordanian hoteliers will be given facilities for on-the-job training in Turkey, and the Jordanian Government will consider Turkish tourism projects and will seek Arab financial backing for them.

NATO COMMANDER DEPARTS AFTER TALKS WITH OFFICIALS

TA011557 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1549 GMT 1 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 1 May (AA)--Admiral William Crowe, commander-in-chief of NATO Forces for Southern Europe, left Turkey Friday. After meeting Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Ankara in the morning, Admiral Crowe also called on Secretary General of the National Security Council Gen Haydar Saltik and Deputy Chief of the General Staff Gen Necdet Oztorun.

BANK TO ADJUST FOREIGN CURRENCY RATES DAILY

TA010628 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] It has been announced that the Central Bank of the Turkish Republic will determine foreign currency exchange rates and announce them daily. According to a statement issued by the Central Bank, the decision aims at immediately reflecting the foreign currency exchange rates changes that occur in monetary markets and in the economy. According to the statement, the Finance, Ministry and the Monetary Credit Council have authorized the Central Bank to determine the foreign currency exchange rates in accordance with changes in the monetary markets. The value of the Turkish lira against various foreign currencies has been redetermined in accordance with the new regulations that will go into effect as of tomorrow. According to the Turkish Central Bank statement, the Turkish lira was devalued by .1 to 2 percent against various foreign currencies and revalued by .1 to 1.1 percent against others. The value of the Turkish lira against the Belgian franc has remained the same. According to the new adjustments, U.S. dollar that could be purchased at 98.20 liras is now worth 99.80 liras and an FRG mark that was worth 45.35 is now worth 45.05 liras. As of tomorrow a British pound will be worth 213.17 liras. The British pound was worth 213.39 liras. The rates of exchange for other currencies will be as follows: 114.72 liras for an Austrian dollar, 6.37 liras for an Austrian schilling, 14.30 liras for a Danish krone, 19 liras for a French franc, 40.54 liras for a Dutch florin, 20.98 liras for a Swedish krona, 49.34 liras for a Swiss franc, 9.05 liras for 100 Italian liras, 83.37 liras for a Canadian dollar, 361.46 liras for a Kuwaiti dinar, 17.99 liras for a Norwegian krone, 29.70 liras for a Saudi riyal and 46.39 liras for 100 Japanese yen.

Bank Official Comments

TA011620 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1535 GMT 1 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 1 May (AA)--Turkey's foreign exchange reserves had reached 1.2 million dollars, including 154 million dollars based on gold reserves, President Osman Siklar of the Central Bank announced Friday at a press conference. Turkey's exports this year were breaking a record, with slightly over half in manufactured goods, and around 40 percent in crops. Exports in 1980 had reached 2.9 billion dollars, which constituted a 28 percent increase over 1979. He expected 1981 exports to top the 4 billion dollar mark.

Remittances by Turkish workers abroad had also reached 2 billion dollars in 1980, he said.

Exchange Rates

Siklar admitted despite frequent exchange rate adjustments in the last years, the Central Bank had been unable to prevent the entry into Turkey of "soft" currencies, hence the decision to free the Turkish lira to float starting today, with exchange rates fixed and announced on a daily basis.

A press release at closing time each day would list the rates for the next day, he explained, with the national banks, radio and TV, and the post office helping out to inform the public.

Remittances by Workers Abroad

Officials of the Central Bank would be touring Federal Germany and Holland in order to establish better dialogue with Turkish workers abroad, Siklar also announced.

Interest rates on foreign exchange deposit accounts based on letters of credit, a deposit system installed in 1976, had been raised by 3 points, he added, in order to make them competitive with interests paid by European banks.

Siklar also summed up recent measures taken by the government and the Central Bank to ease export credits and special medium-term credits.

ECEVIT EDITORIAL WARNS OF 'BIG INTERESTS' AIMS

NC011751 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 25 Apr 81 pp 11, 12

[Editorial by Bulent Ecevit: "How Democracy Was Caused To Collapse and How It Is Now Being Obstructed"]

[Excerpts] If we fail to return to true democracy in the period we are going through now, responsibility for this failure will rest on certain civilians rather than on the military administration.

These people are those who are doing everything in their power to keep the military administration remote from the path of democracy and to secure the firm establishment of a regime in Turkey which will ensure the domination of certain big interests.

These people are those who are engaged in preparing the ground for a different kind of regime in the name of "democracy." Under the pretense of helping the administration, they are trying to mislead the administration.

These people are those who want others gagged, because they do not think as they do, while they themselves choose to talk as much as they like.

These people are those who struggle to secure the limitation of the rights of the people and the political parties to participate in the administration. They want to see the trade unions either suspended or rendered ineffective, so that the political arena is left to big capitalist circles and their hirelings.

It is such people who compel the administration to take sides. It is such people who provoke the further limitation of the border of freedom. It is such people who block the way to democracy.

If they receive a reply to the lies they tell or to the unjust accusations they make in their paper, they refer it to the martial law authorities and incite them to counter it. They thus push the responsibility onto the shoulders of the soldiers. They compel the martial law authorities to reluctantly enforce censorship and thus besmirch the honor of journalism.

Their first target is the constituent assembly. In the form being contemplated at present it is obvious that the constituent assembly will have no powers at all... A consultative organ will be set up which will be called "the constituent assembly." But some circles consider even this much as too much...they are worried lest public opinion be evenly reflected even in that powerless consultative organ. To counter this, they act as "wire-pullers" to the administration.

This "constituent assembly" will not be elected by the votes of the people. The most they will do is to create "electoral councils." But these enemies of democracy are scared even of the "electoral councils." They suggest that those who will enter the "constituent assembly" should be specified by the military administration. They do not at all consent to political parties being represented in the "constituent assembly." They say that parties should not be represented, but then they add that "experienced" and "efficient" party members should be there. They are compelling the administration to take sides not only between parties and different views but even within the political parties themselves. They are trying to use the strength of the army "to reform" those parties which they consider as "having gone astray."

They attempted similar intrigues on 12 March [when Demirel and his government were compelled to resign] but their plans boomeranged. This time they want to tread on firmer ground.

If the constituent assembly is formed on the strength of such suggestions, it will not be convincing even as a consultative organ. The 1961 constitution is still in force, even if only in form, at least until a new one is drafted. A referendum held without all fellow countrymen being given an equal chance to express their views will not be convincing either.

Those who long for an extreme dictatorial regime which would have the appearance of democracy but which would, in reality, be a mere whitewash, will say and write whatever they like. Those who have supported and incited a section of the terrorists over the years, will continue to defend them freely. They will try to exercise moral pressure even on the martial law courts where they are being tried. The voices of those who long for true democracy will be throttled. A referendum carried out under these conditions will not reflect true public opinion.

Some foreigners refer to 12 September as a "coup." But democracy in our country has collapsed not through a "coup" but through the treachery of some circles against the regime. This was the treachery of those who, for years, argued that "Turkey cannot be ruled by this constitution" and who created crises in our country to prove their argument that the Turkish people do not deserve that much democracy. This was the treachery of those who divided the nation into fronts and set one side against the other. This was the treachery of those who hurled our democracy into an alley and caused it to collapse to prove their argument. This was the treachery of those who rejected all the proposals made to those who appealed for cooperation in an effort to resolve the crises and save our state and democracy within the framework of its rules and institutions.

Our democracy which has been destroyed by the treachery of such people, is now being obstructed by the treachery of the same people. The snares which are being prepared by these treacherous people with the blessing of big capitalists are meant for our future. A nation which has been used to democracy for over 30 years is now being cast into a narrow mold. But this nation will not fit into that mold. When it recovers from the shock of terrorism, the Turkish people will shake themselves out of this mold and, this time, they will achieve a democracy which will not come from the top but which will shoot up from the ground--a democracy which will be more realistic and healthy than before.

As I have said before, if the soil is fertile, even thin grasses and flowers can spring even through concrete rocks. If this nation possesses as much desire and will as those thin grasses and flowers do, when the time comes, no intrigues, no conspiracy and no treachery will be able to obstruct the rebirth of democracy. Democracy can be impeded only if this desire and will of the people is extinguished. This is what certain circles are trying to do now.

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 086 5 May 1981

NATO

NATO Foreign Ministers Meeting Continues C 1
U.S. Agrees To Talk With USSR C 1
Europe Welcomes U.S. Decision C 1
Luns, Turkmen Address Meeting C 1

AUSTRIA

Kreisky To Leave for 3-Day Visit to Saudi Arabia [WIENER ZEITUNG 5 May] E 1
PRC Parliamentarian Delegation To Visit 8-14 May [WIENER ZEITUNG 5 May] E 1
Poland To Pay Only 10 Percent of Interest Due [WIENER ZEITUNG 30 Apr] E 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Schmidt Emphasizes Efforts for East-West Talks J 1
Paper Tells U.S. To Be Clear on Negotiations [FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU 4 May] J 1
Genscher Discusses Arms Issue, Coalition Matters J 2
Spokesmen, Papers Reject Begin Criticism of Schmidt J 4
FDP's Moellemann J 4
Government's Becker J 5
Press Review J 5
Schmidt Comments on Talks With Portuguese President J 6
Bangladesh President Arrives on 5-Day State Visit J 6
Talks With Carstens J 7
Cuban Vice Minister Labels FRG Visit 'Positive' [Havana] J 7
Call for Reviews of SPD NATO Decision Criticized J 7
Press Comment J 8

ITALY & THE VATICAN

PCI's Berlinguer Addresses PSI Party Congress [L'UNITA 24 Apr] L 1
PCI Aide Describes U.S. Visit, Overtures to PSI [LA REPUBBLICA 19-20 Apr] L 4

SPAIN

General, Policeman Gunned Down in Madrid N 1
GRAPO Responsible for Killings N 1
ETA Leader Involved N 1
Leaders Express Condolences N 2
PSOE To Push for Broad Majority Government [LA VANGUARDIA 28 Apr] N 2
Saudi Arabia's King Khalid To Visit 15-28 June N 3

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

Greenland To Hold Referendum on EEC Membership [AKTUELT 1 May] P 1

FINLAND

Prime Minister Koivisto on Treaty With USSR [HUFVUDSTADSBLADET 3 May] P 2

SWEDEN

MSP Leaves Government, Urges Falldin Resignation P 2
Further Details P 2
Defense Committee Chairman Nordbeck Resigns [SVENKSA DAGBLADET 30 Apr] P 2
GDR's Fischer Arrives in Stockholm for Visit [East Berlin ADN] P 3
Fischer, Ullsten Hold Talks P 3
Further Reportage P 4
USSR Scientists Interested in Swedish Productivity [AFTENPOSTEN 28 Apr] P 5

UNITED KINGDOM

Thatcher Against Increased Immigration Quotas [DAILY TELEGRAPH 4 May] Q 1
TELEGRAPH: IRA Exploitation of Strike Fails [2 May] Q 1
Briefs: UK-GDR Cooperation Agreement [ADN] Q 2

CYPRUS

President Kiprianou Emphasizes U.S. Role in Cyprus R 1
Kiprianou Approves Appointment of Envoy to PRC R 1
Foreign Minister Returns From Oman, UAE Visits R 1
Minister of Finance Returns From Havana Meeting R 1
National Guard Commander Inaugurates Arms Plant [ELEVTHERI KIPROS 3 May] R 2
Denktas Warns of AKEL Influence on Kiprianou [GUNAYDIN 29 Apr] R 2
Denktas Reiterates Necessity for Bizonal Solution [Bayrak Radio] R 2
Bayrak Radio Limits Broadcasts Because of Strike [Bayrak Radio] R 3
Briefs: No Raif Denktas Party R 3

GREECE

Rallis Recalls Mitsotakis to Athens for Talks S 1
Papandreou Speaks on Return From Talks in Bulgaria S 1

NATO FOREIGN MINISTERS MEETING CONTINUES

U.S. Agrees to Talks With USSR

LD041548 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] The negotiations between the United States and the USSR on Eurostrategic armaments will begin at the end of the year. This was stated in Rome a short while ago by Jean Francois-Poncet following the restricted session of the NATO ministers. The French minister of foreign affairs pointed out that the American secretary of state, Alexander Haig, indicated that these negotiations would, of course, be preceded by exploratory talks between the Americans and the Soviets.

Europe Welcomes U.S. Decision

LD042038 Hamburg DPA in German 1802 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] Rome, 4 May (DPA)--According to Federal Government spokesman Lothar Ruehl, the European partners at the NATO conference in Rome have welcomed the U.S. readiness to resume arms control negotiations with Moscow this year. He said that they welcome the fact that the U.S. administration, after the conclusion of its review of its arms control policy, wants to resume negotiations with the Soviet Union on the limitation of ICBMs (SALT talks).

According to Ruehl, in its final communique tomorrow, the NATO conference will reaffirm NATO's dual decision of December 1979 with its provision for parallel arms control negotiations and NATO counterarming. He said that the U.S. intention to resume the SALT process at the appropriate time will also be reaffirmed.

Luns, Turkmen Address Meeting

TA042048 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 4 May 81

[Excerpt] NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns has said that support for Turkey is very important from the viewpoint of the future and strength of the NATO alliance. Speaking at the NATO ministerial council meeting that began in Rome today, Luns submitted his report in connection with aid extended to Turkey, Portugal and Greece. Altan Asar and Ali Kirca from the Turkish Radio and Television news center report Luns as having said that the economic aid extended to Turkey has begun to yield results. Luns asked that this aid continue for a while longer.

Speaking after Luns, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said that the economic stability program being implemented in Turkey has begun to yield results and that the rate of inflation has been reduced. Turkmen added that, however, Turkey needs aid for another 4 to 5 years. He further called on NATO countries within the OECD to show understanding. Turkmen recalled that the increasing Soviet threat in the region and the importance attached to the strength of Turkey necessitated this aid.

KREISKY TO LEAVE FOR 3-DAY VISIT TO SAUDI ARABIA

AU051050 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 5 May 81 pp 1, 3

[Summary] Chancellor Kreisky, accompanied by his wife Vera, will leave today at 0935 on a special Austrian Airlines plane for a 3-day official visit to Saudi Arabia. After a stop in Larnaka, Cyprus, the chancellor is due to arrive in Riyadh at 1700 local time. He will be met at the airport by the deputy prime minister, Crown Prince Fahd ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz, and attend a dinner given in his honor by King Khalid ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz. Economic and political talks are scheduled for all day Wednesday, to be followed by a dinner given for Chancellor Kreisky and the Austrian delegation by Crown Prince Fahd. The return flight is scheduled for Thursday at 0900, arriving in Vienna at 1730.

In view of the fact that the chancellor's trip will be focused on more intensive economic cooperation between the two countries and on several pending Austrian projects, the delegation also includes 13 Austrian business representatives in addition to the official delegation members, among them Socialist Parliamentary Deputy Karl Blecha, Freedom Party Deputy Helmuth Josseck, and Otto Gatscha, head of the chancellery's Economic Coordination and Nationalized Industry Section.

PRC PARLIAMENTARIAN DELEGATION TO VISIT 8-14 MAY

AU051036 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 5 May 81 p 2

[Summary] A seven-member PRC parliamentarian delegation will arrive at Vienna-Schwechat Airport on Friday, 8 May, for a 1-week visit. The delegation members are Yang Shangkun, deputy chairman of the Standing Committee of the PRC People's Congress; Luo Qingchang and Mrs Ou Tangliang, another two members of this committee; People's Congress Deputies Wang Shouwan, Piao Weixun and Mrs Cui Jijun; and Mr Shi Guabao.

The weekend will be devoted to sightseeing in Vienna and Lower Austria, and to various receptions, including a luncheon by Foreign Minister Pahr slated for Saturday at noon. On Monday, the delegation will have talks with Nationalrat and Bundesrat deputies at the Austrian parliament in the morning, will be received in the afternoon by Chancellor Kreisky, and will attend a dinner given for them by Mayor Gratz on Monday evening. On Tuesday and Wednesday, the guests will inspect industrial enterprises including the Voest-Alpine Steel Corporation in Linz and the Chemiefaser Lenzig Corporation. Following a boat trip on the Traunsee, the delegates will return to Vienna where they will meet with the Chinese ambassador.

POLAND TO PAY ONLY 10 PERCENT OF INTEREST DUE

AU301830 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 30 Apr 81 p 7

[Summary] Poland will pay Austria this year only 10 percent of the redemption payments and interest that are due on Austrian government-guaranteed loans. For 90 percent of the amount involved--3.6 to 3.7 billion schillings--a respite has been granted until 1 January 1986. As of that date, the due payments are to be effected in eight semiannual installments. This settlement is based on the results of negotiations between representatives of Poland of 15 creditor countries in Paris, but the specific terms had to be individually arranged for each creditor country. Negotiations on the conversion of loans granted to Poland without government guarantee, for which payments in the amount of 379 million schillings are due this year, are still pending with a bank syndicate in London.

Poland's total debts to Austria amount to about 30 billion schillings, including 24 billion schillings in government-guaranteed loans. The rest are bank loans without government guarantees.

SCHMIDT EMPHASIZES EFFORTS FOR EAST-WEST TALKS

LD041240 Hamburg DPA in German 1100 GMT 4 May 81

[Excerpt] Aachen, 4 May (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has reaffirmed the Federal Government's efforts to contribute to fresh East-West talks. Speaking today at the annual meeting of the West German conference of university vice chancellors in Aachen, Schmidt stressed that even after Moscow's "rape" of Afghanistan, Bonn had run the risk of getting the Soviet Union to hold talks between the two superpowers. Schmidt also said that the Federal Government will not "give up" attempting to get the new U.S. Government to hold such talks, as promised by the previous Washington government.

The federal chancellor stressed: "Anyone not prepared to talk with others is putting himself in deadly danger."

PAPER TELLS U.S. TO BE CLEAR ON NEGOTIATIONS

DW041249 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 4 May 81 p 3

[Erich Hauser commentary: "NATO Test"]

[Text] Rome--The 2-day meeting of the foreign ministers of all 15 NATO states, which opens this Monday in Rome, will be one of the most interesting conferences in the history of the alliance. Once again, the dual decision of 12 December 1979 will be the main issue. Through that decision, the Soviet Union was offered negotiations on the nuclear medium-range arms on both sides, while, on the other hand, the United States took over technical preparations for new medium-range arms which would be deployed if need by in five West European NATO states.

All West European governments in the alliance press for the U.S. Government to resume at least preparatory talks with Moscow as soon as possible on medium-range arms, talks which were initiated last fall by the government of President Jimmy Carter. Washington, however, sees no reason to hurry. Some advisers of new U.S. President Ronald Reagan advise having no negotiations at all with Moscow before the United States has been armed more strongly. Others, such as Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, demand signs of Soviet readiness to compromise over Poland, Afghanistan or the Third World as a precondition of negotiations. Other Reagan advisers advocate negotiations on medium-range arms, while maintaining that a connection must be worked out first regarding an improvement of the SALT II treaty on Soviet and American intercontinental arms.

U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig is almost the only person in the new U.S. administration who doesn't brutally ignore West European interests in public statements. As the former NATO commander in chief in Europe, Haig knows the domestic political currents of the allies. Some diplomats are asking themselves whether an open rift would have appeared in the alliance if someone else were the U.S. secretary of state. He was the one who helped to maintain the semblance of agreement on the occasion of all visits by West European statesmen to Washington. But the influence Haig brings to bear on the Reagan government is considered not too strong.

All the statements and communiques cannot obscure the fact that the new U.S. Government sees its democratic mission totally differently than the West European governments see the task they were given by their own voters. President Reagan gained the confidence of the electorate's majority in his country by promising to make the United States the strongest power in the world again. Communism--or what the Americans consider communism--is supposed to be checked in the world.

All West European governments, even the British of the Conservative Margaret Thatcher, see matters in a more differentiated way. Most of all, they don't share the opinion that all earlier East-West negotiations have achieved no advantages for the West vis-a-vis the East bloc. In contrast to the new U.S. Government, they consider the social institutions of their states as contributions in the confrontations between social systems which are equally as important as defense expenditures--just with different nuances.

All West European governments know from historical experience that one must not press a dangerous adversary into the aggressive courage of despair. In addition, there is in all continental European nations the older generation with its experience of the suffering of World War II. It seems that due to the same experience, the Kremlin's older leadership clique wants to avoid a militant confrontation in its attempts to extend power.

The NATO foreign ministers will undoubtedly adopt a communique text obscuring the Atlantic differences of opinion. But behind closed doors, the problem will come up whether the U.S. secretary of state will be able to promise to his colleagues Washington's true readiness to negotiate with Moscow in the near future on medium-range arms on both sides. Other issues of the NATO conference will not be of a secondary nature either. There will be the Madrid CSCE conference and possibly the all-European "disarmament conference," MBFR negotiations on central European troop limitation, Poland, Afghanistan, the Middle East and the Near East.

But sooner or later, the continued existence of NATO will depend on whether Washington considers the "negotiations part" of the 12 December 1979 dual decision as a commitment vis-a-vis its allies. No doubts should be permitted to remain after the Rome meeting.

GENSCHER DISCUSSES ARMS ISSUE, COALITION MATTERS

DW041142 Saarbruecken Saarlaendischer Rundfunk Network in German 1605 GMT 2 May 81

[Correspondent Gasper interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; place not given--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] Minister Genscher, the NATO foreign ministers conference will be opening in Rome on Monday. Reportedly, the Federal Government expects signals from this conference with respect to arms limitation talks. What signals can be given anyway, seeing as NATO and the Federal Government conveyed the offer of negotiations to the Soviet Union long ago and the Americans agree on principle? Or, phrasing the question differently, do you intend to tie your U.S. counterpart down to definite schedules?

[Answer] Mr Gasper, it is our conviction that this NATO spring conference, the first in which the secretary of state of the new U.S. Government will participate, should give a signal about the unity of the Western alliance and its determination to preserve security. At the same time, this should be a signal to the Soviet Union to join the principle of moderation on all questions concerning world politics. And finally, it should be a signal indicating the West's will for arms control and disarmament--which is why the dual decision in both its elements will be reaffirmed once again. We firmly believe, furthermore, that the will should be underscored once again to open negotiations with the Soviet Union on medium-range weapons as soon as possible, negotiations which we are convinced should be conducted without any preconditions. We hope that the Soviet Union will contribute toward the constructive course of these negotiations, but above all, that it will desist from continuing to increase the threat potential by deploying additional medium-range missiles targeted on West Europe and, hence, on us as well.

[Question] You just gave me the cue of the dual decision of NATO, Mr Genscher. This is a decision which is controversial not only in the SPD, but also in your own party, the FDR. You did get the backing of the party Executive Board the other day, but your party congress in Cologne is still forthcoming. Are you sure that you will obtain a convincing majority for this dual decision and that those thereby defeated will accept the majority decision in keeping with democratic principles?

[Answer] NATO's dual decision was unanimously endorsed by the federal level FDP congress in Freiburg last year. It is part of the election program of the Free Democrats for this legislative period. This makes the position of the Free Democrats more evident than anything that is being said about it; and this is why the party chairman doesn't need anybody to look out for him. What matters instead is whether the party will remain within the continuity of its opinion-forming process. And this has been reaffirmed in the Federal Executive Board once again. No doubt, the federal-level party congress in Cologne will act along the same lines.

[Question] In a broader sense of the word, this subject also plays a role in the Berlin election campaign. Let me just remind you of the remarks by the senator for science, Gaus, which are controversial indeed. Looking at the initial reaction on your part and comparing it with the reaction of the chairman of your Bundestag faction, Mr Mischnick, a sort of discrepancy is evident.

[Answer] You couldn't be more wrong. As far as I was concerned it was superfluous for Mr Gaus, who ought to know better, to call for consultations with the GDR on questions concerning disarmament. These have been in progress for quite some time, having been made possible by my decision, to be exact. There is no need for any urging here. What concerns me more about Mr Gaus' statements is his criticism of the Federal Government's policy on Germany which we as the government represent in its entirety and which the chancellor in his state of the nation message expounded once again in an impressive way. What I mean by impressive way is not only impressive for the German public, but also, as I am perfectly aware, impressive internationally. It is generally known that the agency responsible for policy on Germany is the Chancellor's Office. I believe that anyone defining his attitude toward this policy, and even more so if that person is a member of the Berlin Senat, ought to realize that it is immensely significant for the security of Berlin, for the viability of Berlin, for the interests of Berlin that the identity of views of the Federal Government and of the Berlin Senat remain absolutely uncontested. All Senats and all Federal Governments in the past have supported this stance vigorously and in loyalty to their convictions. This should not now be upset.

[Question] You just mentioned the uniform shaping of an opinion on the part of the Federal Government, that is, the coalition government of the SPD and the FDP. On the other hand, however, you said in the Berlin election campaign that the Social Democrats are pursuing a zigzag policy. Would you be prepared to say what you have said also with regard to Bonn? Do you believe, having stated that the Berlin SPD-FDP coalition will continue to exist, that these quarrels have been eliminated?

[Answer] There was indeed reason in Berlin to remind the Social Democrats that a clear definition of position is necessary. Statements have been made to the effect that it is desirable to continue working as a minority Senat even if one did not gain a majority in the elections. The question was left open whether one should accept the support of the so-called alternative groups. The question is still open in a certain respect as to whether the SPD will be prepared to form a grand coalition with the CDU.

I believe that the Berlin voters can demand an absolutely clear decision on 10 May, which means that they must know whether they want to vote for a Vogel-Brunner Senat. Every vote for the FDP is, therefore, a vote against a minority Senat, a vote against the autocratic rule of one party and a vote for a government majority for the Vogel-Brunner Senat, a Senat which will be able to function.

I welcome very much Mayor Govel's having said on Wednesday that he wants to continue the coalition with the Free Democrats, and that he doesn't plan to continue working as a minority cabinet if no majority is achieved. I think this statement is important.

If you ask me about the government coalition in Bonn, then I must say that there is no room at all for such considerations as we have just made with regard to unclear positions in Berlin. We have worked out a good government statement. It is the basis of our cooperation. No doubts exist at all that the federal chancellor and I are determined to implement the government statement in practical policy. This implementation of the government statement in practical policy is an answer to the challenges we are facing in our country. We are firmly determined to handle the current problems with great strength and energy, acting on the basis on which we have agreed, namely, the government statement.

[Question] Mr Genscher, your predecessor in the office of party chairman, former Federal Chancellor Walter Scheel, has brought up the theses about [coalition partners] coming to have fewer and fewer things in common, a thesis he advocates over and over again. How far can you agree to that?. Are there still things you have in common? I have in mind ideas concerning the 1982 budget. How far will they last when it comes to that?

[Answer] The honorary chairman of our party, Walter Scheel, advanced this consideration many years ago, as you know. He suggested, as I did, to the FDP Federal Executive Board that it agree on reestablishing or continuing the coalition--I mean after the 5 October 1980 Bundestag elections--and, therefore, we are in full agreement. The government statement we agreed on is a solid basis for the priorities to be set with regard to the 1982 budget. If everybody holds to it, I see no problems.

[Question] One short final question. Is the SPD/FDP alliance you want to continue in Berlin a model case? I recall that you have another model case in Saarland--the FDP/CDU [coalition].

[Answer] I have never in my life used the word alliance for cooperation between two parties. Every land follows its own interests.

SPOKESMEN, PAPERS REJECT BEGIN CRITICISM OF SCHMIDT

FDP's Moellemann

LD041108 Hamburg DPA in German 0957 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 4 May (DPA)--The Free Democrats today rejected as unjustified the serious accusations made by Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin against Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. Deputy Juergen Moellemann, the FDP's spokesman on foreign security policy, stated in Bonn that the manner and content of the Israeli criticism of the federal chancellor are becoming as incomprehensible as they are hard to tolerate. Begin's "excessive criticism" and his rigid attitude toward peace efforts in the Middle East are beginning to strain the German-Israeli relationship.

On Sunday, Begin sharply attacked the chancellor because of his remarks on the Palestinians' "moral claim" to self-determination and charged him with "arrogance" and "avarice." Apart from the Palestinians' right to self-determination, Schmidt, during his visits to Riyadh and Abu Dhabi, demanded Israel's right to existence within secure and recoginized borders, PLO participation in the negotiating process and Israeli withdrawal from the areas occupied in 1967. He also called on the PLO to recognize Israel's right to exist.

Moellemann today went on to say that German Middle East policy accorded with the principles of all the EC states and was directed toward the maintenance of peace. A primary aim of German foreign policy is to promote German-Israeli friendship.

Moellemann said he hopes that level-headed forces in Israel will urge the prime minister to exercise moderation. "It is an insult to German politicians who have learned their lessons from history if, with penetrating historical comparisons, they are to be forbidden to fashion an independent foreign policy."

Government's Becker

LD041512 Hamburg DPA in German 1343 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 4 May (DPA)--Following serious accusations by Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin against Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, German-Israeli relations have entered a new cold spell. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker today described Begin's charges as "erroneous" and "offensive." The government parties and the opposition also (?criticized Begin, some of them severely). Begin, on Sunday concluded from Schmidt's remarks on the Middle East problem and the Palestinians' right to self-determination that the Germans have forgotten the crimes against the Jewish people and are interested only in selling weapons and buying cheap Arab oil.

Government Spokesman Becker, who, to the express exclusion of Begin's comments, described German-Israeli relations as "normal," told journalists: "Going off the track like this is probably connected with the Israeli election campaign, but an election campaign doesn't excuse erroneous and offensive statements." Becker said that the Israeli Government at no time had made any effort to obtain an official clarification of the chancellor's remarks to which Begin and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir had taken offense. The spokesman made it clear that the Federal Government will express its "astonishment" to Israeli Ambassador Yohanon Meroz when he is received on Tuesday by Foreign Office Secretary of State Guenther van Well for an account of Schmidt's trip to Riyadh and Abu Dhabi.

Becker underlined that the chancellor's statements in these two capitals, and also in Thursday's television discussion, were based "completely" on the Middle East statement issued by the EC heads of government on 13 June 1980 in Venice. The only "personal note" by the chancellor was the remark that the Palestinians must, within the framework of their right to self-determination, also receive the right to organize themselves as a state.

Press Review

DW041302 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 4 May 81

[From the press review]

[Text] The Mainz ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes: The feelings of the Israelis change from one day to the next. The acclamation concerning the chancellor's temporary refusal of the arms requests of the Saudi princes was followed by loud chiding. Jerusalem angrily notes that in the aftermath of his ticklish Middle East trip, of all times, Schmidt shifted the Palestinian issue into the foreground. Did Schmidt really overshoot the mark? If he advocated a Palestinian state more plainly than heretofore, this doesn't at all spell a sensational shift in the Middle East debate. The chancellor rather logically advocated Bonn's attitude which, in close adherence to EC decisions, sets Israel's right to exist against the Palestinians' right to a national identity.

Duesseldorf's RHEINISCHE POST says: A sovereign state just cannot be put under pressure in Shamir's style. Unlike German-Arab friendship, German-Jewish cooperation unfortunately isn't based on old traditions. No question about it, Bonn is required to take reconciliation steps toward Jerusalem time and again. Yet, invectives a la Shamir might lead to a point some day where the Federal Republic will pursue a more self-centered policy toward Israel as well, a policy in which there will be no hesitation and uncertainty such as those now displayed with respect to arms exports to the Arabian Peninsula.

Hannoversche ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG concludes: The thought of German tanks is bound to infuriate the Israelis. German politics must reckon with these emotions. But on the other hand, a defamation campaign against the Germans would be the most nonsensical thing the Israelis could do. It would not only lack credibility, but would also backfire on the Israelis who have lost a great deal of prestige in the world anyway under their chauvinist government chief Begin. Helmut Schmidt, an enemy of Israel and anti-Semite? Who would believe that kind of nonsense anyway?

SCHMIDT COMMENTS ON TALKS WITH PORTUGUESE PRESIDENT

DW040947 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1630 GMT 2 May 81

[Excerpts from reporter Schroeter interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Did you also have political talks [with Portuguese President Eanes]?

[Answer] Yes, we had them indeed. This wasn't the first time; we have met several times during the past years. We were recalling these meetings just now during luncheon.

Naturally, we discussed economic problems, Portugal's forthcoming membership in the European Community and the necessary negotiations. Naturally, we also discussed political and world political problems.

[Question] Were you able to give any hope to Mr Eanes concerning becoming a European Community member at an earlier date?

[Answer] That actually was not at issue. We agree that membership is supposed to take place in early 1984. I stressed a bit that psychologically the Portuguese should not foster expectations that are too great when it comes to the advantages involved for the initial period of membership in the European Community. The advantages will become evident over the years.

[Question] Did you find an ally in Mr Eanes with a view to the idea of the Federal Government setting a date at the NATO council meeting in Rome to take up disarmament talks with the Soviet Government in the medium-range field?

[Answer] We had a most thorough discussion of military problems between West and East and particularly arms control policy problems between West and East as well as the problem of Eurostrategic arms of medium-range arms. I assume that the session of the NATO council will reveal how much we agree on that. Regarding the talks we had today, actually we don't want to disclose details publicly. In the near future, Portuguese Prime Minister Balsemao will visit.

[Question] U.S. Secretary of State Haig hinted prior to his departure for Rome that the American side might possibly not be too interested in such timing. Will the federal chancellor make a statement on that?

[Answer] Not today, I will first have to get hold of the original of what Mr Haig supposedly said prior to forming my opinion on it. I just stated that the U.S. secretary of state has great understanding for European necessities. I had a similar opinion when I was travelling through two Arab countries, particularly when I was in the capital of Saudi Arabia.

BANGLADESH PRESIDENT ARRIVES ON 5-DAY STATE VISIT

LD041422 Hamburg DPA in German 1339 GMT 4 May 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 4 May (DPA)--Bangladesh President Ziaur Rahman arrived in Bonn today on a 5-day state visit to the Federal Repbulic.

The head of state of former East Pakistan landed in a special plane with his wife and a 45-man delegation at Cologne-Bonn airport and was welcomed by chief of protocol, Ambassador Hans-Werner Graf Finckenstein. The guests then flew by helicopter to the federal capital where Federal President Karl Carstens received Rahman with military honors.

Before his arrival, some 200 Bangladeshi students, guest workers and persons who have sought asylum in the Federal Republic demonstrated in front of their country's embassy in Bad Godesberg. They chanted "Zia go home" and "Killer Zia go back." They accused Rahman, in an open letter, of having political opponents persecuted and killed.

Talks With Carstens

LD041932 Hamburg DPA in German 1644 GMT 4 May 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 4 May (DPA)--At a dinner this evening for the president of Bangladesh at Bruehl Castle near Bonn, Federal President Karl Carstens noted that the Federal Republic follows the Bangladesh people's efforts for the future with sincere interest. Carstens described the path of President Ziaur Rahman from "administrator of martial law" to a freely and democratically elected president as an example which is not axiomatic in the world and world history. He said that the Federal Republic has made Bangladesh a focal point of its development aid.

After the welcoming ceremony with military honors outside Villa Hammerschmidt, the official residence of the federal president, Rahman talked for 45 minutes with Carstens. According to a spokesman, the discussion was held in a very cordial and friendly atmosphere. Carstens stressed that in the Federal Government, development aid is seen as a moral obligation toward poorer countries, especially by the youth, the spokesman said. He also praised Bangladesh's progress, particularly its agricultural development, and the efforts by President Rahman for peace in Asia, the Middle East and in the Iran-Iraq conflict.

On tomorrow's agenda are talks with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Development Aid Minister Rainer Offergeld. After his 2-day stay in Bonn, the president and his party are to visit Hamburg, Cologne and Ludwigshafen.

CUBAN VICE MINISTER LABELS FRG VISIT 'POSITIVE'

FL012214 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2205 GMT 1 May 81

[Text] Ernesto Melendez Bachs, first vice minister-president of the Cuban State Committee for Economic Cooperation, declared in Bonn that the results of his visit to the Federal Republic of Germany have been positive. At the end of his 6-day visit to the FRG, Melendez Bachs told PRENSA LATINA that the contacts made at the private and official levels in Bonn, Frankfurt Am Main and Stuttgart were effective and of interest.

The Cuban vice minister this week met with private economic and financial sectors and with parliamentarians and senior government officials of the FRG. This is the first time that a Cuban economic delegation has visited the FRG to establish contacts with broad economic and financial sectors, Melendez Bachs emphasized.

CALL FOR REVIEWS OF SPD NATO DECISION CRITICIZED

LD041836 Hamburg DPA in German 1353 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 4 May (DPA)--The demand by the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD party congress for a review of the SPD congress decision on the NATO twin decision on nuclear medium-range missiles has met with criticism from both the CDU/CSU opposition and the Federal Government.

While the opposition spoke of a trend in the SPD toward a "no" by the party to the West's "counterarming," government circles pointed to the frequent statements by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, too, that a questioning of the NATO twin decision threatened the cohesion of the Western alliance and also the Bonn SPD/FDP coalition.

The government circles stressed that, for domestic and external reasons, "no ambiguous position" must arise with regard to the NATO decision. The government must guard against the impression arising abroad that there also is an erosion of the NATO decision in the SPD. The FDP Presidium stressed that the government's position on this question, which Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher presently is representing at the NATO council meeting in Rome, isn't affected by the decision of the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD. The aim of the FDP policy is the maintenance of the defense capability of the Western alliance "with simultaneously the will for tension-reducing cooperation, arms control and arms limitation."

The official reaction of the Federal Government made clear its reservations about the decision of the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker pointed out that on several occasions the Federal Government has drawn attention to the great importance it attaches to the twin decision and to the fact that it expects members of the government to suppport Federal Government policy. Becker said that the four members of the Bonn government from the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD, Ministers Volker Hauff, Rainer Offergeld and Andreas von Buelow and Minister of State Gunter Kuonker, who had spoken against the decision by the land party congress and who had not voted for it, had acted within the framework of the Federal Government's decisions.

Press Comment

DW041325 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0500 GMT 4 May 81

[From the press review]

[Text] The MUENCHNER MERKUR editorial says: Anyone who makes no bones about it, as Eppler did in Aalen, that he intends to work at the next party congress to compromise on the counterarming issue laboriously negotiated 2 years ago, and who announces that he will take any risk in the struggle for internal party majorities, practically declares war on the chancellor and on parts of his party. Whoever can afford to do that must feel very strong indeed, considering that it isn't just the grassroots of the southwestern SPD which applauds when the social-liberal policy of Bonn is shown to lack credibility but that even party boss Willy Brandt accuses the U.S. Government of foolish things on the eve of the NATO conference, of all times. We can understand Eppler: his risk is not that great--but ours is.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE comments: Eppler's clear statement in Aalen that the SPD cannot in the long run be for and against counterarming provides an occasion for the Bonn party leadership to come out more clearly for counterarming, for our state's external security.

Party Chairman Brandt already has missed his chance--he called the Aalen decision against counterarming an important and weighty contribution. Such sentimental hollowness is his contribution toward a vital issue and the question of survival for western Germany. For the time being, nothing will change outwardly. Both Schmidt and Genscher deem counterarming necessary and they will stick to their guns. But how long will they be able to convert this conviction into policies?

SAARBRUECKER ZEITUNG states: After the way in which the land party congress in Aalen proceeded, the SPD will not get any help even from interpretative tricks such as those which Federal Minister Hauff and Egon Bahr, for example, still tried several weeks ago in order to pass off the Executive Board's motion, now turned into a decision of the land's party, as a success of and support for the security policy line of the Federal Government.

By his orderly retreat, Hauff has made it plain that if it isn't the decision proper, then it is at least one of its potential interpretations that is at odds with the policy of the Bonn coalition government.

The STUTTGART ZEITUNG writes: The appearance of the [Federal Government] ministers was probably planned long ago and wasn't the consequence of Eppler's big words. For several months now, Schmidt has had to observe how the compromises on nuclear energy--now in the case of the counterarming issue--cease to be worth the paper on which they are printed. Barely adopted, they are being immediately interpreted as it suits the concept of the respective wings of the party. The chancellor, who is aware that (?there is) confidence in the Social Democrats' being able to continue to govern this way, now seeks a showdown rather than a compromise with the Eppler wing.

Freiburg's BADISCHE ZEITUNG advocates: Eppler made it absolutely clear in Aalen that he proposed to use the guideline motion adopted by the Baden-Wuerttemberg comrades with a vast majority as a lever at the Munich federal level party congress in 1982 to overthrow the SPD's approval of the dual decision. The chancellor's slight majority at the 1979 party congress in Berlin is to be turned into an Eppler majority in Munich. In his rigorousness, Eppler doesn't seem to be disconcerted either by the fact that the text of the Aalen decision was actually phrased as a compromise for advocates and opponents of the NATO decision or by the warning of his former disciple and present successor, Ulrich Lang, that the social-liberal Federal Government might fall apart over the NATO decision and that this might also spell the end of the peace policy of that coalition on the whole.

The daily DIE WELT states: What is noteworthy is the change of mind of some members of the Federal Government. Weeks ago, they interpreted the Baden-Wuerttemberg guideline motion as a success, namely, as a confirmation of the decision of the SPD federal level congress in Berlin, which had been made just before the 1979 NATO meeting. But now, Federal Transport Minister Volker Hauff repudiates the motion which he originally approved. Obviously, Hauff has failed to comprehend right away what the draft motion he helped author really meant--an instrument that may turn against the declared policy of the party and of the Federal Government.

BREMER NACHRICHTEN editorializes: What the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD, which has deteriorated to relative insignificance under its former Land Chairman Erhard Eppler, announced on the NATO dual decision this weekend is reminiscent of shadow boxing rather than of objective discussion. According to the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD, it is necessary to ascertain whether the business basis for the decision of the Berlin party congress, at which the SPD approved the dual decision in 1979, has ceased to exist and whether a revision of the decision is necessary. It may be that things are always moving, especially in politics. But it is also true that the starting situation of the NATO dual decision was the intention to force the Soviet Union to negotiate. Yet, these negotiations haven't taken place to this day.

The Leutkirch SCHWAEBISCHE ZEITUNG concludes: What becomes discernible behind all the revelations of Aalen is a mixture of anti-Americanism and unilateral disarmament readiness, perhaps even pacifism, the attempt to unite social democracy and the so-called new peace movement. Should this end up on the opposition bench in Bonn, this would be quite in line with the cut of a man who never thought much of public offices and had no success when he held them. What is worse is that the new course was kept hidden from the citizens in the election campaigns since 1979, a game of deceit which is depressing because a man wanting to live a life of integrity, can't toy with [peoples'] confidence.

PCI'S BERLINGUER ADDRESSES PSI PARTY CONGRESS

LD040957 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 24 Apr 81 pp 1, 16

[Text] The following is the text of the speech delivered by Comrade Enrico Berlinguer at the PSI Congress in Palermo [on 23 April]

Dear comrades, I would like to convey the PCI's greetings and good wishes to you all, delegates and guests, at this 42d national congress, to its chairman and to all socialist comrades in the factories, rural districts and cities throughout Italy who are following the work of this congress with passionate interest--work which all Italian Communists are following with equal attention. I would like to convey special greetings to the Sicilian Socialist comrades who, together with the communists, are now being called upon to continue the Sicilian workers' great traditions of struggle against the Mafia and against all arbitrary actions so as to free Sicily from all forms of oppression and violence.

Relations between the Italian Socialists and Communists have experienced ups and downs and have often been difficult. This has been the case recently, which confirms that the different parliamentary stance of our two parties--which in principle, however, we do not regard as impossible--is now leading to considerable difficulties and tensions in our relations. But the difficulties in our relations have not prevented the PSI and PCI from waging great battles together for peace, democracy and for the working classes. Nor are they preventing them even now from cooperating usefully in many regions, provinces and communes and in a series of mass associations and organizations. In addition, it has not prevented them even now from fighting from the same positions--as Comrade Craxi's speech shows--in the referendum battles and, especially, in the most crucial battle against the annulment of the abortion law.

The overall experience of our relations has also demonstrated, however, that when the always explicable and legitimate difference in political and ideological stance becomes conflict and division, neither of the two parties obtains any lasting advantage--and what suffers is democracy, which is weakened, and the whole workers movement in its struggle for progress toward socialism.

You and we have been destined for that objective. And this objective--socialism--must not vanish from our outlook. We must not regard it as old fashioned, as something to be set aside. We are telling ourselves that, too. We are doing so not only because the socialist ideal generally constitutes the deepest innermost reason which prompts the choice of specific political activity in the ranks of our party and yours, but also and most importantly because the facts we witness to, our environment, the problems assailing us in Italy, Europe and the world, the need to defend and develop the democratic institutions themselves and our freedom, all require, here in Italy and in the West, that we hold fast to the typical values of socialism (social justice, solidarity) and that we really follow the path of socialism.

Is this not the real response--demanding, but historically necessary--that we are required to make to a rightwing offensive which, from the present U.S. administration to the conservative governments and reactionary parties of Europe, is trying to make the workers pay for a solution to the economic crisis, to make the workers movement retreat and to inflict a heavy defeat on its parties? Is this not also the real response that we must make to all the forces trying to extinguish in the people's masses and especially among the young every ideological spark and all confidence in the transformation of society, thus nurturing skepticism, the loss of all prospects and resignation to the status quo?

I would like to add that, precisely by specifically advancing socialism--a new kind of socialism based on democracy and freedom--here in Italy and the West, we can contribute to tackling the real issues, to making more influential and more incisive the criticism aimed at transcending socialism as it has hitherto been realized in various countries of Eastern Europe and the world. Our party has been involved in this criticism for some time, in the forms consistent with its autonomous beliefs, its individual theoretical formulations and its view of the various phases of history and of the gains of the workers and socialist movement worldwide ever since its origins.

The pointer to what we call a "third way" to socialism is no intellectualist and propagandist discovery; nor is it something midway between the Eastern bloc and Western bloc regimes. It is the quest for an effective solution to the new problems of the present phase having modern Western societies, to safeguard and develop their gains, which have made so much of their history glorious and which are now threatened by the menaces and dangers of regression, dehumanization and decline.

The "third way" is therefore a solution which, just as it cannot repeat here in the West the experiences and orders of the Eastern bloc, must necessarily transcend the limits to the typical solutions of the European social democracies which are now, through no coincidence, experiencing a difficult and tumultuous phase which we, as a force different from them, are watching in an attempt to rally all efforts of research and initiative moving toward regeneration and toward a more resolute and committed struggle against the conservative and rightwing parties and for thorough structural reforms, such as the struggle being waged by the British Laborites, for instance.

Certain experiences, such as our experience within the European Parliament or the recent Madrid meeting of research institutes and political representatives of certain West European socialist, social democratic and communist parties, demonstrate that on these topics there can be constructive dialogues and convergences which, however, still remain to be followed up by joint initiatives and actions. What a great deal could be done by a West European workers movement which, without challenging the individual characteristics and autonomy of its various members, acted harmoniously in the fields of industrial agricultural and particularly labor and employment policy, as well as in the field of international relations.

In Italy, too, the entire workers and people's movement, in its political and trade union expressions, is being subjected to an offensive designed to provide a rightwing solution to the very grave crisis which has been affecting us for years. Such a solution would reduce or eliminate democratic and trade union powers and rights, such as the right to strike, which the workers attained through years and years of struggle and sacrifices--in short, such a solution would drive back and subdue the leftwing forces as a whole, thus paving the way for a conservative or even reactionary regime.

We believe that the Italian workers movement and the leftwing, people's and democratic forces as a whole have sufficient strength not only to repel these attacks and to prevent such an outcome but also to control the crisis, to surmount it and to provide an advanced and leftwing solution to it. Of course, there are several causes of the crisis, among which we certainly do not underestimate the international ones. But here at home, too, there is also a political cause--the main cause--which is specific to Italy and which demands a specific response. This cause lies in the DC's power system, its governing methods and its occupation of the state.

When our party made the proposal of a democratic alternative government, it posed to all the parties the very issue of eliminating this situation which, in the final analysis, lies at the root of all the inefficiencies damaging the entire economic and production process, social life and the state, thus creating the mistrust which worries all of us so much and which the citizens feel increasingly toward the parties and the institutions.

This is the political cause that must be eliminated. Unless the country is freed of the burden of the DC power system, it will become increasingly difficult to work to impart efficiency to public administrations and a breathing space and future prospects to economic life, to counter corporativism, to contain corruption, to effectively combat the Mafia, violence and terrorism, to restore the citizens' trust, and to secure from the nation the necessary efforts for it to recover--efforts which are only possible if based on the principle of equality and if guided by a government enjoying sufficient prestige.

Some people might say--and indeed have said--that we communists were somehwat slow in presenting our proposal of a democratic alternative government. Perhaps so. But we really do not consider this a valid reason for refraining from action to realize that proposal. At this somber time, bristling with dangers, the country has a greater need than ever for the leftwing, people's and democratic forces to state their objective clearly and to act resolutely to attain it.

Meanwhile, as you know, we have pointed to the need to replace the present government. It would be insincere of us not to mention this issue, too. But why have we raised it? Perhaps because we like playing the overthrowers of governments? No, that is not our job. And this was not our original aim with respect to the Forlani government. Subsequently, however, this government demonstrated actions and shortcomings which, in our opinion, showed that it is incapable of controlling, much less surmounting, the crisis. And it seems to us that, by allowing this government to continue, not only would we not be paving the way to an improvement, a time of reforms and regeneration, but we would be moving toward a deterioration, because tensions and splits among the people's masses would be exacerbated, the DC would not be encouraged by make any changes, and the dangers of a rightward shift would increase.

If it is agreed that this government is not irreplaceable and that it does not represent the only solution that can prevent what we believe can and must be prevented--namely the fourth premature dissolution of Parliament--we communists, for our part, have made our proposal; the democratic alternative government.

Is this proposal of ours not considered immediately feasible? In that case, if we resolve the dilemma of "either this government or early elections," the proposal of a different government solution--different both from our proposal and from the present government--must be made by someone else. And in this connection we have stated and we now reassert that we are willing to assess calmly any hypotheses that may be suggested. What we do not understand is the de facto freezing of the status quo, the playing for time for no certain purpose, while the country's general situation is deteriorating every day.

As far as we are concerned, we have taken an initiative. We believe that the time has come for all leftwing and people's forces everywhere, irrespective of their position, to take political initiatives that will set the situation moving again. When we say this we are looking principally at you, the socialist comrades, and your party.

As you see, comrades, I have presented our viewpoints frankly, in an attempt to highlight, amid the various topics of discussion, the things that constitute the political nub of the present situation.

I hope that the spirit of my remarks will clearly reveal our sincere desire and our profound concern for an improvement in the climate and in relations between our parties, so that the Italian workers movement and the entire left can find in the PSI and the PCI two forces which--each with its own characteristics and autonomy--will fulfill the irreplaceable role which they are called on to perform in defense of democracy and for the socialist transformation of our country.

PCI AIDE DESCRIBES U.S. VISIT, OVERTURES TO PSI

LD051039 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 19-20 Apr 81 p 2

[Lucio Caracciolo undated interview with PCI Directorate member Luciano Barca: "Leftwing Agreement Against DC Power"]

[Text] Rome--"The name. Yes, what makes the Americans most mistrustful of the PCI is its name. The word 'communist' is enough to evoke images of the Cold War for them. Of course, many Americans are acquainted with our individuality, our anomaly, but there is an underlying Manichaean attitude; whose side are you on; are you with the Russians or with us? And if you are independent of Moscow why do you not set up a kind of Eurocommunist international, separate from the Warsaw bloc communist parties? Otherwise, how can you think of joining the government, how can you consider a PCI defense minister with access to NATO secrets?"

Luciano was the first Italian Communist leader to visit Reagan's America. Of course, he did not visit the State Department or the Pentagon, which are off limits for a communist, whether heretic or orthodox, but he did visit the temples of the intelligentsia, ranging from Boston's Center of European Studies to Yale's Department of Political Sciences and the Harvard Business School's Council on International Affairs. In public debates and informal meetings with political scientists, sociologists and economists, Barca discussed everything, noting the great interest that exists in the United States in topics such as Eurocommunism or the PCI's economic policy--"everything," Barca pointed out, "except Afghanistan and the DC."

[Question] Why this silence on what are two key topics?

[Answer] As far as the Afghan invasion is concerned, the lack of interest can only be attributed to the Manichaean tendency which I mentioned. Basically, in the preception of the division of the world between the two superpowers, Afghanistan, unlike Poland, is regarded by the Americans as in some way within the Soviet sphere of influence, and the Red Army's intervention can fall within the rules of the game.

[Question] What about the blackout on the DC?

[Answer] In five public talks and several informal conversations nobody ever asked me anything about the DC. At first I attributed this to an oversight, then I became surprised and asked an American professor to explain it to me. You see, he told me, we do not regard the DC as a party. As far as we are concerned, it is the government itself, the Italian state. Therefore any question that we ask about Italy is a question about the DC.

[Question] Deputy Barca, it is precisely this idenitifcation of the DC with the state--which has become current in the United States, too--that was the target of the "Salerno swing."

Now, to return to domestic polemics, is it true that the PCI Directorate document published yesterday modifies and attentuates that swing, inasmuch as you are adopting a less intransigent stance toward the DC and trying to reestablish an understanding with [PSI Secretary] Craxi?

[Answer] I do not regard it as a modification or attenuation of the swing. We had already stated clearly that we do not consider this government even a valid interlocutor for the opposition. We reassert our proposal of a democratic alternative, with a friendly and specific plea to the PSI to declare its opinion on this proposal, leaving aside both its own prejudices and its endorsement of the DC's prejudices. On the other hand, we are willing to take into account changes and improvements that enable us and the workers movement to conduct a dialogue with a valid interlocutor.

[Question] Does that mean that you would support a different, a better government, even without belonging to it?

[Answer] A distinction must be drawn between governments with regard to which we are willing to modify this kind of opposition, and governments with regard to which we are willing to grant our backing and of which we would have to form a decisive part.

[Question] Would a Socialist-led government prompt you to adopt a different stance, a milder form of opposition?

[Answer] I believe it is too early to talk about government formulas from whatever viewpoint. What is to be hoped is that the PSI can extricate itself as soon as possible from the submissiveness toward the DC power system instilled in it by a certain conception of governability and by its acceptance of anticommunist prejudice, as far as central government is concerned.

[Question] But is there a desire on your part to reach an understanding with the Socialists, with Craxi?

[Answer] I believe that every democrat who is aware of the degree of gravity which the complex Italian crisis has reached must not only hope for greater leftwing unity but must work for it, with the aim of making possible a thorough change in the country's course and political leadership, In any case, you cannot view the issue of relations with the Socialists in a manner divorced from a consideration of the prospects and of a dialogue with the PSI on our proposal of a democratic alternative.

[Question] So you are asking the PSI to state its opinion of the democratic alternative. But what does this proposal mean, and with which forces and which allies do you want to realize it?

[Answer] The democratic alternative can be built with the forces that exist in the country, starting with the request that the DC provide what the PCI granted in 1976-77 in the face of a dramatic crisis. But the power axis needs to be substantially modified; with a view to facilitating the end of the identification of the DC with the state which we mentioned earlier. I would like to point out that our proposal originated as an alternative to the DC power system and stemmed from the eruption of the moral issue and, in connection with the earthquake, from the issue of the inefficiency of the public administration and its instruments. Well, both issues have now regained sensational prominence and now affect very delicate bodies. This confirms the full validity and absolute need for what we have proposed.

GENERAL, POLICEMAN GUNNED DOWN IN MADRID

LD04132 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] General Andres Gonzalez del Suso and national policeman Ignacio Garcia Garcia were killed this morning in an attack in Hermosilla Street, Madrid. According to the Madrid civil government, two people carried out the attack. One of them, whose identity is not known, is undergoing surgery at Madrid Provincial Hospital, while the second has taken refuge inside a subway station. Police are attempting to capture him. The bodies of the general and the national policeman are in the Provincial Hospital. The ministers of defense and the interior, the army and air force chiefs of staff, the president of the Union of the Democratic Center, and other civilian and military authorities have arrived at the hospital.

GRAPO Responsible for Killings

NC041028 Paris AFP in English 1023 GMT 4 May 81

[Excerpt] Madrid, 4 May (AFP)--Leftist extremists shot and killed a Spanish Army general and his military bodyguard (eds: correct) in central Madrid today, and almost simultaneously machine-gunned two paramilitary Civil Guards to death in Barcelona, the Interior Ministry announced.

The ministry said the attacks were carried out by different units of GRAPO, the outlawed October 1 revolutionary anti-fascist groups, which had claimed responsibility for the slayings of two generals in Spain last year.

Brigadier General Andres Gonzalez Suso, 72, commander of Spain's coastal artillery, was shot in the head and died today on the way to a Madrid hospital.

First reports said one of the gunmen in Madrid was killed in a shootout that followed the attack on the general, who until last year had been chief press aide at the Defense Ministry, but officials later announced that only the general and the soldier accompanying him had died. Officials said three people were wounded including one of the attackers who was taken to hospital in a very serious condition.

ETA Leader Involved

NC041245 Paris AFP in English 1233 GMT 4 May 81

[Excerpts] Madrid, 4 May (AFP)--Gunmen killed a Spanish Army general and a policeman in Madrid and two Civil Guards in Barcelona today.

The Ministry of the Interior blamed the assassinations on the left-wing October 1 anti-fascist revolutionary group (GRAPO). One of its members, Cerdan Calixto, was identified by police as one of the two Barcelona killers.

But reports said that one of General Andres Gonzalez Suso's assassins, who was surrounded by police in a garage and seriously wounded before being arrested was Manuel Angel Apalategui, a leader of the Military Wing of the Basque separatist organization ETA [Basque Fatherland and Liberty].

Senior military officers and politicians went to the hospital where the bodies had been taken. They included Defence and Interior Ministers Alberto Oliart and Juan Jose Roson, and Air Force Chief of Staff General Alfaro.

Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo was also due at the hospital after his return today from a private visit to Lisbon, official sources said.

In Barcelona the Civil Guards, one of them a sergeant, were shot outside a bar and died immediately.

The weapons used in both cases were the favourite arm of GRAPO, which has been responsible for some 50 assassinations since it first appeared in October 1975. It is on the far left of the political spectrum--it considers the Spanish Communist Party "bourgeois"--but its aims are obscure.

The attacks come at a time of renewed rumours of another military coup in Spain, denied on Saturday by Mr Calvo-Sotelo, two days after security was stepped up at barracks in Madrid. Leave for officers was canceled, guards doubled and vigilance increased in measures due to last until Wednesday.

Leaders Express Condolences

LD041342 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 4 May 81

[Summary] King Juan Carlos visited Madrid military hospital earlier today, where the body of General Gonzalez Suso was taken after this morning's terrorist attack. The king expressed his condolences to the general's family. Afterwards, the king went to the police station, where the body of a policeman, who was also killed in the attack, is laying in the specially set up chapel of rest.

Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo also expressed his sorrow to the general's family following his return from a visit in connection with this attack. Calvo-Sotelo said that on this occasion the army has been the institution to be struck by terrorists, but both the army and the government are ready to wage a long struggle against terrorism.

PSOE TO PUSH FOR BROAD MAJORITY GOVERNMENT

LD040807 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 28 Apr 81 p 13

[Text] The Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] Federal Executive Committee has issued a communique stating that the policy of "consultation" maintained with the government has not produced the desired results, and so the Socialists emphasize the need for a government with a broad majority. With respect to NATO, the PSOE demands a referendum, and it states that the socioeconomic situation is continuing to deteriorate.

Madrid, 27 Apr--The PSOE Federal Executive Committee held a meeting today. The general political situation was debated during it, and the following official comminque was issued as a summary of the debate:

Spain is continuing to experience a grave political, social and economic situation which we have not succeeded in surmounting over the last 2 months. In order to tackle it responsibly, the PSOE has proposed the formation of a government with a broad parliamentary and social majority, which with an agreed program of limited duration could surmount the enormous existing difficulties along a path of progress.

In light of the Union of the Democratic Center minority government's rejection, the PSOE has declared itself prepared to find, together with the government, solutions to the most urgent state issues which are essential for the consolidation of democracy: democratization of the state apparatus, the economic crisis and unemployment, building the state of the autonomies, public order and freedoms and foreign policy.

As we already pointed out at the time, the so-called "policy of consultation" is a poor substitute for the necessary government with a broad majority, since it creates confusion in the sphere of responsibilities and hampers supervision of the executive power.

The PSOE Federal Executive Committee finds that this policy of consultation has so far not produced the desired results, and this necessitates clarifying the following points:

Clarifying Points

1. The autonomy issue is following the course envisaged at the meetings with the government. We Socialists hope to promote its development stringently, once a method for tackling the building of the state of the autonomies has been agreed.

2. The minister of territorial administration's statements on possible amendments to the electoral legislation are absolutely inconsistent with the viewpoints on this matter held by our party.

3. The socioeconomic problem is continuing to deteriorate without a consistent and effective policy for tackling the priority aim--the struggle against unemployment--being noted on the part of the government. The situation in some Spanish regions--in particular, Andalusia and Extremadura--is reaching such a degree of deterioration that it requires immediate measures on the part of the government.

Industrial and energy policy remains without clear guidelines, yet measures have been adopted such as the establishment of the National Hydrocarbons Institute, outside the scope of the National Institute of Industry, which means the break up of that body, as well as the reindustrialization decree, which could create greater confusion in economic policy.

Referendum on NATO

4. The government has inopportunely revived the issue of NATO in a manner disrespectful toward Spanish citizens. The prime minister's assertion that the whole of the armed forces are in agreement with this policy appears frivolous to us. In any event, it is the citizens as a whole who should decide on such a crucial issue as multilateral military commitment, either through a referendum or at the next election, when this issue will be the subject of public debate. In the PSOE executive committee's opinion, the contrary would represent proof of the congress' fear to submit this grave decision to deliberation by the people, as well as a clear reversal of priorities with respect to Spain's needs.

The PSOE Federal Executive Committee shares with the rest of democratic opinion the unease with respect to the lack of firmness toward those involved in actions against democracy and its institutions.

Last, the PSOE once more reaffirms its policy of meticulously negotiating those issues on whose resolution the future of Spanish democracy depends.

SAUDI ARABIA'S KING KHALID TO VISIT 15-28 JUNE

LD041136 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] King Khalid of Saudi Arabia will pay an official visit to Spain from 15 to 28 June 1981, according to a communique issued by the diplomatic information office.

DENMARK

LD041319 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 1 May 81 p 15

[Text] In February 1982, Greenland will hold a referendum on its membership of the EEC, and if the Greenland voters decide to leave the EEC, this could happen on 1 January 1984.

There would be a large number of procedural questions surrounding a withdrawal, but after initial government negotiations with the Greenland Government yesterday, Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen said that the government would accept any Greenland decision, and no one would obstruct it--no matter what it was. Anker Jorgensen would prefer to see Greenland continue as an EEC member, but both the Danish prime minister and Greenland Government Chairman Jonathan Motzfeldt gave assurances that possible future withdrawal would not affect Greenland's union with Denmark.

Minister for Greenland Affairs Tove Lindbo Larsen also took part in yesterday's meeting, which will be followed by others.

Withdrawal from the EEC would give Greenland a number of economic problems, and Anker Jorgensen did not wish to give an advance guarantee of Danish grants to replace the present EEC grants. Jonathan Motzfeldt said that alternative income could be won from the sale of fisheries licenses.

"There will probably be a public debate in Denmark on Greenland's relationship to the EEC, but the matter should be as far as possible an internal Greenlandic affair, and we must respect Greenland's decision," Anker Jorgensen said.

FINLAND

PRIME MINISTER KOIVISTO ON TREATY WITH USSR

LD050951 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 3 May 81 p 12

[Excerpt] According to Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto, there is absolutely no reason to raise doubts about Finland's foreign policy course. The prime minister said in his 1 May speech in Pori that a lively debate had developed around the friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance treaty with the Soviet Union, "although nothing new has happened, and no new interpretations of it are needed."

The friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance treaty is a good treaty as it is; at most we should perhaps discuss the question of when and for how long we should propose that its period of validity be extended, Koivisto said.

According to the prime minister, the treaty is a whole from which no single part can be detached or "made light of."

"The debate on the treaty's military articles gives the impression that we are already in the trenches and are about to pull something over our heads in expectation of the first blows. But before that we still have many battles to win or lose."

It is in line with President Urho Kekkonen's "active neutralist thinking" to strive to influence developments in the world; for our fate is decided there too, Koivisto said. It is important to work for international understanding, detente and arms limitation lest international relations deteriorate to such an extent that a military attack on the Soviet Union through Finland becomes a real possibility.

In the international section of his speech, Prime Minister Koivisto spoke in praise of Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's peace program promulgated at the CPSU Party Congress. Soviet readiness to extend the confidence-building measures to the whole of the Soviet Union's European territories on the basis of reciprocity should be seen, Koivisto said, as a concession in principle and a clear expression of the Soviet desire for peace. Koivisto also said that too much time should not be spent pondering the question of to what extent the Soviet proposals were determined by tactical considerations. Growing and increasingly expensive rearmament in the world cannot be in the interests of any country.

The prime minister also spoke positively about President Kekkonen's contributions to foreign affairs. "The fact that Finland's relations with the Soviet Union today are so versatile and fruitful is to a large extent the result of the tireless work done by the president. Under the president's leadership, Finland's international position has continued to grow stronger, and this has helped to give credibility to Finland's endeavors for peace and disarmament in international forums.

SWEDEN

LD041038 Stockholm International Service in English 1830 GMT 4 May 81

[Excerpt] The big topic of the day, as we heard in the news, is the government crisis here in Sweden. It is now a fact. Despite a week of trying to persuade the conservatives to remain in the government, Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin had to see his precarious three-party nonsocialist coalition break up. Conservative leader [and Minister of Economy] Gosta Bohman and the other conservative ministers told a press conference Monday evening that they were leaving the government and were recommending that the prime minister offer the resignation of the entire government. Bohman spoke of broken promises and the lack of a firm policy as the reasons why the conservatives took such a serious step as to break up the nonsocialist government for the second time.

Further Details

LD042322 Stockholm International Service in Swedish 2130 GMT 4 May 81

[Excerpt] The second nonsocialist three-party government in Sweden collapsed today when the eight ministers of the Moderate Coalition Party, led by party leader Gosta Bohman, left the government. The Moderates, who do not want to accept the agreement of the Center and Liberal Parties with the Social Democrats over a tax reform, stressed that Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin [words indistinct] must submit the resignation of the entire government.

At a press conference late this evening, Prime Minister Falldin did not, however, give any immediate information on how the government crisis is to be solved. Falldin [words indistinct] wants to have a few days to consider the situation. He referred to the present situation in the labor market, where the salaried employees in the private sector have rejected a pay offer and where a strike and lockout are possible.

DEFENSE COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN NORDBECK RESIGNS

LD050727 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 30 Apr 81 p 6

[Erik Liden report]

[Text] The defense committee's work will be made more difficult because of the sudden resignation of its chairman, Director General Gunnar Nordbeck. In combination with the general political climate it could mean that the committee's final recommendations will be delayed.

The recommendations have been promised for 1 November so that the government will be able to draft the 1982 defense bill in good time before the Riksdag debate in May 1982.

Defense Minister Eric Kronmark (Moderate Coalition Party) has had problems in the past with the post of chairman of the defense committee. When Gunnar Nordbeck was appointed director general of the National Board of Economic Defense in 1979 he wanted to leave the committee after it had presented its first set of recommendations.

After a 2-month search for a suitable candidate, Kronmark was forced to plead with Nordeck to remain. When the defense committee was appointed in 1978, Nordbeck was an under secretary at the Defense Ministry, a post he left when the Liberal Party minority government took office in October 1978.

Why is he now leaving perhaps the most important defense committee since World War II only 6 months before its final recommendations are published?

"I have found that I cannot be chief of economic defenses and at the same time assess its role in the total defense framework. When the economic defense board was told by the government last fall to evaluate a reduction in the levels of economic defenses the workload of the board increased at the same time as my deputy, Per Borg, was appointed to another position.

"Despite statements from the Riksdag Defense Committee that funds for economic defenses should only be reduced temporarily, the reductions are continuing. This has made my role of sitting on two chairs simultaneously even more complicated. I have informed the defense minister of my intention to leave the defense committee in good time."

Several important questions must be decided before the committee's final recommendations this fall. The system of price regulation, that is compensation for inflation, must be assessed, the defense forces' peace time organization discussed, the Viggen's successor decided on and the Swedish commander in chief's 5-year program plans studied. For this reason, the appointment of an effective chairman is an urgent matter. The problems have not shrunk since 1979 and the government crisis does not make the likelihood of a swift decision any greater. At present, there are no candidates for the vacant chairmanship.

GDR'S FISCHER ARRIVES IN STOCKHOLM FOR VISIT

LD041406 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1350 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] Stockholm, 4 May (ADN correspondent)--GDR Minister of Foreign Affairs Oskar Fischer, arrived in Stockholm this afternoon for an official visit. He was invited by Swedish Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten who cordially welcomed his guest at Arlanda Airport.

Fischer, Ullsten Hold Talks

LD042334 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1551 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] Stockholm, 4 May (ADN)--Talks between GDR Foreign Minister Oskar Fischer and his Swedish counterpart, Ola Ullsten, began in Stockholm this afternoon. Oskar Fischer explained the decisions of the 10th congress aimed at securing peace and detente and the GDR's contribution to the common peace program of the socialist states.

Both sides agreed that decisive measures on the part of the peoples and their governments are needed against a further aggravation of the international situation.

Also present at the talks on the current international situation, on questions of securing peace and disarmament in the spirit of the Helsinki Final Act and on bilateral relations were the GDR ambassador, Dr Wolfgang Kiesewetter, and Ambassador Peter Hintzmann, chief of the Northern Europe Department of the GDR Foreign Ministry.

Further Reportage

LD042336 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1857 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] Stockholm, 4 May (ADN)--The Swedish and GDR foreign ministers, Ola Ullsten and Oskar Fischer, drew attention in Stockholm this evening to their countries' agreement on basic issues of preserving peace and to their fruitful and good-neighborly relations.

During a dinner in honor of Fischer, who has started an official visit of several days to Sweden, Ullsten stated that the talks begun during the afternoon "point in the direction of further consolidating the good relations between the GDR and Sweden. We have been able to establish how purposefully our two countries, despite their different social systems, are working for peaceful cooperation between all states and for measures to promote detente."

Regarding the Madrid [CSCE] meeting, Ola Ullsten stated that the two countries efforts "have an essentially common goal. We both wish for an important step to be accomplished in Madrid in the interests of increased security and disarmament in Europe. The Swedish Government is ready to approve a resolution on convening a European disarmament conference." Sweden and the GDR had a common interest in disarmament issues.

Ola Ullsten noted a continuous development in bilateral relations between the two states and stressed that Sweden was ready "to undertake joint efforts" with the GDR "to promote these relations even further."

Oskar Fischer thanked his host for his friendly and good-neighborly reception. Meetings between the two countries' foreign ministers had become a good tradition and had "led to a fruitful dialogue on topical international problems. This is particularly important at present since the issue of preserving peace, international security and the ensuing international cooperation which affects everyone very deeply makes activities necessary," stated Fischer.

The talks which started during the afternoon "demonstrate a high degree of responsibility and substantial agreement on basic issues of preserving peace and further developing bilateral relations." Relations between the two states were the "implemented policy of peaceful coexistence" which served detente and countered confrontation, the GDR foreign minister stressed.

Fischer supported talks aimed at achieving agreements on limiting and reducing arms, particularly in the nuclear field. The approximate military strategic balance was of fundamental importance for the preservation of peace and for international cooperation. Any attempt to change these balances and to achieve military superiority must jeopardize peace and international security. "This is not the policy of the GDR nor of its allies," the minister stressed. The attitude of the Warsaw treaty state--underlined by unilateral reduction steps--should at long last be followed in the interests of the peoples by a corresponding attitude on the part of NATO. Fischer said he was satisfied at the fact "that Sweden and the GDR are working actively to bring about a conference on military detente and disarmament in Europe."

Fischer supported a moratorium on the stationing of new, nuclear medium-range missiles which might form the start of an agreement on limiting and reducing nuclear weapons in Europe. "Political good sense and responsibility toward our present and future generations demand that political and military realities must be recognized in order for a new round of the nuclear weapons arms race in Europe to be prevented."

USSR SCIENTISTS INTERESTED IN SWEDISH PRODUCTIVITY

LD011027 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 28 Apr 81 p 33

[Kjell Dragnes report]

[Text] Moscow, 27 Apr--Soviet scientists showed great interest in Swedish experiences of measures for increasing industrial productivity at a symposium held in Odessa last week. The symposium was part of Swedish-Soviet economic cooperation at research level.

Increased productivity has been pointed out as a major factor for increased economic growth in the Soviet Union in the next 10 years. The new draft 5-year plan pointed out that 90 percent of economic growth must come from increased efficiency since the labor shortage will make itself more keenly felt as the eighties progress.

One of the Swedish lectures which attracted the greatest interest was about the so-called "Horndal effect." The equipment at the steel works in Horndal remained the same over a number of years, but productivity nevertheless increased by 3-4 percent per year, partly because of changes in ownership and market conditions.

The Swedish Employers Confederation's study of increased production in existing companies was also the subject of lively discussion. Both of these lectures are of interest to the Russians, who have problems in making their investment funds go far enough, at the same time as these funds have been spread over all too many projects. This has led to half-finished factories which are in existence a long time before they begin producing.

The Swedish symposium delegates were especially interested in Soviet experiences of energy and incomes and incomes equalization. Soviet participants strongly emphasized the importance of energy for increased production and stressed the crucial role of nuclear power in the energy balance.

Soviet studies of wage differences were also of interest. The Russians claim that it is not possible to pursue a policy of equalizing incomes. Increased material incentives, such as wage scales and bonuses, is one road to follow when trying to increase productivity.

Soviet researchers also claimed that state allowances and arrangements for income supplements are not a viable path. A society cannot survive if more than 25 percent of its households' disposable income comes from benefits, that is allowances, pensions and so on. In Sweden today this proportion is 35 percent.

The Swedish delegation's leader was Axel Iveroth, Private Commerce and Industry Federation International Council chairman, while the large Soviet delegation was led by Academy member Tigran Khachaturov. Plans were made to hold a new research symposium in Sweden next year when the topic will be factors for economic growth.

THATCHER AGAINST INCREASED IMMIGRATION QUOTAS

LD041355 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 4 May 81 p 7

[James Wightman report: "More Immigration Seen as a Threat by Mrs Thatcher"]

[Text] The prime minister declared in a BBC programme for ethnic minorities yesterday that race relations in Britain would suffer if the government increased its immigration quotas.

Said Mrs Thatcher: "So far, apart from the Bristol riots and Brixton riots, we have done extremely well and I want that to continue.

"But if we go on having more and more people in, then we should have trouble.

She mentioned two particular problems in face of the immigration rules being eased--unemployment and population density.

"We have two and a half million unemployed here and rising," stated the prime minister. "I do not think it is time to increase the number of people coming in.

"I do not think that would be good for anyone--for any of the people here, whatever their background, for any of the people searching for jobs, and I do not think it would be good for race relations."

Referring to the present quotas, Mrs Thatcher said: The numbers are going to go on increasing. In this country we are more densely populated already than in India. We simply cannot go on taking more people. We cannot. It is a matter of commonsense.

"But I do think everyone should accept it because otherwise we will have more problems with race relations. I do not want that in any way."

Speaking in the television programme for Asia viewers, Mrs Thatcher made statements similar to those she expressed to Mrs Gandhi, the Indian prime minister, who asked her in New Delhi recently for the immigration limits to be raised.

Mrs Thatcher appeared on the programme partly to seek to allay anxiety among Asians about the nationality bill currently passing through Parliament.

She stressed that the bill had not been introduced "on racial grounds at all."

But, again as she told Mrs Gandhi, she stated that every country must have the right to decide to whom it granted its citizenship.

In attempted reassurance of the Asia community, Mrs Thatcher said: "We live under one law. We are entitled to the protection of the police force. That law is administered wholly impartially. It is not different because of the colour of one's skin."

TELEGRAPH: IRA EXPLOITATION OF STRIKE FAILS

LD041551 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 2 May 81 p 18

[Editorial: "Ulster in Perspective"]

[Text] In several important respects, the IRA's exploitation of Sands's hunger strike has so far proved a resounding failure. In Ulster there have been demonstrations which have caused trouble to the security forces, but generally people have assembled in hundreds rather than in thousands as they used to.

This does not mean that the IRA will not succeed in achieving another outbreak of inter-sectarian violence within the next few weeks. But if it does so it will be by means of deliberate orchestration. The plans for which, as Mr Atkins has revealed, have already been made. This elaborate strategy would hardly have been necessary had Sands and his fellow hunger strikers made anything like the impact on Ulster that the IRA would have wished.

On Britain that impact has been even less impressive. The terrorists have kept their well-known friends and provided Mr Benn with another chance to emphasise his eccentricity, but the opposition as a whole has stood four-square behind the government's refusal to compromise. As for the outside world, its reactions have fallen far short of IRA expectations. A degree of interest from professional American agitators was inevitable, but President Reagan has resisted all pressure to induce him to intervene. Whatever may be thought of the wisdom of the pope's decision to send an emissary to Ulster, it still appears that the primary purpose of that visit was not to extort concessions from the government but to dissuade the hunger strikers from suicide.

The danger is, of course, that the dramatic events of the last few weeks added to all that has gone before could make some faint hearts in Britain doubt whether Ulster is governable. The truth is that most of Ulster for most of the time is being governed in a peaceful and stable manner. Moreover, the consequences of abandoning this responsibility (prolonged anarchy in Ireland and a shattering triumph for terrorism within the United Kingdom) would be intolerable. If the IRA intensifies its campaign now, the most likely response from Britain is renewed determination to finish the job--by means more vigorous than have hitherto been used.

BRIEFS

UK-GDR COOPERATION AGREEMENT--London, 1 May (ADN)--A cooperation agreement in the fields of culture, education and science between the GDR and Great Britain for 1981 to 1983 was signed in London today by GDR Ambassador to Great Britain Martin Bierbach and the assistant under secretary of State in the British Foreign Office, Lord Lennox, on behalf of their governments. During the negotiations and at the signing, the representatives of the two governments expressed their satisfaction with the development of cultural-scientific relations. The agreement outlines new cooperation measures in the fields of culture, education and science. The two sides affirmed their confidence that this agreement will contribute to the further development of relations of peaceful coexistence between the GDR and Great Britain. [Text] [East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1913 GMT 1 May 81 LD]

PRESIDENT KIPRIANOU EMPHASIZES U.S. ROLE IN CYPRUS

NC041724 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] President of the Republic Kiprianou has reiterated that the U.S. has an obligation and that it can play a serious role in convincing Turkey to alter its position on the Cyprus issue.

Speaking to a seven-member Greek-American Educational and Progressive Association [AHEPA] delegation in Cyprus to be briefed on the latest Cyprus developments, President Kiprianou stated that lack of progress in the inter-Cypriot dialogue is exclusively due to Turkey's intransigent position, which aims at a legalization and perpetuation of faits accomplis in Cyprus.

We, Kiprianou underlined, will never accept such a solution. We will continue our efforts toward a just and honorable solution with good will and determination. If such a solution is to be found, he added, there must be a radical change in Turkey's position, because fundamentally we are not negotiating with the Turkish Cypriots but with Ankara.

During the meeting, President Kiprianou briefed the delegation on the latest developments in the Cyprus issue and expressed the gratitude of the government and the people of Cyprus for AHEPA's support of the Cypriot cause.

The delegation also met with the Greek Cypriot negotiator at the inter-Cypriot talks, Mr Ioannidhis.

KIPRIANOU APPROVES APPOINTMENT OF ENVOY TO PRC

NC041102 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] The Council of Ministers met today under the chairmanship of President of the Republic Kiprianou and among other things approved the appointment of the republic's high commissioner in Australia, Konstandinos Mousioutas, as ambassador to China with Canberra as his residence. The PRC Government has given its consent for this accreditation.

FOREIGN MINISTER RETURNS FROM OMAN, UAE VISITS

NC041334 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1300 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis returned to Cyprus this afternoon upon conclusion of his official visits to Oman and the UAE. This morning, Rolandhis was received by UAE President Shaykh Al Nahayyan and conferred on the Cyprus issue as well as on various bilateral and international questions. Yesterday afternoon, Rolandhis met with the UAE deputy prime minister and the head of the president's office. During these meetings, they exchanged views on the further strengthening of bilateral relations and on practical fields.

MINISTER OF FINANCE RETURNS FROM HAVANA MEETING

NC041530 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] Minister of Finance Avxendiou has returned to Cyprus after attending the second meeting of the Third World Economists Association in Havana. The meeting was attended by 600 delegates from 110 countries. The international economic crisis and its repercussions on the Third World were the topics of the meeting.

NATIONAL GUARD COMMANDER INAUGURATES ARMS PLANT

NC030655 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 3 May 81 p 1

[Report from "our correspondent"]

[Text] Limassol, 2 May--National Guard Commander Gen Ioannis Komninos inaugurated today a National Guard plant that will make all kinds of arms and spare parts, comparable to imported ones, for use by the National Guard.

Prayers were said by Metropolitan Khrisanthos of Limassol. The ceremony was attended by Bank of Cyprus Commissioner A. Patsalidhis, the district officer of Limassol, the mayor of Limassol and by other officials.

Speaking during the ceremony, General Komninos congratulated all those who had the idea to establish this plant.

DENKTAS WARNS OF AKEL INFLUENCE ON KIPRIANOU

NC040945 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 29 Apr 81 p 3

[Text] Nicosia (Special)--TFSC President Rauf Denktas has stated that the 12 September operation in Turkey has hindered certain dangerous movements in Cyprus and brought happiness to the Turkish Cypriot community.

In an exclusive statement to GUNAYDIN, Denktas drew attention to the fact that certain Turkish Cypriot organizations were collaborating with the Greek Cypriot communists. He added: "We must take a serious view of this eyewinking, handshaking and close collaboration with the Greek Cypriot communists. We must neither exacerbate nor underestimate the significance of these movements."

Denktas further stated that the AKEL communist party will support Kiprianou, who is a helpless leader, for another 5 years on condition that every decision taken will be in line with AKEL's wishes. He added: "Following the general elections to be held in the Greek Cypriot sector of the island, the communist AKEL party will continue to support Kiprianou from behind the scenes, and it will impose its will on him. The Soviet influence will then increase in Cyprus and an effort will be made to shift the Cyprus issue to an international arena. Moreover, the rightists and the leftists will be at each others' throats."

Denktas then stated that in view of these serious developments in Cyprus, the Turkish Cypriot community must remain loyal to its fatherland and nation and refrain from ideological views. He added that he was aware of the fact that a political party in the Turkish Cypriot side is pursuing a policy parallel to that of the Greek Cypriot communist party.

DENKTAS REITERATES NECESSITY FOR BIZONAL SOLUTION

TA041656 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the foundation of peace in Cyprus has been laid in a bizonal [last word in English] manner and that [words indistinct]. Replying to statements made by Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou during visits to various Greek Cypriot villages, Denktas said that the fact that the Turkish Cypriots are gathered in the north and the Greek Cypriots in the south is the result of the systematic Greek Cypriot pressure which lasted for many years.

Speaking at various Greek Cypriot villages, Kiprianou said that any solution that will obstruct the return of Greek Cypriots to their homes will not be acceptable and that the Turkish Cypriot community will be responsible for any impasse that might be reached at the intercommunal talks.

Denktas said that the Turkish Cypriot side is exerting efforts to rehabilitate those who have moved and secured all their rights and that it has no refugee problem. He added that no Turkish Cypriot will return to the life he was forced to live for 11 years. Denktas said that the Greek Cypriot administration, which declared itself the legitimate Government of Cyprus, which usurped the legitimate rights of the Turkish Cypriot people and which denied the cofounder status of the Turkish Cypriot community, will be responsible for an impasse at the intercommunal talks. Denktas added that a solution which takes into consideration the rights and status of the Turkish Cypriot community--cofounder of the Cyprus Republic--will be a (?honorable one). Denktas said: No one can deprive us of such a solution through word games. The actual plan of the Greek Cypriots is to bring the Cyprus problem to an international level and not to solve it in Cyprus. Those who think that they can solve the problem in accordance with their wishes once the problem is brought to the international level have been deceived. There are many reasonable people and countries. The Greek Cypriot leadership can not continue to deceive them all. They should not covet our territory and freedom.

In reply to a question concerning an arms factory built in the Greek Cypriot sector, Denktas said: They have built an arms factory in the Greek Cypriot sector. This is against the agreements. The necessary action will be taken on the issue. This is madness. It is a provocation that is difficult to forgive.

BAYRAK RADIO LIMITS BROADCASTS BECAUSE OF STRIKE

TA291053 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 29 Apr 81

[Text] The Bayrak Radio and Television [BRT] Union, Bay-Sen, is on strike today, except for broadcasting newscasts, because the union's problems are not being solved. The strike began at 0600 and will last until midnight. Only news bulletins will be broadcast on radio and television during that time.

Bay-Sen announced that the strike is being staged because its problems have been left unresolved for years; its members have not received their rights as Turkish Cypriot fighters, some of them were benefited from the civil law and some not and the BRT did not have legal status.

Bay-Sen said the BRT was the only establishment of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus to be so neglected.

The union asked for the people's tolerance and support for having had to silence the radio and television.

Meanwhile, the Federation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DEV-IS] issued a written press release announcing its support for Bay-Sen's strike. DEV-IS leader Hasan Sarica urged the speedy solution of Bay-Sen's problems.

BRIEFS

NO RAIF DENKTAS PARTY--Lefkosa [Nicosia] 28 April, (AA)--Raif Denktas, son of Turkish Federated State of Cyprus President Rauf Denktas, announced today that he has abandoned the idea of founding a new political party. After losing the primaries of the ruling National Unity Party of Rauf Denktas, Denktas Jr had announced a few days ago he would set up a new party opposing his father's. But he told a press conference today the Turkish Cypriot political scene was "not large enough to accommodate two Denktas's."
[Text] [Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1603 GMT 28 Apr 81 TA]

RALLIS RECALLS MITSOTAKIS TO ATHENS FOR TALKS

NC042138 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 4 May 81

[Text] Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis today communicated by telephone with Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis, who is in Rome attending the NATO spring conference.

Mitsotakis is now due to return to Athens tomorrow to brief the prime minister on the talks he has had in Rome, particularly those with the U.S. secretary of state and the Turkish foreign minister.

On Wednesday, the foreign minister will depart for West Germany.

PAPANDREOU SPEAKS ON RETURN FROM TALKS IN BULGARIA

NC302024 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Text] Papandreou, leader of the main opposition party and PASOK chairman, returned from Sofia today at the conclusion of his visit to Bulgaria at the personal invitation of State Council Chairman Zhivkov, with whom he had talks. Papandreou was received at Ellinikon airport by Alevras, PASOK parliamentary spokesman, deputies and movement cadres.

Speaking to journalists, Papandreou said:

[Begin recording] I return from Bulgaria with true feelings of emotion for the love the political leadership and the people have toward our people. I am convinced after my 3-day visit that Greek-Bulgarian relations with truly constitute in the future a peace axis that will contribute to changing the Balkan Peninsula into a home of peace free of nuclear arms and missiles. I am also convinced that the exchange of experiences and scientific knowhow, in what concerns both our agricultural production and new industrial branches, will be mutually beneficial. I believe that the start of this cooperation opens tremendous possibilities for both countries, and we would like to hope this for all the Balkan states.

I carry the greetings of the State Council chairman to President Karamanlis and the Greek people. I am certain that the contacts State Council Chairman Zhivkov will have with President Karamanlis will extend even more the possibilities of cooperation that already exist.

[Question] When will these contacts be held?

[Answer] In Rhodes at the end of May. [end recording].

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 088 7 May 1981

CONTENTS

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Human Rights Commission Rejects Haughey Appeal [DAILY TELEGRAM 6 May] B 1
EC Commission Seeks Japanese Auto Export Curbs B 1

AUSTRIA

Iranian Students' Sitdown Strikes Continue E 1
Iraqi Economic Delegation Arrives for Visit [DIE PRESSE 6 May] E 1
Foreign Ministry 'Disarmament Affairs' Section [DIE PRESSE 28 Apr] E 1

BENELUX

BELGIUM

Foreign Minister Discusses Africa, Arms Sales [LE SOIR 24 Apr] F 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Genscher, Schmidt View Rome NATO Meeting J 1
Genscher: Positive Result J 1
Schmidt: 'Splendid Document' J 1
Chancellor Schmidt's 30 April Television Interview J 2
State Secretary Van Well Briefs Israeli Ambassador J 10
Israeli Statement J 11
Arab League Official Comments on Schmidt Remarks J 11
Reportage on Bangladesh President's Visit J 11
Ministers Sign Agreements J 11
Rahman Concludes Bonn Meetings J 12
Lambsdorff Meets Hungarian Foreign Trade Minister J 12

FRANCE

Chirac Urges Supporters To Vote for Giscard K 1
Candidates Make 3 May Campaign Speeches in Paris [LE MONDE 5 May] K 1
Giscard d'Estaing K 1
Francois Mitterrand K 3
President Notes Decision To Replace Pluton Missile [LE MONDE 6 May] K 4

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Foreign Ministry Names New Ambassador to France L 1
Colombo Interviewed on NATO Council Session L 1
PCI's Reichlin on Implications of PSI Congress [L'UNITA 29 Apr] L 2

PORTUGAL

NATO Aircraft Carrier Base Planned for Porto Santo M 1
Regional Agreement M 1
Communique on Energy Secretary's Visit to Angola M 1

SPAIN

King's Military Aide Injured in Madrid Bombing N 1
Arrest of Suspect N 1
Newspapers Cite Reported USSR Plans Toward Spain N 1

CYPRUS

Intercommunal Talks Meeting Discusses Varosha R 1
Bayrak Radio Report R 1
Next Meeting 3 June R 2
Guard Commander Leaves for Athens at Tour's End R 2
Denktas Replies to Kiprianou Allegations [Bayrak Radio] R 2
Briefs: Minister Returns From Yugoslavia R 2

GREECE

Mitsotakis Leaves for Talks in Bonn 6 May S 1
Rallis Replies to Recent Papandreou Interview [I KATHIMERINI 6 May] S 1
Opposition Reacts to U.S. Bases Agreement S 2
Papandreou Opposition [TO VIMA 6 May] S 2
KKE-Interior Statement [I AVYI 6 May] S 2
KKE-Exterior View [RIZOSPASTIS 6 May] S 2
Papandreou Favors Denuclearization of Balkans [TO VIMA 6 May] S 3

HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION REJECTS HAUGHEY APPEAL

LD061217 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 6 May 81 p 2

[Alan Osborn dispatch: "Haughey Plea Rejected"]

[Text] Brussels--The European Commission for Human Rights rejected yesterday the call by Mr Haughey, Irish Prime Minister, for an urgent recommendation on the conditions of prisoners in Northern Ireland's jails. The Commission said it had "no jurisdiction to consider any situation or make any recommendations without being seized of an application brought before it under the relevant provisions of the European Convention on Human Rights."

Noting that Robert Sands, the leading hunger striker and recently elected MP, who died early yesterday, had not associated himself with the application made to the commission by his sister, the Commission said it considered there was "no application before it by Robert Sands." It added: "Neither is the Commission at present seized of an application by or on behalf of any other prisoner in the Maze prison which would enable it to act within the framework of the convention."

Separately yesterday the Socialist group in the European Parliament claimed that both the British Government and the IRA could and should have acted to prevent Sand's death." The Socialists also said that the IRA could have persuaded Sands to end his hunger strike.

EC COMMISSION SEEKS JAPANESE AUTO EXPORT CURBS

OW061327 Tokyo KYODO in English 1251 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] Brussels, 6 May (KYODO)--The European Community (EC) commission decided at a regular meeting held in Strasbourg, Wednesday to ask Japan to curb its automobile exports to Europe.

A spokesman said the EC commission would make a concrete proposal to a council meeting of EC foreign ministers scheduled for May 18 and 19 on negotiations with Japan to conclude a similar restraint agreement as the one concluded last week between Japan and the United States to curb Japanese car exports to the United States.

However, the negotiations are expected to face difficulty since Japan is likely to resist voluntary controls on its car exports to all EC member countries because of strict import regulations on Japanese cars in Italy and France.

Wilhelm Haferkamp, vice president of the EC Commission, had said Japan's self-restraint on its car exports to Europe would be able to solve the unsettled car export friction between Japan and Europe.

The decision came out of fears in Europe of a flood of Japanese cars diverted from the U.S. market as a result of the Japan-U.S. restraint agreement.

After Japan promised to curb exports to West Germany and three Benelux countries in Japan-EC high-level consultations last January, the EC Foreign Ministers' Council introduced the monitoring system on cars and two other import items from Japan last February.

IRANIAN STUDENTS' SITDOWN STRIKES CONTINUE

AU070738 [Editorial Report] Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German on 5 May carries a report stating that a group of 50 Iranian students are protesting by a sitdown strike at the Iranian Embassy--which started on Monday, 4 May--against the Iranian Government's blocking of money transfers to Austria from their families. The report is based on a press release by the students. The paper adds that the students had been "admitted to the embassy building on Monday morning without any difficulties" and that "it will depend on the ambassador how long the protest action will last," as he can ask Austrian authorities to evacuate the embassy building.

Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German on 7 May carries the following report, headlined "Sit-down Strikes in Vienna": "Groups of Iranian students, numbering 20-50, are currently holding sitdown strikes in three different places in Vienna--the Iranian Embassy, the Austrian Information Service for Development Policy and the Central Committee of the Austrian Students Association--to protest the blocking of money transfers for their studies from Iran.

"The demonstration at the embassy began as early as Monday and, according to a spokesman of the demonstrators, it is to continue. At the same time the representative of the Iranian students stressed the demonstrators' peaceful intentions."

IRAQI ECONOMIC DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR VISIT

AU061217 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 6 May 81 p 9

["Exclusive" DIE PRESSE report: "Iraq Seeks To Strengthen its Economic Cooperation With Austria"]

[Text] Vienna--A 14-member Iraqi delegation headed by State Secretary (Subhi Yassin), who is in charge of Iraqi industry and minerals, is at present in Vienna to sound out the possibilities for including Austrian firms on a larger scale in implementing the current Iraqi economic plan covering the period until 1985.

In addition to industry and agriculture, it is especially the Austrian building industry that is in the focus of the Iraqi guests' interest. They want to take advantage especially of Austrian building firms' experiences in hotel construction. Last year Austria imported 7 billion schillings worth of goods from Iraq, while exports to that Arab country merely amounted to 2.2 billion schillings. The import surplus largely results from oil imports.

FOREIGN MINISTRY 'DISARMAMENT AFFAIRS' SECTION

AU281321 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 28 Apr 81 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "GUD"]

[Text] Vienna--In view of the fact that military-technical problems are playing an increasingly important part in international relations, the Vienna Foreign Ministry is considering the establishment of a special section for disarmament affairs. The idea of a European disarmament conference, which was proposed by Moscow and is in principle supported by Vienna, also makes it necessary to keep Austrian diplomats up to date regarding modern arms technology. The establishment of a "missle section" was suggested at the ambassadors' conference that ended last weekend in Vienna. At this conference, 33 Austrian ambassadors posted in West and East Europe, the United States and at the United Nations, the European Community and the Council of Europe noted a general listlessness regarding the policy of detente, and reached agreement on measures for Austria's further integration in Europe. In this context, European transit traffic through Austria, and the country's trade deficit with the European Community, remain the two crucial problems for the Austrian Foreign Ministry.

BELGIUM

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES AFRICA, ARMS SALES

LD040815 Brussels LE SOIR in French 24 Apr 81 p 2

[Text] On Wednesday, at the end of the Parliamentary Foreign Affairs Committee meeting, Foreign Minister Charles-Ferdinand Nothomb stated that Nguza Karl-I-Bond's resignation from his post as head of the Zairian Government had in no way altered relations between our country and Zaire. The Belgian government regards this resignation as a purely internal affair.

The minister specified that Mr Nguza's resignation was not discussed during the committee meeting and he added that Mr Nguza had entered Belgium in an entirely legal way and had not requested any special status.

In addition, Mr Nothomb stated that some of the seven points which the commission has to examine had been settled. The discussion on Belgium's African policy was concluded. The Saharan question was withdrawn from the agenda. The minister took the opportunity to recall that Belgium had adopted a neutral stance at the United Nations and had not come down on any side since it holds the view that it is up to the regional bodies and the OAU's African members to do so.

Finally at the committee meeting the minister gave three replies to questions on arms smuggling.

In a note on the export of arms and munitions which the foreign minister submitted to the parliamentary committee, he points out that there is a de facto balance between exports and imports. The government exercises its authority on exports in all cases, any deal being governed by an export license granted by the Economic Affairs Ministry, which can give an opinion on the appropriateness of the planned transaction. Each decision is based on a complex political choise whose rules cannot easily be codified. Other ministries, such as the Development Cooperation and Defense Ministries, may be involved in the consultations which might take place on that occasion. When there are differences of opinion the decision is taken by the Ministrial Foreign Policy Committee chaired by the prime minister.

A number of principles were defined in the note drawn up by the foreign minister:

Safeguarding the country's internal and external security involves maintaining arms production for the country's needs and the purchase of vital arms from other countries.

Maintaining a limitation on arms and ammunition sales to the governments of states with which Belgium has diplomatic relations and noninterference in the internal affairs of other states.

Protecting Belgium's economic interests and systematically discouraging the import and export of arms unless it is shown that the operation complements a Belgian export or creates work in the country.

Immediately suspending arms supplies to all countries launching a conflict with their neighbors.

The need to maintain commercial secrecy is recognized while accepting the principle of providing a limited parliamentary committee with regional statistics of Belgian arms exports. The Ministerial Committee for Economic Coordination should cooperate with the circles concerned to study the possibilities of readapting the industrial sectors involved in the production of defense equipment.

The examination of the transfer of technology on the basis of views put forward by the ministerial departments concerned will be continued, as will the Belgian Government's efforts to give the arms industry a European framework. Finally, the justice and middle class ministers will examine the status of the arms, manufacturing business.

GENSCHER, SCHMIDT VIEW ROME NATO MEETING

Genscher: Positive Result

DW061233 Baden Baden Suedwestfunk Network in German 1140 GMT 5 May 81

[Reporter Kusch interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] What is the outstanding result of this NATO council meeting in Rome, and how will it go on?

[Answer] I would like to cite three points. First, NATO has given a sign of its inner cohesion. Second, it has given a sign of its perseverance in continuing the agreed policy. Third, it has given a signal indicating the will to negotiate and to have talks with the Soviet Union. The American statements on the resumption of negotiations on medium-range arms this year were of decisive importance. I must tell you that I consider this NATO session significant and I positively assess the result of these very serious and intensive talks.

[Question] Did U.S. policy, or the concept of U.S. foreign policy, become clearer in this meeting?

[Answer] U.S. foreign policy is in a state of formulation. The important elements of this meeting have been outlined most precisely. My statement in the beginning that the principles of Western policy have been confirmed indicates that they are being supported by all governments including the new U.S. Government.

[Question] Will negotiations with the Soviet Union be more difficult? What problems will come up, and with what periods of time must one reckon?

[Answer] If you mean negotiations on medium-range missiles, they will be difficult, like all disarmament negotiations. It is important to handle the matter most constructively and intensely. It would be absolutely wrong to mention a period of time. It is naturally our intention to achieve the aim as quickly as possible. The West will try to achieve that. No doubts exist that negotiations will be complicated with every additional missile the Soviets deploy threatening us.

[Question] You have also debated Poland. What can be considered as the result of these talks?

[Answer] A confirmation of the policy we have pursued for a long time, namely, persistent noninterference, preparedness to give economic aid, stabilization of the framework conditions through the East-West dialogue and efforts aimed at detente and disarmament.

Schmidt: 'Splendid Document'

LD061644 Hamburg DPA in German 1454 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 6 May (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt told his cabinet today that the communique of the NATO conference in Rome is a "splendid document" of social-liberal government policy. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker said that Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher was congratulated on the Rome results because the Federal Government's policy largely prevailed.

In his report on the international situation, the federal chancellor welcomed the impetus given to the American-Soviet dialogue. So far, it has been conducted in Washington with Ambassador Anatoliy Dobrynin. It will proceed at the foreign minister level at the UN General Assembly meeting in September and is to take the form of negotiations within the SALT framework before the end of the year.

The talks on medium-range missiles will be conducted separately to avoid delays which could be occasioned by the longer term SALT process. The result of the negotiations will be tied up with SALT.

At today's cabinet meeting, Schmidt stressed the parallel provisions of NATO's twin decision and referred to the passages in the Rome communique which clearly reflect German influence.

On the Israeli-German controversy, Becker refused to comment on continued Israeli attacks. The government spokesman said: "I don't propose to add even one word to what I said on Monday." The Federal Government believes that enough has been said and doesn't wish to contribute to a "verbal escalation." It is assumed that in his government statement tomorrow the federal chancellor will speak in similar terms. It is thought that the views of the Federal Government have been brought to the attention of the Israeli ambassador, who was called to the German Foreign Ministry for a briefing today.

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT'S 30 APRIL TELEVISION INTERVIEW

DW060913 Munich ARD Television Network in German 1815 GMT 30 Apr 81

[Excerpts from interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in the feature "Television Interview" by correspondents Carl Weiss, ARD; Hans-Dieter Barbier, SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG; Matthias Walden, DIE WELT, and moderator Rudolf Muehlfenzl in Bonn--recorded]

[Text] [Question] No communique and no agreement was signed during your visit [to Saudi Arabia], but both sides clearly demonstrated and stressed interest in further economic cooperation. In view of this state of affairs, naturally arise such questions as: How long will one be able to turn down Saudi requests for arms? Or, formulating it differently, what does your statement mean in this connection, a statement you made there, that you don't want to supply tanks for the time being?

[Answer] May I say something first without wanting to evade your question--I will come right back to it, so you can watch for it--something about the purpose of this visit which the two of us, Graf Lambsdorff and I, made to Riyadh, the capital of Saudi Arabia. We were, by the way, accompanied not only by experts from the ministries here in Bonn, from the Federal Government, but we were also accompanied by four outstanding German scientists. Graf Lambsdorff, who had to take part in further talks in Riyadh, could not take part in the Abu Dhabi talks.

You said that neither a communique nor a contract have been issued; well, this didn't happen during my previous visit there either, nor is it customary there. This was my second visit to Saudi Arabia in 5 years. As far as I am concerned, it isn't desirable to pursue the idea that politicians, top politicians of various states, should meet only when something needs to be signed. This would be mere show business. The decisive point is that they talk, meaning, that they talk and listen. And this is what happened this time, too--talking and listening.

The reason for the visit was the immensely increased significance of Saudi Arabia and also of the other Arab states especially during the most recent years. It is necessary to make quite clear that, leaving the United States aside, outside of Europe, Saudi Arabia is our most important partner economically and politically. Not all people here in Germany perhaps see it that way yet. Moreover, this country, but also some other Arab states--just think of Somalia's attitude toward us today as against that of 4 years ago, or think of the United Arab Emirates which comprise seven emirates on the Gulf--show a great, open, friendly attitude toward us Germans and expect help and advice from us in a variety of fields. We Germans also have an historical advantage. In other places, we are terribly burdened with guilt which a preceding generation imposed on itself and also on us. The whole moral, historical baggage, which I would like to paraphrase with the name of Auschwitz, burdens the present generation just as it burdens our foreign policy. We do have burdens from the past with respect to the Netherlanders, the Danes, the Norwegians whose countries we invaded under Hitler's leadership; this further holds true for the French, the Greeks, the Italians, to list just a few.

Thus, these Arab nations are the only ones in the world who have not had any adverse experiences with the Germans. This shouldn't be forgotten, This does play a role in the open friendliness with which they approach us.

[Question] What commanded the center of attention was the question of whether we can deliver arms to them. Presumably, you would say that it was more in the center than is justified. What you said was that arms deliveries to areas such as Saudi Arabia require the appropriate support of parliament. Was this a statement of fact or the announcement that you will be endeavoring to gain such appropriate support, pushing and approving the issue? What is correct anyway? The reports do contain nuances.

[Answer] It is incorrect that this issue commanded the center of our talks in the two Arab states. This is definitely not true. It did command the center of attention in the German publicized discussion. That is true. Naturally, we talked about these questions there as well, and it is absolutely clear that I said that this [arms deliveries] isn't possible at this time. For the time being--I haven't used this phrase. It was Mr Muehlfenzl who used it. Perhaps this comes from some news agency report. I didn't use it. What I said was: not possible at this time. And you are right, Mr Weiss. I said and explained that we have principles for the implementation of the laws regulating the export of arms and military equipment which are valid in our country, principles which are 10 years old, meaning that it was 10 years ago that they were last redefined. Similar principles existed before them. And I said that the Federal Government, as well as some forces in the Bundestag, are about to draw up a balance sheet covering the experiences gathered from 10 years of practical implementation of these principles. Possibly in the course of the fall, this will lead to amendments to these principles or to an adaptation to the [answer interrupted].

[Question] This is all my question is about--whether this is being stepped up.

[Answer] Possibly. And should they be amended--surely, they will not remain exactly as they are--it is definite that the basic line will stay, namely, that we will not allow military arms capacities to emerge in this country, which later might crave orders to ensure their employment. This basic line will stay under all circumstances, namely, restraint in the export of military materiels and arms, but only when the principles will possibly have been slightly rephrased in the light of experiences gained that requests addressed to us by various countries will be judged on the basis of these rephrased principles.

It is important to me to tell the German public once again here and now, and in no uncertain terms, that the head of government of Saudi Arabia, Crown Prince Fahd--whom I know very well, we have met many times and discussed politics and world affairs--has declared quite clearly: We haven't advanced any requests to the Federal Republic of Germany. Should the Federal Republic of Germany deem it possible in the future to expand cooperation with us, with Saudi Arabia, also in this field--the delivery of military equipment and arms--we would welcome this indeed. It is highly important to keep this in mind, in contrast to many newspaper reports and excited statements by politicians which I read in Germany over the past 3 weeks and in the past 3 days.

[Question] You emphasized, and I think justly so, that we are being met with genuine friendship. But do friendly contacts not perhaps indicate concrete commitments to help whenever the desire for help is uttered?

[Answer] Yes indeed. Friendship means the moral commitment to exhibit solidarity. After all, it isn't just a friendship commanded by moral reasons, but also a friendship emerging from the identity of certain interests. This demands solidarity. However, each individual country is in a different position. Just think of the debates currently being waged in the U.S. Senate over the delivery of certain military equipment to Saudi Arabia by the United States. This goes to show that this sort of thing raises questions in other countries as well, of course. At the beginning of the social-liberal coalition in Germany, we even tightened the principles for arms deliveries that had been valid at the time, with me having been one of the major pushers of the issue.

What we did was build the hurdles for arms exports even higher than we found them, and we made them even more exclusive. This means that we are the very country in the world which imposes the greatest restraint on itself with respect to arms exports. No other country in the world imposes such restraint on itself.

[Question] Quite obviously, your interlocutors didn't say that they might obtain the equipment for external security somewhere else, that they could imagine remaining in an economic exchange with the Federal Republic outside the field of arms in the long run. Don't we have to establish clarity before the end of the year in the domestic discussion on the question of whether the guidelines you cited might continue to be generally valid; and mustn't we quite concretely clear up the question of whether we must familiarize ourselves with the idea of complying with such wishes no matter how carefully they have been advanced?

[Answer] I will not be tied down to schedules, Mr Barbier. What I mentioned there was years. At this time, I fail to see any need to modify this. I cannot quite share your assumption about the basic attitude over there. But then, I don't like to talk in terms of assumptions about the motives of my interlocutors. For me, this would mean poor style. You, as a journalist, may do that.

I do believe that the German people and their representatives, the Bundestag and the parties therein represented, which are also split within themselves without exception over this issue, will some day have to carefully and rationally deal with the overall situation. This will have to be done first in a general and abstract way with respect to the principles intended to be applicable to the whole world, and then with respect to certain individual countries about which we know that they either have filed applications here or about which we hear--as we now do from Saudi Arabia--that they would be pleased if we were prepared to meet their requests.

The discussion must not be waged emotionally. Some Germans, expecially younger people, would like best to live in a world in which nobody need assume any responsibility for any trouble. Now let me remind you of one thing: In a terrible situation, an Arab country, a member state of the Arab League, namely, Somalia, helped us and allowed us to liberate our Lufthansa plane from the hands of terrorists through our border police officers on its own territory, a sovereign land. This is an incredible act of solidarity. When this was over, I had to report to the Bundestag, recalling that during the Schleyer kidnapping--four of his companions had already been murdered and Schleyer, too, was killed in the end--that we were asked to release a certain number of murderers and terrorists, convicted and suspected, whereupon allegedly Schleyer would be released. We refused, acting in keeping with the principle that we don't want to neglect anything nor become culpable for anything.

When all this was over, I told the Bundestag that our moral yardstick wasn't to neglect anything, but neither was it to become culpable for anything. But we went ahead and decided what we did in many cases, and also in many cases we decided what we should not do for reasons prevailing here or there. But in the end, who of us would venture to say that everything we decided was right?

The bad thing is that many people in our country, and expecially young people, fancy that decisions could be made in real life, in the real world, about which one could definitely say later on that this was morally correct. And because they shirk decision-making because a hazard is linked with any decision, whatever that decision may be, and because each decision has its pros and cons, they would like it best if they didn't have to make any decisions themselves, raising themselves above all that.

I tell you quite plainly that even a decision for the next 10 years on staying out of any arms deliveries to foreign countries to the extent that they aren't allies, may well entail considerable risks, at any rate considerable hazards for the security interests of our own state, I will not even refer to the economic interests, because they constitute a different field.

[Question] You said that our defense system has been geographically finalized, while the concept of German security interests has not. How should I understand this in view of the specific situation of the region from which you have just come?

[Answer] What this meant to say, and what I mean now as well--and I would like to repeat it—is that I would object if somebody says: I would like to extend the area defined in length and breadth by the North Atlantic treaty, an area of joint defense, up to, say, the Arab Gulf or to the southern Atlantic. In that case, I would say: count us out, please. We, by the way, would not be the only ones to raise objections. We don't wish to assume any joint defense commitments in the southern Atlantic or in the Arabian Gulf.

[Question] Therefore, no Bundeswehr in Saudi Arabia?

[Answer] Exactly, this is what we don't want. But it is absolutely clear that our security would be affected if military conflicts cut off the oil flow to Europe, and that our security is likewise affected if Afghanistan is invaded by force of arms. The fighting continues and many surrounding peoples become concerned that this might happen to them as well. I don't think that anybody, at least not a moral person, doubts that this threatens our freedom as well. To that extent, our security interests extend further than the closely defined area of the North Atlantic treaty, and it is my firm conviction that this should remain closely defined. The great powers have interests which they can manifest militarily outside this area as well. We aren't a great power nor should we develop any ambition to become one.

[Question] A taxi driver told me he saw a cartoon today in the paper showing you snarled up with an oil barrel, a Leopard tank and a mountain of debts with a Saudi standing there telling you: I could relieve you of one of those things--naturally, he meant the tank.

I don't expect you to confirm the joke of the cartoon, but our discussion here is naturally burdened by the difficulty you find yourself in, and therefore I almost hesitate to ask you in view of the arms request made of us, which we can take for granted despite all the reservations, how you yourself would decide if you were permitted to on this controversial situation and discussion. If you are in favor of it--you haven't said so clearly--you suddenly would have Franz Josef Strauss and Zimmermann at your side. What must actually be examined to permit you to establish your authority regarding guidelines and do so publicly?

[Answer] This isn't a matter of authority for guidelines. This is a matter needing the agreement of the Bundestag majority. In other words, one needs the majority of the government coalition, it must form the majority. I cannot say how the CDU will decide. There are some who would act as you just said in connection with Strauss. There are others belonging to the German political group on the right such as your publisher Axel. Springer who is of a strictly contrary opinion. Mr Geissler is of a contrary opinion, Mr Biedenkopf is of a contrary opinion. I only want to say that different opinions exist in the CDU exactly as they do among us, the Social Democrats, and exactly as they do in the FDP. The existence of these different opinions is necessary and they must be carefully examined. If I could produce the result of the examination just like that, I wouldn't have given directions to work carefully on it. Your cartoon, however, was not quite correct. [Answer interrupted]

[Question] It wasn't mine.

[Answer] Alright, but you introduced it here. The matter with the mountain of debts isn't quite correct. Certainly, we have taken credits from various people and banks, not just we alone and not just in Saudi Arabia. We are in good company there. Our leading power of the alliance, for example, also belongs to this group. It is a fact that this country has the biggest surplus and that it is at present the biggest creditor in the world with regard to new money. This is the result of the oil price explosion.

Regarding the oil barrel--the taxi driver could not operate his car without oil, without gasoline. I must defend myself against ridiculing oil.

Tomorrow is May Day. Tomorrow, the German workers will demonstrate in united German trade unions of the DGB for full employment, social security and for codetermination. Full employment without oil--that would be impossible. Full employment is a morally most correct and justified demand. It is almost a bit too high a demand. Nobody can fulfill it at the moment. But even a high employment rate, as envisaged by the stability and growth law, cannot be achieved without energy, without oil. It is impossible to completely do away with oil. We have found substitutes for quite a bit of oil through coal, brown coal, natural gas and nuclear energy. Oil will be used for a long, long time in the future, such as for our transportation systems on the ground, in the air and in the water. Please don't ridicule oil.

We get one quarter of our oil from Saudi Arabia, and Saudi Arabia plays a most benevolent role for the whole world in matters of oil. It has always tried--Mr Barbier, and probably you too, Mr Muehlfenzl, know more about it than I--it has tried for years to keep the oil price down. When no oil came from Iran or Iraq, the Saudis produced more oil up to the limits of their technical capacity to keep the oil price from exploding even more. They have tried very hard in the interest of the whole world. The interest of developing countries who depend on oil are even more grave than those of industrial countries. We can always manage somehow with our balance of payments, but the poor developing countries have gotten into a terrible situation due to the oil price explosion.

[Question] What degree of dependence results from this chain which we must take seriously because we must take oil seriously? How free are we still?

[Answer] A certain dependence exists. We get oil from Libya as well. We get natural gas from Algeria. We get some of our natural gas from the Soviet Union; some from Holland. They are not overly friendly either as regards the price for natural gas. We are dependent in many ways. We have experienced with regard to our nuclear powerplants that we depend on American and Canadian supplies. Under President Jimmy Carter, they were about to cut us off. We are dependent in many fields. We must, therefore, scatter our dependence or--as the businessman would put it--scatter or distribute the risks. Naturally, we must use our domestic coal and brown coal as a basis, because there we do not depend on foreign countries--though there are still risks--but we do not depend on foreign countries.

[Question] Did you also touch on the issue of bilateral oil contracts. Will it be possible in the future--with reservations or without--to obtain on a privileged basis guaranteed quantities at certain prices or will a so-called free world market continue to exist, in which we will have to take part?

[Answer] I haven't discussed that. It isn't my task to have contract talks for German oil companies. That must be done by others. That is not the task of the federal chancellor or of the Federal Republic of Germany. I don't hold sales talks or purchase talks. I have never done that in 7 years of chancellorship. I don't do it now and I will not do it in the future.

[Question] Well, you yourself created some of the expectations. You yourself greatly stressed the economic power of this country prior to your departure.

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] So certain expectations existed. People viewed your talks on tanks in the same way they looked at the possibly nonexistent oil talks. That could be.

[Answer] Yes, some journalists made things up in that regard. Naturally, I discussed the economic significance of this country beforehand, also that of the United Emirates, of Kuwait and Bahrain. And afterwards, I will discuss it even more. You said, Mr Barbier, that Saudi Arabia is obviously prepared to bear a certain measure of responsibility for the economy of the world. That was put very mildly. The awareness of responsibility is most outspoken there, regardless of whether oil is involved, oil prices, oil quantities, whether the international monetary fund is involved and the role it plays in the world or whether it is the World Bank. There is a most explicit awareness of responsibility. It exists, by the way, also in the form of experts, of experts whose knowledge, ability and experience in all these fields is impressive, really impressive.

[Question] How do the Saudis actually see the threat emanating from the world? It has been said after all that when Secretary of State Haig outlined for you the direct Soviet threat as an immediate danger, that Israel, the PLO and the whole area were of more concern to you. Is it perhaps correct to say that they feel threatened by Marxism, which they, however, recognize as a radical socialism of the Palestinians and their own people? What is more important for the Saudis--holy places, Israel?

[Answer] Well, I believe that all of this must be taken into account. Everything plays its part, though with varying significance.

[Question] What matters after all is what they would use the weapons for.

[Answer] I understand the meaning of your question, Mr Weiss. To begin with, just let us deal with the external threat, which for Saudi Arabia comes from the south and the north. From the south, it is South Yemen's massive incorporation with armed forces into the Warsaw Pact system. Previously, the name of the base was Aden; today it is a Soviet base. Facing Saudia Arabia is an immense Soviet influence, a military influence, brought to bear in Ethiopia. There is the attempt to establish a military influence in Somalia, the attempt made by South Yemen to achieve unification with North Yemen one way or the other--and this, at the same time, concerns large masses of people--and there is an attempt to create pressure from below in the Arabian Peninsula. Then there is the occupation of Afghanistan; the difficult situation it created for Pakistan, a country with which all Arabs traditionally have very close and immediate relations. That is the threat from the north. In this military threat, the Israelis play no major part from the Saudi point of view, if I see this correctly.

On the other hand, it is amazing to see the solidarity with their Arab brothers who had to flee their homeland or were expelled from their homeland as so-called Palestinians, to see how this solidarity dominates their awareness and reaches up to the shores of the Arabian Gulf. This plays a giant part. It was certainly quite impressive for our German journalists who flew with us--60 of your colleagues participated in the visit--to witness at two press conferences how journalists over there had only this problem in mind and not the problem German journalists had in mind, namely, the problem as to whether weapons or tanks would be delivered.

To sum it up, it must be said that it is the military, or to put it better, the strategic aspect which plays a very big part for the Saudis, because here we have not only the military but the political encompassing of an entire region through Soviet expansion.

Solidarity with the Palestinians is a quite different problem. It isn't a military problem. The holy places in Jerusalem, to be sure, play a very great part for such a religious-minded people and the royal family. But irrespective of all this, the Saudi Government is acting very prudently and very moderately. Try to find an example in the past 25 years. They didn't march into Lebanon. They likewise do not drop bombs in Lebanon. Rather, they are people who want to bring about peace the way we must hope for, namely, through speaking, listening and negotiating.

[Question] The Israelis would not accept this representation of yours. They would feel threatened from the Arabian Peninsula, including from Saudi Arabia. What would be your response?

[Answer] I believe that you, too, need not orient yourself by what the Israeli papers are writing. I have contacts with a number of leading Israeli politicians who would not make the mistake of treating all Arabs alike, Mr Weiss. They would make quite a distinction between Al-Qadhdhafi's Libya and As-Sadat's Egypt, between Saudi Arabia under the leadership of the king and Crown Prince Fahd and Syria under Al-Asad. They would never treat them all alike. They also know that this cannot be done. They likewise would treat Jordan differently. It is, after all, remarkable that As-Sadat lost the support of most of his Arab friends not immediately after his trip to Jerusalem--which was a great and courageous act--and his speech before the Knesset in Jerusalem, but actually only later on when it turned out that the Camp David process and its principles in the Arab view lagged behind what they feel As-Sadat had said publicly in the Knesset in Jerusalem.

[Question] NATO talks will begin in Rome on Monday. Are you agreed with our American friends in your assessment of the security interests of the region?

[Answer] What region?

[Question] The Arab region.

[Answer] I believe that all of us, our American friends as well, have to watch out that we don't make the attempt, which surely is doomed to failure, of trying to persuade our Arab friends or our Israeli friends that all this is nothing but the result of the East-West conflict. That isn't the case. Rather, the conflict between the Israelis and Palestinians which extends to all other Arabs as a result of solidarity has nothing to do with communists, yes or no. However, Mr Weiss was right a while ago when he was talking about Saudi Arabia's particular fear of communism or Marxism--as you said. This has nothing to do with East-West. This should not be misunderstood. What they would like to see in their region is stability and peace, if possible without calling in the superpowers--having bases without them being too close. This is absolutely unequivocal. They know that as a result they themselves must contribute to stability in the region.

Mr Meuhlfenzel, I formulated it the way I would formulate it for Europe as well: Political and military balance is an inalienable prerequisite for peace, but this alone doesn't suffice. If it has been achieved or is sfaeguarded, then one must--based on the conviction that the other side doesn't possess a superiority over me and the other side is convinced that I don't have superiority over him, but that a balance between us exists--then, based on this balance, one must talk with one another and have negotiations. The main negotiating objective, of course, is to bring about the mutual renunciation of force. This requires that they first of all recognize each other as negotiating partners. Indeed, even this has not happened up to now.

[Question] Your fellow party member Annemarie Renger said the following with regard to the arms deal: This is a moral question alone. And here she meant Israel. How much weight does the moral aspect have in your considerations, which aspect, after all, doesn't stem from the mere fact that Israeli newspapers are opposed to such a possibility? The Israeli Government, the opposition leader, have come out against it, Jews all over the world have done so and the German-Jewish communities, too. Thus, it ranges from objections to dismay. What weight does it carry for you? Why have you been in Riyadh and not in Jerusalem? Why have you for years now kept Israel waiting and hoping in vain for a visit from you? Does this moral aspect burden you to a large degree, not at all or insignificantly?

[Answer] Mr Walden, Mrs Renger and I have known each other for a quarter of a century now and can rely upon one another in every moral or fundamentally political respect.

But I want to point out once again that in the Palestinian conflict one cannot give all the moral considerations to one party and shrug one's shoulders with regard to the other party. That doesn't work. That doesn't work in particular if one is a German who lives in a divided nation and raises the moral claim to the right to self-determination for the German people. In that case, one must also recognize the moral claim of the Palestinian people's right to self-determination.

[Question] Wouldn't we have forfeited this claim if we had tried to realize it with bombs and terror?

[Answer] Wait a moment, wait a moment, those who are throwing bombs aren't the only ones. I think this terrorism is really bad, but they aren't the only ones. Let me say one thing with regard to the PLO: If we in the West consider the PLO on principle to be terrorists and if we don't learn to differentiate between the various factions within the PLO--the PLO after all is nothing but an umbrella organization for various organizations--if we continue to do so, then this is the surest way of driving the PLO into Moscow's arms. This isn't reasonable, not to mention that it is also a moral question for me as to whether we take the position vis-a-vis the displaced persons and refugees from the West Bank and the East Bank, as one says nowadays, meaning from the West Bank and from the East Bank of the Jordan River, that their situation doesn't concern us much.

For me, this is a tragedy of Greek proportions that Jews after 2,000 years at long last were able to found their own state and that it should not be possible to consolidate and secure it in harmony with the neighboring peoples. Some day the Israelis must recognize the right of the Palestinians to decide their own destiny and who is to represent them. This cannot be determined by anyone else but the Palestinians themselves. At any rate, it is up to them to decide as to whether they are going to set up or want to set up their own state. They must have the right to organize themselves into a state.

The Palestinians must acknowledge some day that like any other people in the world the Israelis, too, have the right to live as a state in recognized and secure borders. If only both of them would approach each other in the awareness that both of them are still faced with recognizing each other, then something would have been gained. But up to now, they don't even accept one another as interlocutors.

For me, this is a tragedy because I wish from the bottom of my heart for the Jews that the state they founded will last and that it will not be endangered through a policy which is not farsighted enough.

[Question] May I return for just a moment to the state of German-Arab relations? You said in the beginning that you were coming from a region of the world in which we are offered a great deal of friendship without any burden of the past. Does the risk exist [as heard] or do our friends know how to properly assess our economic and political capabilities?

[Answer] This is an appropriate question. There is a certain danger that might be overrated. It is, by the way, not only in the Near and Middle East but throughout the world that a danger exists that the German potential might be overrated. The German potential is sometimes even overrated among our own people. We have been pretty well off indeed during the past few years compared with others. We are even pretty well off today compared with others. And yet, we have great economic difficulties, as have all of Europe and the whole European Community. In all our talks, we sought to explain the limits of the German potential. It isn't just the economic potential that is limited, this applies to the political potential as well. [answer interrupted]

[Question] The peacemaking capability.

[Answer] Yes, true, the peace-instituting capability as well. We are a state of medium size and medium significance, and we want to stay that way.

[Question] During the past 3 days, you have rather successfully pulled the bull called Leopard off the thin ice. But won't the export industries say some weeks and months from now when business is no longer so ideal: Why did he allow this topic of arms deliveries to be shifted into the center of attention so much? What happened, what did King Khalid really promise in Bonn during the summer? Is it true that he said: I will make the decision by Christmas? Why has it dragged on like this?

[Answer] Naturally, I would not accept such a charge from German industry if it were to come from that direction, because it was this industry which made a special contribution to the emergence in public of the linkage of economic expansion with the matter of the arms deliveries.

[Question] This is somewhat understandable, isn't it?

[Answer] Understandable, but not necessarily wise, especially since it has been done against my advice, my express advice. For heaven's sake, you cannot make a question concerning the further enhancement of friendship between the Saudis and ourselves a matter of bookkeeping between two big companies. This would not quite measure up to the cause involved, even though I really believe that the economic relations can still be expanded considerably.

As far as King Khalid, who visited us here last year, is concerned, no promise was made to him. He was told that we would endeavor to clarify the matter, and it was explained to him quite clearly, and especially to his entourage, what the weighty reasons are which, in the German view to date, prevent this. Something else happened. It was last fall, long after King Khalid's visit, at a certain point where I believed that, had I had a visitor from Saudi Arabia, I might be allowed to tell the visitor that I hoped to bring about a decision on the currently pending issue perhaps by Christmas. I didn't state the date definitely. I hope it will be by Christmas, but I don't know. It isn't at all true that I combined with this the forecast concerning the kind of decision. All I hoped was to be able to put an end to the state of suspense.

In the meantime, the discussion has been obscured by discussions on submarine deliveries to a Latin American state, as you know, and submarine deliveries to a south Asia state, as you are aware. All this now leads into a discussion of the question of whether our principles are still correct. The Germans need to feel that our role in the world today is different. Sometimes it is too big a role for me, sometimes I am worried, and probably I will be worried in the future about too great a role for the Federal Republic of Germany. Before, it was in the field of currency policy, today it is in the field of alliance policy.

Just think of NATO's dual decision which quite decisively depends on the position of the Federal Republic of Germany. Or think of our position in the Near and Middle East. We must be careful lest our role become too much for us to handle. Also there is absolutely no sense in artificially squeezing ourselves into the role of a midget. By doing that, we would disappoint the expectations held for us by the world. And we would, by the same token, thereby jeopardize the interests of the next generation of our own people.

STATE SECRETARY VAN WELL BRIEFS ISRAELI AMBASSADOR

LD061650 Hamburg DPA in German 1455 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 6 May (DPA)--The Federal Government will not do anything to put a strain on German relations with Israel, the state secretary in the Foreign Ministry, Guenther van Well, today told Israeli Ambassador Yohanan Meroz. According to the Foreign Ministry, the ambassador was briefed on the chancellor's visit to the Middle East. This briefing was arranged last week. Views were exchanged on the situation in the region and on the Middle East conflict. State Secretary Van Well pointed out that the Federal Government's attitude toward the Middle East conflict is based on the joint policy of the EC member states.

The interview was keenly awaited in Bonn. The Israeli prime minister's attacks and the strong German rejection of these attacks on Monday had plunged relations between the two states into a crisis. Shortly before the talk in the Foreign Ministry, Government Spokesman Kurt Becker stated that Bonn will not get involved in a verbal escalation.

Israeli Statement

LD061708 Hamburg DPA in German 1620 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 6 May (DPA)--During his talk at the Bonn Foreign Ministry, Israeli Ambassador Yohanan Meroz said that, like State Secretary Van Well, he hopes Israeli-German relations will not be harmed. The Israeli Embassy published a release following the meeting which said that Meroz had "explained the reasons for the criticism of Federal Chancellor Schmidt's remarks which had caused consternation and deep disappointment to the government and people of Israel."

ARAB LEAGUE OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON SCHMIDT REMARKS

LD061656 Hamburg DPA in German 1525 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 6 May (DPA)--Arab League Secretary General Chedli Klibi described today in Bonn Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's recent statements on the Middle East conflict and the Palestinian right to self-determination as "clear and courageous." Upon his arrival today on a 2-day visit to Bonn. Klibi told DPA that the chancellor has made it clear that the FRG desires relations with its friends and partners which are normal, balanced and "free from hangups and the burdens of the past."

Klibi will be received by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher tomorrow. Klibi told DPA that it is not impossible for Bonn's relations with the PLO to be discussed at this meeting. He said: "The German attitude on the subject is clear and progressive. We hope that it will develop further and thus lead to progress on the part of other European countries."

In recent statements, Schmidt said that Bonn's attitude toward the PLO depends on the PLO's attitude Israel's right to exist.

Klibi told DPA that the precise date for the first European-Arab ministerial meeting, which is to take place in London in the latter part of this year, has not been fixed. The meeting probably will take place at the end of the year. He said that "technical difficulties" are causing the delay. "We Arabs are prepared to have such a meeting as early as July, but it is a decision to be made by both sides." It has been learned from informed sources that the European side objects to the conference status of the PLO wanted by the Arabs. The Arab countries want the PLO, a full member of the Arab League, to have equal status with all delegations at the first ministerial conference within the framework of the Euro-Arab dialogue.

REPORTAGE ON BANGLADESH PRESIDENT'S VISIT

Ministers Sign Agreements

LD061432 Hamburg DPA in German 1355 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 6 May (DPA)--Two financial cooperation and mutual capital investment protection agreements were signed in Bonn today by the foreign ministers of the FRG and Bangladesh. Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher declared that the agreements have the prime objective of helping "the domestic raw materials processing industry."

Under the agreements, the Federal Republic will make available a further DM10 million to Bangladesh, and in addition, favorable conditions will be created for private investments. Genscher gave his assurance that "the FRG will help Bangladesh as far as it is possible." Bangladesh has for several years been a major recipient of German development aid, and this will remain the case.

Rahman Concludes Bonn Meetings

LD061128 Hamburg DPA in German 0916 GMT 6 May 81

[Excerpt] Bonn (DPA)--President of the People's Republic of Bangladesh Ziaur Rahman concludes on Wednesday the official part of his visit in Bonn and flew to Hamburg where he is to continue his state visit in the Federal Republic. The politician from Bangladesh, formerly East Pakistan, was seen off by Federal President Karl Carstens with full military honors outside the Villa Hammerschmiedt.

Earlier this morning, Rahman talked with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher for 1 hour at Gymnich Castle, the guesthouse of the Federal Government. The Foreign Office announced later that the main topics were development policy cooperation between the two countries and the situation in Southest Asia.

Genscher declared the Federal Government's view to the effect that the Southeast Asian states should develop independently free from outside influence. Consequently, the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan is an urgent imperative. Genscher also paid tribute to the Nonaligned Movement of which Bangladesh is a member.

LAMBSDORFF MEETS HUNGARIAN FOREIGN TRADE MINISTER

LD061500 Hamburg DPA in German 1130 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 6 May (DPA)--At the start of the fifth meeting of the German-Hungarian Joint Government Commission in Bonn today, Federal Economic Minister Count Otto Lambsdorff met Hungarian Foreign Trade Minister Peter Veress for an exchange of views. The talks focused on the economic situation in the two countries and developments in economic cooperation. Veress, who during his visit to the Federal Republic has already inspected several German firms in the Ruhr, will be received by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher tomorrow.

The Federal Economics Ministry described economic relations between Hungary and the Federal Republic in 1980 as being "trouble free." Trade between the two countries totaled almost DM4 billion, and by means of active marketing, Hungary was able to increase its exports to the Federal Republic by 7.8 percent to DM1.8 billion.

The Federal Economics Ministry in Bonn says that broadly based economic, industrial and technical cooperation between German and Hungarian firms has contributed to the favorable development of trade between the two countries. Presently, 358 cooperation projects exist between firms from the two countries. From the German side, small and medium-sized companies are involved in two-thirds of these projects. West German industry has far more cooperation with Hungarian enterprises than with any other state trading partners in the East. German and Hungarian firms also have stepped up their cooperation in third countries.

CHIRAC URGES SUPPORTERS TO VOTE FOR GISCARD

LD061852 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] It is now time for the two principal absentees from the televised duel to speak--that's to say, Chirac and Marchais, whose supporters are respectively 18 percent and 15 percent of the votes. For the moment, the Communist leader is keeping quiet. On the other hand, Jacques Chirac has this very moment made an appeal to the French, a warning against the risks of electing Francois Mitterrand.

[Chirac--live or recorded] Mr Mitterrand insists upon using as his inspiration economic principles which have failed wherever they have been applied. Moreover, his alliance with the Communist Party carries risks which I already have denounced.

As for Mr Giscard d'Estaing, he has undertaken, before the nation, to take into account the aspirations expressed by the French women and men who showed their confidence in me on 26 April. He says he is determined to change his policy. He undertakes above all to give greater freedom to individual initiative, to boost production to fight against unemployment, and with this aim, to lessen the tax burden on the French. Finally, he says that methods of government will be changed to restore the spirit of dialogue and confidence. I take note of his statements.

In this respect, I remind the whole majority that if the future of the country depends on a deep-rooted renewal of the continuing policy and methods of government, it also depends on its ability to unite and to broaden itself.

At this decisive time, when the future of our country is at stake, I remind all those who expressed their confidence in me that the essential thing is to safeguard the achievements of the Fifth Republic. My task is thus to renew my appeal to the French to reflect on the seriousness of the choice they are going to make, and I hope that like myself they are conscious of the risks that the election of Mr Mitterrand would entail for France.

CANDIDATES MAKE 3 MAY CAMPAIGN SPEECHES IN PARIS

LD051201 Paris LE MONDE in French 5 May 81 p 8

[Report on speech by French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing in Paris on 3 May: "In Paris for Talks With Chirac..."]

[Excerpt] The head of state began his speech by addressing France. He said: "Madam, the French people entrusted your fate to me 7 years ago. I have tried to serve you well. Despite tensions and threats, I have enabled you to live in peace. Despite the crisis, which caused you suffering, I have tried to continue your progress.

"I have responded to your need for justice. I have represented you with dignity in the world. You tell me that my action hasn't been perfect. I know. I have made errors of judgment and I will not deny them. Simplicity and frankness are democracy's secret weapons.

"My intention has always been to face the difficulties you encountered. I am ready to serve you again if you consider me worthy to do so. I will learn from what I have seen, learned and heard over the past 7 years and will do better.

"France, I am no longer campaigning for myself. I am campaigning for you.

"I know that your future is threatened because I have traveled the world and I know the problems. I will explain all that is at stake to my brothers and sisters, French men and women. Everybody must be able to understand and to know the full facts.

"One of them must be disdained or ignored. I am sure they will choose what is best for you."

Giscard d'Estaing then addressed the rest of his speech to the audience. He was interrupted by applause many times and each reference to his Socialist opponent brought jeers and whistles. He said: "I will not attack my opponent now or later. That will not clarify the debate and offends the dignity of the office for which we are candidates."

With regard to the television debate, he remarked: "In a live television debate on Tuesday evening, we will compare the value of the solutions we are proposing for France. If my opponent wishes to be accompanied by some witness, I have no objection. The debate is bound to be honest since there will be 36 million French people acting as witnesses."

The outgoing president then presented what is "at stake" in the second round and in doing so returned to the ideas of his previous speeches, giving particular emphasis to the need to reduce state interventions. He stressed: "A broader or narrower state role means more or fewer interventions, more or less bureaucracy and more or fewer controls. That inevitably involves more or less taxes, more or less social contributions, more or less freedom for those who work and produce, more or less responsibility for individuals...." "The vast majority of French people have opted for freedom. The first round campaign confirmed that.

"However, many of them are preparing to vote against their freedom without knowing it. Why? Because an attempt is being made to conceal that from them.

"What does the opposition really want?" And Giscard d'Estaing [apparent line drop] "end to cadres retirement, as has been put down in writing; a return to control over small and medium-sized enterprises, as has been put down in writing, exchange controls, as has been put down in writing, the gradual closure of some facilities on our borders...with regard to the productive sector [apparent line drop] a 33 percent increase in the minimum wage in June. That has been stated in vague terms, but stated all the same.

"None of our enterprises is strong enough to withstand those measures without going bankrupt." The other ideas include the abasement of France on the international scene if it has "a president elected thanks to Communist votes and the majority's unity. He pointed out: "The first round of the campaign inevitably turns friendly groups into rivals. Everybody fights energetically. That is only natural....The second round is that of unity.

"My duty is to create the right conditions for unity and to take account of the aspirations expressed during the first round whever group put them forward." After paying tribute to the "Gaullist family, one of the greatest permanent currents in French politics," the president added: "It has always served France in war and peace. That is why I need its support to ensure that the Fifth Republic institutions are maintained. In this election, I am the only, I repeat only, candidate who can maintain General de Gaulle's institutional heritage. I am the only one, not the man who opposed him from the start and who constantly fought him in 1958, 1965 and in May 1968. I ask you to remember that."

"I Am Seized With Anxiety"

The outgoing president continued: "Yes, Jacques Chirac was right to uphold the ideas of freedom, responsibility and struggle against rampant bureaucracy. Yes, the majority candidates were right to want a strong and active France.

"Since only I can discuss them in the second round, it is my duty to return to these ideas. It is particulary easy for me to do so since I share those ideas."

The head of state added: "We must free the economy. Lifting price control is a definitive achievement. The 1945 statutes will be altered accordingly. Formalities will be reduced and the amount of paperwork should drop.

"There should be less guidance and control exercised over educated and working French people and more confidence should be placed in them.

"The new government will ask the National Assembly to examine the proposed employment tax reform to which I am not personally attached and will be able to propose that it is replaced by an equivalent source of revenue for local councils.

"I have already indicated that Jacques Chirac's campaign was useful and constructive on these subjects. I am prepared to talk with those who have supported those ideas before or after the presidental election.

"Furthermore, the social and fiscal contributions which have been increased by the effects of the crisis must be brought back to 40 percent--a figure whih I mentioned myself.

"A great deal of effort must be made to curb spending and make budget savings.

"Finally, aid must be given for equipping and creating new enterprises in order to provide jobs.

"New manufacturing enterprises, whether cottage enterprises or industrial enterprises, could be exempt for 3 years for tax on industrial and commercial profits, employment tax and some service charge. Thus, we will launch a new and powerful modernization movement."

With regard to building a "society in which it is easier to live," Giscard d'Estaing proposed the following actions for the "new 7-year term."

"Completing efforts to remove major nuisances, especially the struggle against noise; launching a prevention program to prevent the major social scourges--accidents, drugs, cancer; speeding up the energy savings and alternative energy sources program; enabling everybody to take part in administering his environment."

He specified: "I have said that I favor the institution of the local referendum, according to methods to be defined, and what I termed the 'Swiss-style referendum'."

The president of the republic concluded: "I am seized with anxiety when I think of what we can hope to be and what we are in danger of becoming. It is anxiety for France. It is anxiety for you! On the one hand, the sky is filled with the black wings of birds of ill omen. On the other, there is the society of hope....

"Let's join hands to make the same choice on Sunday. Let nobody stay away! Let our vote not be that of a people sitting round a dying fire in the evening, but that of a people marching toward the horizon where dawn is breaking!"

Francois Mitterrand

LD051351 Paris LE MONDE in French 5 May 81 p 9

[Text] Francois Mitterrand stated in Paris on 3 May that Valery Giscard d'Estaing "embodies a policy which has failed." "I represent the other policy which will be based, as I want it to be, on the country's in-depth support," he added.

The Socialist candidate condemned the attitude of the outgoing president who, he stated, "has lost his composure and has only a single idea in his head--to arouse reflexes of fear by brandishing the bogey of change in society."

"Talking about a waltz of death and 'Poland of the West' (LE MONDE note: a reference by Mitterrand to a statement made by Maurice Papon during Giscard d'Estaing's meeting in Bourges on 29 April. The budget minister stated that the Socialist candidate's victory "would lead to ruthless--or rampant--collectivization which would turn us into a Poland of the West') is tantamount to taking leave of your senses, just as utilizing the threat handing over the stock exchange as your sole resource is tantamount to taking leave of your senses. Appealing to fear means retreating. How can you expect that confidence will return with those who have failed in everything...? How can workers and trade unions have confidence in a government which has ignored them and treated them with indifference and contempt. How can the head of any enterprise have confidence in an economic policy determined by some 10 very powerful groups which lay down the law for all the others?"

After asserting that "in recent days an extraordinary propaganda effort has been made to make the French people forget the reality of the crisis," Mitterrand assured his audience: "Because I have faith in our country's capabilities, I will call upon all people of good will for help on the single condition that general interest take precedence over the interests of the privileged, the rich and the ruling class." In conclusion, the Socialist candidate reaffirmed that "to restore all its opportunities to France it is necessary to unite instead of tearing apart." "It is in this spirit that I approach the final week of the election campaign," he concluded.

No Hasty Discussions

Furthermore, in an interview published in the Lausanne newspaper 24 HEURES, Mitterrand explains that his election will "create an impetus." "Anyone seeking to destroy hope will be making a blunder and will be guilty of imprudence," he adds. He also emphasizes that any problem on which parties of the left have been unable to agree will be resolved only "through a responsible approach and debate following the election and under no circumstances in a hasty manner." And he explains with reference to this: "A search for ways to bring people together and for unity presupposes neither facileness nor surrender. This means that the Socialists will agree to resume discussions with the Communists only when systematic and often offensive attacks by the Communists cease and when the Communist Party' stance, especially in the international sphere, is no longer systematically aligned with foreign theses."

PRESIDENT NOTES DECISION TO REPLACE PLUTON MISSILE

LD061419 Paris LE MONDE in French 6 May 81 p 14

[Jacques Isnard report]

[Excerpt] In an interview published in the technical weekly AIR ET COSMOS at the end of last week, Valery Giscard d'Estaing states that the decision has been made to launch the Hades program for a new tactical nuclear missile to carry on from the army's Pluton surface-to-surface missile.

This is the first time that the president of the republic has spoken of this initiative in official terms, but he gave no further details on the specifications or performance of this new nuclear weapons system. The head of state also didn't specify when this decision was made. Giscard d'Estaing simply indicated that this decision to launch the Hades program stems from the desire to modernize the nuclear deterrence arsenal, as does the development of the M-4 MIRVed missile intended for the new strategic submarine and the work on miniaturizing nuclear charges.

FOREIGN MINISTRY NAMES NEW AMBASSADOR TO FRANCE

AU061555 Rome ANSA in English 1545 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] Rome, 6 May (ANSA)--Italy's new ambassador in Paris is to be Walter Gardini, who handled the negotiations for the establishment of diplomatic relations between Italy and China when he was plenipotentiary minister in the same embassy, the Italian Foreign Ministry announced today after receiving French Government approval for the appointment.

Gardini, who succeeds Ambassador Gianfranco Pompei, was born on August 11, 1922 and entered the diplomatic service in 1949 after majoring in law and political science in Milan. His first foreign posting, in 1950 was as secretary of the Italian delegation in Paris for the negotiations on the formation of the European Iron and Steel Community, the nucleus of what was to be the European Economic Community. From 1952 to 1955 he was secretary of the Italian Embassy in Brussels and until 1959 first secretary in Bonn. On returning to Italy, he served as deputy chief and then chief of the Foreign Ministry's press office, a post he held until 1969.

After negotiating Italy's relations with China, he came back to Rome in 1971 to the rank of envoy extraordinary and plenioptentiary minister first class. At the end of 1972 he took on the job of head of the Senate Speaker's secretariat. In December 1973 he became the Foreign Ministry's deputy director-general, for political affairs; in April 1976 its director-general, representing Italy in the EEC's Political Committee. He was named ambassador in December 1979.

COLOMBO INTERVIEWED ON NATO COUNCIL SESSION

LD061816 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 0600 GMT 6 May 81

[Interview with Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo by Rome Radio correspondent Alberto Ginocchi at the close of the NATO Council Session in Rome on 5 May--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Minister, would the invasion of Poland, if it were to occur, by the USSR or other forces of the Warsaw Pact immediately interrupt the negotiations which the Atlantic alliance has just now decided to hold on the European nuclear missile forces?

[Answer] The alliance council in its examination of the situation as a whole and in the communique that sums up the proceedings of the session clearly stated that if an intervention in Poland were to take place by the USSR or other countries of the Warsaw Pact, this would mean a radical change in the international situation with all its consequences. Certainly one can foresee that one of the consequences--not the only one--would be the interruption or the death of negotiations on (?nuclear missile forces).

[Question] From the answers given by U.S. Secretary of State Haig at the press conference held immediately after the close of the Atlantic council session, the impression was created that the United States cared and now cares more about firmness on the part of the Atlantic alliance than about a desire to have a dialogue which, by contrast, the European allies hold as a trump card to nuclear rearmament.

[Answer] The U.S. administration had laid the emphasis very much on the reestablishment of equilibrium of the positions, both from the military and political points of view, between East and West. This has always been one of the concerns of the new administration; not to refuse to negotiate but to negotiate from a position which makes results possible. Today we can say that the result of this NATO council brings us into a balanced position both in terms of reestablishing equilibrium in the military and political fields and in negotiations. We can say that the first is a precondition for the second.

PCI'S REICHLIN ON IMPLICATIONS OF PSI CONGRESS

LD051337 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 29 Apr 81 pp 1,16

[PCI Secretariat member Alfredo Reichlin's commentary: "The Left After Palermo"]

[Text] Now that the spotlights have been turned off in the Palermo conference hall, a serious objective review of the PSI congress has to be based on this question: What contribution has been made to solving the country's main problems?

It is not easy to answer this question. Moreover, it is not enough to follow the mass media's obsessive emphasis on the fact that Bettino Craxi presented a charismatic personal image. This leaves us wondering what concerns prompted him--at the price of reviving serious tensions in the party--to lay claim to an investiture which places him above the collegial leadership bodies. Was it a need to ensure more control over the running of a majority which is very broad but which he does not trust enough? Or was he prompted by signs of a rather disturbing mood to convey a message to the country; the message of leadership and decisiveness? Be that as it may, this does not invalidate the question but makes it even more urgent; for what policy has so much "initiative" and decision-making power been centralized?

If we look at it form a more general viewpoint, it must be said that the country's prospects remain very uncertain and worrying after Palermo. There is one important innovation; the start of a reduction in tension and more open and constructive dialogue between the two main leftwing parties. This makes it possible to be more hopeful about the future. But to what outlook does its dialogue relate? The reaffirmation of governability is still like a package whose contents are obscure, especially after the disappointing experiences of the Forlani and Cossiga ministries. Governability to what end? The very objective of having a socialist prime minister leaves the following question unanswered: With what system of political and social alliances and following what strategy? The congress did not give a unanimous answer to this crucial question. This is not only because the replies given by the majority and the minorities were different, even radically different, but also because within the majority itself the hypothesis of another change in government leadership had different meanings and aims.

It might be objected that this is precisely Craxi's strong point. We doubt that, because we are convinced--in the light of the Palermo debate itself--that a leftwing force can no longer dodge the duty and necessity to draw up a policy with a capital "P," in other words, one which is strong and realistic enough to tackle the roots of the Italian crisis. One of the original aspects of the Socialist congress was precisely the fact that a considerable number of leaders from various quarters tried to get to grips with those difficult problems. However, it should be said that Craxi's calls for "major reforms," the judgments and scraps of analyses (even though we might find them interesting and agree with them) did not stem from a political and cultural scheme which by dint of trying to be realistic was in fact too unambitious. It did not tackle the real dilemmas.

Our main criticism is that the congress was based on a scaled-down view of the crisis. This has nothing to do with the just refusal to see things in catastrophic terms. It does, however, have to do with a view according to which the crisis is not so much affecting society, the production structures, the relations between the social blocs and their composition, the government system and the mechanism of the welfare state, as the government mechanisms and leadership techniques.

Seen in these terms, Italy's case boils down to a problem of rationalization, the need to exchange the old DC government team for a new, younger and more determined team.

But let's try to abandon ideological heritage, feelings and class tradition. Let's do what Craix is asking and appraise the new PSI as it is and not as we have been accustomed to viewing it over a long period of time. The fact remains that the political and cultural system proposed by Craxi does not seem to contain the historical fact that we are witnessing a crisis in a type of development, a type of state (the social state) and hence a compromise between government and governed which, in Italy, the DC has handled with specific methods but which elsewhere has been given its most exemplary expression in the European Social Democratic experiment. There has been a great deal of talk about the "new right." But this [word illegible] argument is precisely what has led to the right's counterattack, the great conservative attempt to remold the production forces and social relationships in the form of dismantling the social state from the right. The ideology is neoliberalism but the practice (Martelli beware) [reference to PSI Directorate member] is a new and dangerous authoritarianism.

There was a great deal of sarcasm at the congress about the third path, which was portrayed as the ideological contrivance of those who do not know what to do here and now. It would have been better to be a little more cautious. A third path between the decline of the welfare state (for which the old social democratic remedies cannot be revived) and a conservative restoration is precisely the subject which the entire Italian and European left should be discussing--it is the test ground of its modernity and of its future as a force of government and change and hence of its realism.

This might be regarded as a fault or a cultural limitation. But the reason (the practical source of the mistake, to cite IL CROCE, as Craxi so often does) may be different. If you adopt the course of seeking an answer at this height of the crisis, you must inevitably pose the problem of the formation of a new, reforming bloc, drawing up new ideas and new mass political experiments. Is it possible to do so without a relationship, even a competitive relationship, with the "Communist people?" But adopting that course means abandoning the benefits accruing to its position whereby a party with 10 percent of the votes has enormous bargaining power and can aspire to a central position in the government lineup whereas the PCI--with 30 percent of the votes--is not justified in governing.

But how much realism is there in this hyperrealism? How can a leftwing party, in a pluralist society in which even the leftwing world is varied and complex, fail to see that its own future depends on the development of everyone's capacity to voice the energies--still largely latent--of this people of ours?

The Palermo congress was important, partly because it demonstrated that the PSI is not deaf to these questions. And we saw that there are misgivings even within the very heart of the reformist majority--misgivings that this path (and this DC, whose worst sins are in fact covered up) will fail to lead not only to a major reform but to any reform at all. With the consequent danger of creating a vacuum that will subsequently be filled by others. Maybe the DC itself. Maybe the right. After all, why was Berlinguer's speech such a success? Was it just because of sentimental or "prepolitical" reasons, or was it partly also because it pointed out the simple truth that we are witnessing a conflict in which the stakes are as we have indicated?

If so, the responsible and deep-rooted reason for our opposition should become clear: It is not motivated by petting considerations of rivalry and is aimed not at bringing down governments which exclude us, but at building a real opposition to rightwing thrusts and thus at attacking a particular tendency and reopening the path to government. What entrenchment? This is government opposition in the broadest and most substantial sense of the term. It is a democratic guarantee even for those with a political and parliamentary position different from our own. This is why there is nothing underhanded about our sincere unitary effort with respect to all the democratic and leftwing forces, starting with the PSI.

Some representatives of the Socialist majority and even of the government have raised the issue of the prime ministership, not simply as a form of blackmail-cum-exchange with the DC (if you want me with you, give me more power) but as the political expression of a reformist trend within which the leading role belongs to the PSI and the supporting role to the PCI. This stance is different from the one held by those who envisage a Socialist premiership of an "iron five-party government" directed against us and effectively against the backbone of the labor world. But it still seems to us insufficiently realistic, this, not only because a party such as ours cannot accept a subordinate role. In fact, behind this calculation, we believe, there lies an illusion--the illusion of evading the real, not merely formal and not merely parliamentary logic of the political and social struggle. There are two options. Either we talk idly or, if we turn down the path of reforms, this necessarily implies a very harsh clash with the power system of the DC as it is now and therefore demands a mobilization of forces and a commitment by the regenerative alignment. Is it not absurd and even naive to decide from the outset who is to lead and who is to be led?

Therefore, partly also in the light of the debate and comparison of ideas at the Palermo congress, we remain convinced that our proposal of a democratic alternative is the one best suited to the present needs. The objection is raised that this proposal is not a parliamentary formula. Apart from the fact that we have made a specific government proposal, if the crisis is as we have described it, what is needed is precisely the abandonment of formulas. Perhaps there is an insufficient realization that the crisis is already causing many changes, breaking down old political and ideological boundaries, rousing the DC interclass bloc--but also its leftwing bloc--and releasing new ideological and cultural thrusts. It must be understood that this is also causing a rightward shift in some leftwing sectors, but is at the same time extending the boundaries of a camp for change within which many new protagonists, still indistinct and intermingled, are combined--Catholics and non-Catholics, rich and poor, bourgeois and proletarians (if we may cite this old definition by Togaliatti).

Under such conditions, a major political and policy proposal not limited by a predetermined formula (to the exclusive benefit of a single party) seems to have more potential with regard to innovations and, in the last resort, feasibility. This is the aim of our opposition. No, we are not definitely shelving the government issue. We are causing it to evolve in the only possible way; by creating a real opportunity both in parliament and throughout the country for initiating a new political process, the various stages and intermediary phases in which we are willing to facilitate.

The Palermo congress has shown us that the PSI remains a major leftwing force, by no means alien to these ideas and these processes. It has shown us that the die is not cast once and for all. We emphasize this without arrogance, in the belief that we too are required to demonstrate a great capacity for innovation, and that for us, too, old ideological schemes are falling and old shortcomings in the form of sectarianism and extremism must disappear. We not only acknowledge but are also implementing this necessary innovation. We wonder whether the new Socialist leadership group will manage to do the same.

NATO AIRCRAFT CARRIER BASE PLANNED FOR PORTO SANTO

LD012333 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 1 May 81

[Text] The possibility of a base for nuclear aircraft carriers being set up in Portugal has been completely ruled out. This was reported tonight by RTP-2 [second channel of Portuguese television] in its evening newsreel, quoting the Supreme Commander of the Allied Forces in the North Atlantic. The [word indistinct] was the country chosen for this purpose.

It has been decided, however, to set up a naval base in the Madeira Archipelago, more precisely, at Porto Santo Island. The Portuguese defense minister, however, has not confirmed this news because, in his opinion, both central and regional governments will have to be consulted first.

Regional Agreement

LD022315 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1940 GMT 2 May 81

[Text] The Madeira Regional Government agrees to the establishment of a NATO naval base on the island of Porto Santo and has already informed the central government of its attitude. This was announced today by Chief of the Madeira Regional Government Alberto Jao Jardim. In its capacity of proprietor of the ports and airports of the region, he stated, the regional executive has already given its assent to the chief of the Armed Forces' General Staff and has informed the central government of its decision. Alberto Jardim added that NATO is in a position to make investments in communications infrastructures in Porto Santo which Portugal would be unable to afford.

These statements follow those by Supreme Commander of NATO Allied Forces Atlantic Harry Train to the effect that his organization has decided to set up a naval base on the island. However, Portuguese Defense Minister Azevedeo Coutinho denied such a possibility, adding that "our decisions will not be made by the NATO countries."

COMMUNIQUE ON ENERGY SECRETARY'S VISIT TO ANGOLA

LD040052 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 3 May 81

[Text] A joint communique has been issued at the end of a 7-day visit to the People's Republic of Angola by Portuguese Secretary of State for Energy Joao Carreira. The communique noted the mutual resolve of the countries to step up bilateral cooperation in the electricity sector.

During the talks, Joao Carreira and the Angolan deputy minister of finance decided to institute an assistance fund. The two countries also agreed on the terms and conditions defining the legal status of Senefe, an enterprise which produces and distributes electrical energy and which is backed by Portuguese capital. The communique also pledged joint efforts to develop and improve the efficiency of the Angolan energy sector.

KING'S MILITARY AIDE INJURED IN MADRID-BOMBING

NC071008 Paris AFP in English 1004 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Madrid, 7 May (AFP)--The chief military aide of King Juan Carlos was badly injured but not killed when his car was bombed in central Madrid today, police said.

First reports had said that the aide de camp, General Joaquin de Valenzuela, was killed in the explosion along with a lieutenant-colonel and another soldier travelling in the same official car. Police later said that one officer in the car was killed.

Arrest of Suspect

LD071026 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0950 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] At 1140 this morning, police sources reported that a person was arrested in the area of Retiro Park near the Isabel la Catolica Institute after a shootout.

According to these sources, shortly after the attack, police discovered a van inside which was a motorbike. This aroused their suspicion. In view of the possibility that the motorbike could have been the one used in the attack, the vehicle was requested to stop. The van did not stop and was followed. A shootout then began in the area of Reitro Park. After the shootout, one of the occupants of the car was arrested and taken to police headquarters for interrogation.

NEWSPAPERS CITE REPORTED USSR PLANS TOWARD SPAIN

LD061348 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] The readjustment which is taking place in relations between Spain and the Soviet Union coinciding with the Spanish Government's reaffirmation of its desire to join NATO before the end of this year, is giving rise to rumors among diplomats accredited in Spain about the possible replacement of present Soviet Ambassador Yuriy Dubinin.

According to the newspaper YA, Dubinin--who is believed to hold the rank of general in the KGB, the USSR's political-military espionage organization--apparently is having a difficult time explaining to the Kremlin some serious shortcomings in the mounting of intelligence operations in Spain, both on the mainland and in the islands, given that this country is regarded as a springboard to the Mediterranean region and north Africa.

On the subject of the bad time which Spanish-Soviet diplomatic relations are experiencing, the Brussels paper LA LIBRE BELGIQUE reports that Madrid suspects that the USSR and countries which are influenced to various degrees by it, for instance Libya, Algeria, South Yemen, Nicaragua and others, are providing the ETA terrorists with weapons and training, though the First of October Armed Revolutionary Group [GRAPO] and other similar organizations could also be benefitting from such help.

YA, citing these reports, says that diplomatic circles in Madrid are following with growing interest this du l between the Spanish Government and the persistent efforts of the KGB, which is suspected of pursuing the mission of fomenting any kind of political destabilization in Spain for the purpose of preventing Spanish membership in NATO and the Common Market.

A West European ambassador in Madrid stated confidentially to YA that in pursuit of this goal, the Kremlin would be in favor of any kind of coup d'etat in Spain. Terrorism and destabilization of democracy favor Soviet plans in the Iberian Peninsula.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS MEETING DISCUSSES VAROSHA

NC061940 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] The intercommunal talks resumed in Nicosia this afternoon at the Ledra Palace. Today's session dealt with the resettlement under UN auspices of Varosha. This is the seventh round in the current series of talks that began last September.

In a statement prior to the meeting, Mr Gobbi, special UN envoy in Cyprus, said that he did not expect anything new from today's meeting. He aded: This does not mean that I have changed my optimistic stand. Asked what questions are on the negotiating table, he said that at present various approaches to the Varosha question are being discussed.

Also speaking before the meeting, Greek Cypriot Representative Mr Ioannidhis said that the Greek Cypriot side considers the question of resettlement of the Greek Cypriot inhabitants of Varosha as a priority issue that is a test of the sincerity and willingness of the other side for a lasting, fair and reasonable Cyprus solution. He also said that progress on this question depends on the other side. Asked about what is being discussed at the negotiating table, Mr Ioannidhis replied that it is our proposals, which are compatible with Point 5 of the 19 May agreement. There is also the Turkish Cypriot proposal, which is incompatible with this point. Mr Ioannidhis also said that he is not optimistic that the gap between the positions of the two sides will be reduced at today's meeting.

Turkish Cypriot Representative Mr Onan stated prior to the meeting that views were to be exchanged today on the proposals that he had submitted in connection with the resettlement of the Varosha inhabitants. He hinted that the Turkish Cypriot side does not view the Varosha question as a priority. Answering a question, Mr Onan said that the fact that each question is discussed by rotation makes him wonder whether this priority continues to be so valid or so relevant. Answering another question, he said that the proposals that he has submitted are compatible with Point 5 of the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement.

Bayrak Radio Report

TA061650 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] The seventh round of the intercommunal talks aiming to find a peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem started today. The Turkish and Greek Cypriot negotiators met in Ledra Palace in Lefkosa [Nicosia]. UN Secretary General's Special Envoy to Cyprus Hugo Gobbi and the advisers of the negotiators are also attending the meeting. The Maras [Varosha] issue, which is the first item on the agenda, is being discussed today.

Replying to journalists' questions before the meeting, Turkish Cypriot negotiator Umit Suleyman Onan said that an exchange of views on the subject of Maras will be conducted. In reply to a question, Onan recalled that the proposals which form the basis of the exchange of views on the Maras issue were previously submitted. Following a remark by a journalist that Greek Cypriot negotiator Ioannidhis said that the Turkish Cypriot proposals on Maras are not compatible with the Denktas-Kiprianou agreement reached on 19 May 1979, Onan said that the Turkish Cypriot proposals are fully compatible with the Denktas-Kiprianou agreement.

In his statement, Greek Cypriot negotiator Ioannidhis said that he does not expect any new developments concerning the Maras issue during today's meeting.

Gobbi announced that various approaches to the Maras issue are being discussed. He said that he does not expect any results from today's meeting.

The next meeting is expected to take place [word indistinct] and deal with practical measures.

Next Meeting 3 June

NC061945 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] Another meeting within the framework of the intercommunal talks was held at the Ledra Palace this afternoon. Today's meeting lasted 2 hours. A UN communique says that during the meeting, which was the first in the seventh round of talks, discussion on the resettlement of Varosha under UN auspices was continued, in accordance with the provisions of Point 5 of the 19 May 1979 agreement.

The communique adds that the next meeting within the framework of the talks will take place on Tuesday, 3 June. During this meeting, the present status of the talks will be assessed. Discussion of the next question on the talks agenda--that is, the initial practical measures--will be resumed during the meeting that will be held on 8 July.

GUARD COMMANDER LEAVES FOR ATHENS AT TOUR'S END

NC060929 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0900 GMT 6 May 81

[Excerpt] Gen Ioannis Komninos, retired National Guard commander, left Cyprus this morning for Athens. In a statement made prior to his departure, General Komninos expressed the desire that the Cypriot problem would be solved peacefully and in a just manner. Nevertheless, General Komninos said that not even the slightest progress has been made toward a Cyprus solution and stressed the need for an effective defense shielding for as long as the invasion troops are in Cyprus. He said that such a defense shielding would be organized if the National Guard is capable of confronting any design and if all of Cypriot Hellenism is prepared for sacrifices both during the present period and during critical circumstances. He also said that, should the need arise, he would be ready to serve Cyprus as a mere soldier.

DENKTAS REPLIES TO KIPRIANOU ALLEGATIONS

TA050938 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 5 May 81

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has pointed out that Greek Cypriot administration leader Kiprianou, who is not the representative even of the whole of the so-called Cypriot Government, is not authorized to speak on behalf of the Turkish Cypriot community.

President Denktas, replying to a statement by Kiprianou, said that he would not concede to fait accomplis. Since Mr Kiprianou uses this claim often as a stereotype, Denktas said, we must point our to him that the first fait accompli which cannot be accepted is the concept of a so-called Cypriot Government being projected by him to the world. Denktas continued: The Greek Cypriot administration in southern Cyprus is in no way connected with and can have no right and power over the Turkish Cypriot community living in the north under the administration that it established through its own free will.

BRIEFS

MINISTER RETURNS FROM YUGOSLAVIA--Communications Minister Katzikostas has returned from the city of Zagreb, Yugoslavia, where he particiated in the ninth roundtable conference of the developing countries that dealt with issues of cooperation in the sectors of transport and communications. At the beginning of its work, the conference elected Khatzikostas chairman. He was also elected chairman of the international committee which will supervise the drafting of the conference's minutes and reports. During his stay in Yugoslavia, the minister met with the prime minister and transport minister of Croatia, the Mayor of Zagreb and the Yugoslavian minister of communications. [Text] [Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0900 GMT 25 Apr 81 NC]

MITSOTAKIS LEAVES FOR TALKS IN BONN 6 MAY

NC061924 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis left for the Federal Republic of Germany at 1830 today for talks in Bonn with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

RALLIS REPLIES TO RECENT PAPANDREOU INTERVIEW

NC062130 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 6 May 81 pp 1, 3

[Excerpts] Unity and a militant spirit were two basic messages from yesterday's meeting of the "New Democracy" parliamentary group chaired by Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis. The prime minister referred to the recent lengthy interview by PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou, whose statements he described as deceiving and as "PASOK's new Trojan horse."

The minister of national defense also made a statement that caused much commotion and speculation among political observers. He stated:

"Since 'New Democracy' is the only front that can guarantee a calm political life and survival of the bourgeois regime so that it can grow in a healthy way, I will firmly support it. This is irrespective of whether I will be or will not be personally involved politically in the next election."

This statement created a special impression because recently Averof actively intervened in the adoption of decisions on an issue of vital importance, that is, the question of increasing the number of candidates, to which he was the basic opponent. His statement also caused much comment and speculation. Answering a question on whether this statement is related to rumors of protests by Averof, a government source stated:

"The minister's statement cannot logically be connected to any protests by him on government actions or with the elections. The logical sequel of such a radical disagreement would be the statement, 'I remain in the government or I resign.'"

The meeting of the parliamentary group lasted for 1 and 1/2 hours and the corridors of the Senate hall resounded to the frequent applause of "New Democracy" deputies. The exclusive subject of the meeting was approval of "New Democracy's" special congress to be held on 27 and 28 June in Athens.

Rallis, who was the first speaker, underlined among other things: A report of the work of "New Democracy" will be presented during the congress. At that time, the true face of the opposition will be unmasked.

In reference to the government's work, Rallis said this will cause surprise because "we usually forget from where we had to start in 1974."

In reference to unmasking the opposition, the prime minister stressed: The special congress will give us the opportunity to unmask the true face of the opposition, all of who have had the opportunity to read the recent interview granted by A. Papandreou must have been surprised because PASOK introduced itself with an entirely new face from the one it has worn for the past 6 years. In the interview there was no reference to PASOK being a class movement or a Marxist party.

We are faced by a crude ruse. I remember that, in the past, Papandreou described the German Socialist party as "the Trojan horse of U.S. imperialism." It appears the chairman of PASOK is very fond of Trojan horses, and it is for this very reason that he uses them himself. His last interview is just such a Trojan horse manufactured by him personally and by his aides.

We have the obligation and the duty to speak clearly to the people about this new PASOK Trojan horse. The people must understand that PASOK never revealed its true face at any time during the past 7 years. It is, naturally, Papandreou's right to change his political coloring and PASOK's proclamations. It is his own right to argue that he has revealed the original character of his party. This, however, would mean that his original proclamations had nothing in common with reality. In the same way that his proclamations, with which he attempted to attract the Marxists, had nothing to do with reality, there is now no relation between reality and his proclamations with which he is trying to present his party as being centrist, which has nothing to do with class struggle.

The fear that the people may lose what they have gained during the past 7 years under our governments will make them think 10 times before they are influenced by the slogans for "change" used by the opposition. This is because the real change has already been achieved.

OPPOSITION REACTS TO U.S. BASES AGREEMENT

Papandreou Opposition

NC061958 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 6 May 81 p 1

[Statement by PASOK Chairman Papandreou in Bucharest on 5 May]

[Text] In 1977 the New Democracy Party received 42 percent of the Greek people's votes. Today it is definite that it does not represent even 30 percent of the voters. Therefore, it is unacceptable that this government of a small minority should conclude an agreement that would be binding on the nation. It id equally unacceptable that the Chamber of Deputies, which no longer represents the people's will, should decide whether or not to ratify the agreement. The government has ample time to put an end to the talks on the U.S. bases in Greece and, out of respect for the Greek people, it should await the Greek people's verdict.

KKE-Interior Statement

NC062030 Athens I AVYI in Greek 6 May 81 p 1

[Statement issued by the press office of the KKE-Interior; undated]

[Text] Everything shows that the New Democracy government has accepted in essence the U.S. demands on the new base agreement. Its final agreement and its signing will be yet another dangerous and nationally impermissible step by the New Democracy government in leading our country to unlimited submission to Atlanticism and against our national independence and sovereign rights.

The KKE (Interior) calls on the government, even now, not to proceed with the agreement, particularly now before the elections. The people must express in a sovereign and free way their wish on this issue.

KKE-Exterior View

NC062052 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 6 May 81 p 2

[From the "Radical" column: "No To the Bases"]

[Text] As it appears..."the hard negotiations" for the renewal (perpetuation) of the agreement on and the expansion of the status of the U.S. bases in Greece have ended according to the wishes of our U.S. "protectors." The "hard" negotiatiors of the Greek rightwing, headedby Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, after the rapid developments in the issue during the talks in Rome, suddenly returned to Athens yesterday carrying with them the formula and the demands of U.S. Secretary of State Haig.

U.S. Ambassador McCloskey will deal with the remaining few details so that the agreement may be submitted to the Chambers of Deputies and be sanctioned by the fictitious majority government and extreme rightwing, without fail, before the chambers' summer recess. Moreover, Haig was explicit and emphatic in expressing the U.S. demands, both on the agreement's content and the time of its sanctioning, so that there would also be time before the Greek elections to settle Greek-Turkish differences in a way that would guarantee complications that would necessarily need U.S.-NATO mediation to reach a settlement. From every point of view, the Greek side found Haig's proposals justifiable and logical, because the "New Democracy" government wants, before quitting power, to have in its credit another..."national honour": the renewal, after three decades, of the state of capitulation, which, this time, would change our country from a nuclear springboard of "the free"...world into a target for nuclear reprisals. Our country's dangers are tremendous because of the new treachery of the rightwing, which behind the riddled screen of the "hard negotiations" and the country's so-called defense shield--as it has done with its reintegration into NATO--is trying to hide the further selling out of our country's sovereign rights and its total dependence to the intricate machinations of Washingtong and the Atlantic alliance.

The duty of all democratic forces of the country is to commit themselves before the people that they will never recognize as faits accomplis the subservient and dangerous agreements that the foreign-dominate rightwing has formed and signed with the United States and NATO on Greece's life and future.

PAPANDREOU FAVORS DENUCLEARIZATION OF BALKANS

NC062155 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 6 May 81 p 12

[Excerpts] PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou has described as "very positive the fact that the NATO countries in Europe have succeeded in obtaining from the United States a pledge that the U.S.-Soviet dialogue, based on the Brezhnev proposals, will begin soon. Papandreou added that "beyond this, the European countries desire the development of a framework for negotiations and discussions, particularly in connection with nuclear arms in the European region." Papandreou concluded: "This is a somewhat optimistic note during a very dark period."

The main opposition party leader made this statement prior to his departure for Romania yesterday afternoon in answer to a question on the NATO conference in Rome.

Answering other questions, the main opposition party leader stressed the currently crucial situation in the world and particularly in Europe, and stressed that "this time the Balkans are working for a substantive contribution to the cause of peace." Papandreou then referred to the particular role that Romania has been playing "in the question of independence and noninterference in the domestic affairs of other countries and to equality in the conduct of negotiations." He paid tribute to President Ceausescu's personal contribution to the campaign to promote peace and detente. After stressing the dangers of nuclear war, as a result of wrong calculations, when confined to the tactical level, Mr Papandreou concluded:

"At this hour and at this stage, we consider it a primary duty to contribute to the efforts for the denuclearization of the Balkans, and I would say of Europe--West and East alike--and of the Mediterranean because it is clear that, irrespective of our domestic programs for economic and social development, if peace is not consolidated, we will be building on sand."

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 089 8 May 1981

CONTENTS

AUSTRIA

Negotiations on USSR Gas Deliveries Open in Vienna [WIENER ZEITUNG 7 May] E 1
Austrian Press Views Kreisky Statements in Riyadh E 1
Reportage on Talks [cross-reference] E 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Schmidt Delivers Government Statement to Bundestag J 1
Genscher Reports to Bundestag on Rome NATO Meeting J 7
Kohl Replies to Schmidt's Government Statement J 11
Chancellor Supports Reagan on Arms Negotiations J 12
Government To Continue Disarmament Talks With GDR J 12
Genscher, Mitsotakis Discuss Near East, Cyprus J 13
Genscher Meets With Arab League Secretary General J 13
PLO Representative Invites Kohl to Arab Countries J 13
Reportage on Reaction to Schmidt, Begin Remarks J 14
DPA Report J 14
Newspaper Comments J 14

FRANCE

Foreign Ministry Reacts to Begin Statements [LE MONDE 7 May] K 1
Government Concerned Over Lebanon, Urges UN Action [LE MONDE 2 May] K 1
President Giscard Appeals to Gaullist Voters K 1
Debre, RPR Backers Urge 2d Round Vote for Giscard [LE MONDE 7 May] K 2
RPR Official Asks 'Militants' To Back Mitterrand K 2
Marchais Repeats Call for Socialist Support K 2
L'HUMANITE Cites Statements on Possible Coalition [7 May] K 2
2 May Editorial K 3
7 May Papers Comment on Presidential Debate K 4
LE MONDE K 4
LE FIGARO K 5

SPAIN

Demonstration Follows Bomb Attack in Madrid N 1
Government Communique N 1
Basque Claim Responsibility N 1
Troops Confined to Barracks N 1
Confinement Order Lifted N 1

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

Soviet Missile Cruiser Tallin Sighted in Baltic [AKTUELT 6 May] P 1

FINLAND

Foreign Minister Vayrynen Leaves for Hungary, CSSR P 1

NORWAY

Prime Minister Bruntland To Visit Finland 1 June [AFTENPOSTEN 6 May] P 1
Soviet Reaction to Diplomats' Expulsion [AFTENPOSTEN 2 May] P 1
Crisis Contingency Plans Continuing With Sweden [AFTENPOSTEN 6 May] P 2
Editorial Sees Poland as Possible Turning Point [ARBEIDERBLADET 27 Apr] P 3
AFTENPOSTEN Comments on Swedish Government Crisis [5 May] P 4

SWEDEN

GDR Foreign Minister Meets Leading Officials [ADN] P 5
Meeting With Party Leader [ADN] P 5
Stockholm Afghan Tribunal Investigates Atrocities P 6
Soviet Responsibility Claimed [SVENSKA DAGBLADET 2 May] P 6
More Testimony [SVENKSA DAGBLADET 3 May] P 7
Soviet Control Cited [SVENKSA DAGBLADET 4 May] P 7

UNITED KINGDOM

Nott Reviews Options To Cut Defense Costs [THE DAILY TELEGRAPH 7 May] Q 1
Pym Defends UK's Membership in Common Market [THE DAILY TELEGRAPH 7 May] Q 1
DAILY TELEGRAPH Advises Europe on NATO Talks [5 May] Q 2

CYPRUS

I DHALINI Reports Greek-Turkish Clashes in Limassol [7 May] R 1
Paper Says Turkish Pressure Caused Komninos Recall [ELEVTHERI KIPROS 7 May] R 1
Defense Ministry Denial R 2
EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis Comments on Party Name R 2
Rolandhis Makes Statement to London AL-'ARAB [O AGON 7 May] R 3
Further Comments [ELEVTHERI KIPROS 8 May] R 3
Denktas Discusses Elections, Plans To Quit Politics [HALKIN SESI 5 May] R 4

GREECE

AKROPOLIS: U.S. Presents Conditions on Bases [7 May] S 1
Usefulness of Dialogue With Turkey Questioned [AKROPOLIS 5 May] S 1

TURKEY

Turkmen Comments on NATO Meeting, U.S. Aid T 1
Turkmen on Aegean Airspace Talks, Cyprus Issues T 1
Commanders Leave for NATO Exercise in Brussels T 1
Talks With West German Defense Experts Conclude T 2
TERCUMAN: NATO, EC Should Strengthen Turkey [4 May] T 2
Proceedings Initiated Against Religious Groups T 3
Military Courts Pass Four Death Sentences T 4
World Bank Approves $300 Million Loan to Turkey T 4
Additional Loan Granted T 4
OECD Countries To Provide $938 Million in 1981 T 4
Ozal Comments T 5
Cement Exports To Reach Alltime High This Year T 5
Turkish Bank To Begin Operations in Britain T 5
Agreement To Reschedule Commercial Debts to Denmark T 6
State Tobacco Exports Reach Record Level T 6
VOTCP Criticizes NATO Summit, Arms Policy T 7

NEGOTIATIONS ON USSR GAS DELIVERIES OPEN IN VIENNA

AU071742 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 7 May 81

[Summary] A Soviet delegation headed by USSR Deputy Foreign Trade Minister Osipov arrived in Vienna on Tuesday for talks with the Austrian Oil Administration on the fourth Soviet-Austrian gas delivery agreement. Austria is interested in getting--in addition to the current annual quota of 2.5 billion cubic meters of natural gas annually--another 3-5 billion cubic meters. Since the envisaged agreement would involve Austrian deliveries of pipeline pipe, the talks are also attended by representatives of the Voest-Alpine Steel Corporation, as well as by representatives of the Austrian Kontroll-Bank.

The talks will center on the price of the Soviet gas, as well as on the interest rates for long-term loans for pipeline pipe. While the Soviet gas price has to date been linked with relatively inexpensive fuel oil, the Soviet side is now seeking to link it to the price of high-quality African crude oil. This Soviet proposal, which has already been rejected by the potential Soviet gas buyers FRG, France and Italy, is also regarded as unacceptable by the Austrian Oil Administration. The experts' talks will presumably last until the end of this week.

AUSTRIAN PRESS VIEWS KREISKY STATEMENTS IN RIYADH

AU071424 [Editorial Report] On 7 May most Vienna papers carry extensive reports by Austrian journalists who accompanied Chancellor Kreisky to Riyadh on various statements made by the chancellor on his meeting with Yasir 'Arafat, on the Middle East situation and on the question of Austrian arms exports to Israel.

Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German on 7 May, page 1, quotes Chancellor Kreisky as having said after his meeting in Riyadh with PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat, that "'Arafat, too, had regarded the current situation in the Middle East as 'highly critical.'" According to the paper, Kreisky declared that the situation was "most unfavorable" because "Syria, an ally of the USSR, is in the focal point," and Israel was "clearly carrying out acts of war."

Vienna DIE PRESSE in German on 7 May, page 1, quotes Kreisky as having said in this context that he could not conceive of a worse confrontation than that between Syria and Israel. According to DIE PRESSE, Kreisky also indicated that he did not regard the close relationship between PLO and Syria as very favorable, but added: "'Arafat must know for himself what he is doing."

Vienna ARBEITER ZEITUNG on 7 May, page 1, cites Kreisky as having said that "'Arafat knew the author of the leaflet in Damascus who claimed responsibility for the assassination of Vienna City Councilman Nittel," and that he was a "known double agent." Vienna KURIER on 7 May, page 3, claims that the 'Arafat-Kreisky meeting was not, as Kreisky jokingly told newsmen, "accidental" but was "secretly arranged before the chancellor's trip to Saudi Arabia."

KURIER claims that Kreisky has surprisingly altered his position on potential Austrian arms exports to Israel: While some time ago, during his latest trip to Egypt, he had categorically ruled out the possibility of such exports, he declared in Riyadh that he now no longer rejected in principle Austrian arms exports to Israel. This country, he added, was at peace with Egypt, "without a state of war with Jordan," and in a "not yet clarified situation with Syria"--the question would have to be "carefully examined."

KURIER also draws attention to the fact that Kreisky is trying to interest Arab OPEC quarters in financing the controversial international conference center project at the Vienna "UN City." According to WIENER ZEITUNG, Kreisky said in this context that it was conceivable that several OPEC countries, interested in such a center, would temporarily--"through a kind of leasing system"--take over the construction costs, but these costs would be too much for Saudi Arabia alone.

Reportage on Talks

For reportage on Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's visit to Saudi Arabia, see the Saudi Arabia subsection of the Arabian Peninsula section of the 6 May Middle East and Africa DAILY REPORT and subsequent issues.

SCHMIDT DELIVERS GOVERNMENT STATEMENT TO BUNDESTAG

DW070825 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0700 GMT 7 May 81

[Government statement by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt delivered to the Bundestag in Bonn--live]

[Text] Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, I would like to report to you on my and Graf Lambsdorff's visit to Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. Then I want to talk on the conferences of the North Atlantic council in Rome. The federal foreign minister will take the floor in the cause of the debate and discuss the matter more thoroughly.

It has become particularly clear in past days how complex the international situation is and how much our country is involved in conflicts which are actually not our conflicts. We must therefore take care not to become excited, not to be involved in excessive polemics and dangerous simplifications. I say this to those in our country who have different opinions on current issues, and I would welcome it if my request for moderation would be listened to also outside our borders. [applause]

Moderation and awareness of responsibility are key words for peaceful coexistence in the world. These two key words hold a top position in the communique of the North Atlantic council's Rome session early this week. And the two key words "moderation and awareness of responsibility" are valid not only in the sphere of the Atlantic alliance.

The foreign policy of the Federal Government is without a breach, it is a continuous policy, it is predictable. The policy serves peace and we will not be confused in pursuing this policy.

I visited Saudi Arabia last week together with the federal minister of economics and we were accompanied by four prominent scientists. Thereafter, on 29 and 30 April, I visited the United Arab Emirates. This region is of extraordinary world political significance. It is of vital importance also for the FRG. My visit there should therefore not be considered in a narrow perspective regarding this or that individual problem of mutual relations, regardless how important it may be. Such a narrowing down of the view could easily lead to misunderstandings and discord. I would therefore like to make a short review of the development of the total mutual relations.

The Gulf states and particularly Saudi Arabia as well as the United Arab Emirates are aware of the political and economic significance of close and trustful relations with North America, West Europe and the FRG. This awareness has been considerably strengthened through the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Seen from there, Afghanistan is very close by.

The reason for my visit was the political and economic significance of the Gulf region which has grown considerably in the past 10 years and particularly in the very last years with regard to the West as a whole and the interests of our country. It was my second visit to the region. The first was in 1976 to Riyadh. Already at that time the Saudi leadership attributed great significance to a far-reaching politically-based development of our relations. On the basis of a fundamental agreement that was established in 1976 between the Saudi leadership and us, particularly between Crown Prince Fahd--who plays the role of government chief, of prime minister there--and myself, both countries in the following years purposefully intensified their contacts, developing their cooperation politically as well as economically. I point out especially the visit of Crown Prince Fahd to Bonn in 1978 and the state visit of King Khalid of Saudi Arabia in 1980.

Parallel to developed relations with the United Arab Emirates as well as Kuwait, Qatar and other states of the region, the network of mutual representations was developed. The exchange of visitors and particularly economic cooperation were considerably intensified.

The Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, the fighting that is continuing there, mean a deep incision for the mode of thinking and acting of the countries on the Gulf. As a result of the power-political advance of the Soviet Union, the Gulf region finds itself exposed to a strategic challenge of a new dimension. In view of the buildup of military positions by the Soviet Union on the Horn of Africa, in Ethiopia, then also in Afghanistan, supported by the increased presence of the Soviet Navy in the Indian Ocean, on the Red Sea, the awareness of being threatened increased in the states of the Gulf region.

The political doctrines which the two great powers have promulgated with respect to the Gulf region have been received there with reserve. The speech by General Secretary Brezhnev in New Delhi in 1980 was interpreted as the announcement of a power-political claim for having a say in the Gulf region. The development of the relations of the two Yemeni states with each other, the enhancement of the Soviet military presence in South Yemen and the destabilization as a result of the Iranian-Iraqi conflict intensified the need of the Gulf states for an active security policy.

This is the greater interconnection in which the last, the present trip to the Gulf region must be viewed. The public discussion on individual aspects such as oil policy and arms exports do not properly reflect the dimension of what had been the point of our discussions. It rather was the objective of this visit to broaden and improve the bases of a political and economic cooperation devised for an extended period of time. I realize that the interest of the Gulf states is such an enhancement isn't a temporary matter. It is of longer term significance. This was confirmed by our talks in Riyadh and in Abu Dhabi, and it extends beyond the oil era, the era in which there will be oil.

More clearly than before it became evident that these countries have recognized the interdependence of their own vital interests with those of the Western countries. Their wealth has been essentially invested in the Western economic systems. Their economic well-being, not only for as long as they produce oil, but also beyond the oil era, will depend on the working capability, the well-being of the Western industrial economy.

These states view our relations not only from the angle of the mutual trade policy, but also from the angle of a longer term, comprehensive cooperation in the political and economic spheres. They want to better inform us about the political worries, the dangers, their own objectives in the Gulf region; they have an interest of their own in the developments in Europe, in West Europe as well as in the East-West relations. Crown Prince Fadh, for example, saw quite clearly that a crisis over Poland, for example, might essentially change the world political situation and thus might also have repercussions on the Saudi interests, on the situation in the Gulf area.

Repeatedly, we were asked whether Europe, in view of these interconnections, must not muster contributions of its own toward the security and stability of the Gulf region in which Europe, after all, is vitally interested. What belongs into this broader inter-relation is also the desire for the establishment of a cooperation in the field of security policy. The Gulf states feel all the more entitled to raise this question since they, on their part, display readiness, even concrete action, to make allowances for the interests of the world economy through a moderate and moderating oil policy, and since they on their part are politically endeavoring to contribute to a mitigation of tensions.

What impressed me was how much my interlocutors, the government of a nonaligned country of the Third World, term themselves part of the Free World and how much they underscore the common interest of repelling communism. The new regional organization of six Gulf states, whose charter is supposed to be signed and thus put into force by the six heads of states in Abu Dhabi this month, on 25 May, I believe, is aimed at maintaining a market-economy system and at strengthening the power of resistance against external threat and subversion. The Gulf states want to set up their own defense capability; they want to improve their own armed forces with the help of their friends, as my interlocutors strongly emphasize; they want to set them up and improve them.

In view of their basic attitude, they believe that they are sort of entitled to expect their Western partners to help them in security policy and in the organization of their own defense, and they see natural partners for such cooperation especially in the European states. I can appreciate this interest. Conversely, we also found understanding, a sympathetic understanding in partnership, for our situation and for the limitation of our German possibilities.

I explained that, and why, the dispatch of German soldiers to the Gulf region cannot be taken into consideration. I also expounded the legal situation and the oft-conjured principles of our arms export policy. I drew attention to the current review of these principles which in their present version essentially are 10 years old and in part had predecessors which showed the same direction, and to the fact that in all three political [groups] in the parliament of our country an opinion-forming process is underway which for the time being it still very controversial, and that arms exports to that region are not possible, at any rate, not at this time.

The discussion on the principles for arms exports valid to date shows, by the way, that this doesn't involve a tactical dispute between Bundestag parties, but a fundamental question concerning German foreign policy, a question which needs to be examined very carefully also in the awareness of the interests of foreign and security policies of our state which are at stake in this respect, and if possible without any polemics. And when a result is achieved, this result will require the proper support by all political forces in the Bundestag.

It was with just about the following remark that Crown Prince Fahd wound up the subject just dealt with: The Saudi Arabian side has not advanced any official request for arms deliveries to the Federal Republic of Germany. But should the Federal Republic of Germany, being a friendly state, have a chance to support Saudi Arabia in its defense problem, this would be welcomed as a friendly act. The crown prince and the members of his government, the ministers, left no doubt that Saudi Arabia desires a more concrete security policy cooperation, especially also with us, and that it would regard it as a cornerstone for an even broader partnership.

Under the impression of the explanations of my interlocutors, which were made in the spirit of a high degree of responsibility awareness and in a great spirit of partnership, I told them that I would explain to the Bundestag here the aspects which they have advanced for their desire for a comprehensive cooperation, including security policy cooperation; I am doing it this morning, having had an opportunity yesterday to inform the Foreign Affairs Committee. The Bundestag also must be aware that this entire complex of a new security policy awareness, in part, a search for a new security policy in cooperation with the Western partners, is not, at any point, connected by the Saudis with the problem of the Israeli-Arab conflict. What matters instead is that the Gulf states have become aware of the threat by the Soviet military might and that they develop their own security policy concept in proportion thereto.

At this point, I have to insert some remarks concerning the Middle East conflict. With great emphasis, my interlocutors urged early headway in the solution of this conflict. They also stressed that the Israeli-Arab conflict, which continues to smoulder, offers Soviet policy additional points for exerting influence in the region.

As for the repeated attacks by the Israeli prime minister in connection with my Middle East tour, the spokesman of the Federal Government already has come out with a statement, ladies and gentlemen. I will not add anything to it at this time, especially since I am, have been, and always will be aware of the moral and historical quality of the German-Israeli relations. [applause] The relations between the Germans and Israelis are good relations as a result of the manifoldness of private ties, and by the manifoldness of the private contacts, they also are unusually close relations. Today, on the 33d founding day of the state of Israel, on the day when Israel commemorates its right to self-determination and its state status, the day which is being observed in Israel as a national holiday,

I repeat my wish that Israelis and Arabs may soon be living with each other in just and comprehensive peace. [applause]

And on behalf of all Germans, I add in deep earnest--and in so doing I don't make any tactical reservation--the renewed plea: Let us be guided by moderation and commonsense as before, and by the readiness to reconciliation and cooperation. I, in any event, will not cease doing this. [applause]

My Arab interlocutors advocated a comprehensive settlement in which all states and peoples of the region will live together in peace. In that respect, Israel was not excepted. I on my part explained the Middle East policy of the European Community. Both sides underscored the important role of the United States of America in bringing about a comprehensive peace settlement. The policy of the European Community met with a favorable response on the Saudi side.

My interlocutors and I were further agreed that the more unfriendliness the West displays toward the Palestinians and the PLO, the more strongly will they be pushed in the direction of the Soviet Union. As far as the Federal Government's attitude toward the PLO is concerned, I said publicly in Riyadh, and I quote my own utterances at the press conference in Riyadh: Our German attitude toward the PLO will be determined by the position which the PLO adopts toward the right also due Israel to live within secure and recognized borders. [applause]

My interlocutors there firmly believe that a settlement of the Palestinian problem after the Camp David model cannot be expected and cannot be implemented. What I said on this was that for a discontinuation of the autonomy negotiations, ways would have to be sought for including additional Arab states and the Palestinian people in the peace process. In my opinion, the European Council's Venice statement in the spring of last year would offer a good starting basis for this. Yet, I pointed out that any potential European contributions toward such developments can be rendered solely in harmony with the United States of America,

Let me revert to the further course of talks in Riyadh and Abu Dhabi. In Riyadh, we agreed that the intention to continue helping Turkey and Pakistan--to the best of our abilities--is an important factor of stability in the entire region. At the same time, we propose to advocate the continued participation of other friendly states in this effort. I paid considerable tribute to the increasing weight of the Islamic Conference in the solution of the problems of the whole region, also with respect to the Iranian-Iraqi conflict. And in so doing, I appreciated the essential and moderating role of Saudi Arabia.

Another key subject of our talks was the world economic problems including the energy and currency issues. I am very much impressed by the readiness of Saudi Arabia, but also of the United Emirates, to cooperate in the solution of the present difficulties. It is my impression that the developments of the past several years have contributed toward the intensification of the feeling of interdependence in the states rich in oil, the feeling of mutual dependence of the economic development in their countries, in the industrial states and in the third and fourth worlds, as it is now generally put. We shouldn't underrate what this constructive attitude means for our own national, economic and employment policy interests as well.

The federal economics minister, who cannot be here today, and I explained that the high balance of paymments deficits in industrial countries and in developing countries, to the extent that they are dependent on oil imports, and the world economic structural problems as a consequence of this development, have considerably aggravated the worldwide danger of protectionism in manifold forms. This entails a special responsibility for the oil states in general and Saudi Arabia in particular, above all, vis-a-vis the developing countries. We discussed this for a long time.

The crown prince and Minister Yamani pointed out that the Saudis pass on a higher share of their gross national product as development aid than any industrial country. This is true. The contribution of the Emirates is also most considerable.

The argument that price increases of industrial products have considerably contributed to the world's economic difficulties was contested by me by pointing out the considerably higher and faster oil and energy price increases. I stated in addition that linking the oil price to a general index of industrial products would burden in an unjustified way countries with a low price increase rate, such as the FRG.

We attributed special importance to the fact that Saudi Arabia should play a more active role in the future in all such fields as the international handling of problems involved in overcoming world economic difficulties, monetary policy problems and the strengthening of developing countries which do not produce oil. I want to mention here that due to our considerable assistance, this greater role of Saudi Arabia in the International Monetary Fund has been generally recognized not just de facto but also foramlly; it was expressed by a change of the quota system.

I want to conclude this passage with the remark that naturally we highly appreciate the moderate oil policy of Saudi Arabia which has gone to the limits of its technical oil production and export capacities to offset the cut off supplies of other countries, such as Iraq and Iran. We left with the impression that one also can firmly count on a future moderate oil policy from Saudi Arabia. We agreed also that the industrial countries must continue their energy saving policy, a policy the successes of which are being very much recognized and appreciated in Saudi Arabia.

Crown Prince Fahd and I also agreed that it would serve the interests of both sides to carry on the dialogue between the FRG and Saudi Arabia not only on a government level but also on the level of private organizations and firms. I have in mind intensified talks between representatives of science, economy and politics.

We agreed that negotiations should take place between the finance ministers of both countries on the solution of tax problems which are of interest for both sides, particularly for Saudi Arabis with regard to Saudi capital investments in the FRG.

Ladies and gentlemen, it turned out in the talks in Saudi Arabia as well as in Abu Dhabi that bilateral economic relations are good, that further development is considered desirable by both parts and that the development of the political basis through the visits will be useful.

In addition, I consider it necessary--particularly in the Emirates, which I want to quote as an example for other oil-producing states which do not need development aid--that the Federal Government should take over a stronger flanking role in certain cases with regard to the preparation and support of industrial projects such as joint ventures, for example, and the introduction of new technologies. This could be an additional task for the DEG [German Development Society], for example.

As a whole, our partnership with the two visited states has entered a new phase. The political element of the relations has become even more evident. But we must also pay attention to security policy aspects. The overall aspect shows that the FRG now is bearing more responsibility. We cannot evade such responsibilities without damaging our own political interests and our long term political development.

I would welcome, therefore, the Bundestag's dealing more than heretofore with the states of the region and their political role.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would like to deal with the other issue I have announced. On Monday and Tuesday, the spring conference of the alliance's foreign ministers took place in Rome. The result of this conference as outlined in the published communique--and I would very much recommend reading the communique--it is a document that has come about in most intense bilateral and multilateral consultations, demonstrating the continuity of the alliance's policy and the agreement of the partners. It is a document to which the new Washington administration has made significant contributions.

The core parts of the Federal Government's security and foreign policies have again been confirmed by the alliance in Rome. I want to stress particularly some of the points you will find in the communique:

All alliance partners stressed in Rome the basic significance of ensuring an overall military balance. I said there six months ago in the government statement that no reliable peace would exist in the world without a balance. The aim is a balance, I quote the communique of Tuesday, on a lower level of armed forces, if possible. The necessity is being pointed out there simultaneously that all states must act moderately and with awareness of their responsiblity. The German-French statement of February said that moderation is incompatible everywhere--outside as well as inside Europe--with a relapse into violence and a policy of established facts.

The alliance partners confirmed, I quote the communique: That arms control and disarmament are integral parts of the alliance's security policy. They also found clear words for the dialogue with the Soviet Union. The alliance partners will maintain it, the communique reads, and they will work jointly for genuine detente if this will be possible due to the action of the Soviet Union. And eventually, there is also a clear statement in support of a really nonaligned attitude in the Third World.

All that is a clear confirmation of the policy of the social-liberal coalition and this Federal Government. I can say with great satisfaction and gratitude with regard to the federal foreign minister that this communique is an important phase on the way to a coordinated and continuous policy of the alliance partners on the threshold of a very difficult decade. [applause]

An important element of this policy is naturally the so-called dual decision of December 1979. All alliance partners agreed in Rome that both parts of the decision, that is, counterarming of the Americans and negotiations between the Americans and the Soviets on armament limitation, that both things must be carried out in parallel. This is why the United States plans for September to prepare the coming round of negotiations on the limitation of U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles jointly with the Soviet Union. You will find this in the second part of the communique. It is the will of the United States and the North Atlantic pact that the negotiations be opened before the end of the year, not talks but negotiations.

The course which the alliance has so far steered under essential participation of the Federal Government thereby has been affirmed. Jointly with the partners in the alliance, the social-liberal coalition will continue pursuing that course until the unchanged goal has been reached, namely, the balance between East and West, also with respect to nuclear Eurostrategic medium-range weapons on the lowest possible level. This road is long and laborious and difficult, and it isn't devoid of dangers. Yet, there is no other road on which we--perhaps under lesser risk--can secure our peace on a long term basis as well as our freedom of decision, meaning our freedom at large.

What I would like to stress, finally, is the agreement of the foreign ministers in the support of the French proposal concerning a conference on disarmament in Europe. This reflects the interest of all alliance partners in the continuation and in the broadening of the CSCE process. The successful conclusion of the CSCE followup meeting in Madrid and the adoption of a precise mandate for a conference on disarmament in Europe would give new and necessary impetus to the inalienable dialogue between East and West.

In conclusion, ladies and gentlemen, I want to say: The broad consensus of Rome also is a success of the new administration of the new U.S. President in Washington. [applause] President Reagan and all members of his cabinet from the very outset have emphasized that substantial, serious and effective consultations, as far as they are concerned, form a basis of the relations between West Europe and the United States. We have explained this to you on several occasions, ladies and gentlemen. In the numerous contacts between the Federal Government and the new administration, we have clearly and positively felt this renewed readiness for consultations in partnership, and especially also this week.

It will be this concrete partnership which will mark the official visit which I will pay President Reagan 2 weeks from today. We--and perhaps I may state this on behalf of the whole Bundestag and, surely, for many millions of German citizens--are glad that the recuperation of the U.S. President has progressed so rapidly. [long applause]

My visit to the United States will be taking place at a time when the new administration still has not decided many an important question concerning its foreign policy. The direct dialogue and the direct exchange of opinions in this phase are particularly significant to both sides. I am sure that the visit will serve our common efforts for peace and will strengthen the tested German-American friendship.

Ladies and gentlemen, I said on an earlier occasion that we have reason to be courageous with regard to the future, because we have learned what partnership is and that we may rely on our friends in the world. My visit to Saudi Arabia, the impressive solidarity of the partners of the Atlantic alliance in Rome and also the outlook on the talks with our American friends should, I think, consolidate our confidence in the future.

Our policy has proved its worth. The social-liberal coalition will continue this policy. This is what the vast majority of our people expects, as do our numerous friends out there in the world. [applause]

GENSCHER REPORTS TO BUNDESTAG ON ROME NATO MEETING

DW071307 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0939 GMT 7 May 81

[Speech by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher during the Bundestag debate on Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's government statement--live]

[Text] Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, the report of the chancellor on his Middle East tour has elucidated the problems of the region and the aspects of German and European Middle East policy. There can be no doubt for any of us that the relationship of the Germans with the state of Israel, which has been marked by historical responsibility, holds a central position in this Middle East policy. The Federal Government has been guided by this responsibility in each phase of its Middle East policy and this holds true also for the future This responsibility, however, also causes us to be sincere toward Israel even where we do not agree.

Ladies and gentlemen, all those who heard the chancellor in the synagogue of Cologne on 9 November 1978 were affected by the deep emotion with which he described the historical and the moral dimensions of the relations between Germans and Jews. And it will be in this awareness that we will determine our relations with Israel in the future as well. Nothing, absolutely nothing can detour us from this road. Our reserve also in the face of the unjustifiable attacks on the chancellor is evidence of this, and I have reason to thank colleague Kohl, also on behalf of the Federal Government, for what he has said about them and about the German-Israeli relations. [applause]

Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, I would like to proceed to the actual content of my contribution to this debate, namely, a report on, and an assessment of, the NATO meeting in Rome. By this meeting in Rome, the Western alliance at a time of continuing threat to security and international stability has given a sign of its unity, determination and will for cooperation. The foreign ministers meeting was characterized by the common goal to jointly preserve common security. The harmony between the European and American alliance partners is rooted in the awareness that Europe and the American democracies are a community of one destiny, that their place is on each other's side and that they are not equally distant from each other and from the Soviet Union.

The demand for moderation and responsibility in international politics is the clearly distinct call to embark on the road of cooperation rather than of confrontation in a difficult international situation. This demand is addressed to all states of the world. It is a warning to the East, yet it is also an offer to the East. Moderation means reserve everywhere, in the Third World as well as in Europe. During the highly intensive discussion, all foreign ministers were agreed in the goal of a consistent policy of nonintrusion in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Poland and in the will to extend economic assistance in the interest of a solution of the serious economic problems of that country. We also expect this of all other states. Poland must remain free to solve its problems on its own. This is the clear expectation of the alliance partners.

The third element of Western behavior toward the process of renewal in the People's Republic of Poland is the will of the West for the dialogue and for cooperation with the Soviet Union and the other states of the Warsaw Pact, but not the freeze of contacts with the East. [applause] By this constructive policy we intend to stabilize the political framework conditions which will abet the peaceful solution of Poland's problems which all of us desire.

The statement by the alliance that any intervention from outside would entail the most serious consequences for the international relations at large and change the entire international situation fundamentally shows the basic significance which the Western alliance accords the principle of moderation in the deportment of all states toward Poland.

Ladies and gentlemen, the result of the highly detailed discussion on the situation and development in the Third World is the renewed finding of all alliance states that genuine nonalignment is an important factor of stability in the world. The Federal Government quite expressly welcomes the fact that in its assessment of nonalignment it is in consensus with all its allies, just as it is in consensus with them in the assessment that the maintenance of the independence of the states of the Third World and their peaceful life together are congruent with the vital interests of the West. The will of the alliance for political solutions shows that as far as we are concerned. Renunciation of force is not a political demand confined to Europe; renunciation of force rather is the guiding line for our activities all over the world.

Just as detente and security are indivisible, the renunciation of force also must be applied on a worldwide scale lest peace be jeopardized time and again in and from other regions. The continued occupation of Afghanistan, but not that alone, shows the significance of our demand. The advocacy of genuine nonalignment also spells renunciation of the transfer of the East-West antagonism to the Third World. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, the offer of the West for respecting the political sovereignty, the offer of trade and technology transfer, the West's demand that all have to contribute to the campaign against hunger, poverty and underdevelopment--these demands draw the attention of the world to the central, the original problems of the developing countries which definitely cannot be explained by the East-West controversy. The appeal to all states not to exploit social problems in the Third World or even fan instability for scoring political advantages is important because we, on our part, don't want to transpose this East-West antagonism to the Third World, but also because others must behave likewise.

The statement of the alliance that a number of allied states have the capability, or are determined to obtain that capability, for deterrence of aggression and for coming to the aid of states is fending off a threat to their security and independence if they so desire, once again reaffirms the geographically unchanged, that is, the geographically unexpanded, area of validity of the Western defense alliance. This statement reaffirms the concept of division of labor and the respect of all allies for the sovereignty and for the free will of threatened states, even if they act on their own.

In this connection, it remains a foregone conclusion that missions of German soldiers outside the alliance area will be out of the question in the future as well. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, an example of the effort for the peaceful solution of a conflict is the contribution of the United States, Canada, Great Britain, France and the Federal Republic of Germany toward the solution of the Namibia issue. The conference of the five foreign ministers of the Namibia initiative held on Sunday, 3 May 1981, in Rome, reaffirmed the firm determination of these five governments to contribute toward an internationally acceptable solution of the Namibia problem which is one of the main problems of the African continent. In so doing, the five states underscored the central role of the United Nations in this solution, and they stated that Security Council resolution 435 forms a solid basis for attaining a negotiated solution.

The efforts for an improvement in the chance for a negotiated solution will contain proposals concerning constitutional agreements, so as to contribute that way toward a mitigation of the distrust among the parties involved in the conflict.

Mr President, it was quite natural that the alliance once again defined its views of the joint security policy. Deterrence and defense, arms control and disarmament are integral components of the security policy of the alliance. This statement by the foreign ministers confirms the harmony of the Federal Government's security with the security policy of all its allies. We expressly and emphatically avow the goal of this common policy, namely, to create a stable balance, if possible on a lower armed forces level. This Western security policy proposes to secure peace, preserve the freedom and independence of the allied states. And it wants to prevent an arms race. This policy requires the will to utilize any option for talks and negotiations.

Ladies and gentlemen, the Western alliance expressly advocates this by saying, and I quote: The allies will uphold the dialogue with the Soviet Union and work jointly for genuine detente and the development of the East-West relations, if the deportment of the Soviets makes this possible.

This statement, ladies and gentlemen, is a sincere offer to the Soviet Union. The realism of this statement is expressed by the finding that the other side, too, must supply its contribution, for each offer requires acceptance. The policy of the Federal Government as expressed by my visits to Warsaw, Prague and Moscow and as resulting from the forthcoming visit to the Federal Republic of Germany by General Secretary Brezhnev, is part of this dialogue, a dialogue which is conducted in exactly the same way by our American allies, as proved by the continuous talks of the U.S. secretary of state with the Soviet ambassador, the personal message of President Reagan to General Secretary Brezhnev and the planned meeting of Foreign Ministers Haig and Gromyko.

The will to work for genuine detente and the development of East-West relations, results also from the support of the French suggestion on a European disarmament conference, from the determination to continue the Vienna troop reduction negotiations and from the intention to take up negotiations on medium-range arms.

Ladies and gentlemen, there can be no doubt at all that developments in the field of strategic medium-range arms give the Europeans and us Germans special reason for concern. We take this concern seriously and we are willing to discuss the problems of our security frankly and thoroughly in our own country. But we must point out that if one assesses the threatening potentials correctly, if one assesses the ratio of power correctly in the field of medium-range missiles, this concern isn't based on the NATO decisions of December 1979--which some people claim in this country. No, we are threatened and therefore deeply worried by the Soviet lead in the field of medium-range missiles. [applause] Warnings against a new arms race must be aimed in that direction.

Ladies and gentlemen, also on this question, a rejection of the alliance's policy doesn't give our critics a sole representation claim for peace and moral responsibility. [applause] The allies have rejected with a well considered reflection the fact that superiority cannot be fixed through a complete paralyzation of NATO's modernization program. Moreover, the threat to NATO would be increased by the exemption of arms systems which could threaten the NATO area from East of the Urals through the so-called moratorium suggested by the East.

Ladies and gentlemen, we expressly welcome the U.S. intention to enter prior to the end of this year negotiations with the Soviet Union on medium-range arms in the framework of SALT. The resumption of these negotiations will be immediately prepared in contacts with the Soviet Union. Thus, the actual negotiation phase will be opened this year after the talks between the United States and the Soviet Union last fall. The FRG takes part in the preparation of these negotiations and their observation through its membership in the disarmament group and in the defense policy group of the alliance.

We express the hope and the expectation that the intention declared by Secretary of State Haig to discuss the time and procedures of these talks with Foreign Minister Gromyko in September will bring about the resumption of negotiations--which we all want--at the desired time.

We don't want to conceal that the continued deployment of Soviet medium-range missiles complicates these negotiations more and more. We must also be aware of the fact that the success of medium-range negotiations, which we desire so much, would be gravely jeopardized if we would call in question the counterarmament part of the dual decision. [applause]

Mr President, the Western alliance has demonstrated in the Rome meeting its unity and determination to do what is necessary for its own security. This statement, with regard to strengthening the defense ability must be followed by action in all member states. In a difficult international situation causing our grave concern the alliance has made a responsible and considerate offer. The signal of Rome is a peaceful offer, an offer for cooperation expressing the will for detente, arms control and disarmament. We appeal to the Soviet Union to realize the great possibilities contained in this offer for all people and to accept this offer. Western policy in this difficult phase is characterized by continuity and predictability. This is confirmed by the statement that the firmly based policy of the alliance will be continued.

Obviously, our policy will be successful only if it will be fully and completely implemented in all its elements. The one who speaks of security while meaning only arms control will be endangering security and the chances of arms control negotiations. [applause] The one who speaks of security while seeing only the military side runs the risk of becoming involved in a new arms race. [applause]

We want to achieve peace through detente, cooperation and disarmament. We realize that we can preserve peace only together with our allies; the European and the American allies. Anyone who questions our will regarding the fulfillment of our commitments to the alliance and the representation of our common policy gives wrong signals to the West and to the East. Only a FRG holding a firm position in the Western alliance, only a FRG convincing people with its reliability can ensure its interests in the alliance, and only then will it be a discussion partner taken seriously by the East.

In preparation for the NATO foreign minister's conference and in its implementation, the United States demonstrated its serious will regarding consultations with its allies. I have reason to expressly thank Secretary of State Haig for his contribution to the NATO foreign ministers conference.

The Rome statement contains the German-French statement of 6 February 1981 and the press statement published on the occasion of my visit to Washington on 9 and 10 March 1981. The intensive German-French talks and the close German-American contacts have a key function with regard to the alliance. They have ver much contributed to the agreement and the successful result of Rome.

Mr President, as always, the NATO meeting was preceded by the meeting of the foreign ministers of the United States, France, Great Britain and the FRG on Germany. The statement of the foreign ministers, which is being supported by all allies, has the following text, which I quote: "The allies continue to attribute special significance to the maintenance of the quiet situation in and around Berlin. Strict adherence to and full application of the four-power agreement of 3 September 1971 remain vital for security in Europe, for East-West relations and the overall international situation. The allies also in future will support the efforts of the FRG to achieve a revocation of the GDR's increase of the minimum exchange amounts which have a particularly negative effect on the number of visitors and tourists traveling to the GDR and to East Berlin."

This statement once again stresses the support of all our allies for our policy vis-a-vis Germany and Berlin. Only together with the three protective powers, only together with the other allies, will this policy be possible, and only together with them can it be successful.

Mr President, the FRG is a respectable partner with equal rights in the European Community and in the Western alliance. Having equal rights means representing our own interests with self-confidence in the alliance. Equal rights also means contributing equally to common security and freedom. Anti-Americanism is neither one thing nor the other, it is just harmful to our interests. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, as a state in a divided country, we know about the significance of cooperation and detente. It is therefore more true for us than for anybody else that relapsing into Cold War would have the worst consequences. It is equally true for us that our security and freedom can be maintained only in a Western alliance which is able to act.

NATO's spring meeting in Rome was an expression of this ability to act. The common policy, confirmed there once again, corresponds in all its elements to our German interests, and it corresponds to the aims of German policy formulated by the Federal Government. We will persistently represent them also in the future, together with our allies. [applause]

KOHL REPLIES TO SCHMIDT'S GOVERNMENT STATEMENT

LD071400 Hamburg DPA in German 0830 GMT 7 May 81

[Report on the reply by CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl in the 7 May Bundestag Debate following the government statement issued by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt]

[Excerpts] Bonn, 7 May (DPA)--As the first speaker in the debate, opposition leader Helmut Kohl strongly attacked the chancellor and the SPD with regard to questions of security. Pointing to the resistance within the SPD to the NATO decision, Kohl expressed fears that the chancellor no longer has a majority in the coalition for the Federal Government's policy on security. He said the CDU/CSU opposition isn't there to furnish the chancellor with the missing majority in the Bundestag. Kohl stressed that if, as is feared, the course set by the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD--which has demanded a review of the SPD's agreement to the NATO decision--is continued within the SPD, "then the most elementary FRG security interests are threatened."

Kohl said that Schmidt must ask himself how he contributed to this development in the SPD. He recalled earlier statements by Schmidt about a renunciation of "counterarming" as an ideal result of negotiations with Moscow and his proposal for an agreement between West and East on a time-limited halt to the deployment of nuclear medium-range missiles. Meanwhile, he said, the chancellor has chosen to fight shy of the political dispute on the need for "counterarming".

On behalf of the opposition, Kohl welcomed the results of the NATO council meeting in Rome, as American-Soviet negotiations on new nuclear weapons systems are to begin in the autumn. He expressed hopes for the earliest possible arms limitation to the lowest possible level. He said that for the CDU/CSU the arming and the negotiating sections of the NATO decision remain equally important. But for the opposition, negotiations are no substitute for the necessary reestablishment of a balance in Europe.

To loud and prolonged applause, Helmut Kohl emphatically supported Chancellor Helmut Schmidt against the attacks by Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin. He said they are "unjustifiable." He stated: "We strongly reject these attacks on the freely elected chancellor of the Federal Republic." Such defamatory remarks are an "impossible tone" to use between friendly countries and cannot be justified by Begin's election campaign. It was a "depressing and sad" occurrence.

Kohl stressed that the Federal Government's friendship with Israel must be maintained, despite the good relations with the Arab states.

Kohl said that anyone who, 36 years after Hitler's death, says that he doesn't want to shake the hand of a man who served as a soldier under Hitler, must allow himself to be asked whether such statements help peace. "Solidarity and friendship with Israel cannot mean that we unreservedly approve its policy," Kohl stated to applause.

CHANCELLOR SUPPORTS REAGAN ON ARMS NEGOTIATIONS

LD080125 Hamburg DPA in German 1716 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 7 May (DNA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has no doubt that U.S. President Reagan wants negotiations with the USSR. In an interview on the German television program "Focal Point" Thursday evening, Schmidt spoke against mistrusting the [word indistinct] willingness to negotiate of the new U.S. Government.

He said he is fairly sure that one can have confidence in the continuity and security of American strategy. "And I am quite sure that one can and must have confidence in the fact that Reagan means what he says, that he, in fact, means that he wants to negotiate with the Russians," Schmidt said.

The chancellor emphasized again that he supports the NATO twin decision which advocates counterarming with medium-range missiles and also negotiations about their limitation. Anyone who gives up either one side of this or the other "gives up the cohesive strength of the alliance and endangers us to a very great degree," he said. Schmidt is convinced that the twin decision will "not be overturned" at the next SPD party congress.

GOVERNMENT TO CONTINUE DISARMAMENT TALKS WITH GDR

LD080132 Hamburg DPA in German 1554 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 7 May (DPA)--The Federal Government is prepared to continue the talks and consultations it has occasionally conducted with the GDR about questions of disarmament.

Foreign Ministry spokesman in reply to questions in Bonn today, pointed out that similar talks at a high level had been conducted with the Soviet Union and other Eastern bloc states and that the intention to continue them remained. He emphasized that these contacts, which are not unusual, should be seen as being a part of the continual talks on these questions within the framework of the Western alliance.

The spokesman also confirmed reports that the secretary of state at the Foreign Ministry, Guenter van Wall, has stated the continued willingness for such consultations with the GDR at a recent meeting with the head of the GDR permanent mission in Bonn, Ewald Moldt. As was noted, Bonn's representative for questions of disarmament and arms control is Ambassador Friedrich Ruth.

GENSCHER, MITSOTAKIS DISCUSS NEAR EAST, CYPRUS

LD071648 Hamburg DPA in German 1513 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 7 May (DPA)--The situation in the Near East and the Cyprus problem were the main topics of the talks between Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Greek Foreign Minister Konstantin Mitsotakis in Bonn on Thursday. The two ministers also again discussed the outcome of the NATO meeting in Rome, about which they expressed "very positive" views, as the Foreign Ministry later stated. Mitsotakis later discussed economic questions with Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff and gave a lecture to the Foreign Policy Society.

At further meetings on Friday with Genscher and Federal President Karl Carstens, Mitsotakis will speak about his country's difficult relations with Turkey. This is an area in which, according to information from Athens, Greece would be interested in Bonn adopting the role of mediator. During the exchange of views with Genscher, the visit of the Greek foreign minister to the GDR in the coming weeks is also likely to be mentioned.

GENSCHER MEETS WITH ARAB LEAGUE SECRETARY GENERAL

LD071516 Hamburg DPA in German 1401 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 7 May (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today received Secretary General of the Arab League Chedli Klibi. They discussed Middle East problems and European-Arab cooperation. Klibi arrived in Bonn on Wednesday, when he stressed to journalists the "clarity and courage" of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's latest statements on Palestinian self-determination and also voiced hopes for Bonn's recognition of the PLO.

His exchange of views with Genscher probably also dealt with preparations for the planned first conference of European and Arab ministers, which is to be held in London in the second half of this year. At a lecture in Bonn yesterday evening, Klibi called upon the European Community countries to make their technological knowhow available in exchange for Arab oil.

PLO REPRESENTATIVE INVITES KOHL TO ARAB COUNTRIES

LD081010 Hamburg DPA in German 0909 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] Hamburg, 8 May (DPA)--The PLO representative at the Arab League Bureau in Bonn, 'Abdallah al-Ifranji, suggested an early visit to the Arab countries to opposition leader Helmut Kohl. In an interview with Saarland Radio, broadcast on Thursday evening, Al-Ifranji described as positive Kohl's remarks in the Bundestag debate on Thursday about the problems between the Federal Republic and Israel. Al-Ifranji said he wished, however, that the opposition would improve" its knowledge of the Arab world and of the views of the PLO." For this reason, he is ready "to make all the preparations for Kohl to visit the Arab world to observe more closely and on the spot the developments in these countries."

According to Al-Ifranji, the statements made by Israeli Menachim Begin aren't determined by the election campaign in Israel, rather, they expose "a dangerous trend within Israel and within Israeli politics." The reaction of Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in his government statement was "very sober and very judicious."

REPORTAGE ON REACTION TO SCHMIDT, BEGIN REMARKS

DPA Report

LD071452 Hamburg DPA in German 1340 GMT 7 May 81

[Excerpts] Hamburg, 7 May (DPA)--CDU politician Erik Blumenfeld, member of the European Parliament and chairman of the German-Israeli Society, has demanded that Chancellor Helmut Schmidt pay a visit to Israel.

The PLO representative in Bonn, 'Abdallah al-Ifranji, welcomes the chancellor's statements on the Palestinians' right to self-determination. "This is so because for a long time Palestinians have been of the opinion that German politicians must play a role in the Middle East," Al-Ifranji told DPA today. With regard to Schmidt's remarks that Bonn made its attitude to the PLO dependent on the PLO's attitude to Israel's right to exist, Al-Ifranji said that Israel isn't interested in being recognized by the PLO and has itself never required this in its rejection of a Palestinian state. It is Israel, therefore, that ought to answer this question.

In Friday's BILD ZEITUNG, former Israeli ambassador to Bonn, Asher Ben Nathan, described Prime Minister Menachem Begin's personal attacks on Chancellor Schmidt as "superfluous and harmful" to German-Israeli relations.

Newspaper Comments

DW051111 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 5 May 81

[From the press review]

[Text] FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE writes: Israel's friends in the world are numbered. This isn't an accusation, but the statement of a fact also familiar to the Israelis. The relationship between the Israelis and the Germans remain ticklish no matter how much both sides have sought to build a bridge during the past several years. In the case of Prime Minister Begin, however, it has been doubtful all the time whether he walked onto that bridge. The present attack against the chancellor is serious and too explicit to be dismissed as a rhetorical faux pas at an election campaign meeting.

Essen's WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG advocates: In view of the intemperance of Begin's invectives, it is hard to ponder on the question of whether justified reasons exist for criticizing Schmidt. The timing of the Riyadh trip and why he went there, but never to Israel, need to be noted rather than what he said? With regard to the Palestinian problem, there is no other answer than that of the European Community that they, too, are entitled to self-determination and to the organization of a state, whatever the form. Anyone visiting the Middle East has to make a statement on it. It constitutes the crucial issue of the region. Had the chancellor gone to Israel he would have had to define his stance on it there as well. Perhaps this is why he has so far avoided such a visit?

The comment of KIELER NACHRICHTEN reads: So far, the Federal Republic has not dodged its moral obligation toward Israel, nor will it be able to do so in the future.

Nevertheless, the interests of the two states are not identical, and Bonn's foreign policy is certainly not being conceived in Jerusalem and merely implemented on the Rhine. When it comes to Middle East policy, the Federal Government isn't going it alone at all, because the policy is embedded in initiatives of the European Community, and even archenemies of Israel like the PLO have a place therein.

STUTTGARTER NACHRICHTEN says: All judgments and prejudices which Begin has ever had against Germany and which he managed to suppress diplomatically for 4 years during his term of government have now erupted into shocking intemperance. Calling the chancellor of a friendly state "arrogant and impudent" cannot be excused in any way. His hint at Helmut Schdmit's past, which has withstood all investigations, is gross slander besides. What makes this incident so sad is that an immoderate Begin has thereby again inflicted massive harm on Israel's foreign policy interests. There is no justification for Begin's hysterical and abusive attack. Actually, we can only hope that he will retire after the elections.

The LUDWIGSHAFEN RHEINPFALZ asks: What is it that caused Begin to utter these accusations which come close to personal insults? What made many Israelis in all political camps say that Begin was right? It was particularly Schmidt's personal accents on the Palestinians' right to self-determination with a claim to a state organization and on the PLO's participation in the peace process that caused it. With this, the chancellor introduced a moral component into the debate which people other than the Israelis, too, are afraid may lead to a further upgrading of the PLO without the latter jettisoning its ultimate goal of destroying Israel. This, too, is the very point on which most of the German critics of Begin's intemperance raise their objections.

SAARBRUECKER ZEITUNG says: The limits of understanding have been reached indeed if and when new editions of the thesis on collective culpability are brought up, when the intentions are to enforce a renunciation of FRG national interests by means of exaggerated moralizing, if and when comprehensive and unjustified charges are uttered in an insulting tone and style, and if and when the German chancellor is defamed as a Nazi--which Israel's Prime Minister Begin has now done to the notably silent nodding of the Israeli opposition and the acclamation of the country's press. With these blows below the belt, this unprecedented faux pas, Menachem Begin demolished in a berserk manner within an hour what politicians and thousands of Germans and Israelis have built up over many years of laborious, engaged and tenacious work. It will be hard to dig out understanding and sympathy from this debris.

Essen's NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG states: The wounds of the past have not healed over at all. They are the wounds of the million-fold wrongs done to the Jews in the name of the German people and symbolized by Majdanek and Auschwitz. This will remain so for generations. Menachem Begin, the Israeli prime minister, has recalled this. But he did so in a manner which is lamentable indeed, because his attack on the chancellor and the distorting representation of Bonn's Middle East policy is intended to make people believe that the Federal Republic is continuing Hitler's crimes. This is such a malicious insinuation that it cannot be excused either by Begin's feelings or even by the election campaign in Israel.

In contrast, BERLINER MORGENPOST voices sharp criticism against Chancellor Schmidt: It was a bit of inexcusable rudeness that Schmidt on Israel's holocaust commemoration day, of all times, played himself up as the advocate of the Palestinian murder organization PLO. The fact that the chancellor, having returned from Riyadh as if drugged, in unprecedented hardness supported the demand for a Palestinian state was bound to have the effect of a challenge to the Israelis. Instead of dissuading Saudi Arabia from Jihad against the Jewish state, instead of signalling a visit to Jerusalem which has been delayed for such an insultingly long time, the chancellor clung to the Arab oil faucets with a serious provocation of Israel.

FOREIGN MINISTRY REACTS TO BEGIN STATEMENTS

LD071459 Paris LE MONDE in French 7 May 81 p 6

[Text] Paris and Bonn reacted again on Tuesday, 5 March, to the Israeli prime minister's attacks on the president of the French Republic and the West German Chancellor. "The French Government refrains from any comment on the style used by Begin, which is not the kind usually used in international relations," the Quai d'Orsay spokesman stated.

Begin, talking about arms and oil sales, stated among other things: "If you want examples of unbridled greed and avarice, go to see Helmut Schmidt and Giscard d'Estaing."

"France, for its part," the Quai d'Orsay spokesman explained, "is pursuing the one objective of establishing a just and lasting peace in the Near East which guarantees Israel's security."

In Bonn, the whole political world, notably the government coalition parties (Social Democrats and liberals) and the Christian Democratic opposition, have backed Schmidt and described Begin's remarks as "very unjust." Government circles feel that, 35 years after the fall of the Reich, Bonn can no longer accept "the policy of moral blackmail" systematically followed by the Jerusalem government toward the FRG.

GOVERNMENT CONCERNED OVER LEBANON, URGES UN ACTION

LD070925 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 May 81 p 6

[Text] The Foreign Ministry spokesman stated Wednesday, 29 April, that "France is following developments in Lebanon with anxiety" and "expresses its grave concern at this new escalation in the violence." The French Government thinks "that it is up to the United Nations and especially the Security Council to take effective action for a cease-fire."

PRESIDENT GISCARD APPEALS TO GAULLIST VOTERS

LD071300 Paris Domestic Service in French 0600 GMT 7 May 81

[Excerpt of speech by French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing 6 May at a rally in Nantes--recorded]

[Text] I appeal to the Gaullist family, one of the great, permanent currents in French politics. That family has always served France, in times of war as well as in times of peace. I need its help on Sunday to ensure the continuation of the Fifth Republic's institutions, which would not withstand the political disorder that would be created if my opponent were elected.

Regarding Sunday's decision, I am the only one who can maintain General de Gaulle's essential heritage, his institutional heritage--the institutions of the Fifth Republic--which distinguishes us from other countries and means that France has a strong and stable political power. I demonstrated yesterday evening that if my opponent were elected, this would be automatically called into question by the very nature of things on the day after he was elected.

DEBRE, RPR BACKERS URGE 2D ROUND VOTE FOR GISCARD

LD071513 Paris LE MONDE in French 7 May 81 p 31

[Excerpt] Michel Debre, former minister [as published], and almost all the RPR deputies who supported his candidacy issued an appeal in favor of Giscard d'Estaing on 5 May. "We put forward a program of recovery and salvation. We are convinced that the Socialist candidate, if elected, would destroy all chance of national recovery. Since we are opposed to one candidate, we are hence in favor of the other. Therefore, we call on French men and women to safeguard the Fifth Republic by voting for Valery Giscard d'Estaing."

In the first statement, issued 29 April, after the first round, Michel Debre did not explicitly call on people to vote for the outgoing president. He merely "warned" his voters "against the serious economic and political danger which would be posed by the implementation of the Socialist program."

RPR OFFICIAL ASKS 'MILITANTS' TO BACK MITTERRAND

LD071256 Paris Domestic Service in French 1000 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] RPR leadership member Philippe Dechartre has sent a letter to all Rally militants asking them to vote without hesitation for Francois Mitterrand. After stressing that Jacques Chirac represents the future, Dechartre says he considers that Giscard d'Estaing, since his installation in the Elysee, has treated all Gaullist proposals with scorn and humiliation.

An immediate reaction from Bernard Pons, RPR secretary general: Dechartre's letter is binding on him alone. Pons says that the RPR has made its position clear by totally approving Jacques Chirac's statement.

MARCHAIS REPEATS CALL FOR SOCIALIST SUPPORT

LD080932 Paris Domestic Service in French 0600 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] Georges Marchais has only held one meeting between the two presidential ballots, and it was yesterday in Gentilly. The number one of the Communist Party once again called on voters to vote for Francois Mitterrand, while insisting on the presence of Communist ministers if the Socialist candidate wins.

[Begin Marchais recording] It isn't the presence of Communist ministers which can in any way frighten people who want change. On the contrary, for this, their presence will be reassuring. As for the others, believe me, they are going to vote for Giscard d'Estaing. Of course, you will say that even clear aims and means, even a government with Communist ministers will not be enough to change what must be changed. You are right. Throughout my campaign, I haven't ceased to repeat that the actions of the workers is and will be necessary. You know this yourselves through experience. You get nothing without a fight. [end recording]

L'HUMANITE CITES STATEMENTS ON POSSIBLE COALITION

LD071503 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 7 May 81 p 3

[Text] Several Socialist officials spoke yesterday about the question of Communist participation in government and in the country and on the question of the PS alliances. For instance, Gaston Defferre, chairman of the Socialist Parliamentary Group in the National Assembly, stated on France Inter: "The Communists have expressed their disagreement with us very clearly; J. Chirac has adopted a different method in his election campaign. He said what he was proposing.

Above all, he criticized Giscard's action. Our paths converged in this criticism, as has been stated."

He then asked himself: "Do you believe that an agreement between Socialists, Communists and the RPR is possible?" He replied: "Such an agreement existed with General De Gaulle after the liberation and this coalition is possible, and thus the government which would be formed on the basis of the program which we would draw up together would have a base and a stature which would, I think, be likely to inspire confidence in many French people.'

Moreover, the mayor of Marseilles [Defferre] spoke on Europe 1 to clarify an AFP dispatch which indicated that G. Defferre was contemplating the formation of a Socialist-RPR government. Indeed, he confirmed that he had said that "if agreement could be reached on a program, the question might then arise."

On this same question, Michel Rocard, speaking on France Inter's "Let's Talk Straight" program, indicated: "Unless the PCF changes its position, for instance, on the very symbolic problem of Afghanistan and the significance of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, it is clear that a government agreement is very difficult and highly improbable."

Pierre Mauroy, for his part, described the statement made by Giscard d'Estaing 15 May 1974 as "premonitory." Francois Mitterrand's spokesman cited Giscard d'Estaing in the following terms: "The day when the PCF, instead of representing 20 percent of the voters, only represents 15 or 10 percent, the picture of French political life will change. When that happens, we will see alternation again because we will have a PS which will be able to constitute an alternative." This statement by Giscard d'Estaing of which Pierre Mauroy takes "official note" was not worded exactly as he reported it. In fact, Giscard d'Estaing stated: "We will see alternation again because we will have a PS or a social democratic party which will win over a section of those communist voters and which will be able to constitute an alternative."

Finally, it should be noted that Claude Estier, writing on the front page of the socialist weekly L'UNITE, states: "The balance of forces between Socialists and Communists has been markedly altered...The PCF's influence in a leftwing majority has been reduced and...Francois Mitterrand is indeed what he has always stated--a man who is free with regard to all the powers, whichever they may be."

2 May Editorial

LD071505 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 2 May 81 p 1

[Rene Andrieu editorial: "Out of the Frying Pan Into the Fire?"]

[Excerpt] Gaston Defferre stated yesterday that "it isn't possible to say that we will form a government with the communists" and, at the same time, he said he hopes for a coalition in which Socialists, Communists and the RPR would participate, referring to the "agreement which existed with General de Gaulle after the liberation."

Let us say immediately that such a proposal is irresponsible for a number of reasons, each of which would suffice alone.

Following the liberation, General De Gaulle's government had the mission--which it did not fulfill--of implementing the resistance national council program.

Today, the RPR's program is a rightwing program characterized in particular by the rejection of nationalizations and the intention to grant new subsidies to the big employers.

Furthermore, the Socialist leaders were not slow to condemn the demagoguery of this program during the campaign. Is there any need to recall some of their assessments: "Alongside Giscard's numbing conservatism, there is a feverish and wild conservatism," that of Chirac (J.P. Chevenement). "Jacques Chirac's program says nothing about his capacity to reduce unemployment" (Jacques Attali). "Chiracism promises to be even worse than Barreism" (J.P. Cot). "Jacques Chirac is jointly responsible for the 7-year term's sorry record.... Far from steering France out of the difficulties into which he has plunged it with Giscard d'Estaing, he would plunge it into a crisis which would throw our country into chaos, disorder and adventure... Changing from Giscard to Chirac means jumping out of the frying pan into the fire" (Gaston Defferre himself).

So by what obscure electoral miracle has base lead suddenly been transformed into pure gold?

If we add to that the fact that Chirac himself was anxious to specify that there could be no question of envisaging a rapprochement between the RPR and the Socialists unless the latter publicly repudiated any kind of agreement with the PCF, we are forced to point out that Gaston Defferre's plan--as two other Socialist leaders noted with regard to a similar profession of faith--is completely utopian, confusing, dangerous and unprincipled, because "you cannot fight the devil by signing a pact with Mephistopheles." (note)--Robert Chapus and Jean-Pierre Cot--LE MONDE 7 January 1981.)

The moral of the story is that an alliance with the RPR would only lead to the continuation of chaos. The only solution in keeping with the workers' interests lies in forming a government comprising Socialist and Communist ministers with the job of implementing a new policy.

Gaston Defferre's stance is particularly worrying since it has accompanied by similar statements by other Socialist leaders on F. Mitterrand's attitude if he is elected. It is as if their main concern were to reassure the right. In Michel Rocard's view, participation by Communist ministers is "highly improbable." Claude Estier, writing in L'UNITE, welcomes the Communist setback and concludes that the reduction of our party's influence on the left gives Francois Mitterrand a free hand. Pierre Maurdy goes even further and finds "premonitory meaning" in the statement made 15 May 1974 by Giscard d'Estaing according to which the PCF's fall to 15 percent of the votes would make it possible for the Socialists to enter the majority.

I don't know whether this torrent of appeals will reasure the rightwing voters. What is certain, however, is that they are not likely to arouse enthusiasm among Communist voters and don't create the best conditions for defeating Giscard in the second round.

The size of the demonstration organized by the CGT in Paris yesterday has recalled, if there was any need to do so, that many workers want real change and that this demand must be taken into account.

7 MAY PAPERS COMMENT ON PRESIDENTIAL DEBATE

LE MONDE

LD081105 Paris LE MONDE in French 7 May 81 pp 8-9

[Andre Laurens report]

[Excerpts] Giscard d'Estaing wanted a candidate-to-candidate, not to say man-to-man debate. He got it. Mitterrand, who demanded the presence of competent and impartial journalists to lead the debate, threw himself into the contest, not to say hand-to-hand fight, which at first he did not seem to want. Faced with an interlocutor who portrayed himself as d'Artagnan in Gascony and who "fenced" energetically throughout the debate, he did more than just stand his ground, embodying "calm strength," to cite his slogan.

We have just seen a tense, but dignified debate, which was less spectacular than the difficulties in planning it had promised, but less superficial than might have been feared. Giscard d'Estaing showed a well-controlled aggressiveness and Mitterrand showed his ability to counter the most cutting attacks. It is a pity that this type of debate doesn't take place every 7 years. This time, it was the titleholder who behaved like the challenger, while the opposition representative explained what he would do in the Elysee. This is a reversal of roles which, in the short term, seems to give Mitterrand the credibility which he was, nonetheless, alleged not to have.

LE FIGARO

LD081235 Paris LE FIGARO in French 7 May 81 pp 1-2

[Alfred Fabre-Luce commentary: "After the Duel"]

[Excerpt] I have just lived intensively through the peak of the presidential campaign, from the televised debate to the journalists' confrontation at the L'OPINION - 24 HEURES luncheon.

Tuesday morning [5 May], I saw on the cover of a major weekly, which I had thought to be more objective, a young man--Francois Mitterrand--and an old man--Valery Giscard d'Estaing. The former was generously offering his heart (a heart which had been slightly shifted to the center right). The latter bore, even on his hands, care-worn wrinkles, heavily drawn by an artist. But in the evening on the television, the (reverse) truth of their ages was restored. What alertness and pugnacity Giscard showed! After 15 minutes of the program had elapsed, the anxiety had changed camps.

Spring metaphors are abused these days. However, my precise impression at the end of the debate on the functioning of the institutions was that Francois Mitterrand was heading for a KO. He looked groggy, unsteady and even rejected. But he got to his feet before the end of the 10 seconds and the fight continued to a points decision.

Leaving boxing aside, something of this initial impression remained throughout the rest of the debate. Faced with the decisions he would have to take during the first weeks of his possible 7-year term, Francois Mitterrand vacillated, said he might not dissolve the National Assembly and then asserted that he would dissolve it, contemplated proportional representation, then admitted that parliamentary elections in June or July could only be carried out by the constituency voting system. If he vacillated like that at the beginning, how are we to believe that he could direct the country firmly afterward?

I will not make a detailed examination of the various phases of the duel. All the viewers will have been able to make a few essential observations. Francois Mitterrand did not dare to repeat his slanderous accusations against Giscard's foreign policy which he formulated at the beginning of the campaign. He deplored inflation and unemployment and everybody deplored them with him. But he didn't show that the implementation of the Socialist program would reduce either. He simply pointed out that the wisdom of the Giscard-Barre administration would make additional spending possible, and that was a tribute to his adversary.

After listening to him, you kept wondering what he now thinks of the joint program which he proposed to us in 1978.

This program contained a threat of unlimited nationalizations (simply on the workers' request). The PCF, avowed enemy of the small and medium-sized enterprises, still envisages preventing them from sacking anybody (and hence prompting them not to hire people). All that is still "in the air" since Mitterrand would have to have the backing of a Socialist-Communist parliamentary coalition to be able to carry out his functions normally.

Addressing his remarks to an adversary of the 1958 constitution (who now aspires to become its guarantor) and to a man who condemned General de Gaulle's permanent coup d'etat, Valery Giscard d'Estaing turned the problem around by making Mitterrand look like a Macmahon (reference to French president under Third Republic] who intended to address himself to the country without even establishing contact with parliament.

The French people, who were hoping to reach the end of a long bitter struggle next Sunday, were referred by Mitterand to a Sunday in summer. They faced the prospect of a new election campaign, full of risks, with, in the meantime--and possibly also afterwards--a president without the necessary powers to implement his program, facing an immediate threat in his presidential office and hence without authority in major international meetings. Giscard was charitable enough not to add that in these meetings people would lower their voices when discussing certain vital problems and would hesitate to divulge state secrets for fear of leaks reaching Moscow through the Communist allies.

Two absent figures were curiously present in the debate. By persistently citing Chirac, Mitterand was calling attention to the drawbacks for the majority of some extreme remarks made during the election campaign. But above all, he was urging Chriac to justify the decisions to vote for Giscard which he announced immediately after the first round.

The other presence was that of Georges Marchais. Giscard has reason to repudiate a majority party which, in important circumstances, has constantly voted for him. Mitterand, however, was rather ashamed of his ally. (In the previous few days, he had even canceled several meetings in which he was likely to be compromised by its applause). But he was also afraid of losing its votes, which he needs. Therefore, he was walking a tightrope--a Machiavelli on a tightrope, whom one word too many could plunge into the abyss on the right or the left.

DEMONSTRATION FOLLOWS BOMB ATTACK IN MADRID

NC071047 Paris AFP in English 1038 GMT 7 May 81

[Excerpts] Madrid, 7 May (AFP)--The chief military aide of King Juan Carlos was badly injured in a bomb attack today in central Madrid and an officer travelling in the same official car was killed, police said. Some 200 demonstrators rallied at the scene of the blast shouting "Long live Tejero"--a reference to Lieutenant-Colonel Antonio Tejero who led the abortive military coup attempt on February 23. Some chanted "With Franco, soldiers didn't die." Twelve people were reported injured, including several police in a car following the official limousine. One passer-by caught in the blast lost an eye, reports said.

The king was immediately told of the attack and spoke by telephone with Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, as as Army Chief-of-Staff Lieutenant-General Jose Gabeiras was driven to the scene of the attack. The immediate area was devastated. A pool of blood surrounded the bombed car and office windows were blown out by the force of the blast.

Government Communique

LD071125 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1055 GMT 7 May 81

[Official communique issued 17 May by the Madrid civil government on the bombing attack against Lieutenant General Valenzuela]

[Text] At about 1030 there was a terrorist attack outside 4 Conde de Penalver St. Two individuals on a motorboke threw an explosive device through the window of the official car carrying Lt Gen Valenzuela, who was very seriously wounded. Lt Col Guillermo Tevar Saco, the escort NCO, Don Antonio (Noguera) Garcia, and the army driver Don Manuel Rodriguez (Taboada), were all killed instantly by the explosion. Two bystanders Don Victor Fernandez (Ortiz) and Dona Pilar (Garrido Espana), were also injured, but their condition is not known. They were taken to the Gran hospital. Police units have been set up in the area.

Basques Claim Responsibility

LD071940 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] The Basque Fatherland and Liberty [ETA] has claimed responsibility for the attack this morning in Madrid in which three military personnel were killed and Lieutenant General Valenzuela was seriously wounded.

Troops Confined to Barracks

LD072000 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Reliable military sources have confirmed to Madrid National Radio that Lt Gen Quintana Lacaci, the captain general of the 1st Military Region, has issued orders to the commanding officers of all barracks in Madrid confining the troops to barracks. This measure affects the leave and overnight passes of all officers, NCO's and other ranks. The order took effect at around 1800, according to the same sources. This order, the sources confirmed, was adopted because of the terrorist offensive against top military officers and to prevent further possible attacks.

Confinement Order Lifted

LD072138 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2100 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] At 2120 today the press office of the captaincy general of the 1st Military Region issued the following note to the EUROPA PRESS AGENCY: The order confining troops to barracks issued by the military authorities at 1800 was lifted at 2100. Reserve reinforcements in the major units remain in force.

DENMARK

SOVIET MISSILE CRUISER TALLIN SIGHTED IN BALTIC

LD071525 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 6 May 81 p 4

[Leif Hansen report: "Giant Warship on Maneuvers near Denmark"]

[Excerpt] A Soviet warship of a size hitherto unknown in the Baltic has passed through Danish waters. Various circles in Denmark are wondering what this ocen-going ship is doing here.

The ship in question is the 9,000-ton missile cruiser Tallin, which sailed through the Great Belt on Monday. Up to now cruisers over 7,500 tons have not been seen in the baltic.

Inquiries to the Danish defense forces' information service only result in sparse comments: "It is correct that the Tallin sailed through the Great Belt. Normally the ship operates in the Pacific and the Indian Ocean. It is equipped to hunt submarines."

It is possible that the missile cruiser will visit the town of Tallin, after which it is called, on Soviet Navy Day in July. And before that it will probably take part in maneuvers with other Soviet ships in the western Baltic.

FINLAND

FOREIGN MINISTER VAYRYNEN LEAVES FOR HUNGARY, CSSR

LD071054 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0500 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Paavo Vayrynen left a moment ago for a week-long tour of Hungary and Czechoslovakia. The visit to Hungary begins in Budapest, where Foreign Minister Vayrynen and his entourage will arrive this afternoon. On Sunday he will fly from Budapest to Prague. Vayrynen's visits return the official visits to Finland by the Hungarian and Czechoslovak foreign ministers. During his visits, Foreign Minister Vayrynen will meet the Hungarian and Czechoslovak heads of state.

NORWAY

PRIME MINISTER BRUNTLAND TO VISIT FINLAND 1 JUNE

LD071003 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 6 May 81 p 4

[Text] At the invitation of Finnish Prime Minister Maund Koivisto, Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland will pay an official visit to Finland 1 June this year. During her visit, the prime minister will hold talks with Prime Minister Koivisto. President Kekkonen will host a luncheon for Prime Minister Brundtland during her visit.

SOVIET REACTION TO DIPLOMATS' EXPULSION

LD051413 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 2 May 81 p 9

[Kjell Dragnes dispatch: "Two Norwegians Undesirable"]

[Excerpt] Moscow, 1 May--On Thursday, two Norwegians were declared persona non grata in the Soviet Union, in an obvious soviet reaction to the expulsion of three Soviet citizens from Norway for industrial espionage.

On Thursday morning, Norway's Moscow Ambassador Dagfinn Stenseth was called to the Soviet Foreign Ministry and told that former Norwegian Embassy Trade Secretary Arild Blixrud and lecturer Per Mohr would not be given entry visas to the Soviet Union because they have engaged in activities incompatible with their status.

For 3 years Blixrud was Norway's trade representative in Moscow before returning home last year. As far as AFTENPOSTEN has been able to discover, he made great efforts to help Norwegian firms which wanted to get into the Soviet market and was well respected among his colleagues in the Soviet capital. Blixrud now works in the Norwegian Export Council's East European section.

Lecturer Per Mohr has never had a permanent post in Moscow, but for a number of years has been the Norwegian Foreign Ministry's regular interpreter at talks between Norway and the Soviet Union. Mohr has interpreted at such important negotiations as those on the gray zone in the Barents Sea, the demarcation line talks and most recently was the interpreter for Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund during his official visit to the Soviet Union just before Christmas.

The Soviet reaction to the Norwegian expulsion of Soviet diplomats has been described in Moscow as relatively moderate, since the Russians did not choose to resort to the direct expulsion of any diplomats currently working at the Norwegian Embassy. However, it is nevertheless clear that Moscow has hit relatively central figures, and that dissatisfaction with the great amount of international coverage the Norwegian expulsions received may have contributed to their being met with countermeasures.

CRISIS CONTINGENCY PLANS CONTINUING WITH SWEDEN

LD080803 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 6 May 81 p 4

[Knut Falchenberg report:]

[Text] Swedish and Norwegian authorities will meet in June at civil servant level to discuss joint measures to raise the countries' economic preparedness. A major objective is to ensure that each other's industries receive important raw materials in crisis periods, in peace or in war. Hitherto the talks between the two countries have been purely preparatory. Further progress will depend on Sweden's ability to keep its policy of neutrality, and economic preparedness agreements with a NATO country, separate.

"I would stress that the talks between Norwegian and Swedish officials have so far been preparatory. We have looked to see if the possibility of cooperation actually exists. The next round may contain a political declaration." departmental director Jan Fuglaas of the Directorate for Economic Defense told AFTENPOSTEN. "Even if we should agree that the two countries could both benefit from economic defense cooperation, I am convinced that it would be a long time before this could be established," Fuglaas said.

The point of departure is that both countries want essential goods to be exchanged even in periods of crisis. For example, it would be easier for Norway to import from Sweden in a crisis situation than to receive supplies from the United States. An example of this is X-ray film, which is only produced in one place in northern Europe, namely Sweden. In a war with large numbers of wounded the demand for X-ray film would rise, at the same time as the imports from distant countries would be extremely difficult. It would be advantageous for Norway if the country could ensure in advance supplies of such film from Sweden for a crisis situation.

Another field that has been investigated is alloys. Norway is interested in Swedish supplies of certain alloys in crisis periods in exchange for petrochemical products, for example. Norway is also looking to the possibility of Swedish supplies of agricultural produce in a conflict.

In general terms, the two sides have also investigated the possibility of both countries being able to win benefits from maintaining certain branches of industry in one [word in italics] country to give both [word in italics] security. Or that the task of stockpiling particular industrial raw materials could be shared.

Director Fuglaas told AFTENPOSTEN that earlier meetings have discussed in general terms such measures as could raise the countries' general level of preparedness. At the meeting planned for June, representatives of the Norwegian Directorate for Economic Defense will meet the leaders of the national Swedish Board of Economic Defense. The Norwegian delegation will also contain representatives of the Industry Ministry.

"The meeting will deal with more concrete topics and we will try to isolate fields of mutual interest. We want to try to establish which materials and products we could cooperate on, and to what extent we should do this," Fuglaas said. He thought that the Swedish policy of neutrality could have an effect on the range of products in a possible agreement.

"However, the principal intention is not to guarantee supplies to so-called 'war industries' in this way. We are rather looking at the needs of other 'civilian' industries which are important for total defense. In addition, we must also not forget--with the oil crisis fresh in our memories--that raw materials crises can just as easily arise in peacetime as during a war," Director Jan Fuglaas said.

EDITORIAL SEES POLAND AS POSSIBLE TURNING POINT

LD011601 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 27 Apr 81 p 4

[Editorial: "Poland--a new model?"]

[Text] Poland is probably now experiencing its calmest period since the peaceful, disciplined and genuine popular rising against the communist regime's policies began last summer. In the course of the last 9 months, the Polish working classes, and to a certain extent the private farmers too, have built up organizations independent of the party which embrace millions of members and which are in the process of permeating the whole of Polish society. They have succeeded--after trials of strength which have brought the country to the edge of the abyss--in gaining recognition as partners with whom the authorities must negotiate. After the authorities realized that both the independent Solidarity trade union and the farmers' rural Solidarity had come into being as expressions of justified protest and well-founded discontent, they are now prepared to cooperate with the organization on the basis of the Polish Constitution and the alliance with the Soviet Union which determines the country's foreign policy.

But a future which is an extension of these positive developments is far from certain in Poland. For things to go well serious threats both from within and without must be averted. Tension and uncertainty could still be connected with developments in Poland for a long time to come.

We should have no illusions about how annoying and threatening what has happened in Poland seems to the Kremlin and to those like-minded people in power in Poland's neighbors, Czechoslovakia and the GDR. From their viewpoint, the developments in Poland are fundamentally irreconcilable with what they call socialism and "the Communist Party's leading role." This is the case when the Polish communist party recognizes and is prepared to cooperate with popular organizations which are outside the party's control, and when these organizations' critical views find their way into the mass media, which are subject to strict censorship. And it is probably even more the case when the reform movement infects the party itself and threatens to undermine the internal dictatorship which prevails within all the other ruling communist parties.

There can be no doubt that the Soviet Union wants to put a stop to the process of renewal in Poland, and that it has the power to do so. The fact that the Soviet Union has refrained from resorting to a military intervention, or more accurately an occupation of Poland, is because it would have had to pay a very high price--militarily, politically and, especially, economically, because of the dreadful state of the Polish economy. We dare to hope that an invasion has now become less probable than before, because an alliance is beginning to develop between the forces of reform inside and outside the communist party, and this alliance would make the price of the use of force even higher.

When we say that the renewal process in Poland is also faced with threats from within we are thinking of the danger that the open power struggle in the party or the obvious discord within Solidarity could shatter this alliance. If this alliance can be preserved, it is difficult to see how the Soviet Union and its allies--and Moscow also has them in Poland tiself--would in any way be able to reestablish the system against which the Polish people have risen up. By this we mean a system in which a centrally controlled communist party has an absolute monopoly on power in society and pursues policies of a purely soviet character, with strict censorship and tough party control as central elements.

If the Poles tread carefully and do not step outside the enforced framework for their life as a nation--government power in the hands of the communist party and the alliance with the Soviet Union--they have a good chance of a future with a considerable degree of freedom in domestic policy. It ought not to be possible for the Soviet Union, more than 30 years after World War II, to count on Poland as a loyal ally without Poland's being forced to follow the Soviet model [sentence as published].

It could be a turning point in the development of relations between East and West in Europe if we were able to see in Poland a more pliable and restricted example of a state built on "the communist party's leading role," a state where a ruling communist party continued to control the state machinery but was forced to shape its policies in consultation with mass organizations governed by their members. If something of the sort could develop in Poland, it could be a great contribution to the reduction of mistrust and tension between East and West in our continent.

AFTENPOSTEN COMMENTS ON SWEDISH GOVERNMENT CRISIS

LD071409 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 5 May 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Political Confidence Shattered"]

[Text] When the nonsocialist parties in Sweden assumed government power in the fall of 1976 after 44 years of Social Democratic rule, it felt to many like a great spring thaw in politics. After the long years in the wilderness of opposition they would finally be given the chance to show that the desire for political renewal was well-founded. The Center Party, Liberal Party and the Moderate Coalition Party had promised the voters that they would solve fundamental social problems through constructive cooperation based on nonsocialist policies, and even though it was known in advance that there were differences of opinion between the three coalition parties on a number of individual issues, it was thought--at least initially--that the knowledge of their joint responsibility would help them to work toward revised positions on the main lines of the government's policies.

But things did not go as nonsocialist voters had reason to expect. On the contrary, nonsocialist collaboration in government has developed into something of a political tragedy, with widereaching consequences for Swedish society. In the years which have passed since the historic election victory in 1976, the three-party government has dissolved itself not once, but twice! This ought to say enough about these parties' inability to rule with the responsibility of joint commitments. All those who believed in a broad, unifying alternative to our age's so-called democratic socialism must feel this to be a heavy and severe defeat.

As far as the breakdown of the two Faelldin governments is concerned the reasons are clear enough. After only 2 years of work the first three-party government was shattered by the time bomb which the prime minister himself had brought with him into the government with his ultimatum on nuclear power. In so many reports this was a textbook example of how things go if one of the parties in a relationship of political cooperation commits itself in advance to an unshakable position on a controversial question.

Remarkably enough, this has still not made a sufficiently deep impression for people, in Norway for example, to be willing to learn the lesson of this fatal approach to coalition. Even more compromising for the decline of government power is the breaking of faith with their voters committed by the Center and Liberal Parties by rejecting the government's promise of far-reaching changes in taxation. A reform which "reduces marginal tax to 50 percent for the overwhelming majority of income earners in full-time work" is the central point in the government's economic program of action from 3 February. But for the Center and Liberal Parties it was more important to compromise with the Social Democrats than to stand firm with the Moderate Coalition Party on a policy which is the very prerequisite for Sweden's being able to work its way out of the crisis.

The Moderate Coalition Party has drawn the correct conclusion from this and yesterday evening decided to leave the government. This was a correct step and, in our view, the only possible course if there is to continue to be hope of the preservation of respect for politics and politicians.

SWEDEN

GDR FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS LEADING OFFICIALS

LD060730 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1515 GMT 5 May 81

[Text] Stockholm, 5 May (ADN)--GDR Foreign Minister Oskar Fischer met with leading representatives of Sweden on Tuesday, the second day of his official visit to the country. During an audience with King Carl Gustaf, he conveyed greetings from Chairman of the GDR State Council Erich Honecker which were cordially reciprocated by the monarch with thanks and best wishes for the GDR people.

Stressed at the official talks held earlier in the Foreign Ministry at the "Gustav-Adolfs-Torg" on the center of Stockholm was the readiness of both sides to work for a European conference on disarmament and for detente in the international situation. It is especially necessary in a situation of international aggravation to seek dialogue.

Sweden and the GDR share the view that there is no reasonable alternative to the policy of peaceful coexistence. During a meeting between the GDR foreign minister and Prime Minister Falldin, the goodneighborly and problem-free relations between the two states were stressed. Oskar Fischer was received in the Riksdag by speaker Ingemund Bengtsson who used the occasion to praise the good relations between the deputies of the People's Chamber and the Swedish Riksdag.

Oskar Fischer then had a friendly meeting with the chairman of the Swedish Social-Democratic Labor Party, Olof Palme. Both sides underlined the need for new initiatives for disarmament and in the process of detente. Palme stated that everything must be done to end the nuclear arms race and to continue the SALT process. He stressed the importance of confidence-building measures and of talks on military detente, including on the stationing of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe. Oskar Fischer drew attention to the proposal of the socialist states for a moratorium on medium-range missiles in Europe.

GDR Ambassador to Sweden Dr Wolfgang Kiesewetter later hosted a soiree in honor of Oskar Fischer in the GDR Embassy in Stockholm. It was attended by leading representatives of Swedish political, economic and cultural life.

Meeting With Party Leader

LD061506 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1236 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] Stockholm, 6 May (ADN correspondent)--A cordial talk in the spirit of proletarian internationalism between Oskar Fischer, GDR foreign minister and member of the SED Central Committee, and Rolf Hagel, chairman of the Communist Workers Party of Sweden, have been held in Stockholm.

During the talk, the special responsibility of the working class in the fight for securing peace against the NATO arms drive was emphasized. Rolf Hagel pointed out that the NATO decision to station new U.S. nuclear missiles in West Europe had given rise to anxiety in Sweden and had lead to a broad coalition of all those interested in peace. This is apparent in the current collection for signatures in support of the creation of a nuclear free zone in north Europe.

STOCKHOLM AFGHAN TRIBUNAL INVESTIGATES ATROCITIES

Soviet Responsibility Claimed

LD070853 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 2 May 81 p 4

[Bo Kage Carlosn report: "Tribunal Witnesses on Afghanistan Violence"]

[Text] The Afghanistan tribunal opened Friday in Stockholm with a long series of testimonies of atrocities against individuals, whole villages and the nation as a whole. Torture, air raids on rebel villages and indiscriminate massacres of men, women and children are all part of the Soviet Union's methods of keeping its grip on Afghanistan, according to the first day's witnesses.

The witnesses included people who had been tortured, people who live among the 2 million other refugees, and people who continue the resistance within the occupied country.

Two witnesses described in detail how they had been tortured with electric shocks after they had been arrested by Afghan security police in 1978 and 1979 respectively--that is, after the coup which brought the communists to power, but before the Soviet invasion.

This is the story of (Mohammed Rahim Henar) who is a member of an Islamic resistance movement:

"I was arrested one night in January 1979, Twelve policeman came to my house. They searched it but found nothing, because there was nothing there. They told me to go with them to the police station. It would only take 10 minutes...."

In actual fact (Henar) was not released unitl January of the following year after a nightmare existence in two different prisons, where he was subjected to electric shocks, among other things.

"Four nights in a row they used electric shocks on me. Finally I lost consciousness. When I woke again I was in a minibus on the way to a very old cell in a prison. It was February and very cold. The cell was so small that I could not even lie down. I was ill, my urine was mixed with blood.

"There were 137 of us prisoners in one cell, a converted workshop. Sometimes when the warders had gotten drunk they came and threatened us. We saw with our own eyes how 40-50 prisoners a day were executed." He also described how wives and children of prisoners were raped before their very eyes and how members of the resistance who had been arrested were buried alive. Other witnesses provided storeis which added further details to earlier reports of massacres and bombings, including the case of the village of Kerala where an estimated 1,600 people were killed.

The testimonies about torture presented Friday chiefly concerned the period before the Soviet invasion, but at least one witness claimed that Soviet advisers were to be found in the background.

As far as collective punishments are concerned, especially those inflicted from the air, these seem to have increased since the Soviet invasion at Christmas 1979.

Both the Afghan eyewitnesses and the international experts who reported their impressions were agreed, however, in their judgment that the Soviet Union has a responsibility for the whole of the period in question--beginning with the coup in April 1979 [as published; 1978] when the Daoud regime was overthrown. On Saturday and Sunday the tribunal will continue its work, which will include testimony by Afghan UN Ambassador Ghafuri who defected recently and which could cast some new light on developments by revealing the interplay in Kabul between the Soviets representatives and the Babrak Karmal regime.

More Testimony

LD070855 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 3 May 81 p 1, 4

[Bo Kage Carlson report: "Forbidden Mines Being Used"]

[Text] The Soviet Union is using inhuman weapons in Afghanistan, weapons banned in a new UN agreement which Moscow has also signed. Examples of Soviet landmines were presented Saturday as proof at the continuation of the Afghanistan tribunal in Stockholm.

They were identified by Swedish Defense Ministry expert Commander Torkil Wulff as a type of antipersonnel landmine. "Normally a soldier is so badly injured that he is put out of action. A man wearing boots must expect to lose at least a foot, perhaps a part of his legs. A child who has not grown so tall risks having more vital parts injured when a mine of this type explodes." Weapons of this type are extremely effective against troops on the ground. For example, it is possible to block a valley with them, Commander Wulff said, and added: "They are difficult to detect."

The mines, which were submitted by two Afghans from different parts of the country, were respectively green and olive green. They are dropped from the air in a dense carpet. It is possible, for example, to drop them from attack planes traveling at great speed. "The ideal density is one mine per square meter," said Wulff, who could not definitely confirm that the mines were of Soviet manufacture. But he thought he could identify them with the help of a picture in a military magazine which describes this type of Soviet weapon. They also have cyrillic-type letters on them.

To a direct question whether this was a common type of weapon in a war, Commander Wulff answered with a definite: "Yes, both the East and West have them." But according to a new agreement they will cease to be used. The 1980 UN commission on particularly inhumane weapons agreed 10 April to ban all indiscriminate use of this type of weapon. This agreement has been signed by the Soviet Union and the majority of Warsaw Pact countries and by the United States and Sweden. In a few months' time the Swedish Riksdag will ratify the agreement.

Commander Wulff, who was called in as an extra witness at the tribunal, also had to answer other questions on which the tribunal's presidium needed expert advice. He explained that a picture of a charred body indicated that napalm could have been used, and he also said that napalm is an effective weapon for destroying crops in the fields. Reports of this type had been presented earlier in the day by Afghan witnesses.

Soviet Control Cited

LD071623 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 4 May 81 p 5

[Bo Kage Carlson report: "Russian Advisers Govern"]

[Text] "Since the invasion of Afghanistan, the Soviet Union has made no efforts at all to hide the fact that it is directly intervening in and steering Afghanistan's internal affairs," former Afghan UN Ambassador A.R. Ghafuri, who defected recently, told SVENSKA DAGBLADET Sunday.

"In the Foreign Ministry where I worked four Soviet advisers installed themselves, with their secretaries. it was from them that direct orders came.

"As far as I know they did the same in other ministries."

According to Ghafuri, things were different in the period prior to the invasion. These were Russian advisers but they kept in the background.

"In the Foreign Ministry they stayed in one of the wings. They mostly worked at night and went in and out through a rear door. After the invasion they obviously felt that there was no longer any point in trying to hide the real state of affairs."

Before the Afghanistan tribunal, Ghafuri said that the Soviet Union totally dominates decisionmaking, and that he and other members of the Foreign Ministry staff had been given clear orders to support the Soviet Union and its Eastern European allies in all international contexts.

Ghafuri is one of the more prominent of the many defectors from Kabul. His testimony was able to give an example of the direct orders that the Soviet Union is giving in Afghanistan and thus brand the Babrak Karmal regime as a puppet in Moscow's hands.

The cannonade against the Soviet Union continued Sunday with new testimonies on Soviet violations. But at the same time one of those who gave evidence, U.S. Professor Fred Halliday, made it clear that the guerrillas also had a few things to answer for.

"Where are the defectors and the prisoners which the guerrillas say they have captured", he asked. He answered the question himself immediately: "they have had their throats cut."

While Professor Halliday, like all the other witnesses, was strongly critical of the Soviet invasion, he called for a more sober evaluation of the reports being made about the situation in Afghanistan.

He stressed that the resistance movement's reports are often exaggerated, that, for example, there is still an Afghan Army. It is true that it is Soviet troops which are used in the larger operations, but there are both troops loyal to the regime and a new militia which are of importance in this context.

Halliday also criticized the Afghan witnesses who claimed that they are not receiving any help from outside. He presented reports that there are Chinese advisers in guerrilla camps in Pakistan, that Pakistan turns a blind eye to the fact that the guerrillas are using its territory, that the United States gives aid in the form of arms and that a number of Islamic states also give active support to the guerrillas.

He pointed out that as far as the situation within the country is concerned, the direct Soviet presence has helped to reduce violence in the towns. Torture and other violations against individuals, including executions, were considerably more common during Hafizollah Amin's days than under Babrak Karmal.

On the other hand, he had no doubt that collective punishments, in the form of bombings of villages, for example, had increased. He said that napalm is probably being used together with various types of gas which lead to a temporary impairment of combat capacity.

NOTT REVIEWS OPTIONS TO CUT DEFENSE COSTS

LD071055 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 7 May 81 p 1

[Air Comdr G.S. Cooper report: "Half of BAOR Threatened in Defence Cuts"]

[Text] The Ministry of Defence is considering bold chages in Britain's conventional forces to relieve the severe pressure on the services' budgets. But no change to the Trident commitment is contemplated. Options include a reduction of between a third and a half of the 55,000-strong Rhine army, and drastic cuts in the navy, particularly among surface ships.

But Mr Nott, defence secretary, firmly denied yesterday that the long-term review was a "cuts exercise." "It is impossible to arrive at a sensible solution unless we examine every option, every difficulty," he told a private meeting of the ministry's procurement executive management in Whitehall. "Nothing can be, or is, sacred in this options exercise." Mr Nott gave examples of the areas of study now being reviewed. These are:

Reorganizing the Rhine army within the framework of treaty obligations to improve its military effectiveness; reviewing the balance between different ways of carrying out anti-submarine warfare in the eastern Atlantic and channel areas; ways of strengthening air defence; the implications of increasing the size and capability of the reserve forces of all three services and reviewing the requirement for staff and headquarters jobs at all levels in ministry of defence and command structures.

The services have known for some time that resources were becoming increasingly out of balance with the cost of capabilities needed to meet their commitments. The addition of some 4,000 million pounds of Trident expenditure in the current 10 years costings period, out of total Trident costs that are now thought likely to reach, or even exceed, 6,000 million pounds, has not been the only problem. Mr Nott's announcement on decisions is expected in July, before Parliament's summer recess. The defence budget estimate for 1981-82 is 12,274 million pounds.

PYM DEFENDS UK'S MEMBERSHIP IN COMMON MARKET

LD071057 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 7 May 81 p 2

[Nicholas Comfort report: "Anti-EEC Feeling "Worrying Tories'"]

[Text] The strength of feeling against membership of the Common Market is "frankly worrying" to the Conservative Party, Mr Pym, leader of the Commons, conceded last night. Mr Pym, responsible for coordinating government information, said it was "only too clear from recent opinion surveys that the facts about our membership have simply not got across to a large number of our citizens. "What we have to do is put a lot more effort into getting across not only the facts, but also the reasons for and the purposes of our membership." Mr Pym made his candid assessment in a speech at Westminister to the Conservative Commonwealth and Overseas Counciil.

He coupled it with a detailed exposition both of the advantages of membership seen by the government and a rebuttal of the principal arguments for withdrawal advanced by anti-marketeers. He said that only in Britain were the imperfections of the EEC used as arguments for withdrawal rather than reform, and that in no other member state was the "overwhelming" case for cohesion "obscured by a dense smoke-screen of myths and prejudices mingled with genuine grievances."

Membership gave Britain free access to the largest trading bloc in the world and "far more muscle in international trade negotiations than we would have on our own."

Mr Pym stated that British exports to Europe had grown twice as fast as those to the rest of the world. Mr Pym said it was clearly wrong that Britain should be one of only two countries making a net budget contribution and that more than two-thirds of that budget should go to an agricultural system geared to the storage and disposal of surpluses. "It is clearly wrong that so many barriers to the free movement of goods and to the freedom of the service industries to operate throughout the community should remain more than 20 years after the Treaty of Rome was concluded. But the Community is tackling these problems, even if uncomfortably slowly."

DAILY TELEGRAPH ADVISES EUROPE ON NATO TALKS

LD051435 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 5 May 81 p 18

[Editorial: "Euro-Nuclear Jitters"]

[Text] American's effort to provide Europe with protection against the increasing array of new Russian nuclear weapons targeted on it is providng an uphill and frustrating task. Mr Haig, taking part in his first NATO council meeting of foreign ministers, was under intense pressure to announce an early start for the prescribed negotiations with Russia on the subject. European governments still hope against hope that corresponding concessions by Russia will enable them to reduce the number of Pershing 2 and cruise missiles which they were persuaded to accept from the end of 1983, perhaps even to cancel them altogether. They are not discouraged by the fact that all that Mr Brezhnev has offered so far is a "freeze"--he keeps his 200 three headed SS-20s, plus a new one every five days, and Europe stays at nil. In the meantime highly orchestrated unilateral nuclear disarmament campaigns are gathering momentum.

For many good reasons America has been taking her time. She knows too well that once Mr Brezhenv gets "peace talks" going he will launch massive propaganda appeals and play on the nerves of Europeans who are scared of his military might. The longer Mr Reagan delays giving Russia this opportunity the better may the chances that she will not invade Poland--which he has made clar would upset everything. He also wants to show continued displeasure over Afghanistan.

The measured stage-by-stage timetable announced by Mr Haig is a reasonable compromise between the widely differing approaches of a jittery Europe and an America which has decided that the only way to negotiate with Russia is from a position of at least equality, which she is bending all her efforts to achieve. Placing the European nuclear negotiations in the American-Russian strategic S A L T framework should help scotch popaganda that the two super powers are envisaging Europe as their nuclear battlefield while themselves remaining sanctuaries. Europeans must face up to realities of their position with cool heads and courage. On one hand Reagan's America is proving that she is a loyal, strong and resolute ally. On the other the dangers of relying on Mr Brezhnev's crude propaganda become ever plainer.

I DHILINI REPORTS GREEK-TURKISH CLASHES IN LIMASSOL

NC071021 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 7 May 81 p 8

[Text] Limassol (from I DHILINI's office)--A group of young Turkish Cypriot deserters succored by the Republic of Cyprus created organized incidents in the Limassol Turkish quarters last night. The incidents, which developed into clashes with the police and which lasted for over 1 hour, resulted in the injury of six policemen and two Greek Cypriot citizens. Eight Turkish Cypriots were arrested, and the case is expected to be brought before the court today so that an order of detention may be issued. The injured Greek Cypriot citizens are Andonis Neofitos Dhimitriou, 29 years old; and Andreas Artemiou, from Tsiakkileri, 42 years old. In order to save themselves from the mania of the Turkish Cypriot deserters, the policemen were forced to fire in the air to scare them.

The incidents occurred around 2300.

Two Greek Cypriots who reside in the Limassol Turkish quarters reported to the police that a group of about 15 Turkish Cypriots had gathered outside the Greeks' homes, uttering abuse, behaving indecently and creating incidents.

A policeman from the Ayios Andonios police station went to the area to investigate what had been reported when he found himself surrounded by a group of wild Turkish Cypriot youths who abused and threatened him.

At the same time, the Turkish Cypriots attacked a passing motorcyclist and, according to reports given to the police, were shouting pro-AKEL slogans.

Despite the danger the policemen were encountering, he advised the Turkish Cypriots to calm down and disperse. Instead of behaving themselves, however, the troublemakers attacked the policeman who hardly managed to escape and seek support.

Then the Turkish Cypriots attacked a gathering of Greek Cypriots and began destroying whatever was in front of them.

A group of about 10 policemen then arrived in the area to impose order. They were also attacked by the Turkish Cypriots. When an OPE [Crime Prevention Squad] force arrived in Landrovers the clashes were still in progress.

After a long time, the policemen maanaged to disperse the Turkish Cypriots by firing warning shots and arrested eight of them.

Six policemen and two citizens were transported to hospital where they received first aid.

PAPER SAYS TURKISH PRESSURE CAUSED KOMNINOS RECALL

NC080953 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 7 May 81 pp 1,7

[Excerpts] According to absolutely established reports from both Greek and foreign authoritative political and diplomatic circles, the recall of [National Guard commander] Gen Ioannis Komninos is not irrelevant to demands by Turkey and Denktas--demands which were submitted to the Greek Government in a threatening way--as well as by other "allied" quarters, particularly the Americans who seem to have played some role in this affair.

The reports from the same authoritive political and diplomatic circles; the way, the timing and conditions under which General Komninos was removed from Cyprus; recent Turkish and Turkish Cypriot press reports about the strengthening of the National Guard and of Cyprus' defense organization in general; and Rauf Denktas' recent attack on the National Guard because of the opening of a plant for the manufacture of arms confirm only one thing.

This is that the Turkish side has succeeded in this case as well, by blackmailing the Greek Government and the allied quarters, to achieve what it has been seeking for some time, that is to foil the organized and systematic effort for Cyprus' defense organization, based on sound foundations, so that the Greek Cypriots may not be at the mercy of the Turkish Attila.

According to the same circles, from this point of view [giving in to] such Turkish blackmailing--the recall of General Komninos--simply because at this time the question of Cyprus' defense organization is being viewed with the seriousness demanded by circumstances and the deadly Turkish danger, is tantamount to a national crime. Those responsible for this--regardless of wherever they may be--must understand that the Greek Cypriots cannot be sacrificed--not to say betrayed--in the name of expendiencies which have no connection with the well-understood national interests.

Defense Ministry Denial

NC080954 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] An announcement by the republic's Ministry of Defense denies a report in a Cyprus newspaper according to which [National Guard commander] General Komninos' recall to Greece is connected with an extortion on Turkey's part to the Greek Government in order to foil the effort for Cyprus' defense shielding. The announcement adds that the recall of General Komninos will not influence the defense effort in any way because the effort will continue at the same pace until it has been completed.

EDEK CHAIRMAN LISSARIDHIS COMMENTS ON PARTY NAME

NC080839 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1640 GMT 4 May 81

[EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis' answers to listeners' questions during the "Around the Microphone" feature program--live]

[Excerpts] [Moderator] Hello, dear friends. Within the framework of our program "Around the Microphone," we have with us tonight the chairman of the United Democratic Union of the Center [Eniaia Dhimokratiki Enosis Kentrou]. As it is well known, Dr Lissaridhis heads the slate of his socialist party in Nicosia. To start with, we thank you for being here, Mr Lissaridhis. Before we ask our listeners to put their questions, we request you to outline your goals and principles.

[Lissaridhis] Thank you. I do not think it would be necessary for me to speak about the history, program and proposals of the United Democratic Union of Cyprus [Eniaia Dhimokratiki Enosis Kiprou]. I shall say only one thing: The forthcoming elections constitute a decisive factor for Cypriot developments.

[Moderator] In my introduction, Doctor, by mistake I referred to the United Democratic Union of the Center instead of to Cyprus.

[Lissaridhis] Yes.

[Moderator] I have here a question in connection with this--this is how it came to mind--from our listener Filippos Limnatis of Mesa Yitonia, Limassol. He says: Since your party is a socialist party, how is it that you use the initials EDEK which stand for United Democratic Union of the Center?

[Lissaridhis] I have already replied that it is United Democratic Union of Cyprus. Besides, at the time of EDEK's establishment the prevailing conditions were occupation conditions, internal occupation conditions of Greece, with Yeoryios Papandreou playing at that time the role of leader of national opposition; at that time the structure of words was different. EDEK is a genuine socialist party. If one reads the party's policy statement at its very first congress, then one will understand that this is a party with socialist bearings.

ROLANDHIS MAKES STATEMENT TO LONDON AL-'ARAB

NC070733 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 7 May 81 p 8

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis has stated that the Cypriot Government will not allow the use of the British bases on the island for hostile actions against the Arab people or as a springboard of the Rapid Deployment Force.

In a statement to the London Arab newspaper AL-'ARAB, Rolandhis said that four issues are being discussed at the intercommunal talks: 1) the Varosha issue, 2) practical measures, 3) the constitutional issue, 4) the territorial issue. However, in none of these issues has any progress been made because the Turkish side refuses to submit proposals.

Rolandhis said: "When we asked the Turkish side to submit proposals, it replied that it could not do so prior to the Turkish Cypriot presidential elections slated for June."

In answer to other questions, the foreign minister said that:

--The Turkish side has not responded to President Kiprianou's wish for immediate talks with the Turkish Government.
--The number of the Turkish occupation troops is estimated between 20,000 to 40,000 soldiers.
--An agreement was reached between the late President Makarios and the Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas that provided for 20 percent of the island's territory for the Turkish Cypriots.
--Cypriot-U.S. relations are very good and the new Reagan administration has linked its help for solving the Cyprus problem with exertion of greater efforts in the new stage. Cypriot-Soviet relations are also very good.
--Britain can play a mediating role in the solution of the Cyprus issue.
--The key to the solution of the problem lies with Ankara.
--Cypriot relations with Arab countries are very good except Egypt which keeps a hostile stand toward Cyprus due to Cyprus' opposition to the Camp David agreement.

Further Comments

NC080919 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 8 May 81 p 8

[Text] With regard to Foreign Minister Rolandhis' interview in the 27 March issue of the London newspaper AL-'ARAB, it was officially explained yesterday that what the minister said was not correctly reported, resulting from his remarks being republished in the Cypriot press with some inaccuracies. The following was stated to restore the truth:

The minister did not refer to taking the Cypriot issue off the UN General Assembly's agenda. He stated that the problem is not going to be discussed owing to the fact that the intercommunal dialogue is in progress.

There was no mention whatsoever of a Makarios-Denktas agreement whereby 20 percent of Cyprus would be ceded to the Turkish Cypriots. It was simply indicated that the Greek Cypriot side's proposals, submitted in accordance with the guidelines, provided that the aforesaid percentage of territory under Turkish Cypriot administration be within a federal system and under the prerequisites of respecting freedom, settlement, movement and ownership of property.

Regarding relations between Cyprus and Egypt, Rolandhis did not describe Egypt's stand as hostile owing to Cyprus' opposition to the Camp David agreement. He explained that, to a certain degree, the relations continued to be at a standstill after the unfortunate incident in 1980 [when Egyptian troops landed at Larnaca Airport].

Regarding Cypriot-Libyan relations and Libya's offer to mediate the Cyprus issue, the minister clarified that there was no reason for encouraging this mediation since, in the meantime, the UN secretary general's efforts to resume the intercommunal talks were agreed upon. Rolandhis also said that there were normal relations and cooperation between the two countries, particularly in the trade and economic sector, and that the exchanges between the two countries are not based on any special political relations.

DENKTAS DISCUSSES ELECTIONS, PLANS TO QUIT POLITICS

NC080818 Nicosia HALKIN SESI in Turkish 5 May 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] Lefkosa (TAK)--Responding to various questions by newsmen yesterday concerning preparations for the general elections due in June, Head of State Rauf Denktas said: "My personal view is based on one fact--that party members should vote only for their party."

Denktas received representatives loyal to the National Unity Party (NUP) and party members as well as fellow countrymen from various parts of the Turkish sector of Cyprus who expressed their loyalty to him and sought his views regarding using their vote for the NUP. Denktas added: "You may not vote for a person you don't like, thus punishing him. But if you vote for your party, you will rescue your party."

Responding to a question, Denktas continued: "If fellow countrymen refuse to vote only for the party but instead vote for various individuals, they do not know what may happen. NUP's supporters do not by any means intend to vote for the parties that preach brotherhood with the Greek Cypriots and cooperation with AKEL. Neither is the NUP prepared to give them the chance to come anywhere near corming a government. But there are many fellow countrymen who are not aware of the fact that if they do not use their vote in favor of the NUP, they might be opening the way to these parties. It is with this goal in mind that these parties have nominated candidates for certain important areas. They hope to render the NUP supporters' votes ineffective by securing a mix in the voting. They know that their candidates do not stand much of a chance of success. But they also know that the voters might wish to support a candidate of their own area, unknowingly stabbing their own party in the back. This should be brought home to every single NUP supporter: You will not be able to vote a peasant into power, but you will crush one or two NUP deputies. We are advocating a party of democracy, and the vote is an imperative for party democracy. Every NUP supporter should know this. No one should view former ministers as ministers for the new period. The appointment of ministers if the responsibility of the new government. It will be my responsibility. The NUP will be given a new soul and new blood. I have announced my candidacy for the NUP, and I reserve the right to appoint ministers from outside the legislative assembly. My aim is to form a dynamic government that will serve Turkish Cypriots in the best manner possible. If this government will cooperate with me, we shall be able to solve our problems more quickly.

"I do not believe that there is anyone among us who will resign from the party simply because he has not been appointed a minister. Such days must remain in the past. Everyone must be ready to take a turn in political life. Good service can be possible through this spirit. I urge NUP supporters to vote for the entire list of NUP candidates, because I wish to conduct the cause in which I believe to safety. The next 5 years will be my last service to my people from this position. I wish to see that my people live a better and happier life during every one of these years. I believe that the NUP supporters on the list will help me with enthusiasm to fulfill this historic duty. That is why I want everyone to vote only for the NUP."

AKROPOLIS: U.S. PRESENTS CONDITIONS ON BASES

NC071458 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 7 May 81 pp 1, 11

[Excerpt] Negotiations on the bases issue were to resume this morning. According to well-informed sources, however, there was no fundamental progress on many of the unresolved issues during yesterday's meeting between Roussos and McCloskey.

The U.S. ambassador visited the secretary general of the Greek Foreign Ministry at 1300 and handed him the U.S. proposals. Their content will be studied by the Greek Government.

Foreign Minister Mitsotakis was briefed on the new U.S. proposals--prior to his departure yesterday for Bonn--and he later briefed Prime Minister Rallis.

The Roussos-McCloskey discussions on the content of the new U.S. proposals demonstrated that many of the unresolved problems remain unsolved. It is the solution of these problems which will decide the final outcome of negotiations.

One of these problems--which is one of the most important--has to do with the supply of defense equipment to the Greek Armed Forces. It is believed that intensive consultations will be held on specification of the equipment that the United States can make available to Greece so that the question might be cleared up as soon as possible, without delay.

The supply of this military equipment is also related to the preservation of the balance of power between Greece and Turkey. The United States insists it cannot undertake any written obligation on the issue stating that Congress would not approve long-term obligations by the U.S. administration.

This difficulty could be overcome with positive U.S. assurances on the active preservation of this balance.

USEFULNESS OF DIALOGUE WITH TURKEY QUESTIONED

NC051607 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 5 May 81 p 2

[From the "Laconic" column: "What Is the Purpose?"]

[Text] Naturally, we did not expect anything positive to emerge from the talks between the Greek and Turkish foreign ministers. They could, at least, have contributed to an improvement of the climate in the relations between the two countries. Not even this happened. Turkmen did not even try to avoid being unpleasant during the interview he granted to press representatives at the conclusion of these talks. He presented his country as...the victim of Greek provocations, hinting at the Armenian demonstrations in Athens commemorating the 1915 genocide. He kept silent, however, over Turkish provocations against Greece and the Turkish violations of Greek airspace. He demanded concessions from our country to Turkey as if we are its debtors. We most certainly do appreciate the importance of a dialogue because we are a peaceful country that strives for friendly relations and cooperation with as many countries as possible. We fail to understand, however, what purpose there could be in a dialogue with a country when the main characteristics of its policy are bad faith, audacity and greed. After every resumption of this dialogue it will continue to increasingly poison our relations with it, thus justifiably infuriating the Greek nation. Perhaps the only usefulness in such a dialogue is that it provides the opportunity for allied governments and for international public opinion to see who is to blame for the perpetuation of the Aegean crisis. If we are to fully exploit this advantage, however, we must strive to neutralize Turkish propaganda, which presents black as white, and we must strive for the broadest possible dissemination of information to the foreigners.

TURKMEN COMMENTS ON NATO MEETING, U.S. AID

TA071836 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has returned to Turkey after attending the NATO Ministerial Council meeting in Rome. In a statement at Istanbul Yesilkoy Airport, Turkmen said that especially East-West relations were discussed at the meeting. He recalled that U.S. Secretary of State Haig announced at the meeting that talks with the Soviet Union would begin toward the end of this year for the limitation of nuclear arms. Turkmen said: This announcement was received with great pleasure by the representatives of the Ministerial Council members; we shared this spirit. We stressed that we were pleased about the new U.S. policy.

The foreign minister said that an exchange of views was held at the meeting about the developments occurring outside the NATO region. He added: The Nato Ministerial Council communique reflects the common attitudes reached at the meeting. A separate declaration was also issued on the question of terrorism. A third document was issued on the points on which an agreement was reached. The necessity for economic cooperation among the NATO members is especially stressed in this document.

Turkmen also said that during his meeting with Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis in Rome they reviewed the latest developments in the Turkish-Greek relations. Recalling that certain developments had occurred during the past few weeks which had cast a shadow on Turkish-Greek relations, Turkmen said: During our assessment we reviewed the [word indistinct] of Turkey's and Greece's long-term interests. We stressed that it is necessary to continue the dialogue. Such talks will continue to be held.

On his meeting with the U.S. secretary of state, Turkmen said that they discussed Turkish-U.S. military and economic cooperation issues. Replying to a question on U.S. aid, Turkmen said: We hope that the aid will not be below $700 million. As far as I know, the problems arising in connection with this issue do not arise from the amount of the aid but from the form in which it is extended. We hope that a great part of the military aid will be extended directly.

TURKMEN ON AEGEAN AIRSPACE TALKS, CYPRUS ISSUES

TA072041 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who attended the NATO Ministerial Council meeting in Rome, has returned to Ankara. Replying to reporters' questions at Esenboga Airport, Turkmen said that a certain progress was made during the talks held in Ankara on the issue of Turkish-Greek airspace between the Turkish and Greek Foreign Ministry secretaries general. Turkmen said that the diplomatic contacts on the issue would continue.

Replying to another question, Turkmen recalled that elections would be held in the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot sectors soon. He expressed the hope that after the elections there would be more substance to the intercommunal talks.

COMMANDERS LEAVE FOR NATO EXERCISE IN BRUSSELS

TA061258 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] The NATO SHAPEX-81 exercise will begin in Belgium tomorrow. National Security Council members Ground Forces Commander Gen Nurettin Ersin and Navy Commander Adm Nejat Tumer left for Brussels today to attend the SHAPEX-81 exercise. The commander of the 3d Army, Gen Selahattin Demircioglu, and 2d Army Commander Gen Bedrettin Demirel also left for Brussels.

Air Force Commander Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya, who is currently in the United States as the official guest of U.S. Air Force Chief of Staff Gen Lew Allen, will also go to Brussels today to attend the SHAPEX-81 exercise.

Ersin and Dahinkaya will return to Turkey on 10 May after observing the SHAPEX-81 exercise. Tumer will then go to Italy to participate in the NATO navy commanders meetings to be held in Naples. He will return to Turkey on 17 May.

TALKS WITH WEST GERMAN DEFENSE EXPERTS CONCLUDE

TA072044 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] The talks held in Ankara between Turkish and West German delegations of defense experts have ended. The continued defense aid extended to Turkey by NATO was discussed. Our correspondent has learned that the aid discussed at the talks involves defense equipment worth 130 million German marks. After the talks, the West German defense experts toured the tank maintenance center in Arifiye. They will leave Turkey on Saturday, 9 May.

TERCUMAN: NATO, EC SHOULD STRENGTHEN TURKEY

NC071010 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 4 May 81 p 4

["This is the World" Column by Zafer Atay: "A Month of Activity in Politics"]

[Text] Turkey has been a member of NATO since the 1950's. It is one of the founders of the Council of Europe. It is also a longstanding member of the IMF and the World Bank. Until 5 years ago, in the meetings held by these institutions, Turkey was represented by some of its officials who would go there, say a few things and come back. In those days the public was told nothing about these visits. Occasionally the NATO commander in chief would visit Turkey and, conferring with the journalists, he would praise "the heroism displayed by our troops in Korea and also tell them that Turkey was a fortress of NATO."

Everything has been turned topsy-turvy since 1974. We became familiar with the embargo, we have had occasion to acquire some knowledge about the U.S. Congress, the lobbies, committees and subcommittees. Then the Council of Europe started telling us "get out of Cyprus." When we needed financial help, we were strongly opposed by the IMF and the World Bank. Visits by Kieps and Matthoefers followed. Then came letters of intent, consortiums set up within the framework of the OECD, debts, deferments--all these have become part of our daily life.

Whether we like it or not, Turkey's internal affairs have been exceeding its borders. Turkey has increasingly become subject for debate throughout the world, particularly after the 12 September operation. Important decisions will be taken on Turkey's foreign relations in the days immediately ahead.

Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen met with his Greek counterpart Mitsotakis in Rome yesterday. The outcome of these talks will become known during the next few days. This meeting is expected to throw some light on several ambiguous points since it has taken place at a time when Ankara-Athens relations have been strained because of the protective wing spread by Greece over the Armenians. The effect of the Turkish note to the Greek Government protesting against the demonstrations staged by the Armenians in the streets of Athens will probably be clarified in Rome.

On the other hand, the periodic Greek allegations that "Turkey is threatening me. I demand guarantees." will be clarified during the Rome talks. As is known, Greece has been using this question of guarantees as a means of blackmailing Washington in connection with the U.S. bases in Greece.

If Turkey and Greece are members of a joint defense system in NATO, how can one of them come up and say "I implore you to protect me against my partner?" Let us hope that Greece will put an end to these contradictions at the Rome meeting.

The Council of Ministers, which is NATO's highest executive organ, held a foreign minister-level meeting in Rome today. One of the items on the agenda is Turkey. Turkey's rich partners are now beginning to have a better grasp of the need to strengthen Turkey which is bearing alone the entire burden of NATO's southeastern wing in face of increasing Soviet threat. There are 100,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan, only a few hundred kilometers away from the oilfields in the Persian Gulf which are so vital to the West. Russian divisions are massed on the Iranian borders. There are 60 Soviet warships touring in the Mediterranean. The Soviet Union is constructing strategic bases from South Yemen to North Africa at the cost of billions. It is clearly seen that the Soviet Union's threat has shifted from Europe to the oil-producing regions. As NATO does not intend at present to expand its frontiers, the only way to secure stability in the region is to maintain a strong Turkey. If the rich partners of NATO view the Soviet threat with alarm, they will have to make certain sacrifices. It should be known that the cost of making certain parsimonious calculations on Turkey and the desire to push Turkey into isolation in international arenas will be very high. Almost all NATO members are in the EC and in the Council of Europe...but efforts are being made to create trouble for Turkey in both these institutions. When secret reports concerning the Soviet expansionism come before them in Rome, the NATO foreign ministers will think once again when they are confronted with the decision "if Turkey fails to return to democracy in 2 months time, its relations with the EC will be frozen," a decision which was hurriedly adopted at the European Parliament. We believe that at its meeting in June the EC foreign ministers will proclaim null and void the decision adopted against Turkey by the leftist members of the European Parliament. We also believe that these honorable foreign ministers will warn members of the Council of Europe Assembly of the evil consequences of ill-treating Turkey or of trying to squeeze it into a corner.

Turkey is going through a crisis. It will overcome this crisis with the support of its friends and allies. It is high time this fact was appreciated by NATO, the Council of Europe, the EC, the IMF and the OECD.

PROCEEDINGS INITIATED AGAINST RELIGIOUS GROUPS

TA071405 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1215 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 7 May (AA)--The military prosecutor attached to the martial law commander for Ankara started a public lawsuit against 73 members of the religious fanatic youth association known as "Akincilar" [vanguards].

The prosecution is demanding prison sentences of up to 20 years for members of the administrative board and other officers, including directors of several "training camps" in western, southern and central Turkey, where participants were trained in "close combat." The prosecutor pointed out local Akincilar officers for Kayseri and Afyon had admitted to having close ties with the National Salvation Party [NSP]. The officer for Afyon had described his organization as a "NSP auxiliary."

An officer from the eastern city of Van had said in his initial statement they had received instructions from the leader of the NSP youth auxiliary to train members in the use of firearms for the purpose of overthrowing the secular state by force of arms and replacing it with a theocratic Islamic state.

Members of Fanatic Sect Arrested

Forty one members of the religious fanatic sect "Suleymanci" were arrested in Antalya on charges of having attempted to destroy the republic and replace it with a theocratic state. Those arrested included the former Justice Party leader for Antalya Province and the regional director of forestry.

MILITARY COURTS PASS FOUR DEATH SENTENCES

TA071838 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 7 May 81

[Excerpt] The Aegean Army and Martial Law Command 1st Military Court has sentenced to death Seyit Konuk, Ibrahim Ethem Coskun and Necati Vardar for committing crimes in line with the ideology of the illegal organization of which they were members, with the aim of changing the constitutional order by means of armed action and with the aim of eliminating the Turkish Grand National Assembly. The three killed two citizens, Turan Ibrim and Nuri Yapici, in Ismir last year. The court passed prison terms ranging from 1 to 5 years on five other persons involved in the same crime.

The Army VI Corps and Martial Law Command 1st Military Court has sentenced to death Ali Cankir for killing the security director of Dortyol, Tekin Sungur, last year.

WORLD BANK APPROVES $300 MILLION LOAN TO TURKEY

TA061543 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1515 GMT 6 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 6 May (AA)--The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD), simply known as the World Bank has approved a 300 million dollar loan for Turkey, which will be released in May, undersecretary of the Yildirim Akturk told the ANATOLIA News Agency. He said the loan would be used to finance the imports of fertilizers and industrial raw materials.

Mr Akturk said the World Bank would continue to back up important Turkish development projects through several financing arrangements. Such projects would include energy and irrigation schemes.

Additional Loan Granted

TA080604 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] A $110-million project loan to be extended to Turkey has been approved by the World Bank Executive Board. According to Turkish Radio and Television Washington correspondent Berna Kulac, the loan will be used in renewing the fertilizer factories in Turkey and in energy saving projects. The loan will be extended for a 15-year term--with a 4-year period of grace--at a 9.6 percent interest rate.

OECD COUNTRIES TO PROVIDE $938 MILLION IN 1981

TA071829 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Eleven OECD countries will extend a total of $938 million in aid to Turkey this year. The United States announced that $200 million of the $350 million it will extend to Turkey within the framework of the OECD this year will be in the form of a donation.

The representatives of the OECD countries held a meeting under Secretary General Emil van Lennep at a chateau which houses the organization's headquarters in Paris. During the first part of the meeting, which lasted 2 hours, Emil van Lennep delivered a speech stating that a significant imporvement was being observed in Turkey as a result of the economic decisions of 24 January 1980 and the subsequent additional measures. The Turkish delegation which is headed by State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal did not attend the first part of the meeting.

The second part began at 1200, during which Turgut Ozal talked about the recent positive developments of the Turkish economy and replied to certain technical questions. The meeting resumed after a recess of 1 and 1/2 hours. The Turkish delegation was then informed of the amount of aid Turkey would receive.

AKAJANS [MEDITERRANEAN NEWS AGENCY] reports that this year, within the framework of OECD, the United States will extend $350 million, the FRG $205 million, Japan $110 million and Italy $115 million. Canada, the Netherlands, Britain, Belgium, France, Norway and Denmark will extend a total of about $158 million. Austria, Switzerland and Sweden will announce the amount of aid they will extend to Turkey at a later date.

Ozal Comments

TA072038 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal has said that the $930 million the OECD countries undertook to extend to Turkey this year cannot be considered an insufficient amount of aid under the present world conditions. In a news conference he held in Paris, Ozal said that considering the changes in the value of the dollar, the aid to be extended to Turkey this year is close to the aid extended last year. Ozal said: Under the present world conditions, something better than this could not be achieved.

On the economic situation in Turkey, Ozal said that the economic stability program being implemented in Turkey was yielding positive results with the help of foreign aid. He added that the rate of inflation had been curbed in a short time, in a way no other country had managed.

OECD Secretary General Emil van Lennep who attended the news conference expressed the belief that Turkey would emerge from its economic bottleneck within the next few years.

Emil van Lennep also said that the amount of aid the FRG had undertaken to extend to Turkey this year was lower than last year's but that this should be seen in the light of the economic situation in that country.

CEMENT EXPORTS TO REACH ALL TIME HIGH THIS YEAR

TA071857 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] The Turkish cement industries directorate general has exported cement worth $25 million during the first 4 months of this year. The figure is expected to reach $300 million by the end of the year. The most Turkey had been able to export until now was $45 million annually.

The Turkish cement industries director general, Sedat Yildiz, has said that Iraq and Iran head the list of Turkish cement importing countries. He said that the domestic cement consumption dropped in Turkey due to the recess in the construction sector. This created a stock of about 2.5 million tons. Due to this stock which is worth about 10 billion Turkish liras, the price of cement dropped in certain areas. Yildiz said that efforts to increase exports were intensified to prevent a production drop that might arise as a result of the existing stocks.

Yildiz stated that it would be useful if the exports were carried out by the state monopolies in order to prevent compeition between the private and public sectors.

Yildiz also said that the Turkish cement industries directorate general had won the tender issued on the study and project of a cement factory in Uganda.

In Turkey, there are 35 cement factories having a total production capacity of 21 million tons. Of the 35 factories, 14 are privately owned and 21 belong to the public sector.

TURKISH BANK TO BEGIN OPERATIONS IN BRITAIN

TA071536 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1450 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 7 May (AA)--The Council of Ministers has agreed to assign 5 million British pounds to "Akbank International Ltd," which will start banking operations in Britain.

Of the total capital of 5 million pounds, the Turkish bank "Akbank" will hold 45 percent of the shares, while 10 percent will be held by industrialist Sakip Sabanci, 5 percent each by other Sabanci's and 20 percent by the family holding company.

The new bank is committed to pay back the 5 million pounds to the government before it can dispose of its profits with the approval of the Finance Ministry.

AGREEMENT TO RESCHEDULE COMMERCIAL DEBTS TO DENMARK

TA071511 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1410 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 7 May (AA)--Repayment of Turkey's guaranteed commercial debts to Denmark were postponed with an agreement signed in Ankara Thursday.

Director General of the Treasury Tunc Bilge signed for Turkey while Danish Ambassador Lorenz Petersen signed on behalf of his government for rescheduling of commercial debts extended to Turkey under OECD auspices from 1978 through 1980, which totalled $14 million.

STATE TOBACCO EXPORTS REACH RECORD LEVEL

TA071839 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 7 May 81

[Text] The state monopolies' tobacco exports for 1980-1981 has reached a record level at 82,000 tons which brought in $207 million. The Customs and Monopolies Ministry under secretary, Orhan Yuzbasioglu, told Turkish Radio and Television that the most important problem in tobacco cultivation was the elimination of existing stocks. He explained that 60,000 tons of the 82,000 tons exported were stocks from 1978. He added that the ministry was trying to improve export conditions. He stressed that tobacco exporting was emerging from its crisis during the past years as a result of the radical measures being taken in the fields of production, purchasing from the farmers and marketing.

VOTCP CRITICIZES NATO SUMMIT, ARMS POLICY

TA071028 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 7 May 81

[Commentary: "A NATO Maneuver in Rome"]

[Excerpts] Dear listeners: The NATO foreign ministers meeting has ended in Rome. A joint communique was issued. The joint communique shows that this meeting was no different from other NATO meetings. This meeting also was governed by the United States--the chief boss of NATO. The joint communique indicates that the United States imposed its views on other NATO members through pressure and blackmail. As clearly seen in this communique, the NATO bosses did not give a positive reply to millions of people's wishes for peace and disarmament. They reject the concrete and peaceful proposals of the Soviet Union. They state that they will implement the decision made in Brussels in December 1979 to deploy new nuclear weapons in Western Europe. This is clearly tantamount to increasing the arms buildup and perpetuating the policy of tension.

The Soviet Union, on the other hand, had proposed immediately freezing the current nuclear balance, placing a moratorium on nuclear weapons and starting talks on mutually reducing them. The policy of peace and peaceful coexistence, which comprises the adoption of mutual and extensive security measures and the elimination of a nuclear war threat, lies at the basis of these Soviet proposals.

This policy and these peaceful proposals enjoy the support of the people and of millions of persons because they voice the interests of all the peoples and nations. This is why--regardless of their views--millions of people, workers, toilers, scientists, clergymen and all persons in favor of peace in Western Europe, Japan, the United States, and on all the continents of the world, are staging massive demonstrations. They demanded and are still demanding that the decisions to deploy new nuclear weapons be renounced and the Soviet proposals be accepted.

In a bid to weaken this reaction to their policy of escalating the arms buildup, the NATO bosses included in the joint communique words such as "resuming the talks with the Soviet Union at the end of this year." This is clearly a maneuver by NATO bosses in Rome to deceive and distract the people. These maneuvers are again based on the lies and concoctions about the Soviet threat and Soviet military supremacy. Through these lies, the NATO bosses are attempting to justify their policy of escalating the arms buildup and perpetuating tension and undermining the global support accorded to Soviet peace proposals. Their aims also become evident through the fact that they impose new conditions for the resumption of the talks. The fact they put forward new conditions--including interference in the internal affairs of socialist countries--clearly demonstrates that they are not really in favor of negotiations.

Dear listeners: The foreign minister of the junta government, Turkmen, has also signed this joint communique and endorsed this policy against detente. On 2 May, HURRIYET reported Turkmen's statement that his government welcomed the Soviet proposal for a disarmament conference and it favors the control of nuclear weapons. Membership in NATO and dependence on U.S. imperialism result in a dilemma in which, on the one hand, the government is in favor of disarmament and controlling armaments serves the interests of the country, and, on the other hand, the government is dragged into new military expenditures at the behest of NATO's chief boss, and allows the country to become a tool in imperialist adventures for the sake of a few U.S. weapons. In addition to the existence of U.S. and NATO bases on our soil and the fact that nuclear weapons are stored in these bases, the decisions made during this NATO meeting to escalate the arms buildup and heighten tension constitute great threats to our country.

Dear listeners: These decisions and endorsing these decisions create new possibilities for the strengthening of the pressure by the chief bosses of U.S. imperialism and NATO to use our country as a tool for military adventures. As a matter of fact, Luns says moves will be made to also deploy new nuclear weapons in Turkey. These words indicate clearly and frighteningly where NATO's chief bosses want to drag our country.

As it is known, agreements have been signed and are still being signed between our country and socialist countries. These agreements serve the national interests of our country, which is facing deep economic and social crises, and constitute genuine assistance. Endorsing NATO's decisions favoring the cold war to increase armaments and perpetuate tension, and approving lies about a Soviet threat encourage the strengthening of attempts to undermine relations that serve our national interests. Such a stand benefits imperialism, its collaborator, internal reaction, and the fiercest pro-American forces.

As indicated by Turkish Communist Party Secretary General Comrade Bilen, the wildest democratic forces should conduct a joint anti-imperialist and democratic struggle. This is the only way to disperse the dark clouds over our country and people. This is the only way to repel the imperialists' pressure and the attacks by internal reactionaries.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 090 11 May 1981

CONTENTS

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

EEC Rejects Idea of Political Cooperation Treaty B 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Reportage on Results of Berlin House Elections J 1
Von Weizsaecker Statement J 1
Officials' Reactions J 1
Leaders Congratulate New French President J 2
Chancellor Schmidt J 2
Brandt, Strauss J 2
President Carstens J 3
Kohl, Brandt Comment on Mitterrand Election J 3
Gunman Murders Hesse Economics, Transport Minister J 3
Terrorist Connection Suspected J 3

FRANCE

Francois Mitterrand Is Elected President K 1
Victory Statement K 1
Socialist Party Officials View Election Victory K 2
Lionel Jospin K 2
Michel Rocard K 3
Giscard d'Estaing Congratulates Mitterrand K 4
Chirac Issues Statement on Election Result K 4
Marchais Discusses Election, PCF Participation K 5
Interviewed by Telephone K 6
Questioned on Plans K 7
Barre: Majority Has Been Divided, Weakened K 8
Strict Currency Controls Instituted in Strasbourg K 8
Group Claims Responsibility for Paris Incident K 8

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Pertini Wires Congratulations to Mitterrand L 1
Rome Buses Set Afire by Unidentified Gang L 1
Government Plans To Suspend Al-Qadhdhafi Visit L 1
DC's Piccoli Addresses PSI Congress on PCI Threat [AVANTI 24 Apr] L 1

SPAIN

Police Arrest Two ETA Members in 7 May Killings N 1
Nine Basque Leaders Arrested N 1
GRAPO Claims Responsibility for 4 May Attack N 1
GRAPO Demands N 1
GRAPO Suspects Arrested N 2
Additional GRAPO Leader Arrested N 3
Premier Addresses Nation on Antiterrorism Measures N 3
Special Court Announced N 5
More Arrests N 5
Gen Jose Leon-Bizarre Released From Detention N 5
USSR Embassy Denies 'Slanderous Reports' on Acts N 5
Briefs: New Military Governor N 5

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

Defense Minister Interviewed on Nuclear Arms [Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET 4 May] P 1

NORWAY

Bruntland Addresses Foreign Policy Seminar [Oslo AFTENPOSTEN 5 May] P 3
Minister Questioned on Financing 'Listening Posts' [Oslo AFTENPOSTEN 7 May] P 4

SWEDEN

Prime Minister Resigns; Plans New Government P 4
Interim Ministers Named [SVENSKA DAGBLADET 6 May] P 5
Palme Urges Early Elections [Oslo AFTENPOSTEN 6 May] P 5
Fischer Meets Left Party-Communist Chairman [East Berlin NEUS DEUTSCHLAND 7 May] P 5

UNITED KINGDOM

Thatcher, Foot Congratulate New French President Q 1
Thatcher Greets Schmidt on Arrival for Talks Q 1

CYPRUS

Rolandhis: UN, West Expect Cyprus Issues Progress R 1
Press Conference R 1

GREECE

Group Claims Responsibility for Athens Bombings S 1
Defense Minister Departs for Brussels NATO Meeting S 1
Paper Reports Promotion of Former Junta Officers [ELEVTHEROTIPIA 9 May] S 1
PASOK's Papandreou Returns From Romania Visit S 1
Arrival Statement [ELEVTHEROTIPIA 8 May] S 2
Minister Signs Agricultural Agreement With Poland S 2

TURKEY

Turkes Charged With Murder of Two Officials T 1
Military Court Sentences Three Terrorists to Death T 1
Defense Minister Leaves for Brussels NATO Meeting T 1

EEC REJECTS IDEA OF POLITICAL COOPERATION TREATY

NC101052 Paris AFP in English 1046 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] Venlo, The Netherlands, 10 May (AFP)--The European Economic Community has rejected the idea of a Community treaty on political co-operation and the creation of a political secretariat to advise the 10 governments on foreign affairs, Dutch Foreign Minister Chris Van der Klaauw said today. But Mr Van der Klaauw, who chaired a weekend meeting of Community foreign ministers here, said member countries have agreed to cooperate on questions of security.

Acknowledging that it was difficult to draw a line between defense and security matters, Mr Van der Klaauw said discussion of defense issues was ruled out. This was because defence was the prerogative of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO), which did not include neutral Ireland, an EEC member. The concept of a political secretariat was aimed at strengthening continuity of foreign policy among EEC governments. The idea was backed by West Germany and some small Community countries, but was opposed by France.

The ministers ruled in favour of looking at ways of strengthening assistance to the president of the Community's Council of Ministers without setting up a new office, Mr Van der Klaauw said.

Mr Van der Klaauw said that some countries viewed a political secretariat as a possible obstacle to rapid reaction to international events by Community governments.

The decision followed a strong appeal yesterday by West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher for common objectives among the Ten on foreign, economic and trade policies in attempts to strengthen European unity.

The ministers, most of whom left Venlo yesterday, also decided that the next European Community summit in Luxembourg must "seriously attack the difficult question of re-balancing the Common Market budget," Mr Van der Klaauw said.

They also postponed trade questions concerning Japan and Yugoslavia until the next foreign ministers' meeting in Brussels, and called for both Syria and Israel to act with "moderation" towards Lebanon, he said.

Mr Van der Klaauw announced that he would continue his mission, requested by ministers, to prepare for a possible Community peace initiative in the Middle East by leaving later today for Israel to gather information.

On behalf of their governments, the ministers expressed hopes that Turkey would remain in the Council of Europe after they heard Turkish assurances that democracy would soon be re-established, Mr Van der Klaauw said.

But he noted that Community governments could not influence members of the Parliamentary assembly of the Council who are due to decide soon whether Turkey should remain a member.

The Council is a separate body from the European Community.

REPORTAGE ON RESULTS OF BERLIN HOUSE ELECTIONS

LD110830 Hamburg DPA in German 0645 GMT 11 May 81

[Excerpt] Berlin, 11 May (DPA)--Shortly before 0100 GMT today, the regional electoral office announced the provisional final result of the elections to the Berlin house of representatives. The voting was:

CDU	47.9 percent	(compared with 44.4 percent in 1979)
SPD	38.4 percent	(compared with 42.7 percent in 1979)
FDP	5.6 percent	(compared with 8.1 percent in 1979)
AL [alternative list]	7.2 percent	(compared with 3.7 percent in 1979)
SEW [Socialist Unity Party of West Berlin]	0.7 percent	(compared with 1.1 percent in 1979)
Others	0.3 percent

The provisional distribution of seats is:

CDU	65 seats (63 seats in 1979)
SPD	52 seats (61 seats in 1979)
FDP	7 seats (11 seats in 1979)
AL	9 seats (not represented in house of representatives in 1979)

Von Weizsaecker Statement

LD102104 Hamburg DPA in German 2028 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] Berlin, 10 May (DPA)--Berlin CDU group chairman Richard von Weizsaecker will invite the SPD and FDP to hold talks on forming a majority government. Weizsaecker told DPA on this election evening that the CDU has received the "mandate to work" and wants to create the prerequisites for forming a government. The CDU will inform these two parties as to its negotiators in the talks on Monday.

Weizsaecker stressed that he doesn't want to comment on any possible coalitions or programs. As far as he is concerned, however, it is quite certain that all three parties which said that they would not form a coalition with the alternative list are aware of their duty to take the election result seriously."

The CDU politician stressed: "I am sure that I will form a government."

Officials' Reactions

LD102010 Hamburg DPA in German 1905 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 10 May (DPA)--The outcome of the elections to the Berlin house of representatives clearly disappoints the SPD and FDP in Bonn and greatly satisfies the CDU. SPD Chairman Willy Brandt spoke on television of a "bitter defeat." FDP leader Hans-Dietrich Genscher called his party's losses "quite bitter." CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl described the outcome in Berlin as a "splendid result" for his party.

In Brandt's view, the SPD's defeat in Berlin wasn't influenced by the situation in Bonn. With regard to Hans-Jochen Vogel, the leading candidate in Berlin, Brandt stated that although a good man can change a great deal, he cannot replace the party.

Kohl described the SPD results compared with earlier elections as a "total decline." But this isn't the time for the CDU to savor triumphs, but to try to form a Berlin government which is capable of action. All democratic parties must be aware of their political responsibility in forming the Senat. It is indisputable that the outcome of the Berlin elections is also of significance from a federal political viewpoint. Helmut Schmidt, in the person of Hans-Jochen Vogel, has also lost the election.

Genscher said that the FDP failed to overcome the unfavorable conditions from the outset. All parties now face a very difficult situation. Like Kohl, Genscher said that responsibility on the part of the parties was now called for, but with a result of just over 5 percent, the FDP should not push itself forward in forming the Senat. According to Genscher, the Saarland example of a coalition with the CDU cannot be a model for Berlin since other majority conditions prevailed in the Saarland.

LEADERS CONGRATULATE NEW FRENCH PRESIDENT

Chancellor Schmidt

LD102036 Hamburg DPA in German 2012 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] [no dateline received] Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt wisned new French President Francois Mitterrand happiness and success. Backed by the trust which the citizens of France demonstrated in Mitterrand, he can devote himself confidently to the tasks before him, Schmidt wrote in his telegram. He is convinced that the friendship between the two nations and their common gains since the signing of the farsighted treaty on German-French cooperation "will help you and us to fulfill these tasks," Schmidt stressed.

"I will continue to do everything to encourage German-French cooperation, which is decisively important for Europe," Schmidt underlined. In this respect, he said he hopes that he will soon meet Mitterrand for comprehensive talks.

Wolfgang Clement, the spokesman for the SPD Executive, stated that the SPD assumes that the traditional trusting cooperation between France and the Federal Republic "will receive new impetus from President Mitterrand."

Brandt, Strauss

LD102006 Hamburg DPA in German 1942 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 10 May (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has congratulated Francois Mitterrand on his election as president of the French Republic. Brandt said in a telegram that Mitterrand's election is "an event of historic significance" for France and, hence, also for Europe. During the past 30 years the French and Germans have placed their relations with each other on a new level and thus laid the foundations for European unity. "I know that under your presidency, this work of peace will receive important impetus," Brandt stressed.

CSU Chairman and Bavarian Minister-President Franz-Josef Strauss hopes, following the election of Francois Mitterrand as French president, "that the trusting and friendly relations between France and the Federal Republic will continue in future to be further consolidated for the benefit and well being of our peoples." In a congratulatory telegram to the French Socialist leader, published by the CSU leadership in Munich this evening, Strauss further expressed the wish that "French-German cooperation will make an important contribution to strengthening Europe and the Free World."

President Carstens

LD110838 Hamburg DPA in German 0741 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] Bonn, 11 May (DPA)--In a congratulatory telegram to Francois Mitterrand, the French president-elect, Federal President Karl Carstens expresses the conviction that German-French friendship and cooperation will continue to prove their worth. Mitterrand is entering office during a dynamic phase of European and international politics which requires great efforts from everybody. The common purpose that has grown between France and the Federal Republic over 3 decades will benefit both nations as well as Europe and the cause of world peace.

KOHL, BRANDT COMMENT ON MITTERRAND ELECTION

LD101956 Hamburg DPA in German 1925 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] Hamburg, 10 May (DPA)--The election of Francois Mitterrand as the new French president has met with a divided response on the part of the major parties in the Federal Republic. During a roundtable discussion on German television, CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl was markedly more restrained about the result than SPD Chairman Willy Brandt and FDP leader and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

Kohl said that Mitterrand's stated intention of holding new elections to the National Assembly in Paris was "in no way a happy development." As far as the union is concerned, however, German-French friendship has never been a matter between governments, but a matter between the two peoples. He, Kohl, hopes that this will remain so under President Mitterrand.

Brandt stated that the election in France demonstrates the inaccuracy of the forecasts that there is an inevitable conservative trend in Europe. Genscher, like Brandt, stressed that the new French president can count on good cooperation with the Bonn government. The basis for this is the tested German-French friendship.

GUNMAN MURDERS HESSE ECONOMICS, TRANSPORT MINISTER

LD110734 Hamburg DPA in German 0647 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] Frankfurt, 11 May (DPA)--The treasurer of the Free Domocratic Party, Hesse Economics and Transport Minister Heinz Herbert Karry, was murdered this morning in his house in Frankfurt. Karry was shot by an unknown attacker. According to the criminal investigation office in Weisbaden, the murderer forced his way early this morning into Karry's house in the Seckbach district of Frankfurt. He then fired three shots from a small caliber weapon, probably a pistol, at the politician who was in bed. The minister's wife was not harmed in the attack. While the culprit fled, Karry was taken to a Frankfurt hospital, but the doctors there were unable to help him and he died at the clinic. On orders from the federal prosecutor general, the Hesse criminal investigation office has taken charge of the murder investigations. Immediately after the attack, a large-scale search began. Specialists from the federal criminal investigation office are working at the scene of the crime.

Terrorist Connection Suspected

LD110742 Hamburg DPA in German 0719 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] Karlsruhe, 11 May (DPA)--The murder of Hesse Economics and Transport Minister Karry in possibly connected with terorism in the Federal Republic. The federal prosecutor's office in Karlsruhe early this morning took over the investigations because it is suspected that a terrorist association may have been formed. According to a spokesman, the authorities have also sent a senior prosecutor to Frankfurt.

FRANCOIS MITTERRAND IS ELECTED PRESIDENT

LD102122 Paris Domestic Service in French 2050 GMT 10 May 81

[Statement by Christian Bonnet, minister of the interior, on French election results--live]

[Text] As I speak to you, the second round of the presidential election has provided the following results:

Number of registered voters:	29,261,200
Number of votes cast:	25,375,035
Percentage of votes:	86.71 percent
Number of valid votes:	24,660,438
Percentage:	84.27 percent

Francois Mitterrand obtained 12,826,044 votes, or 52.01 percent; Valery Giscard d'Estaing obtained 11,834,394 votes, or 47.99 percent.

The results still awaited either from metropolitan France or considerably later in the night from the French West Indies, from Guiana or Polynesia, are not such as to modify considerably the percentages I have just given you.

Consequently, under reservation of the proclamation of the results after verification by the Constitutional Council, the sole arbiter in accordance with Article 58 of our Constitution of the regularity of the election, Francois Mitterrand is elected as president of the republic. Universal suffrage has spoken. French women and men, after a campaign conforming with our democratic traditions, have made their choice.

Victory Statement

LD102106 Paris Domestic Service in French 2021 GMT 10 May 81

[Statement by French President-elect Francois Mitterrand on 10 May at City Hall in Chateau Chinon--live]

[Text] The results which have been communicated to me while I am speaking announce that the French men and women have chosen the changes which I proposed to them. This victory is primarily that of the forces of youth, the forces of labor, forces of creation, forces of renewal, which have rallied in a great national surge for employment, peace, freedom--themes which were those of my presidential campaign and which will remain those of my 7-year term.

The victory is also that of those women, those men, humble militants, imbued by an ideal who in every community of France, in every town, every village, have for their whole life hoped for this day when their country would finally come to meet them. I owe them all the honor and the burden of the responsibilities which I carry henceforth. I make no distinction between them: they are our people and nothing more. I will have no other ambition than to justify their confidence.

My thoughts go at this time to those who are dear to me and who are no longer with us and to whom I offer the simple love of my fatherland and the unfailing will to serve it. I measure the weight of history, its inflexibility, its size: only the entire national community can reply to the demands of the present time.

I will act resolutely so that, faithfully following what I have committed myself to, the nation will find the path of necessary reconciliation. We have such a lot to do together, and such a lot to say, too. Hundreds of millions of people thoughout the world know tonight that France is ready to speak to them in the language they have learned to love from it.

Ladies and gentlemen, I have another brief statement to make. To Giscard d'Estaing, whom I thank for his message: I send my good wishes to the man who has led France for 7 years. Beyond the political struggles and our contradictions, it is now up to history to judge all of our actions. Thank you.

SOCIALIST PARTY OFFICIALS VIEW ELECTION VICTORY

Lionel Jospin

LD101952 Paris Domestic Service in French 1805 GMT 10 May 81

[Statement by Lionel Jospin, first secretary of the French Socialist Party, on 10 May at Socialist Party headquarters in Paris--live]

[Text] [Monitored in progress] ...for the tenacity he has shown in constantly resisting attacks during all these days of collective commitment. This May 10th is a day of joy, first for the Socialist militants who have exerted themselves unselfishly in this campaign and in particular for the oldest among them, for these militants, men and women, whom I have met at meetings and who have asked: Am I going to see a Socialist president? Am I going to see Socialist ideas carried to victory in our country? Well, this day has come. This is a day of joy also for the hundreds of thousands of men and women who have helped us in this campaign--even if they were not Socialists--who have done so from the beginning or who joined us after 26 April and who have carried on with this work of solid conviction with patience among the people. This played a big role in the victory of our candidate. This is a day of joy for millions of men and women in this country who have not been able to continue living in the society that was shaped for them, who want work, economic development, measures of social justice, democracy rediscovered. And it is also, I believe, a day of joy for the hundreds of millions of men and women outside France. I know, I am certain, that this election of Francois Mitterrand is a surprise abroad. But I also know that the people in Europe around us--where we have many friends--or also in the Third World, in Latin America, in Africa or Asia, are rejoicing at what has happened in France on this 10th of May. They are expecting action from us, action that will bring them comfort in this period of trouble and crisis.

I also want to say that this 10th of May is a beautiful day for democracy in France. Despite a campaign led by the right which aimed to arouse fear, resignation, reflexes of worry, the French people have today given proof of their maturity. They have opened an era for the rebirth of democracy in France. In fact, our people have chosen between a policy of conservatism, economic stagnation and social injustice, and the proposals put forward throughout this campaign by Francois Mitterrand: to restore the economy, reduce inequalities between French people, make democracy bloom again and give France back its influence in the world. I believe this is a new change for France.

Francois Mitterrand has succeeded in gathering around him a magnificent popular rally. His aim, as you know, has been to unite and not to divide. Today, he rallies the French people together for a great collective ambition.

I want to say, in conclusion, that I, who have held the office of first secretary since Mitterrand's nomination as candidate for the presidency, have been at his side in this party for 10 years--and for 8 years in the party leadership--I have learned to know his capacity for resisting hardship, his capacity for firmness regarding his ideas and convictions, his intact faculty of enthusiasm. I want to tell him I am happy that he is now together with us all and offering with us all the prospect of rebirth to this people.

I also want to say that if the French people want to give expression to their joy--I have said that this is a day of joy--and if they want to express this joy, well then we think it should be on the Place de la Bastille in Paris, for historic reasons and also because it is large enough for a crowd, which isn't the case in the vicinity of the Socialist Party headquarters. They can demonstrate there if they wish to do so. They will do it in the image of what has been Francois Mitterrand's campaign until victory: a campaign that was strong, serene, calm; because joy can also be a way...[words indistinct; cheering]

Michel Rocard

LD102030 Paris Domestic Service in French 1814 GMT 10 May 81

[Speech by Socialist Party official Michel Rocard on French election result; place not given--live]

[Text] [monitored in progress]...of Francois Mitterrand is a very fine victory. It is also a considerable event: Since France has been a republic, this is the first time that a Socialist has been elected to the presidency by universal suffrage. The immense, considerable joy this evening is shared not only in many Socialist homes but by all those who contributed to this victory--and not only the Socialists. I am particularly happy when I think of the pride of the activists, the elected representatives of our party, who have done so much for this victory by placing in the balance of success the weight of their experience and their achievements.

I will not, however, forget that millions of other French people, somewhat less numerous than those of whom I have just spoken, are either disappointed or anxious and I know that from this evening it is incumbent on Francois Mitterrand and the Socialists to alleviate their anxiety, for France is going to choose a new path. We made a great effort in this battle, knowing that we would have long and difficult tasks to carry out together:

First, regional reform to allow a better mobilization of the energy, the talents, the skills in which this country is so rich and whose effort and initiative have been held back until now;

A greater capacity of the French people to negotiate with each other, to understand each other, to talk to each other--We must know how to negotiate our income, our wages, the length of the working week, work conditions, to relearn how to conclude agreements;

An orientation which would allow us, the trade unions, the associations, the cooperative societies, the friendly societies, the professional organizations, the district committees, the local collectives, to bring all our weight to bear in everything which we have to do in the future to build together; to fight against unemployment, to create jobs.

We know that this depends largely on what Francois Mitterrand will do tomorrow and, around him, the ministers who will distinguish themselves on this platform; but it will also depend on the actions of all those who feel capable of initiative in France.

There were two inevitabilities which weighed on the left: One was that of the failure which kept us out of power for 23 years--this has been vanquished this evening and it is a victory for Francois Mitterrand. There was a second inevitability: that of the difficulty of overcoming the failure, of transforming the country effectively in the knowledge that things are difficult--it is this victory which the French people will reap together from tomorrow.

For I am convinced that our numbers, our strength, the mass of talents and skills which are going to embark on this bold adventure and the march of France toward a freer and more generous society will make us victorious. Anyway, it is in that spirit that one must remember today that together we have all hoped, even dreamed--and it was necessary and generous--and we still dream.

Tomorrow we will begin to reconcile the dream with reality: It will not be easy. Don't forget that, but it will begin with common hope and I don't doubt that France is embarking on a radiant phase of its history.

GISCARD D'ESTAING CONGRATULATES MITTERRAND

LD101837 Paris Domestic Service in French 1818 GMT 10 May 81

[Message from Valery Giscard d'Estaing to Francois Mitterrand]

[Text] I send my good wishes to Francois Mitterrand on his election to the presidency of the republic. I think that I can claim to have done all that depended on me to explain to the men and women of France the scope and consequences of their choice. I wish to thank each and every one who was good enough to vote for me, for giving me the proof of their faith. I also give my thanks to the young people who helped in my campaign. I have been deeply moved. Needless to say, I will continue to defend the essential interests of our country.

This is the message which has just been sent by the Elysee to Francois Mitterrand, a message from the defeated president

CHIRAC ISSUES STATEMENT ON ELECTION RESULT

LD101920 Paris Domestic Service in French 1842 GMT 10 May 81

[Statement by Jacques Chirac, leader of the Rally for the Republic, on 10 May at party headquarters--live]

[Text] The men and women of France have elected Francois Mitterrand as president of the republic, at the end of a campaign which took place under conditions that were in conformity with our democratic traditions. This new situation opens a period of uncertainty. Nobody can underestimate the importance and gravity of what is at stake for the future of our country.

Under such circumstances, I call on all responsible political personalities and all citizens of our country who are devoted to the principles of the Fifth Republic and to the values of freedom and progress which it enshrines, to rally round without spirit of partisanship and to show, with cohesion and determination, their willingness to defend these principles. We must now turn resolutely to the future. As for me, I have decided to continue this fight together with all those men and women who are without any exclusiveness and who are well aware tonight of what is at stake for France. In the days to come, I will say what form this action is to take.

MARCHAIS DISCUSSES ELECTION, PCF PARTICIPATION

LD101942 Paris Domestic Service in French 1833 GMT 10 May 81

[Statement by Georges Marchais, secretary general of the French Communist Party, on the election of Francois Mitterrand as president of France; place not given--recorded]

[Text] Giscard d'Estaing has been beaten. The news is welcomed with joy and hope throughout the country, and we share these feelings completely. We share them all the more since, from the very beginning of this presidential campaign, our goal was to beat Giscard d'Estaing and to change the policy of the country.

For 7 months, my entire campaign as Communist candidate was an anti-Giscard campaign. Without deviating from our line, but wishing to use every possibility, we decided to continue our fight against Giscard d'Estaing in the second round by calling for votes for Francois Mitterrand. Victory has been won; we made a decisive contribution to it.

By electing Francois Mitterrand, the majority of the country wanted to condemn the disastrous policy Giscard d'Estaing conducted for 7 years for the profit of capital. The people came out in favor of change. A response now must be made to this desire and this hope. The French Communist Party, which played its part in the victory, is ready to play its full role in the effort to implement the changes which are desired and expected by the country. We are ready to assume all our responsibilities both in the government and at all levels of national life for the new policy of full employment; of justice and social progress; of national development; of effort and freedom; of initiatives for peace, disarmament and independence; of a solution for all the great problems of the world. This policy should be put into action; it is a policy which the country needs.

We think that the obstacles and difficulties on the path of the progress of the union of all the popular forces will be overcome as soon as the will to act together in the service of this new policy and the democratic reforms it implies is affirmed. We have this will. If change is to occur, the Communist Party and its original dynamic and creative contribution to the popular movement are definitely needed. This is the conviction of 4,500,000 men and women who gave us their votes in the first round. And, we are convinced, it is also the conviction of those men and women who, though they may have voted differently on 26 April, still consider themselves Communist voters. Other men and women will come to share this conviction in the struggle.

Change also needs the active participation of working men and women everywhere, but first and foremost in enterprises. Their vigilance and their initiative are and will be of the highest importance in foiling all the maneuvers of the bosses and reactionaries in order to achieve change.

Everybody realizes this and will realize it. The Communists have no other objectives other than to serve well the interests of the workers of the French nation.

On the other hand, I inform you that I have sent the following message to Francois Mitterrand: "President of the Republic, on behalf of the directorate of the French Communist Party, of all the Communists, of all the electors, males and females, whose activity and votes contributed to your election, I send you my warmest congratulations."

"In working for change, which should now be accomplished, in order to answer to the expectations of our country, I confirm to you that we are ready to assume all of our responsibilities. As always, we have no will other than to serve the interests of the workers and France."

[A journalist interrupts Marchais, asking: What do you mean by assume all their responsibility?]

Listen, it is clear that the election of Francois Mitterrand is the result of the unequivocal decision taken by our party the day after the first round, when it had called on electors to vote for Francois Mitterrand. Without the participation of the Communists, we would not have been able to win the victory we have won against Giscard d'Estaing. All the same, I think and we think that it is clear that we will not be able to answer the expectations of the country for the necessary change without the participation of the French Communist Party. Therefore, as far as we are concerned, we are ready to participate immediately in the necessary discussions with a view to arriving at our participation in the responsibilities. As I said, at all levels.

Interviewed by Telephone

LD102045 Paris Domestic Service in French 1901 GMT 10 May 81

[Jean-Marie Cavada 10 May telephone interview with Georges Marchais--live]

[Question] Good evening, Mr Marchais. Not long ago, I asked a question to which we did not have a full answer. Now, I repeat the question. What did you mean when you said previously that you were ready to participate, to assume all your responsibilites. So the question is quite simple, Mr Marchais, does it mean the negotiation of a government program? If this program suits you, yes, you will join the Socialist-colored government of Francois Mitterrand, or does it mean that if you don't agree, you will stay in a position of partial opposition or of support from the outside, as was the custom of saying in the past.

[Answer] Now listen, Jean-Marie Cavada, I believe that as far as our party is concerned, matters are extremely clear. We went into the first round with a candidate, a platform. We have explained the policy we believe necessary for France. I found myself in the fourth position, a decision had to be made and we made it immediately, without hesitation. We called on our voters to vote for Francois Mitterrand. The party was mobilized for this task all week. We have won. Francois Mitterand was elected president of the republic. I am of the opinion that we have won.

[Question] What is the consequence?

[Answer] Well now, we will have to work on the implementation of a new policy. Just as Francois Mitterrand would not have won without the Communist votes, I believe that he knows he cannot govern on the left or put a leftist policy into effect without the participation of the French Communist Party. We are available to discuss at party level the objectives which are indispensible to attain, realize and satisfy as soon as possible the expectations of the French women and men. We have our plan, but believe me, we are not maximalists. We want that the right, whichwas beaten today, we want before the country to prove that the same way that it was possible to beat the right, it is possible to implement a new policy which meets the expectations of French women and men. [sentence as heard]

[Question] You say that you are not maximalists at the Communist Party. Does this mean, for example, that you don't ask for presence of Communist ministers in the government that will be formed by 20 or 25 May?

[Anwer] I said in my statement a short time ago, you have heard it, that we are ready to assume all of our responsibilities at every level.

[Question] But when? To be ready is one thing, but does it mean that you demand that a program should be negotiated or does it mean that if the program doesn't suit you, you will not participate. I am concise, am I not, Mr Marchais? You understand this.

[Answer] You aren't as concise as all that. You are when you want to be. Now listen, when I say that matters must be discussed, it is obvious that the Communist Party would not join a government that would want to implement a policy which would not correspond at all with what the country expects or to the will it expressed today.

[Question] There are two obvious alternatives: either it suits you, you say yes and you are in your right to ask that Communist ministers should be in the government, or it doesn't suit you. What will you do then? I would like an answer and not an ambiguity.

[Answer] I already have given my view on this question. In the hypothesis that I don't agree at all and that the French people don't agree, I am sure... I listened to Mr Labbe a short time ago. He believes that alternating with the Communists is impossible. Well, we will demonstrate that alternating with a government--of course, if we are offered the possibility--with a left government, is possible. In other words, a government containing Communist minister is today entirely possible, just as it was possible after liberation when there were Communist ministers. We will demonstrate this. If it depends only on us, it will indeed happen.

Questioned on Plans

LD102003 Paris Domestic Service in French 1908 GMT 10 May 81

[Unidentified journalist's interview with Georges Marchais; place not given--live]

[Excerpts] [Question] George Marchais, are you in favor of a government contract?

[Answer] Yes, I am.

[Question] What are the bases on which it must be negotiated? Do you know anything about it yet, or will you have meetings of your groups to discuss it?

[Answer] Well, you know, we will obviously convene our central committee this week. However, we already have proposed a policy to the French people and Francois Mitterrand also has presented a policy and some goals. Therefore, we must now have discussions. If we both want to agree on aims which agree with what the workers, the French men and women want....Don't you realize? I was saying just now, as I was opening the bottle of champagne here with my friends and with the journalists, what an event this really is? Since 1956, for 24 years, we haven't had anything like it. In 1956, the left won. We have had to wait 24 years--do you realize it's a long time, it's one third of a man's life--to win the victory we have won this evening. And do you think that now that this victory has been won, both sides won't make the necessary effort to come to an agreement and to work, to begin to work, to put into practice the new policy which the workers and the French people expect?

[Question] Georges Marchais, a last question. Can one lean on a Socialist president when one is the leader of a communist party which obtained 15.34 percent of the votes through its candidate in the first round? I think that is the precise number.

[Answer] I already have said that 15 percent is not enough, and that in my opinion, you know.... There are people telephoning the central committee this evening--I have just been told this--telephoning to say "we didn't vote for you in the first round, but we will vote for you in the legislative elections. First of all, we wanted to beat Giscard." We fully understood this phenomenon, all the more so since the electoral system leans towards bipolarization--that is to say toward two candidates--all the more so since we have had a candidate only once.

I believe sincerely that the strength of the Communist Party must grow, must become more important. However, when you say to "lean," it must be understood that it isn't a matter of imposing frivolous or unreasonable things. I say that the workers of this country need an influential Communist Party to ensure the defense of their interests, all the more so since the bosses will not make things easier for us. Therefore, ideas must be defended to put the new policy into practice.

BARRE: MAJORITY HAS BEEN DIVIDED, WEAKENED

LD110936 Paris Domestic Service in French 0900 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] Premier Raymond Barre has just issued a written statement following the election of Francois Mitterrand to the presidency. We give you the main passages from the premier's statement:

Before the end of the present 7-year term, I will hand in my resignation and the resignation of my government to the president of the republic who appointed us. For as long as I remain in office, I will see to it that the transition takes place under conditions that are in conformity with the nation's interests. I will then rejoin the camp of all those who intend to remain faithful to the principles of the Fifth Republic as bequeathed to it by General de Gaulle.

Barre then continues with these words, words which might well evoke some comment:

The majority--which since 1958 has supported these principles and ensured the progress and greatness of France--has been divided and weakened by a fraction of its membership which did not hesitate at the decisive moment, to engage in a double-or-nothing gamble on the fate of the Fifth Republic.

Barre concludes: Nothing can make us forget their immense responsibility. The tasks which will have to be pursued tomorrow for the Fifth Republic will have to rest upon clearness and loyalty.

That was the statement issued by Barre. You will note that it contains severe judgment concerning the divisions among the majority.

STRICT CURRENCY CONTROLS INSTITUTED IN STRASBOURG

NC101852 Paris AFP in English 1842 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] Strasbourg, 10 May (AFP)--Customs officials in the Strasbourg area have been ordered to institute strict controls to prevent the departure of capital abroad, an official source said here early today.

Customs officers were told to pay special attention to powerful cars registered in other than border areas and to vehicles traveling at night on secondary roads, the source said.

[Words indistinct] the contents of their wallets listed, the source [word indistinct], noting that exchange controls would be stringently enforced.

Strasbourg is located in northeastern France, near the border with West Germany.

GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR PARIS INCIDENT

NC100949 Paris AFP in English 0938 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] Paris, 10 May (AFP)--The Jewish group Pessah (Passover) today claimed responsibility for shots fired during the night at the Syrian Airlines office in central Paris. No casualties were reported, police said.

In a telephoned statement to AFP, Pessah said the attack was a reply to "Syrian persecutions in which Jews are victims, and the massacre of Christians in Libya.

Last Sunday the movement claimed responsibility for shots fired at an extreme right-wing bookship, also in central Paris. Police said at the time that they had never heard of the movement.

PERTINI WIRES CONGRATULATIONS TO MITTERRAND

AU110837 Rome ANSA in English 0810 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] Rome, 11 May (ANSA)--Italian head of state Sandro Pertini sent off a telegram in the evening to Francois Mitterrand, the newly elected president of France, congratulating him on his showing at the polls Sunday and touching on the close ties between their two countries.

The text of the telegram sent by Italy's Socialist President to the new French Socialist head of state was as follows: "My warm congratulations for your election as president of the French Republic. I am certain that you will work with commitment in the interests of the French people, whom we have always considered as our friends, that you will work so that the ties between Italy and France will become increasingly close and will bend your ability and faith in the defense of peace, of the civil and human rights of every creature on the earth and against hunger in the world.

"I hope that I can very soon shake your hand with the esteem and affection which I have always felt for you and which I can renew. Sandro Pertini".

ROME BUSES SET AFIRE BY UNIDENTIFIED GANG

NC092240 Paris AFP in English 2232 GMT 9 May 81

[Text] Rome, 9 May (AFP)--About 20 masked youths used molotov cocktails to set fire to three buses in the center of Rome last night after first having passengers disembark, police sources said. The attack--on the Corso Vittorio Emanuele, one of the main streets through the historic center of the Italian capital--caused no injuries but created a major traffic jam. Responsibility for the attack was not immediately claimed, the sources said.

GOVERNMENT PLANS TO SUSPEND AL-QADHDHAFI VISIT

AU110840 Rome ANSA in English 0836 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] Bologna, 11 May (ANSA)--Luigi Preti, a former cabinet minister and now a deputy speaker of the Italian lower house, has disclosed that the Rome Government has decided to suspend the visit to Italy of Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi "only after the drastic measure" decided on by Washington to expel Libyan diplomats from the United States.

According to Preti, "Al-Qadhdhafi has treated Italy with scant respect on a number of occasions." The former minister cited the colonel's financing for a "strongly anti-Italian" film on the struggle of the Libyans against the Italian colonial army earlier in the century.

DC'S PICCOLI ADDRESSES PSI CONGRESS ON PCI THREAT

LD071229 Rome AVANTI in Italian 24 Apr 81 pp 6-7

[Report on speech delivered by DC Secretary Flaminio Piccoli at PSI Congress in Palermo on 23 April]

[Excerpts] In Craxi's speech we felt a great civic commitment to a revival of the democratic system and to the state's reversion to its genuine vocation of freedom, solidarity and peace.

Ours is a pluralist and flexible society immunized against totalitarian-type views which are foreign to our and your culture. We do not have absolute certainties in politics and in our view they are foreign to the logic of politics because of its autonomous, secular, nonfideistic nature, which is not based on prejudice but on analyses rather than preconceptions.

When democracy operates in the recognition, acceptance and exaltation of diversity, this absence of absolute certainties in politics, far from constituting a source of weakness, is a strong point, the very essence of a balanced free system.

In our Italy, rich in passions but also capable of restoring a sense of unity and the desire to stand united if any attempt is made to destroy the achievements of the resistance and the constituent assembly and the extremely advanced levels of democracy attained, there is no room and ought not to be any room for pitiless political struggles. We must work together to restore the state of law which sometimes seems to be lacking today and seems to be directly threatened by the emergence and imminence of motives, demands and objectives which are more elitist than national and in any case are foreign to the course of the processes of education and civilian development which, in our view, must always stem from the popular basis of our constitution and, hence, from the forces which represent the people in their restless and difficult uphill struggle against the predominance and cynicism of old and new powers.

Although De Gasperi and Moro taught us not to overdramatize differences of opinion--and your Nenni did the same--not to split the country from top to bottom and above all never to raise old barriers again--and the direction of our initiative constantly returns to a very strong vocation toward and inspired by democracy--they always urged great vigilance to ensure that democracy's achievements are not destroyed by the temptation to violence and also by the risks of more sophisticated initiatives aimed at reducing our people's room for maneuver and at seeking different paths from those of free consensus on which democracy rests and lives.

As far as is possible, we will strive to ensure that intolerance does not govern political life, that all voices have the right to express themselves, that dialogue among political forces can create opportunities for national unity without demands or attempts at abasement or loss of ideals.

Of course, there is a problem of parliamentary governability. Moreover, it must be admitted that you Socialists, under Craxi's leadership, have made a decisive contribution to this problem. With your choices and with the sense of dedication shown by our Social Democratic, Republican and Liberal friends, we have been able to make a decisive contribution to ensuring, preserving and developing the governability of the eighth legislative period. Governability, however, does not end with a parliamentary majority or with a government formula, although that is very valuable. It presupposes at least two conditions; the existence of institutional mechanisms in which democracy is not exposed to any form of outrage or penalization, in which the rules of the game are accepted by all because they are drawn up and valued by all; this is a heavy burden of responsibility, a quality of which the government to which we belong can be proud because it is displaying it even at the risk of unpopularity. Against the Forlani government, with which we have full active solidarity, the PCI has waged a harmful and expedient war, even rejecting the things which its own social and trade union base took into consideration, taking responsibility in identifying the tools with which to fight the recession. This method of political action, which comprises ultimatums, cannot be accepted, not only by those who--like us and you--intend to guarantee the governability of the eighth legislative period, but also by those who do not intend to sit back and watch the final destruction of an economy which is not gasping its last but might do so unless everybody joins forces in accumulating health instead of continuing to squander it.

In fact, the PCI's attitude is all the more surprising if it is compared with the bold and innovating debates on the austerity policy which ought to have characterised a long parliamentary period and one of interparty relations expressed in economic conditions no more difficult that the present ones. This reversal of positions, which is, to be honest, a serious matter in a party with support as broad as the PCI's, does not augur well for the development of Italian democracy, nor does it lend credibility to a party with regard to the needs of the state and society as a whole and not only of some of its components.

POLICE ARREST TWO ETA MEMBERS IN 7 MAY KILLINGS

NC081230 Paris AFP in English 1158 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] Madrid, 8 May (AFP)--Police today identified the two Basque terrorist suspects arrested in connection with yesterday's bombing attack that killed three people and wounded 12, including General Joaquin de Valenzuela, King Juan Carlos's military chief. Both had received training in Algeria, police said.

The two were identified as Jose Maria Perez y Arturua Etxabe, 28, of Saint Sebastian, and Jose Leon Mazusta, 27, of Renteria. Both were members of the Basque Separatist [Basque Fatherland and Liberty] ETA-Military organization and part of the "Madrid Commando," police said. Fellow Madrid commando Jose Arregui died in Prison in February after reputedly being beaten by police. Police also announced that they had found a cache of arms here.

The general was wounded when two men on a motorcycle threw a bomb at his car in central Madrid yesterday morning.

Sources said that 38 other people in the three Basque provinces were arrested, including the vice-president of Navarra regional assembly, Jose Antonio Urbiola, and the deputy mayor of Pamplona. The arrested were said to be members of the Herri Bata Suna group, which has close connections with the ETA-Military.

Nine Basque Leaders Arrested

LD081344 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] Early this morning nine leaders of Unity of the People were arrested in Pamplona: Jose Antonio Urbiola, vice president of the Foral Parliament of Navarre; (Patxi Zabaleta), first deputy mayor of the town council; Foral parliamentarian (Fernando Saenz Garcia); the Pamplona town councillors (Alfonso Ortegua), (Camilo Monasterio) and (Jesus Maria Andion); and Herri Batasuna leaders (Francisco Ignacio Zabaleta), (Juan Luis Cezetaburu Arizabalaga) and (Juan Carlos Ruiz Ramos).

The detainees are accused of suspected links with ETA and are being held inconnunicado at police headquarters under the antiterrorist law.

GRAPO CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR 4 MAY ATTACK

LD091350 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 9 May 81

[Text] In a typed message received by AFP, the First of October Armed Revolutionary Group [GRAPO] has claimed responsibility for the attacks last Monday in Madrid and Barcelona as a result of which Gen Gonzalez de Suso, national policemen Ignacio Garcia Garcia and two civil guards died. The message, which was received in the mail, has a Granada postmark. The typed text covers two pages and hardly has any mistakes. At the top of the page is the emblem of this terrorist organization.

GRAPO Demands

NC091319 Paris AFP in English 1309 GMT 9 May 81

[Text] Madrid, 9 May (AFP)--The extreme leftist group that the government accused of carrying out the first fatal attack on a Spanish general this week has now claimed responsibility and issued a series of demands, including the dissolution of parliament and new elections.

In a statement sent to several Madrid newspapers, the October First Anti-Fascist Resistance Groups (GRAPO) said it would continue its "armed struggle" unless its demands were met. Among these were "a blanket amnesty and abrogation of repressive laws, a purge of fascist elements from repressive bodies, the courts and other state institutions, and unrestricted political and trade-union rights".

General Andres Gonzalez de Suso and a policeman were shot to death in Madrid on Monday, and at almost the same time, two paramilitary civil guards were shot and killed in Barcelona. The Interior Ministry said shortly afterward that GRAPO was responsible. In its statement, GRAPO also claimed responsibility for the killing of the civil guards.

The military wing of the Basque separatist group ETA claimed responsibility for the bomb attack Thursday on King Juan Carlos' chief military aide, General Joaquin de Valenzuela, that wounded the general and killed three soldiers in his car.

The statement from GRAPO demanded that U.S. military bases be dismantled and that Spain stay out of NATO, as well as the "dissolution of parliament, the calling of free elections and the drafting of a new constitution".

GRAPO accused Gen Gonzalez de Suso of having "a long fascist past", and said its attacks Monday were "a response to the increasing repression on the people, especially since February 23 (date of the failed rightist coup), and to the tragic situation of political prisoners who are tortured unceasingly".

The statement said the "most chauvinistic and terrorist elements of the regime, particularly the bank and the army" were dominating Spanish political life, and that the political parties either were unwilling or unable to stand up against the "police state".

In this set of circumstances, GRAPO said, "there is no other solution but to carry on a prolonged war of resistance.... we support a peaceful evolution toward true democracy, but we are not prepared to be deceived continually".

After the death of Franco in 1975, Spain returned to parliamentary democracy under Premier Adolfo Suarez. But he stepped down this year before the coup to make way for Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, seen as more conservative than Mr Suarez.

GRAPO Suspects Arrested

NC091921 Paris AFP in English 1916 GMT 9 May 81

[Text] Madrid, 9 May (AFP)--Three suspected terrorists were arrested today in connection with the murder of General Andres Gonzalez de Suso and a policeman here Monday, a police communique announced tonight. A police source earlier reported two arrests--those of Miguel Angel Bergado Martinez, 23, known as Jorge, and Alfonso Gonzalez Cambeiro. The communique added the name of a third detainee, Jose Jimenez Fernandez, also known as El Tigre.

The three were seized in a police raid on an apartment in the Lisbon Park suburb, south of central Madrid. The communique said that two pistols, a rifle and ammunition were found in the partment. Police have identified the two men as members of the neo-fascist Revolutionary Groups of October First (GRAPO), a leftist extremist organization.

GRAPO not only claimed the general's murder but also took responsibility for the killing of two civil guards the same day in Barcelona.

A fourth presumed member of GRAPO, Emilio Avelino Gomez, was wounded in the shooting during the attack that cost the general his life, and is already in police custody.

Additional GRAPO Leader Arrested

LD110922 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0900 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] (Guadalupe Munoz), a leader of the First of October Armed Revolutionary Group [GRAPO], has been arrested by the police.

PREMIER ADDRESSES NATION ON ANTITERRORISM MEASURES

LD082248 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1905 GMT 8 May 81

[Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo address to the nation following 8 May cabinet meeting in Madrid--live]

[Text] At a particularly serious and painful moment in Spanish life, when the latest attacks--wounding our armed forces to the very quick--have deeply shocked the whole of society, I feel I must address the Spanish people to convey to them the government's calmness and steadfastness, to explain to them our actions and our decisions and to ask for their active collabroation in the struggle against terrorism. I would be shirking my duty if I tried to pass over the importance and seriousness of the situation, or claimed that I have immediate solutions. I address myself to an old nation and to mature people who are accustomed to overcoming many crises, and I will only use the language of truth.

I would like first of all to say that terrorism in Spain should be understood not only in terms of its internal dimension, but also in terms of a field of international action, from where covert efforts are being made to prevent our people from achieving their aim of a civilized, peaceful and modern life and free coexistence, and from attaining their rightful place among free nations. The terrorists are trying, through their calculated acts of provocation, to (?foment) first of all anxiety and then disorder and chaos. We face a hard and long struggle. Every terrorist attack will always have an advantage in favor of aggression which, by its instantaneous, brutal and unexpected nature does not allow an immediate response.

From the outset, we lost against every attack. [sentence as received] But nothing is more dangerous in connection with this than trusting to simple formulas, formulas which seem as though they will solve everything, but which are not effective, no matter how many statements are made in their favor. Those who assert that force and fear in themselves are an adequate solution ignore reality.

Terrorism is a new instrument of attack, a new form of aggression, aimed at undermining order and social peace. It is coldly and calculatedly mounted and planned. It is a terrible challenge which nobody can resolve, although anyone can express an opinion about it. Therefore, my complete confidence in an utlimate and favorable solution derives above all from the fact that the overwhelming majority of our people repudiates and rejects the terrorists. I address this vast majority which has demonstrated its solidarity during today's silence to ask for its calm support, to explain briefly the measures against terrorism which the government has adopted, is adopting and will adopt in the future.

Slightly more than a month ago, by the agreement of the Council of Ministers chaired by myself, a single antiterrorist command was set up. Immediately afterwards the director of the executive body was appointed, and then the heads of the four units of which it is composed were appointed. All of them are experts in the struggle against terrorism, chosen from officers in the army, the Civil Guard, and the higher police corps.

We have elaborated a short-term and a long-term plan. We are coordinating all information bodies. We are deploying units of the armed forces to maintain surveillance of the sea and the frontier with France. We are implementing a thorough control of frontier traffic.

We have improved measures of identification and we have reinforced the forces of the civil guard and the state security forces in the Basque provinces and in Navarre. We submitted to the Cortes--and it was recently approved--the antiterrorist law, by which society now has an emergency mechanism to struggle specifically against terrorism. This law has begun to be applied with the utmost firmness, as the figures I will give shortly demonstrate.

Meanwhile, the day before yesterday, a modification to the penal code came into effect, permitting effective pursuit and punishment with regard to crimes sympathetic to terrorism as well as an appropriate sanction for and classification of the intelligence commando groups which provide working support for the terrorist organizations. I am convinced that these two laws, which draw on the most (?relevant) experience of other countries, will begin to produce results in a short time.

In addition, to ensure the effective working of the penal process, we are studying the creation of a special section in the Criminal Court of the National High Court, to be devoted exclusively to terrorist acts. To this effect, and in order to perfect the legal mechanisms, talks have begun with the general council of the judicial authority.

I would like to remind you that the proof of the intensity of the struggle which is being carried out is that more than 500 people are in prison on terrorist charges, of whom more than 100 were arrested in the past 2 months. Moreover, in the same period, the state prosecutor's office has almost doubled the number of indictments in these proceedings. These figures are a bitter statistic, which allow us at the same time to evaluate the importance of the enemy which confronts us, and the firmness with which the government and the state security forces are conducting the struggle.

Finally, the Senate has just prepared the draft organic bill regulating states of alarm, emergency and siege, which is ready for debate. It has already been approved in the Congress. Its text will be examined in the Senate under emergency procedures next week. This law will allow the government to take emergency measures when the normal functioning of the institutions is seriously disturbed. The government will not hesitate to make use of this law, with the constitutional support of the Congress, when it feels this to be absolutely necessary, precisely to protect the rights and freedoms of Spaniards.

To sum up, terrorism has now shown its true and ultimate significance. It is not only a matter of murder. It is trying to eradicate the regime of freedom which we Spaniards have achieved with our own efforts. It is trying to provoke, to drive to exasperation, to make a normal system of coexistence impossible. In the face of this provocation, as is evident, we are not and will not be impassive, nor are we or will we be defenseless.

But let no one deceive himself, let no one think that the response to those who want to destroy coexistence and freedom lies in the suppression of freedom itself. Our strength derives precisely from the freedom which we are defending. Our strength lies in the fact that we have reason, justice, and truth before us. I know that those who are listening to me feel not only outrage and sorrow, but also anxiety and despair. I wish to say that the government is also outraged and grieved, but at the same time it is calm and assured. We will have in our hands the precise instruments with which to effectively combat the terrorist gangs, and we will use these instruments without hesitation, in the certainty that the effort will be protracted and that we will suffer yet further blows, but also in the certainty that we will emancipate Spain finally from the crimes which today grieve us so much and that we will consolidate our institutions in peace and freedom.

Special Court Announced

NC082302 Paris AFP in English 2249 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] Madrid, 8 May (AFP)--A special court to judge terrorists will be set up soon, Spanish Premier Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo announced tonight after three terrorist attacks against army officers this week.

In a televised talk to the nation, he warned that the struggle against terrorism would be "hard and long." But he stressed that the answer to terrorists trying to "destroy co-existence in freedom" was not to "suppress that freedom"--an implied appeal against a possible right wing coup. "Our strength comes precisely from the liberty we are defending," the premier said. Mr Calvo-Sotelo promised that states of alert or siege would only be declared when absolutely necessary.

Earlier today, funerals took place for three soldiers killed in a bomb attack yesterday. More than 60 extreme leftists were arrested in the Basque area and neighbouring Navarre province.

More Arrests

LD081352 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] A total of 53 people have been arrested in the past few hours in the provinces of Vizcaya, Guipuzcoa, Navarre and La Rioja: 8 have been arrested in Vizcaya, 20 in Navarre, 17 in Guipuzcoa and 8 in La Rioja. They are all being held incommunicado under the antiterrorist law at the respective police headquarters.

GEN JOSE LEON-PIZARRO RELEASED FROM DETENTION

NC020902 Paris AFP in English 0848 GMT 2 May 81

[Text] Madrid, 2 May (AFP)--General Jose Leon-Pizarro, the former commander of the Spanish Army's 3d Motorized Division based in Valencia, has been released after being held for three months following an abortive military coup on February 23, the daily EL ALCAZAR newspaper reported here today. The general lost his command on February 26, but was not charged with participation in the coup attempt. He had temporarily replaced General Jaime Milans del Bosch as head of the 3d Military Region after the latter was implicated in the putsch.

USSR EMBASSY DENIES 'SLANDEROUS REPORTS' ON ACTS

LD071402 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] According to a statement by a spokesman for the Soviet Embassy in Spain to Madrid Radio, the embassy absolutely and categorically denies the slanderous reports which have appeared in the Spanish news media on the activities of the Soviet Union and its representatives in this country, including the lies about the ambassador of the Soviet Union to Spain.

BRIEFS

NEW MILITARY GOVERNOR--Army Maj Gen Jose Maria Alvarez de Toledo has been appointed military governor of La Coruna in place of Gen Torres Rojas, according to a royal decree from the Ministry of Defense published today in the Official State Gazette. [Text] [Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 9 May 81 LD]

DENMARK

DEFENSE MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON NUCLEAR ARMS

LD070955 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 4 May 81 p 4

[Swedish TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRAA undated interview with Danish Defense Minister Poul Sogaard]

[Text] Copenhagen--"There are no plans to station nuclear arms in Denmark even during wartime. But faced with a massive Soviet invasion of West Europe three or four times greater than the West's defenses, Denmark could envisage allowing nuclear arms, particularly the smaller tactical weapons, onto Danish territory. But such a solution could only come about after a political decision."

This is how Danish Defense Minister Poul Sogaard summarized the Danish Government's view of nuclear arms in an interview with the Swedish news bureau TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRAA.

[Question] Denmark's defenses are built exclusively on conventional arms. Would not a war between the superpowers inevitably develop into a nuclear war?

[Answer] I sincerely hope not. The objective of the defense forces is primarily to deter a war. If a war should occur, the people in the White House and the Kremlin are rational human beings. They are bound to realize the danger of a nuclear war.

[Question] The idea of the Nordic countries as a nuclear-free zone has been raised again recently. For example, Alva Myrdal [Swedish nuclear disarmament advocate] has proposed that Sweden and Finland begin with an agreement in which they commit themselves to keeping their respective territories free from nuclear arms. Could Denmark envisage being party to such an agreement?

[Answer] I do not see what the point would be. The Nordic countries are already nuclear free. The Soviet Union would then just be able to say: "Thanks, friend, that was nice of you." And then, the whole thing would lose its impetus and all that would be achieved would be that the Nordic countries had renounced nuclear arms.

In this respect the Norwegian proposal for a Nordic nuclear-free zone embracing both the Kola Peninsula and the Baltic Sea is more interesting. However, one prerequisite is that we receive a signal from the Warsaw Pact that there is interest there too. And we have not received any.

[Question] In Denmark's agreement with NATO it is stated that nuclear arms may not be stationed on Danish soil in peacetime. What about in wartime?

[Answer] There are no plans to station nuclear arms in Denmark in wartime either.

[Question] A Danish general recently declared that "if Europe's future were threatened nuclear arms could be used."

[Answer] Did he really say that? Well, I do not know which nuclear arms he was thinking of. There are smaller nuclear arms, the so-called tactical nuclear arms, which can be targeted on limited areas.

If we imagine a massive Soviet invasion of West Europe three or four times greater than the defense forces there, it is obvious that someone could start thinking about the solution the general mentioned. But this would only happen after a political decision.

[Question] In December last year [as published; 1979] NATO's defense ministers adopted a decision on the deployment of 572 medium-range missiles as part of the modernization of the nuclear arsenal in Europe. The so-called cruise missiles play a crucial role here. They are able to find their way to their target for themselves and fly so low that they cannot be detected by radar. The decision triggered a heated debate in several European countries. Denmark was a party to the decision.

[Answer] That is true, but it was not Denmark which raised the question of modernization. Quite the reverse, Denmark tried to bring about a 6-month postponement to try to get negotiations under way on a halt to the arms race or on disarmaments. Unfortunately, we did not succeed, but together with a number of other countries, Norway, for example, we were able to link the decision to a call for negotiations on the limitation of nuclear arms in Europe.

The background to the decision is Soviet rearmament, especially with medium-range arms--for example, the SS-20 missiles whose three nuclear warheads can be directed at different targets in Europe. A balance between the superpowers is the best chance for the success of disarmament negotiations and of avoiding a large-scale war.

[Question] There are historians who consider that massive rearmament has always led to war in earlier stages of human history. Are we not following a dangerous path with today's rearmament?

[Answer] I do not understand history very well, but I remember Europe in the thirties when only one country was rearming and all the others believed that by keeping their own rearmament in check they could preserve peace. This led to World War II.

Denmark follows closely what is happening in the Baltic area, especially since the Warsaw Pact's large-scale maneuvers around Poland which involved major landing forces.

I do not want to make any comments about the maneuver itself, but we cannot close our eyes to the fact that the landing forces in the Baltic are intended for Sweden, Finland and Denmark. We must take this into account in our defense policy.

Nor must we forget that the Baltic is of great strategic significance for the Soviet Union. Half of the Warsaw Pact's shipbuilding industry is situated on its shores. The Baltic is also the only route from the Baltic ports and Leningrad to the open sea.

[Question] The term "Denmarkization" has been coined to describe countries which do not live up to their NATO commitments. Is this picture correct?

[Answer] No, I think it is unfair. In actual fact only Norway and the United States have succeeded in increasing their defense spending by the 3 percent which NATO decided on in 1978. As far as Denmark is concerned a 3-percent increase would mean additional defense spending of 500 million kroner a year, or 2 billion kroner for the 4-year period now under discussion. I am quite simply unable to see where we would get the money.

Perhaps a crucial reason why Denmark is having difficulty meeting its commitments is that the Danish krone has fallen drastically in relation to British and U.S. currencies. This has led to a considerable increase in the cost of the new interceptor aircraft, the F-16, and the new Lynx helicopters the Danish Air Force is in the process of buying. Denmark has been hard hit by the general economic recession and the oil crisis. We have been forced to reduce our spending in the social sphere, and unemployment is greater than ever. In these circumstances it is impossible to ask for a larger budget for the defense forces, even though the situation in the world might call for this. We have chosen to reduce our peacetime forces but to maintain our wartime forces unchanged. Now we are working on proposals for a defense settlement across party political boundaries. This will be presented to the Folketing.

[Question] How does it feel to be a defense minister in a defense pact which has at its disposal weapons which could annihilate the whole of the human race?

[Answer] I sleep well at night, I must admit. I think that I have a good grasp of the issue. I have been active in civil defense and chairman of the Social Democratic defense committee. It is true that I carry a great weight of responsibility, but for good or evil some one must assume it.

NORWAY

BRUNTLAND ADDRESSES FOREIGN POLICY SEMINAR

LD080933 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 5 May 81 p 13

[Text] "What if there had been a new referendum on Norwegian membership in the EEC today--how would the prime minister have voted?" This was one of the questions put to Gro Harlem Brundtland by one of the European participants in the foreign policy seminar in Oslo on Monday. She replied that it would depend on so many things, on the debate and on how the issue was presented to the voters, but did not allow the question to affect her composure.

In her address during the seminar the prime minister had already stressed that Norway neither could nor should make a choice between the United States and Europe. It is important to avoid getting involved in a situation in which such a choice would be unavoidable, she concluded. The prime minister expressed her concern over the arms race, but added that nuclear arms cannot be de-invented and what is important now is to find a way to a balance between the power blocs at the lowest possible force level.

But what about the EEC, asked LE MONDE's editor. Would she still vote in favor of the EEC as she had done in 1972?

She confirmed that her vote at that time had been no secret. "But it was not an easy choice for me then," she explained. "I had to give the matter serious consideration. It would be the same today. But like most Norwegians, whether we were pro or anti in 1972, I feel that it is best to let Norway's position in Europe remain the same as it is today, so that we allow the relationship to be decided in the long term by a natural process of development, which has already been going on in the last few years."

Is it possible then that the Norwegians might reverse their 1972 decision? Was another question, this time from a German.

"The situation is that the majority of Norwegians have developed a much calmer and more sober attitude to the whole of the topic of Europe than in the years when disagreements were at their most acrimonious," Ms Brundtland replied. "Regardless of which side we belonged to, we accepted the result of the referendum. I first became aware of the change in attitudes when I heard the Center Party chairman being interviewed about our relationship with the EEC a few years ago, and I was amazed to hear the chairman of this once so zealously anti-EEC party now had a very relaxed attitude to the question."

The prime minister seemed less decisive when asked questions to do with the military policy. "Does she share the U.S. view that the balance of military strength in the East and West is not good enough?"

"It is difficult to measure relative strengths exactly," she replied. "Norway supported the modernization of the European nuclear force precisely because we felt that the balance was not as it should be, but we were intent that the modernization program should go hand in hand with negotiations on force reductions on both sides."

David Owen [Former British foreign secretary] asked her how she thought Norway should make its influence felt in the world, since Norway's Government is opposed to any extension of NATO's field of operations to other parts of the world.

"It is important to preserve the internal agreement between NATO's member states, and this is easiest if the alliance limits itself to its original objectives," Gro Harlem Brundtland said.

MINISTER QUESTIONED ON FINANCING 'LISTENING POSTS'

LD081617 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 7 May 81 p 3

[Excerpt] "Listening stations and other technical surveillance systems in Norway have been built as a result of national, bilateral and jointly financed initiatives," Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg said in reply to a question from Stein Ornhol (Socialist Party of the left) during Storting question time yesterday. Stoltenberg also said that the Storting had been informed of this is in the usual way.

In his question Stein Ornhol referred to a recently published book which describes a comprehensive technical surveillance network in Norway and which claims that it is mainly the United States which foots the bill for this. Ornhol wanted to know if it was the United States or Norway which took the initiative for the building of listening stations and other technical surveillance systems in Norway and also who is paying for these activities.

As well as pointing out that these activities have been built up through national, lateral and jointly financed initiatives, Stoltenberg said that joint information requirements and joint ways of meeting these are discussed within NATO. He pointed out that it is the expansion in and the type and extent of foreign military activities in Norway's immediate vicinity which create the national and allied needs which we must meet with the necessary means.

"Through cooperating with our allies we are guaranteed reciprocity and breadth in information exchange. This is important for a small country with limited resources," Stoltenberg said.

SWEDEN

PRIME MINISTER RESIGNS; PLANS NEW GOVERNMENT

LD081320 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1300 GMT 8 May 81

[Text] Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin handed in his resignation to the Riksdag speaker half an hour ago. At the same time Falldin announced that he is prepared to form a new government with members from the Center Party and the Liberal Party. Speaker Ingemund Bengtsson will now start talks with various party leaders to examine whether any of them can form a government with a majority in the Riksdag. Thorbjorn Falldin's government will continue for the time being as caretaker government.

As stated, Falldin has said that he is prepared to form a new government, and the question is whether the Moderate Coalition Party will support a government consisting only of members of the Center Party and the Liberal Party. The Moderate Coalition Party has only to abstain from voting, since the Social Democrats and the Communist Left Party do not have a majority in the Riksdag and thus cannot bring down a new nonsocialist government.

Interim Ministers Names

LD081335 [Editorial Report] Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBALDET in Swedish on 6 May 1981 carries on page 7 a 500-word Lars Porne report on the interim allocation between the existing government members of ministerial posts left vacant by the resignation of Moderate Coalition Party ministers as follows:

Anders Gahlgren, agriculture minister, also assumes responsibility for defense;

Birgit Friggebo, housing minister, also resumes responsibility for planning;

Olof Johansson, without portfolio, assumes responsibility for communications;

Carl Axel Petri, energy minister, assumes responsibility for justice;

Karin Soder, social affairs minister, assumes responsibility for health;

Jan-Erik Wikstrom, education minister, assumes responsibility for schools and for trade;

Rolf Wirten, budget minister, also becomes economy minister.

Palme Urges Early Elections

LD081325 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 6 May 81 p 8

[Lars Hellberg dispatch]

[Excerpt] Stockholm, 5 May--A clear "no" to a two-party government together with a call for early elections 14 June--this was the reward the Social Democratic opposition leader Olof Palme gave to the Center and Liberal Parties after Moderate Coalition Party ministers finally resigned in protest against the two parties' tax agreement with the opposition.

"I expect the government to make the necessary decisions by the end of the week, and my advice is for new elections," Palme said after generously granting Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin's wish for a few days in which to reflect.

While the remaining government members share out their former moderate colleagues' work between them, they face the following dilemma: the prime minister could call new elections in line with the opposition leader's call: however, he could also chance staying in office and then face the fact that a Riksdag majority compromising Social Democrats and moderates could topple the government in a nonconfidence vote if the government did not resign of its own accord and leave a decision on a new government to the Riksdag.

FISCHER MEETS LEFT PARTY-COMMUNIST CHAIRMAN

AU082044 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 7 May 81 p 2

[Text] Stockholm (ND)--During his official visit to Stockholm, Oskar Fischer, GDR minister of foreign affairs and SED Central Committee member, had a friendly meeting with Lars Werner, chairman of the Swedish Left Party-Communist. In the talks, Oskar Fischer reported on the decisions of the 10th SED Congress, which serve the securing of peace and further increasing of the economic strength of the GDR and thus the strengthening of the positions of socialism in the world. Both partners in the talks underlined the necessity of increasing the struggle for maintaining peace and against the deployment of new U.S. medium-range missiles in Western Europe and against the plans on neutron weapons.

THATCHER, FOOT CONGRATULATE NEW FRENCH PRESIDENT

LD102212 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2121 GMT 10 May 81

[Text] London, 10 May (PA)--Mrs Thatcher was tonight sending a message of congratulations to Mr Mitterrand, saying she is looking forward to meeting him as soon as is convenient. The earliest occasion--it will be their first meeting--will probably be the Euro Council at Luxembourg at the end of June.

Mrs Thatcher's telegram to the new French president said: "I extend to you my warmest congratulations on your election as president of France. I look forward to an early meeting with you and to continuing with you the best tradition of co-operation between our two countries."

Opposition leader Mr Michael Foot said: "I congratulate Francois Mitterrand on becoming president of France. "It is a great victory for socialism and for peace, and the success will provide encouragement for socialists throughout Europe. "I look forward to continuing the close co-operation that already exists between the British Labour Party and the French Socialist Party."

THATCHER GREETS SCHMIDT ON ARRIVAL FOR TALKS

LD111322 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1227 GMT 11 May 81

[Text] Mrs Thatcher was at RAF Benson in Oxfordshire today to greet West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on his arrival for 24 hours of talks at Chequers.

Francois Mitterrand's success in the French presidential elections has given a new focus to the talks which are part of the twice annual meetings between the British prime minister and the West German chancellor.

The two leaders will now try to assess the implications of Mitterrand's success. His dependence on the Communists poses questions on the strength of the French defence commitment. British ministers now recognise that Giscard's defeat has changed the political map of Europe although it is still too early to make firm assessments of the likely outcome.

Herr Schmidt's friendship with Giscard has been a dominant factor in West European politics for years and the election result is a political blow. In addition, his party lost control in West Berlin which is likely to impose strains on his coalition government in Bonn.

These changes are seen in London as giving Mrs Thatcher a new opportunity to assert British influence on the European scene.

ROLANDHIS: UN, WEST EXPECT CYPRUS ISSUES PROGRESS

NC081043 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 7 May 81 pp 1, 5

[Text] There is effusive optimism both in UN circles and in Western governments that there will be a move on the Cyprus issue in the summer. Foreign Minister Rolandhis has made this exclusive statement to I DHILINI. He leaves for abroad today where he will hold a series of contacts in various countries, Athens being the first stop and Washington and New York the last ones.

When asked to comment about Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis' 5 May statement that "the Cyprus issue will enter a decisive phase in the immediate next months," which coincides with a recent Kiprianou television statement that "there are assurances of developments on the Cyprus issue after the elections," Rolandhis said:

"Both the Kiprianou and Mitsotakis statements are due to the fact that there have been assurances from various sides that in the summer and, specifically, after the elections, there will be some sort of a move on the Cyprus issue and that this will come from the Turkish side."

In answer to whether there have been explicit assurances of a specific action from the Turkish side, the foreign minister replied that there is nothing specific but only strong assurances and optimism within United Nations, Western and various Nicosia diplomatic circles.

In answer to another I DHILINI question, Rolandhis said that the expected Turkish gesture will be demonstrated at the inter-Cypriot negotiating table.

He then described his meeting with U.S. Secretary of State Haig and Deputy Secretary of State Clark and Under Secretary of Political Affairs Stoessel on 18 May as very interesting. He added: Since a move on the Cyprus issue will emerge with the gesture from the Turkish Cypriot side, we will discuss with Haig in which direction this move will lead and how the U.S. administration can contribute toward the achievement of results.

In answer to another question, Rolandhis described as positive the U.S. Congress Foreign Relations Committee's decision to reject a proposal to grant, within the framework of the economic support fund, $300 million in aid to Turkey for the 1982 economic year. He reminded that he will also meet with members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Washington.

Finally, Rolandhis said that after Washington, he will go to New York where he will have contacts with UN Secretary General Waldheim with whom he will discuss the Cypriot issue with particular emphasis on the expected move and the role that the United Nations will play toward substantive progress in the talks.

Press Conference

NC082204 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 8 May 81

[Report on Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis' 8 May press conference at the office of the Foreign Press Union in Athens]

[Text] At the beginning of the press conference, Rolandhis referred to the efforts of UN Secretary General Waldheim to resume the inter-Cypriot talks. The formula on which the talks were started included the question of Famagusta, practical measures on the constitution and the area to come under the control of the federal state. These talks, Rolandhis stated, have produced no results to date. The only positive element is that a dialogue was started for the first time in Cyprus. On the question of Famagusta, the Turkish proposal was unacceptable: This proposal included the return of a small part, 10 percent, of Famagusta, which could only accommodate up to 12,000 inhabitants.

The worse is that this section would be under the administration of the Turkish Cypriot state; this would automatically mean some degree of recognition. There were also check-points for entry and departure. In other words, those who would have returned would be enclaved. The refugees from this very same area rejected the proposal.

In reference to the second part of the proposals, the practical measures, we offered many points of approach between the two communities, such as the social, labor and other sectors. The Turkish Cypriot side, however, always presented positions that were unacceptable, not only to us, but also to any other nation.

The Turks demanded the lifting of the so-called economic embargo. But what is this economic embargo? Someone comes along, occupies your house and then he demands that he should be able to use it freely.

